Notes & Comments

Rev. Dr. Torrey's Movements. In view of the prospect, during the coming winter, of a visit to this country by Rev. Dr. Torrey to hold mission services, we would urge our readers to fervent prayer for God's blessing thereon. For ten years or so Dr. Torrey has commanded crowded congregations in his church at Chicago, and it has been the rule for his message to arouse keen interest and deep concern regarding the way of salvation. In fact, a friend who has co-operated with him informs us that he has never known a service to close without a score or more of inquirers remaining behind. Dr. Torrey preaches as one who is himself convinced, and his word has been with power to the salvation of multitudes of souls.

"The Crowning of the Priest." The magnitude of the difficulties in which the Government is placed with regard to the Education Bill becomes more apparent as the weeks pass. The Evangelical forces of the country have been aroused, and are being rapidly organized. In view of the part being played by Irish Romanists in Parliament and the Press, a new element has come into the controversy. In the words of the Daily News, the Government "cannot force a measure touching religious questions on a Protestant people by Catholic votes." That the promoters if not the framers of the Bill intended to accomplish their object by such means, seems only too clear. If nothing else is plain, it is that the whole measure seems to have been devised so as to upset education and set up the priest. In the words of Dr. Parker, "the Bill would crown the priest," and the present is assuredly no time for such an act. It has with truth been affirmed that clericalism has "rarely guided England for long, and never for her good."

The Right of Free Speech. The question of the right of free speech in open spaces is a most important one from many points of view. The imprisonment of young Mr. Kensit for three months may help to bring it to an issue. It is not to the interest of law-abiding citizens of any creed, on the one hand to veto free speech unnecessarily, nor to assert it injuriously on the other.

A Modern Superstition. It is sad to note the extent to which palmistry and other superstitious practices have come into vogue during recent years. The advertisements of such as profess to "read the hands" appear regularly in magazines of a certain class, although, in the eyes of the law, fees taken for the practice of palmistry come under the head of "money obtained by false pretences." An esteemed correspondent, in calling our attention to a recent prosecution for palmistry, says:—

> It is nothing short of alarming to find how many in this town, who have the standing and reputation of being wholly for God, are not merely indifferent to the abounding iniquity, but are openly advocating it and actively defending it. The practice is looked upon as at least "a harmless amusement," and where it is taken seriously it is regarded as "a comforting source of knowledge" and as affording a key to the future. One palmist in this place poses as a converted man, and speaks at meetings in connection with Christian organizations. The effect of such a condition of things is to entrap thousands of young men and women into connivance with what the law regards as a system of lying, deceit, and fraud.

What it Means. Behind the folly and superstition lie the meaning and motive of such practices. Why do men and women resort (to use the words of our correspondent) to "comforting sources of knowledge" outside the truth of God? Should not Christian people seek unto their God? Here lies the secret of the evil. Having declined from God, men and women refuse an abiding-place in their hearts to His loving care and faithful providence. They seek to gods that are no gods—to their own shame and the grief of Him whose thoughts towards them are "thoughts of peace and not of evil." To seek unto Chance or Fortune; to consult "wizards that peep and mutter;" to let hope or fear depend upon the words of such as wholesome laws as well as Holy Scripture regard as "deceiving and being deceived," is, in very truth, to act "as the heathen do." With a lively conviction regarding God, and a true devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ, men and women would have nothing to do with such criminal foolishness, such flagrant ungodliness.

A New Blasphemy. From the time of its origin in error of a peculiarly repulsive character, the Agapemone movement has from time to time developed fresh delusions, which in turn have found a few credulous believers. Our readers will be shocked to learn that previous blasphemies have been crowned by pretensions of a character to which we should not allude but for the duties of admonition and safeguarding the unwary. At a gathering in the Agapemone building at Clapton, on Lord's Day last, one of the leaders declared himself to be "the Lord Jesus Christ, come again for the second time as the Bridegroom of the Church and the Judge of all men." It is to be hoped that Christians will warn any who seem likely to come under the baneful influence of the system, and that those unhappy people who have been beguiled into the snare may be made the subjects of earnest prayer.

The Puritan. Owing doubtless to confusion of ideas, and to some ignorance of the vital forces underlying historic events, it has become quite usual for thoughtless writers to refer sneeringly to the cry for a purer and higher standard of national life, and for deliverance from priestism, and also to the desire for the maintenance of the sanctity of the Sabbath, as "Puritanism." The term, however, can be taken as an unintentional compliment, for the keystone of those outgrowths of Puritanism, upon which the foundation stones of our spiritual freedom and of much of our secular liberty rest, was simply its essential threefold principle of righteousness in the individual, the home, and the State. The Puritans had "imperial minds and holy methods," two things too often severed; and Puritanism, stern in its ideals, has been the recuperative power that more than once has raised the nation from the torpor of death. It has not yet lost its vitalizing force, and the day is coming quickly when all its strength and influence will again be required to save the State.

Brotherly Love. Our love to others should not depend on their beliefs; even their errors should not prevent our love. God loves all men—"the world." And those who are His children by faith in Christ Jesus, He loves with a Father's love. If our love necessarily depended on the faith or even the obedience of others, we should find our love a very uncertain and shifting quantity. We should be always criticizing and judging, and we can never judge justly, because we never have all the evidence before us. Paul says he did not judge himself. And "Let us not judge one another any more." Do not the views people take often arise from the circumstances into which they are thrown? Perhaps if our surroundings had been different we should have thought differently on some subjects. Are not many people orthodox because they have not been exercised about the views they profess to hold? No one's views will hold him in the day of testing unless they have been received direct from God, by the teaching of His Spirit. It is possible to be in a transition state, not yet freed from errors, but in a more acceptable state before God—because honestly desiring to know the truth—than others whose views have only been received from those around them, and have not cost them anything. If we do not hate people because they have lost their way, but pity and help them, how much more should we love and help those who mentally or spiritually have lost their way, or who have never yet found the right path?

"A Vanishing Vice." The Spectator has a curious article upon what it calls "a vanishing vice," the vice being pride. We are afraid the writer desires more than he actually beholds. It may be quite true that the cruel pride which in past ages characterized such creatures as Pharaoh, Nero, and others has disappeared, and for a simple reason—the power of the people makes it impossible. But the Spectator, while admitting that pride to-day is "changing its character," goes on to say that pride of birth and pride of intellect have been greatly modified of late. We are afraid that facts will not bear out this statement. Pride of intellect, in particular, it seems to us, is on the increase, rather than otherwise. How else can the lofty tone assumed by many scientists and journalists, and students towards religion be explained? Accepting its hypothesis as proved, the Spectator arrives at the conclusion that "the doctrine of human depravity has had its day"; and in so saying there is surely some evidence of pride. One of the commonest forms of pride is that which men betray when they refuse to believe the truth about their own depravity and sin and shortcoming; and it is this, undoubtedly, that keeps thousands of persons outside the Kingdom of God. It is certain that no vice vanishes, except as expelled by the grace of God and faith in the Lord Jesus, the Meek and Lowly in Heart.

Poverty and Thrift. The Daily News has devoted part of its columns, during the last few days, to a discussion of the question, "Can poor men save?" The correspondence reveals, on the part of some men at least, a spirit that we could wish were more widely extended in the world. Whilst some, whose income reaches £250 a year, complain that they cannot save, others, who have barely half that amount, write cheerfully of their happy life and their success in saving, despite the responsibilities of family, &c. One of these latter touches the point admirably, when he speaks of the power of true love in a home to call out the best there is in a man, and to cause him to deny himself personal gratifications for the sake of others. We are afraid that waste and the foolish habit of living up to one's income is, for many, the cause of much misery. The lot of many sadly needs amelioration, but others undoubtedly do not understand the art of making the best of what they have. Some of the most successful men of to-day owe their position to that grit with which an enforced rigid economy supplied them in their early days of struggle. The power to use to the best advantage whatever one possesses, whether it be little or much, ought to be cultivated by all. And, above all, calculate on the blessing of God, the giver. "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase." "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

The Difficulty in Housing. An article in the Daily Telegraph, on the attempts that are being made to provide suburban houses for the working classes, draws attention to a feature which is very grave, and which deserves serious consideration. It is pointed out that the running of cheap trains into the suburbs is merely transferring the difficulties of the centres to points a little more remote, since the suburbs so served reproduce the evils of over-building, overcrowding, and over-renting. This is not what is wanted. Transference of an evil from one spot to another is a vastly different thing from removing it altogether. The essential thing in sanitary and humane housing is plenty of room, together with as much of nature as possible, and all on a moderate rental. Cheap and quick transit is only part of the real need; there must be, to complete the thing, a scene worth removing to. It is more evident than ever that the "Garden City" is the model of true housing. When once our slow-moving people come to see this elementary truth, ways and means for carrying it out will not be long withheld. Bournville and Port Sunlight are object-lessons of endeavours, not only to distribute the population, but also to cultivate industries in healthful conditions.

Town and Country. There is a tendency to compare the unhappy surroundings of a large section of the working population of our large centres with the free and healthy life of the labourers in country districts. Mr. Henry Aldridge, the secretary of the National Housing Reform Council, has recently published a statement which, unhappily, shows that in many rural districts matters are but little better than in the towns. He says, in giving the results of three careful investigations:—

In seventy-eight villages, containing 4,179 cottages, there were 1,000 bad or very bad, 2,500 with no fireplace or other efficient ventilation in the bedrooms, and 700 with water supply bad or absent. In another set of 240 villages there were 5,000 bad cottages.

In one district alone there were, in eight years, 154 cases of enteric fever, and 572 of diphtheria, due to the insanitary condition of the dwellings. This condition of things undoubtedly is an important factor in the migration of labourers to the towns, and the erection of a few expensive cottages at high rents is no remedy for it. The creation of small holdings is the only effective method of keeping the labourer upon the land, and Lord Carrington and others have shown practically how this plan can be successfully carried out.

"The Union." In a noteworthy contribution to the Nineteenth Century for September, Miss Edith Sellers not only throws a lurid light upon the misery hidden within the walls of many of our workhouses, but also sweeps away a number of misapprehensions in regard to the result of an Old Age Pension Scheme. In one London workhouse alone she found 285 men and 387 women over sixty-five years old. Of that number 427 were "infirm, worn out, and broken in health," and many suffering from actual disease. For such the necessity of life is skilled nursing, which, it goes without saying, cannot be given in the houses of relatives, where, as one poor old pauper said, "They're like rabbits as it is." Few of the paupers, however, have relatives who could take them for 5s. a week, and most of them, in fact, have no friends left. In the London workhouses there are over 20,000 persons above sixty-five years old, and few could leave if a Pensions Act were in force. This, of course, is not an argument against the adoption of one, but it is a strong argument in favour of the adoption of a different system in place of that whereby they are grouped together, both the deserving and the vicious. When will some Christian members of Parliament devote their abilities and their opportunities to persistent efforts to secure in this country the adoption of the plan of Old Age Homes, such as already exist in Denmark and Austria, and even in Russia?

Length of Days. A singular investigation, conducted by Dr. J. M. Rhodes, who made it the subject of a paper read at the recent meeting of the British Medical Association, further illustrates the ravages of the drink traffic. In Manchester the death-rate among children under one year of age amounted to 198 per 1,000, i.e., one in every five; but in a quarter inhabited largely by Jews the rate was only 124, i.e., under two-thirds of the average. Such a result, Dr. Rhodes shows, is by no means confined to the cotton metropolis, for a New York doctor had made a similar inquiry as to racial influences upon the mortality of districts, and found that in localities largely inhabited by Jews the average death-rate was a little under 16, whereas that for the others was 18½, and in entirely Jewish suburbs 14 only. The decreased rate among Jews is, he held, due to their general freedom from intemperance. In the track of intemperance a crowd of other sins, hardly less destructive in their physical effects, follow inevitably, and Dr. Rhodes' statement may be taken as a commentary upon the Divine declaration that in loving God and obeying His voice "is thy life, and the length of thy days" (Deut. xx. 20).

A Nobler Vision. Several of the leading journals have gone out of their way to denounce that portion of a speech at Birmingham, in which the Colonial Secretary laid down the simple axiom that Great Britain would not sanction the expenditure necessary to enable the nation to be fully prepared in time of peace for an exceptional emergency like the South African war; or, to simplify the expression, that the voice of England had gone against militarism and the conscription. Behind the financial question, which, unhappily, probably is more likely to influence the Government than higher considerations, there is assuredly a nobler one, and for this reason there is room for congratulation upon Mr. Chamberlain's recognition of the decline of "jingoism." God has called England to triumphs of peace, greater than those of war. The reversion of the world lies not in militarism, but in Christ's redemption; for, as a great thinker has said, "the worldly spirit cannot hold the world: it is the missionary idea, the missionary faith, and the missionary policy that has the key of empire."

Children and War. One of the lady speakers at the Philadelphia Peace Conference, held some time ago, offered an earnest plea that mothers should understand and accomplish their mission—not only to teach their little ones the truths of the Gospel, but also to educate them in the principles of peace. It is not a common plea, but it needs making, for there will never be any serious diminution of the military spirit while the nursery and the playground glow with the colours of the battlefield. There is much in the suggestion that pictures of soldiers and of battle scenes have no place in the nursery or schoolroom, and that other kinds of drill, in place of military drill, would produce hardihood among boys. From early childhood the little people should be instructed in the graciousness and gentleness of the Gospel, and taught also something of the terrible cost of war, in money, men, and morals. It is easier to prevent the thirst for blood than to appease it when once created.

Ireland Once More. The recently-published census returns affecting Belfast show that whereas in 1891 that city contained 273,184 persons, and Dublin 268,650, at the recent enumeration the numbers were 349,186 and 290,638 respectively. In Belfast there are scarcely any tenement houses; in Dublin they abound. In Belfast the sick list is represented by one in 123 of the population; in Dublin by one in sixty. In Dublin the number of persons in receipt of poor law relief is nearly 10,000; in Belfast it is less than a third of that number. The Methodists and Presbyterians have largely increased in Belfast, and the Episcopalians have remained almost stationary, but the Romanists have declined two per cent. The conclusion is an obvious one, and it was scarcely necessary for the correspondent of a contemporary to ask, "Why cannot other Irish cities go and do likewise? Why cannot Cork and Limerick follow?" The weight that hinders is just that from which France and Italy are shaking themselves free, and under which Spain is crushed to the ground, but is seeking release.

"Light upon the Lesson."—In order to afford an opportunity of thoroughly testing the value of lesson helps for Sunday-school teachers, using Scripture itself to elucidate the meaning by printing in full the references in other parts of the Bible, an attractive booklet (3d. Morgan & Scott) has been prepared containing the lessons for next quarter (Oct.—Dec.) treated in this fashion. The text of each lesson is given in full, broken up into sections by subject-headings, explanatory passages being inserted at the proper places in a smaller size of type. Again and again it has been shown that the Word of God is its own best interpreter, and we feel sure that prayerfully used this booklet will be a valuable help to many a teacher.

The Gospel.

By Principal McCaig, Pastors' College.

WHAT storehouses of rich meaning are many of our old Anglo-Saxon words! Familiar to us from infancy, what choes do they awaken in our hearts as we sten to them and ponder over them. This ne word "Gospel," what a volume it is in self. God=good, spell=tidings: good tidings, ood news; or did our fathers mean some-hing more by the word, as "God" and good" are equivalent terms? God being he good One, did they mean by the Gospel od's tidings, tidings of God; or did they ombine the two meanings — God's good idings, good news about God? In any case, he Word has come to be applied almost ex-lusively to the good tidings which come from od—the good news of salvation. In the uthorised Version of the New Testament the ord "Gospel" occurs more than a hundred imes, and it is, in the substantive form, the xact equivalent of the Greek evangelion, vangel, good message, good news.

Familiar as we are with the Word itself, it s sadly true that many Gospel hearers have a ery vague idea of the Gospel message. There re many people who are in the habit of ttending a place of worship regularly, who now their Bibles pretty well, who know a ood deal about religion, and yet, were you to sk them, "What is the Gospel?" they ould not correctly tell you. Even some who re Christians, who believe in the Gospel and re saved by it, would find a difficulty in nswering the question in such a way as to hrow light upon an inquirer's path. Now, it s most important that we have clear ideas of he Gospel, and be able to state it in such a anner as may direct the seeker after truth. Ve find that the Apostles, in their preaching, ere careful to declare the Gospel plainly; hey used great plainness of speech, there is ever any uncertain sound as they they tell orth the glorious message, and a study of heir utterances will make it abundantly clear hat the Gospel is. It is possible to preach ermons, excellent sermons, in which every ord may be true and Scriptural, and yet a lain declaration of the Gospel may be lacking. Ve may preach about the Gospel, which is ood and necessary, but that is not preaching he Gospel itself.

What is the Gospel?

In response to the question, "What is the Gospel?" a common answer is, "Good ews!" That, of course, is correct, so far as t goes, but it does not go far enough. It is imply an explanation of the word—it is no xposition of the thing, the message itself. You have received a letter, the contents of hich a friend is anxious to know. He asks, 'What is in your letter?" "Oh," you say, 'good news." Well, he may be glad to know hat, but if you tell him no more, he will not ave much knowledge of the substance of your etter.

Another answer often given is, "The Gospel s truth." Certainly, the Gospel is truth, but hen all truth is not the Gospel. A statement nay be true, even Scripturally true, and yet nay have no Gospel in it. "The soul that inneth it shall die;" that is truth, but that s not the Gospel. "All have sinned and come hort of the glory of God." That also is sad nd solemn truth, but who would call it Gospel? 'Peter went out and wept bitterly" is truth, ut is it the Gospel? Truth is the nature or he essential characteristic of the Gospel, but ruth is not necessarily Gospel.

Another answer sometimes given is, "The Gospel is the Bible, the Word of God." Now we believe most heartily in the full inspiration of the Bible. We do not say with some simply that it contains the Word of God, but that it is the Word of God from beginning to end. Still, for all that, the Bible is not itself the Gospel, but the Gospel is in the Bible. There are many things recorded in the Bible that are not part of the Gospel. The history of the creation, the deluge, the overthrow of the Egyptians, these and many other narratives are the Bible, and are part of God's Word, but they are not the Gospel. They may serve to illustrate or enforce the Gospel; they may even be in a wide sense connected with the Gospel, but they are surely to be distinguished from the Gospel.

The place of belief.

Yet another answer is frequently forthcoming. "The Gospel is—Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." That is coming nearer the mark, but even that is not quite the Gospel. That is what the Gospel requires, what it bids us do, but it is not itself the Gospel. Of course, familiar as many are with the New Testament story, this exhortation addressed to them suggests the Gospel; but if you were to tell a man who had never heard of Jesus Christ to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, he would not know what you meant; you would have to tell him something more.

Like Paul, who first calmed the jailor's fears and awakened his hopes by the general exhortation, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," coupled with the glorious assurance, which indeed conveyed a hint of the Gospel, "and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." He then more particularly spake the Word of the Lord unto him, and to all that were in his house.

I have a vivid recollection of a dying girl saying, in bitter perplexity, in reference to the visits of Christian friends, "They all say, 'Believe! believe!' but they don't tell me what to believe; now, what am I to believe?" And it was only when the Gospel in its fulness and simplicity was set before her that she was enabled to believe and enter into peace.

The Gospel in miniature.

What then is the Gospel? Among the many statements of it in Scripture, I question if we can find a better than that wonderful verse, the Gospel in miniature as it has well been called (John iii. 16), "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We take, in connection with that, the Apostle Paul's declaration to the Corinthians (1 Cor. xv. 1-4) —"Brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures."

These three historic facts are the foundation and the essence of the Gospel, Christ's death for our sins, burial, and resurrection. Not that the mere historic belief that Christ died, was buried, and was raised from the dead will save anyone. Tens of thousands to-day believe these facts without being savingly influenced by them. Lazarus died, was buried, and was raised from the dead; but a belief in these facts makes no difference in our moral condition.

The facts that form the groundwork of the Gospel gain startling and blessed significance when they are brought into connection with "our sins." When we say that Christ died for our sins, we take His death entirely out of the category of other deaths, and bring it into the closest relationship to our spiritual condition.

The atonement.

God loved sinners. In His love He gave His own Son to take the place of sinners. That blessed Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, came into the world, lived a life of spotless holiness, of perfect obedience to the law of God; died upon the cross in the place of sinners, bearing there in His own body the sins of all who should afterwards believe upon Him, enduring, as the penalty of their sins, the wrath of God. Having died as an atoning sacrifice, He was buried, showing the reality of his death; on the third day the gates of the grave were opened, the fetters of death snapped asunder, the glorious One came forth in living power, and ascended to God's right hand, thus showing that His work had given perfect satisfaction to Divine Justice. Now from heaven comes the assurance that all who trust in the atoning death of the Son of God, all who receive Christ Jesus by faith, are forgiven, saved, accepted of God. "Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins, and by Him all that believe are justified from all things."

Truly this is Gospel, good news. To a man who is lost, who feels his sins a burden, who fears the coming wrath of God, is it not the best of news to know that Christ Jesus, God's Son, has died that such as he might be saved; that He has, by dying, put away sin; that He has removed the wrath of God, satisfied all the claims of Divine justice, and now offers to every sinner who believes upon Him full and free forgiveness?

Good News then, we say, is another name for the Gospel; Truth is the characteristic of the Gospel; the Bible contains the Gospel; "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ" is a requirement of the Gospel; but the Gospel itself is: "God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."

He and You.

Dead in sin and conscience smitten,
Soul with God at war,
Jesus died to be your Saviour—
Take Him as you are.

Grinding slave in Satan's prison,
Justice keeps the bar,
Christ was bound and broke the fetters—
Take Him as you are.

Take Him, not as half a Saviour,
He is perfectness;
Take His pardon, take His Spirit—
Take Him as He is.

Wretched sinner, blind and naked,
All you want is His;
He has bought you, He is waiting—
Take Him as He is.

Roman Catholicism in East London.—It is worthy of the serious attention of Protestants that a writer in the Catholic Times should be able to state, with evident satisfaction, that, "Catholicity is marching rapidly in the East of London. There are at least three churches building or to be built in that part of the Metropolis, and if we take into account the new parish of the Assumptionists in Old Ford there are four. . . . A watchful eye is being kept on the growing suburbs constantly effacing what was country lanes and old time cottages, and as Catholic populations arise in these districts church and school are not long ere they make their appearance." The enemy is ever on the alert, and the problem of the East-end becomes yearly harder to solve through the rapid growth of the Jewish population and the settlement of Romanists.

The Divine Friend.

(Psa. cxxi.)

By Rev. W. B. RUSSELL-CALEY, M.A.

THIS is one of the Pilgrim Psalms, sung as the evening shadows gathered, and the weary, expectant eyes of the pious travellers saw the long-looked-for hills of Zion standing out against the reddening western sky. The Songs of Degrees, or Pilgrim Songs, all have their spiritual counterpart and application; they are meant to encourage the traveller and remind him of Divine mercy and blessing.

In this Psalm we have God described as (1) Creator (v. 2); (2) National Preserver (v. 4); (3) Individual Defender (v. 5); or, again, in vv. 1 and 2, the believing soul, the child of God, is speaking, questioning her own heart (some indeed regard v. 1 as a question, and v. 2 as the answer); and then in vv. 3 to 8, she is addressed and encouraged by the Spirit through the Psalmist. But let us just notice how God is brought before us as "The Divine Friend," under seven aspects—and what more cheering to the pilgrim away from home than the thought of a friend?

I. God is a Powerful Friend (v. 2).—We can lift our eyes unto the everlasting hills, in all their solemn, immoveable strength and splendour, and feel the Maker of them is our Friend (Psa. lxv. 6, xc. 2, cxxv. 2).

II. God is a Careful Friend (v. 3).—He will keep us from sudden, slight, yet dangerous, slips and falls. We greatly need this careful friend, for the Bible warns us that most of God's saints fell in middle life and after much experience. Noah, Lot, Moses, David, all failed after much previous victory; it is a solemn lesson against the spiritual pride so much to be feared in these days (1 Sam. ii. 9; Psa. xxxvii. 23, 24; xciv. 18; Prov. xvi. 9; Jude 24).

III. God is a Watchful Friend (v. 4).—There is no cessation or intermission in His care. He never grows weary of watching over us, our interests, our circumstances; He never becomes inattentive to our needs or dangers, though they may be unknown, and even unsuspected, by us. In Isa. v. 27, we are told that the enemies of Israel are sleepless; then what comfort to know our powerful and careful Friend can never be taken unawares!

IV. God is a Protecting Friend (v. 5).—How necessary is "a shade" in an Eastern land (Isa. xxv. 4). From the sharp blast of temptation, or the scorching ray of prosperity (so often ruinous to the Christian), God is our shield and protection (Psa. xci. 1; Cant. ii. 3). And is there not a peculiarly beautiful thought in this simile of shade or shadow? What so nigh to us as our own shadow? What so inseparable from us? So is our gracious God. He is the nearest, dearest, most inseparable of all friends (Rom. viii. 35-39)—the source of ceaseless refreshment, peace, and calm.

V. God is a Perpetual Friend (v. 6).—Injuries of all kinds and from all sources, however diverse, shall be warded off. The experience of Jacob (Gen. xxxi. 40) shall not be ours if walking with God, but rather the blessed experience of Joseph (Deut. xxxiii. 14). With this perpetual friend, "whose goodness faileth never," we can go happily and fearlessly onward, uttering the words of the Psalmist in Psa. xci. 5, 6.

VI. God is an Omniscient Friend (v. 7).—Human friends can only protect from varied and limited evils, as a rich friend from poverty, a medical friend from sickness, a wise friend from ignorance; but God sees all evils, and is capable of dealing with all. No detail or possibility can escape His observation; and this omniscience, most wonderful of all, extends not only into the domain of the temporal and physical, but into the realm of the spiritual. "He shall preserve thy soul"—guarding us from spiritual foes of ceaseless and tremendous malignity (Eph. vi. 12), and soul-dangers absolutely unsuspected by us.

VII. God is an Encouraging Friend (v. 8). The future is to us unknown, and often a cause of anxious fear and apprehension. But our Divine Friend assures us that His blessed presence shall accompany us all the journey and never fail us, even "for evermore" (see Gen. xxviii. 15).

This really is the Psalm of Providence and Grace. It begins by pointing us to the hill of Calvary, and ends with the inheritance in glory. It assures us of perpetual good from the source of perpetual blessing. It's keynote is, God is the Friend and Keeper of His people. God's dealings and providences, whether dark or light, are for the good of His people. The Divine Friend is in these seven aspects the same both in his clear and mysterious providences to the trusting soul. May our pilgrim journey be ever cheered by His bright and holy friendship!

First Things First.

By Rev. GERARD B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

IT is part of the confusion with which our world is crowded, that the right order of things is often inverted. The wrong order of right things may be a great evil. Disordered or disproportionate truth may be the worst of error. One of the great purposes of Divine truth is to re-establish the series—to teach us which is to be first and which second. In the restored world many things that are now first with us will be last, and the last first. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," says Christ. This familiar verse is an example of one of the Divine rectifyings of human calculations. It is a distinct call upon us to put first things first.

Some people put last things first, to the utter neglect of first things. This is the case with those whose great concern is to become rich and great in this world. There are many such. They think of nothing else but this world. They devote all their time and energy to wealth-getting or honour-getting, to "getting on in the world," as they call it, and in many cases they are very successful. But in so doing, they run an awful risk to their souls. They "make haste to be rich," and so "fall into many temptations and snares, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." Such prosperity is a curse and not a blessing.

DECEITFUL RICHES AND WORLDLY CARE.

The same is the case with those who allow their whole attention to be taken up with the cares of this world. There is danger both from the "deceitfulness of riches" and the "cares of this world." Everything good may be choked out of our lives by either. We live in a busy world, in a bustling age, in a period of great commercial competition, when much time and great effort are required for persons to maintain a respectable position, provide for their families, educate their children, see that neither their sick nor their well are in want, and on this account many allow the cares of this world to absorb their attention, to the utter neglect of their eternal interests.

The same is also the case with those whose minds are absorbed with the pleasures of the world. There are those who follow "the course of the world" in all its rounds of frivolity, vanity, and folly, to the utter neglect of God and their eternal well-being. "They that live in pleasure are dead while they live," putting last things first to the utter neglect of first things.

There are other people who put last things first, but intend to attend to first things by and by. Their great concern is to establish themselves in trade first, to succeed in their profession first, to get on in the world first, to become rich or great or honoured first, and then become religious—then seek the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. But this is a great mistake to make. It is a distinct reversing of the advice and command of Christ. It is living in a constant state of deliberate disobedience. It is an especially wicked way in which to live, because of their selfishness in "seeking their own things, and not the things that are Christ's," and because they are running counter to God in all they do. It is a mistake, too, because it is distrusting both to the providence and promises of Christ.

It is a mistake to put last things first, intending to attend to first things by and by, especially because of the danger it brings that we may die without Christ. There is both the danger that the things we put off we may never attend to, or that we may die in the midst of our days before we have attended to them. If we prosper, we may be puffed up with our prosperity, and thereby become increasingly disinclined to religion, and neglect it even down to old age, for nothing is more deceitful than riches. Or we may be cut off unexpectedly in the midst of our prosperity, before we have sought the Kingdom of God. Plainly, it is great folly to put last things first, intending to attend to first things by and by.

FIRST IN TIME—FIRST IN IMPORTANCE.

The only way in which we can obey God and act wisely, therefore, is to do exactly what He tells us and put first things first. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." We should seek it "first" in point of time. We are neither to put it off nor to allow anything else to get in ahead of it. This is the prime engagement of life. To the young it means that they are to seek both entrance into and the righteousness of God's Kingdom now while they are young. To those who may be middle aged, or aged, or very old, it means the same. In point of time this is to be the very first thing. There is to be absolutely no delay about it on any pretence whatsoever.

We should seek it "first," too, as a matter of the first and highest importance. Nothing else can be of any importance as compared with the attainment of a part in the Kingdom of God and the righteousness of it. This is the pearl of greatest price, the supreme treasure, the indispensable blessing, the one thing alone that can make us happy here and hereafter. Place it "first" in point of time. Make it "first" as a matter of importance. "Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom." "She is more precious than rubies, and all the things that thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her."

It is right for us to take into consideration also the gracious promise annexed to this command of Christ as a matter of encouragement in our obeying it. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Heirship to God's eternal Kingdom and righteousness does not cut us off from temporal blessings. These things will be "added," or given over and above. As some one has well said, "They will be thrown in among a crowd of greater blessings." The good things of the present life are not reserved only for the wicked. Satan does not treat his followers better than God does His. When Solomon first asked wisdom, God gave him riches and honour also. What is profitable for the next world is profitable for this one too. That "honesty is the best policy" even worldly men assert. That "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come," it is time all men knew. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Put first things first!

"Is It Worth It?"

(Matt. vi. 31-33.)

Toiling for gold in the dusty mart,
Wringing the life from somebody's heart,
Say, are they worth it, these hours of ease?
Think you you've only yourself to please?

Oh, is it worth it, your best to lay
On the frail altar of fame to-day?
Do ye not dream of some higher praise—
Glory abiding thro' endless days?

Oh, is it worth it, your love to cast
Around a vision that may not last?
E'en at its best 'tis a worthless love,
Be it not born from a world above.

Say, is it worth it, at pleasure's springs
To waste the hours, while the promise rings,
Clear and eternal, without alloy—
"In My Presence is fulness of joy?"

Fame and pleasure and glittering gold
And all the treasures that earth can hold,
Say, are they worth what the soul will be
All through the years of eternity?

Seeing Jesus.*

By Rev. Dr. MICHAEL BURNHAM, St. Louis.

WE have not time to take up the fact that the Greeks mentioned in John xii. 20-22, were "proselytes of the gate;" or to consider why they were coming from the West to His cross, as the wise men came from the East to His cradle; or that Greece and Rome were both obliged to lay down their trophies at the feet of the cross eventually; but we will fasten our thought upon their prayer, "We would see Jesus." We will adopt their prayer as our own. It is an impressive fact, let us observe in passing, that that unique life of Jesus rises before us in constantly greater proportions and power, and the request that these Greeks make of the disciple, Philip, receives a greater emphasis as we take the words to express our own heart's desire.

NECESSARY AND POSSIBLE.

(1) The sight of Jesus is necessary. Personality is the mightiest fact of the universe. The Son of God, the Word of God, the world of God, the men of God, the human heart and conscience everywhere, all insist more and more as the centuries pass, on a sight of Jesus. He is the great central fact of the universe. The Word of God from beginning to end is a presentation of His wonderful life. "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." "God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son." I might quote portion after portion of Scripture to give emphasis to the personality of Jesus; the necessity of a relation to Him on our part makes Him our door, our life, our all.

(2) The sight is possible. Men have seen Him. Men preceding Him saw Him. By faith Abraham rejoiced to see Him in his day. He saw Him and was glad. The Old Testament has Jesus for its central theme. On the way to Emmaus, our Lord turned the pages of the Old Testament, and made the hearts of the disciples burn within them while He unfolded from prophets and Psalms this wonderful truth: "Ought not Christ to have suffered, and to rise from the dead on the third day?"

The men beside Christ learn to see Him in the process of His unfolding revelation. I am sure Peter saw something that transferred him from a plain Galilean fisherman into the apostle of grace. I am sure John saw something that, by-and-by on Patmos, opened to him a vision of the heavenly land, and revealed the throne and the song of the redeemed. I am sure Paul saw something on the way to Damascus that smote him to the earth, and changed the mighty persecutor of the Christian Church into the apostle to the Gentiles. I am sure men of later days have seen our Lord. Our beloved Brother Moody, on the bed of death, saw something that awoke his whole being to the glory of another life.

THE HISTORIC BASIS OF FAITH.

(3) What in some sense is the word of Jesus? It is historic. You cannot destroy, you must not destroy His cradle, His cross, His grave, His resurrection, His ascension. You cannot take them away. There is an historic basis to our faith, that is beneath our feet as a platform of granite, and no man can destroy it. It is too late, in this twentieth century, to attempt even to pull down the great historic facts of the Gospel. The vision of Jesus differs a little in certain forms and essentials: if you please, the Gospel has emphasized different facts, created different sects, and put on the field for Christ different divisions of the army of the church militant. Different sects have emphasized different facts. They are necessary, and they have not yet had their day.

The ecclesiastic Christ is worth our study. But deeper than all this is that experimental Christ before whom, as the forgiver of our sins and the imparter of the power of our life, we stand in a unity that cannot be broken in the church militant or church triumphant. In the face of these important facts of our experience with Jesus, as our accepted Saviour and our adorable Lord, who has the right to command us? These things make a fellowship of Christian love, and a power of spiritual life that unites God's army in one great whole of progress. Dr. Taylor, of Andover, during his lifetime used often to speak of his experiences on Mount Olivet, when making a fellowship of communion and love with Christian men of several sects and nationalities on the ground made hallowed by the feet of our Lord. Yes, there is a uniformity and power of love in Christian fellowship, that binds all our hearts together in the sight of Jesus as our Saviour and Lord.

HINDRANCES AND OBSTACLES.

(4) Let us take some of the hindrances, some of the obstacles that prevent the sight of Jesus, at least to some of those who ought to be His disciples.

(a) There are race hindrances. No man could listen to the missionary addresses without feeling a kinship with those men of God who have given their lives on the banks of the Congo, where the slave traders' caravan may be traced by the bodies of infants and children thrown out to bleach under the skies of Africa's sun, without feeling again an obligation resting on him to carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth. Yes there are race interests that prevent the sight of Jesus, and the feet of the Church must hasten to carry the Word of God—the Gospel of the Son of God.

(b) There are social hindrances. One speaker from New York has set forth the difficulties of Christ in Christian civilization, and who has not felt a barrier almost equal to that of India in preventing the power of the Gospel? There are men who can face the cannon's mouth easier than break social ties that bind them to-day to the world.

MORAL BARRIERS.

(c) There are moral interests, and they are instruments to be reckoned with in their power and influence. So, again, the train of thought in moral Christendom has often prevented the vision of Christ. The attempt to discover, as has been done for decades, a creation without a Creator, has veiled the face of the Redeemer. It has obscured Christ as efficiently as the denial of matter in so-called Christian Science is in dark opposition to facts as they exist in a scientific world. So, again, the modern attempt to find a moral government without a moral governor, and to enthrone law, has always, and will always, veil the face of Christ. And then, again, that wide-reaching effort of a civilized world to find a complete redemption without a Redeemer has had its sad influence upon Christian thinking of to-day. So putting reason on the throne, without a supreme authority before and behind, stood in the way of many a man's humility, and of the great facts in the moral world. The same thing is true in the constant efforts of a modern church to get a religion of privilege. We follow a Cross-bearer, and we can never build up a Christianity without a cross laid upon our own shoulders. True, that cross differs from Christ's cross. His was atoning, ours is disciplinary and obligatory, and is in itself, as we bear it, a genuine proof that we are followers of the Cross-bearer of Calvary.

CONDITIONS OF SEEING.

These and things like these are obstacles in the way of seeing Jesus. Now let us supply and gather up some points that may be of benefit to us in our own Christian life.

(1) We shall see what we put ourselves in the way of seeing. When we wish to see Europe, its cathedrals, its museums, its monuments, the records of its centuries, we go to the source. We study the facts. Do you want to see Jesus? Go to the Bible. It is the Word of God. Do you say yes to all that is said about the Bible? That depends upon who say it, and whether in saying it they have got a sight of the great central figure of God's Word, and have made the spiritual discoveries that are supernatural. That depends upon whether they accept the great miracle of redemption, which is the cross of Calvary and the open sepulchre. But the Bible is the source of Christian doctrine. The Bible is the source where we study the person, word, and work of the Redeemer, by men who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and by the historic witnesses of this living truth in its essential form.

The best interpreter of the Bible is the Bible. The Bible is the great source of Christian doctrine, and we are to go to the sources. So God has ordained the place of prayer as the place where he can reveal Himself to a sympathetic soul. Our Lord, who taught us to pray, saying, "Our Father, which art in Heaven," was Himself in His nights on Olivet, in His nights in Gethsemane, a living example in the field of prayer. So, too, we are to go in the spirit of faith, and hope, and love, to the table of our Lord. The difficulty is to keep the Church at the sources of supply. An army can no more go without provisions, and fight the battles of its country, than can a church march without a Bible, without prayer, without a communion table, without a living fellowship to Jesus Christ.

THE GIFT OF PROPHECY.

(2) We see what we have eyes to see. Men have been busy in the study of nature to discover great facts. The geologist, the astronomer, and the scientist, like Edison, study from point to point in the facts of a natural world. Prophetic visions will come to prophets of the coming centuries, so that there are men to-day who have seen into the great heart of Christ, the creations of the Spirit of God, the kingdom of God, in such a way that its great facts are theirs by faith. And, standing in front of great truths, men have asked not trifling questions, they have discussed not minor points, but questions like these: What is God? What is man? What is man's relation to God? And what is man's relation to man? And the answers to these questions under the leadership of God have stirred the world.

(3) Later we shall see what, by the energizing of the Holy Ghost, we choose to see. No man sees Jesus whose heart is full of wrong and sin, and God casts it out if he will allow Him; and no man sees God who does not choose God, and does not choose Him sometimes in the face of material and social and moral obstacles. They must all, like the walls of Jericho, however great, however strong, fall flat before the energizing of God; as the heart accepts Him, chooses Him, for time and eternity.

The sight of Jesus is a heart sight. Great facts are embraced by the intellect, but greater facts are embraced by the heart; the greatest is the revelation, and with the revelation the impartation of Jesus Christ. Yes, the sight of Jesus is a heart sight. It will cause tears of penitence to flow. It will put Jesus in His place as King of kings and Lord of lords—King of our own lives and our own destiny. It will put Him on the throne of eternal love. You will see Him as the fairest among ten thousand, the One altogether lovely. You will see crowns on His head, as He stands in the midst of the throne. Ever there to the vision of faith, He wears the crown of creation, the crown of suffering love, the crown of victory over death, the crown of the redeemed.

* Notes of an address at Northfield Conference.

The Heart is Deep.

(Psa. lxiv. 4, 6.)

God watches the thoughts of His children,
The thoughts of the child and the man;
And He gathers the best to His own loving breast,
To further His eternal plan.

As the infinite play of the ocean
In the gale or summer calm;
So the heart in the breast rings wild with unrest,
Or throbs with melodious psalm.

But the man and the child have moments,
When the strings of the heart respond,
To the touch of a hand stretched out from the land
That lies in the great Beyond.

And the child, with faith of childhood,
Believes in the God behind;
But the man will not see that the Hand is He
Who uncovers the eyes of the blind.

Fill my heart with the faith of childhood—
That the thought of the good and pure
Was never my own, but a whisper alone
From the Light that the ages endure.

Other Lands.

The "Lone Star" Mission.

THE history of the American Baptist Telugu Mission, by David Downie, D.D., of Nellore, is as intensely interesting as it is cheering and inspiring to the harassed pioneer and seed-sower, who in vain scans the field of his labour for signs of even a scanty harvest. Through every one of its pages God says to the faint-hearted: "Only be thou strong and very courageous, for I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." The whole is an incentive to consecrated patient endurance and perseverance, and, as Dr. Bright in his preface says, should be told to every church and Sunday-school.

The first mission to pioneer among the Telugus, of whom there are more than 16,000,000 in India, was the L.M.S., which extended a kind welcome to Rev. Samuel Day on his arrival at Vizagapatam in 1836. In 1838 he organized an English Baptist Church in Madras, of which he became the pastor. Two years later he resigned his position, and removed to Nellore, where he obtained from the Government a grant of eight acres of land, on which the present mission house stands. The fact that it was solidly built in 1841 proves that the founder of the Baptist Telugu Mission never thought of giving up his foothold.

The usual trials attending pioneer work were to be his in a rich measure—discouragements, absence of visible results, and the enmity of the Indian clime. In 1846 he was ordered home by his medical advisers, his family accompanying him.

In 1848, at the annual meeting of the Missionary Union, the question was discussed whether the Mission should be continued or abandoned. The darkest hour is said to be that before the daybreak. The year 1848 was doubtless the darkest in the Mission's history. On returning, Mr. Day, accompanied by Rev. Lyman Jewett, found sad havoc among his little flock, and the traces of his former work almost gone. After setting resolutely to work, the chapel services were resumed in 1849.

The year 1853 was another critical period for the Mission. On account of the very indifferent success that had attended it for seventeen years, the question came up for the second time at the annual meeting of the Missionary Union, "Shall the Mission be reinforced or discontinued?" and it was thought advisable to close it. A letter was to be written to Dr. Jewett, requesting him to close the Mission and remove to Burmah. Dr. E. Bright, then acting corresponding secretary, said: "And who will write the letter? And who will write the letter?" intimating, by repeating the question, and by the tone of his voice, that, write who might, he certainly would not.

In the evening, when the question came up for public discussion, one of the speakers referred to it as the "Lone Star Mission." Rev. S. F. Smith, D.D., author of the American national hymn, caught up the words, and before going to sleep that night wrote the following verses:—

THE LONE STAR.

Shine on, "Lone Star"! Thy radiance bright
Shall spread o'er all the Eastern sky;
Morn breaks apace from gloom and night;
Shine on and bless the pilgrim's eye.

Shine on, "Lone Star"! I would not dim
The light that gleams with dubious ray;
The lonely star of Bethlehem
Led on a bright and glorious day.

Shine on "Lone Star"! in grief and tears
And sad reverses oft baptized:
Shine on amid thy sister spheres:
Lone stars in heaven are not despised.

Shine on, "Lone Star"! Who lifts his hand
To dash to earth so bright a gem!
A new "lost pleiad" from the band
That sparkles in Night's diadem!

Shine on, "Lone Star"! till earth redeemed,
In dust shall bid its idols fall;
And thousands, where thy radiance beamed,
Shall crown the Saviour Lord of all.
(pp. 46, 47.)

This poem was destined of God to save the Mission. People wept and sobbed during its reading, and the result was the unanimous voting for the reinforcement of the work.

The question of abandonment arose once more in 1862, never to recur again. The missionaries by this time could not only give a more cheering record, but they saw certain indications that the field was ripening and the harvest near at hand.

On the advent of Rev. and Mrs. John E. Clough in India (1865) the prospects of the Mission became brighter year by year. Ongole, the second largest town in the Nellore district, which became the headquarters of the new missionaries, became also the centre of an increasing spiritual work, but the large influx of converts did not come until after the great famine of 1876-78, by which about 58,000,000 of people were affected. It was during those times of sore distress that the Mansion House Fund was suggested by Mr. Digby, then editor of the Madras Times.

By helping the Government to carry out relief works, by alleviating suffering and proving themselves friends in need, the missionaries won the confidence of the natives, who would listen to their message eagerly. No candidates for baptism, however, were accepted until there was no more hope of any further relief. Baptizing commenced on June 16, and by the end of the year over nine thousand (9,606) were baptized on profession of their faith in Christ.

India and Famine.

THE good news of an extensive rainfall in India is confirmed by the official telegram from Lord Curzon, dated September 5, which reads:—"General rain over practically the whole country, though too late to revive the crops in a few tracts, has improved agricultural prospects immensely. Condition and prospects of crops in Central Provinces, about which anxiety was felt, now reported good owing to timely rainfall. Gujarat and neighbouring States have benefited greatly by heavy rain, and deficiency has been entirely made up. In part of Rajputana, Central India, and Punjab, rainfall deficient still, but conditions improved generally. Prices are slightly easier. Number on relief works in the returns, which are incomplete for a few districts, show about 120,000 less than last week, or decrease of one-fifth."

THE WESLEYAN MISSION, MEDAK.

Writing from Medak, Nizam's Dominions, Rev. CHARLES POSNETT says:—"Having received through your columns on several occasions special help on behalf of our eighty-five orphan children, sheltered at the time of the famine at its worst, our little fatherless children are very deeply your debtors. The state of the country has improved very slowly, and I have had to add well nigh twenty more to our numbers. Unfortunately no one has yet done anything towards providing a special home for these children, and the result is that our boarding schools, originally built for thirty-five boys and twenty-five girls, are crowded, and I have had great difficulty to provide for the famine orphans.

"Our hospital work is growing enormously; already we have had something over 10,000 patients this year at our central hospital and three district dispensaries. This is all given entirely free to the women and children from fifty miles round, who have absolutely not one other place of the sort which can meet their need. This native State is some 100 years behind British India. The burden of this work also is all upon me, and I find that my relatives and friends can hardly bear more, hence I am just now in a difficult position with regard to the maintenance of the famine children."

The Spezia Mission—Revival.

DESPITE the strenuous opposition of Romanism, the Spezia Mission for Italy and the Levant makes steady progress, and in several instances the missioners are able to tell of widespread revival.

An awakening which has come in the Spezia district, had its origin in the funeral service of a Protestant woman. The annual report, bear the title of "Across the Alps," thus describes the events which led up to the revival:—"To our great surprise a section of the Society of the Misericordia offered to act as bearers. The arrangements were made entirely apart from us, and when we reverently followed the coffin out of the house into the street an unexpected spectacle met our eye. Instead of the group of Misericordia men whom we had expected to come and help unofficially, nearly the whole of their society was there, draped in their characteristic costume of ghostly black, their faces entirely concealed from view. A great crowd, gathered from all the countryside, and composed of those who a few months before would have allowed us no foothold in the district stood reverently waiting.

AFTER THE SLEEP OF CENTURIES.

"For nearly two hours we preached Christ, and read and expounded His Word. At the close all the Scripture portions and tracts we had brought with us were eagerly asked for, and we had not nearly enough to supply the demand. Numbers of inquirers came to talk with us. The authorities of the Roman Church have indignantly broken up altogether the local section of the Misericordia. The very city is said to be 'desecrated,' and with great pomp special 'funzioni' of reconsecration have been held in the principal church. The whole countryside has been roused. Some time back we made careful inquiries as to the possibility of getting a place there for preaching, but not even a small room was available. They would not have us at any price. Now a strong deputation, representing people of considerable influence in the city, has waited upon us praying us to begin regular work there, and offering us at a reasonable rental the best hall in the place.

THE POPULACE ATTRACTED.

Mission operations have been commenced in the province of Reggio Emilia. "The congregations were remarkable from the point of view of those accustomed to the regular preaching of the Word. The hall was thronged three times that day by a crowd, to whom we and our message were indeed a wonderful novelty. How they listened! Many of the men, whom we found to be largely socialistic, and even revolutionary, in their political opinions, stood the whole time with hat on head and pipe in mouth. Many of the women, hatless and giggling (not from disrespect, but from sheer nervousness at the utter strangeness of it all) clustered in groups, whispering or even talking aloud their comments. For the first weeks the evangelist had thronged and crowded gatherings, but when the excitement began to die down somewhat attendances thinned. Then began the steadier and more systematic, and at the same time more satisfactory work, and quietly and slowly the meetings are being built up. To-day the gatherings have a capital attendance.

THE VATICAN AROUSED.

"It is against the work among the children, perhaps, that Rome has manifested her bitterest and most carefully organized opposition. There can be no doubt that the Vatican views with alarm the strengthening of this section of our work. Rome has recently planted down, in the very districts where the Bible day school is strongest, two great edifices, manned by a full staff of priests and satellites."

The headquarters of the mission are at Casa Alberto, Spezia, Italy.

Let my soul rest itself on Him, and adventure there all its weight. He bears greater matters, upholding the frame of heaven and earth, and is not troubled or burdened with it.—Robert Leighton.

Among Arab Villagers.

A VIVID description of medical work among Arab villagers in Morocco is given in "North Africa" by Miss Jennings, of Laraish.

Accompanied by Miss Parkinson, Miss Jennings paid a twelve days' visit to the Arab village of Genafadah, on a large plain some nine hours' journey south of Laraish, on the road to Rabat. "Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, of Mequinez, and their child, encamped for four days with us on their way down the coast, and Mr. Taylor was a great help in taking the men off my hands these few days, and doctoring and preaching to them. Groups of women from neighbouring villages claimed my attention and ministry from early morning till six and after in the evening; and one of the last days I started work directly after prayers and breakfast (6 a.m.) and went on till 5.30 p.m., with a rest from 11 till about 1.30 between. Naturally, there were cases far beyond my little skill—old people, with cataract, and other bad eye troubles, deaf, and shrivelled, and paralyzed. One of the latter description was carried to the tent on the back of her son, and deposited on the floor at my feet. It was heart-rending to turn such away. To two men I gave letters of introduction to Dr. Roberts, at Tangier. From over twenty different villages came men, women, and children, after medicine, and I was surprised to find so much liver and fever trouble, and such a multiplicity of aching heads and backs among the women. The attention most of them gave to the Story of Salvation was most encouraging.

"Several times I was begged to accompany them back to their villages, and one afternoon Mr. Taylor and I visited Biddowa, three or four miles off; and there had an opportunity of preaching Christ, as we sat in the conical reed and straw hut which is kept as a 'guest-room' in the village. Its only doorway and window is a squarish opening about two feet by three, raised a foot from the ground. Here we were treated to tea and cakes, and had an audience of a few men only as we preached Christ, but outside I spoke to others.

"One mother brought her child several times to us for medicine for his eye, the whole ball of which protruded about half-an-inch, and was a horrible sight. Mr. T. could have removed it, and, though we repeatedly told both parents this, the mother said she would rather the child died than have the eye cut out. I was applied to by a wife for medicine to restore her husband to good behaviour.

"Women walked to me from their villages three or four hours' journey off, bringing no receptacles whatever for their medicines, so that I was often puzzled where to put the ointments, otherwise to be carried back in the heat on hot bodies in paper. So they would go to the Genafadeeans, and beg broken old earthen butter and milk pots, dirty oil-bottles, or the convex bottom of an English black quart wine bottle. Egg-shells, too, came into requisition as the cleanest receptacles possible for liquids."

Among the Basuto Natives.

WRITING to friends in England, Rev. R. H. Dyke tells of the many calls which are being made on the resources of the workers of the Basutoland Mission at Morija. "The beginning of a session is always a busy time. I am sorry to say that a good number of hours, during the last four days, have been spent on what cannot but be fruitless work, refusing admission to our institution to boys who have passed standard IV., and who wish to enter our Normal School; but we have no room for them, as 125 boarders overtax our resources. It is sometimes heart-rending to have to say 'no' to worthy candidates. However, there is some good even in this, for the pupils who are with us realize that it is a privilege to be here, and conduct themselves better than formerly."

Unfortunately the teachers required are not yet forthcoming. Mr. Dyke is still hopeful, however, that two young men will ere long be led to offer themselves for the work.

Natives on China Missions.

The following notes of a conference of native workers, held at Ching-chou-fu, in the province of Shantung, convey an impression of the converts' rather than of the missionaries' view of the present position of Christian work in China. They are taken from The Missionary Herald of the Baptist Missionary Society.

FOLLOWING a sermon by Rev. J. P. Bruce on "The Body a Temple of the Holy Ghost," the subject of the conference was "Church Defects." Rev. R. M. Mateer, who presided, called for expression of individual opinion as to the chief defects of the church. There was no introductory speech, and each member who rose was limited to two minutes. For an hour Baptists and Presbyterians gave their opinions. We quote a few of the points raised:—Too great dependence on the secular powers. Lack of earnestness. Love of money. Quarrels and caste. Finding fault with others rather than with one's self. Two addresses followed by native leaders. Pastor Wu (Baptist) compared the church to a sick man who had lost his appetite and neglected to take proper nourishment. Elder Teng (Presbyterian) emphasized the necessity for meditation and prayer. This conference was of great value, as it revealed the minds of the converts regarding their own defects; and as the missionaries felt that too much stress had been laid on human faults and too little stress on spiritual defects, Rev. J. F. Fitch followed in the evening with a searching sermon on "The Nature of Sin."

The exercises of the following day were planned with a view to turning the attention from self to a consideration of responsibility for others. A prayer meeting and a sermon on "Evangelization" by Rev. R. M. Mateer occupied the morning. In the afternoon the conference freely discussed this question, with special regard to the present condition of China. Pastor Luan (Presbyterian) testified to the welcome now given to a preacher everywhere. Another native Presbyterian pastor urged the necessity for ever preaching in love. A Baptist convert compared the opportunities of the present with those found in the days of Christ. Jesus had only seventy evangelists, but there were double that number in the conference alone; and what if each constituted himself a preacher of the Word? Pastor Nieh (Baptist) emphasized the importance of following public efforts with private work of a personal nature. A young Presbyterian testified that many, who before the late troubles would have nothing to do with them, now sought out the Christians and begged for instruction. An earnest Presbyterian brother told the conference that their lives had been preserved, during the recent uprising, for the express reason that they might now preach the Gospel. More than one referred to the change that the abolishment of the "eight-legged essay" had made in the Confucian scholars; and although their desire was for instruction in science and mathematics, their altered attitude afforded an open door for the Gospel, which before had been closed.

One day being devoted to practical and ethical topics, the first topic raised was the relation of the native Church to the Chinese Government; and the afternoon was devoted to the Chinaman's greatest fault, viz., love of revenge. "Forgiveness of enemies, within and without the Church," was the topic as announced. Pastor Wang (Baptist), pleaded that the Lord's favours in restoring peace should make them ready to reciprocate His grace by freely forgiving. With some humour a Baptist pastor urged that, while ready enough to forgive their real enemies, the sins in their own hearts, they hesitated to forgive their false foes, who were men like themselves. A Presbyterian brother accused his brethren and himself of forgiving with half a heart, and cherishing their wrongs with a whole heart.

It is Possible, I dare to say, for those who will, indeed, draw on their Lord's power for deliverance and victory, to live a life in which His promises are taken as they stand, and found to be true. It is possible to cast every care on Him daily, and to be at peace amid the pressure.—Bishop Moule.

Evangelical Alliance.

SPEAKING at Blankenburg Conference, as representing the British Organization of the Evangelical Alliance, Pastor Fuller Gooch said: I am sent to declare to you the warm and hearty love of British Christians. It is not a formal message. You are familiar with the New Testament greetings from church to church, European to Asiatic, and Asiatic to European. They always expected mutual salutations and greetings. Thus should Christians of every land heartily love and courteously greet one another.

It has been a great regret that circumstances seemed to loosen the bond between our German brethren and ourselves. In our council meetings we have bowed our knees to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that whatever may have led to this might be entirely removed, and that the bond of brotherhood might be increased in every way. And to be here and feel the mutual outflow of brotherly love is a cause of unfeigned joy and thanksgiving to God.

We have your interest at heart as truly as our own. Your spiritual prosperity is ours. And we delight in the tokens we see among you that your spiritual life is deepening and extending. Grace and peace be multiplied unto you. There are in Great Britain various shades of feeling, but the heart of British Christianity beats true to you.

The powers of darkness are gathering for an awful conflict. Perilous times are coming; indeed, they have already come, and we may find it difficult to hold up the banner of the Cross. The "Higher Criticism" is attacking our basis. It is the glory of the Evangelical Alliance that it believes in the plenary inspiration and Divine authority of the whole Bible. The very Atonement is seriously opposed where we might expect it to be loyally upheld. And this is not confined to the British Isles, but extends to all Christendom. We are determined to hold up the standard, and to display the banner of the truth in its fulness.

THE THREEFOLD AIM.

Our aim is threefold. (1) It is ours to uphold the great truth of spiritual unity—not uniformity. With differences of conscientious conviction we have nothing to do. Our purpose is to make all Christians and all Churches one in heart. If we are born of God, we are necessarily ONE.

(2) The second plank of our platform is to set forth the great foundation truths of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. There are many points on which we differ; but there are others on which, if we are real Christians, we must agree. In those we seek in a brotherly spirit to uphold the truth.

Nowadays nothing is certain. What is the good of preaching if the preachers doubt what they say? Men are not converted by ifs and supposes. The Gospel is what it was in the days of Luke, who says that he records "the things most surely believed among us."

(3) Our third point is to unite Christians in personal, faithful testimony. The chief need of all Christians and all Churches is personal loyalty to the Word of God. I find people here and there who profess to be orthodox, and give themselves credit for this. But I dare to say that there is no more heterodox man than he who holds the truth and does not walk in it.

If Christ calls me to love my brother under all circumstances, and I shun him because he does not in all things please me, I am not worthy of the Christian name. I am called to be holy; if I am in one point unholy, I am a traitor to Christ, an enemy to the cross, a stumbling-block, a great help to the devil. Beloved brethren, God calls us to-day to gather together. Soon these skies will cleave asunder, and we shall see our Beloved coming in power and great glory. Shall we be found distrusting and hating one another? Standing apart, unforgiving? May He find us loving as brethren; with one heart and mind loving Him, and loving one another.

God be with you all a thousandfold, and make this land of Luther full of the power of His Spirit.

The Hon. Kenkichi Kataoka,

JAPANESE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN.

SPENDING the Sabbath in Osaka, some years ago, I went in the morning to worship at one of the Presbyterian churches. After waiting some time beyond the regular hour for the service to begin, one of the officers of the congregation went forward and announced that for some unknown reason the preacher who had been expected had not come. "But," he continued, "we have with us to-day Mr. Kenkichi Kataoka, and we shall be glad if he will speak to us."

Mr. Kataoka went forward, and in a quiet and modest way gave a very helpful and interesting address. No one would have thought, from his humility and religious fervour, that this was the vice-president of the Liberal party, and one of the most prominent political leaders in Japan; whose influence and reputation are not only national, but a credit to his country.

It was in 1871 that Mr. Kataoka first came in contact with Christianity, when on a visit to the United States and Europe. The modesty, kindness, and faithfulness of the missionary who acted as interpreter and guide made a deep impression upon his mind; as did also Christian life and work, as visible in the homes, schools, and benevolent institutions in America. When in England these impressions were confirmed as the traveller discovered that influential men of the middle and upper classes, including such men as Mr. Gladstone, were sincere believers in Christianity, and that their faith was in direct proportion to the nobility of their character.

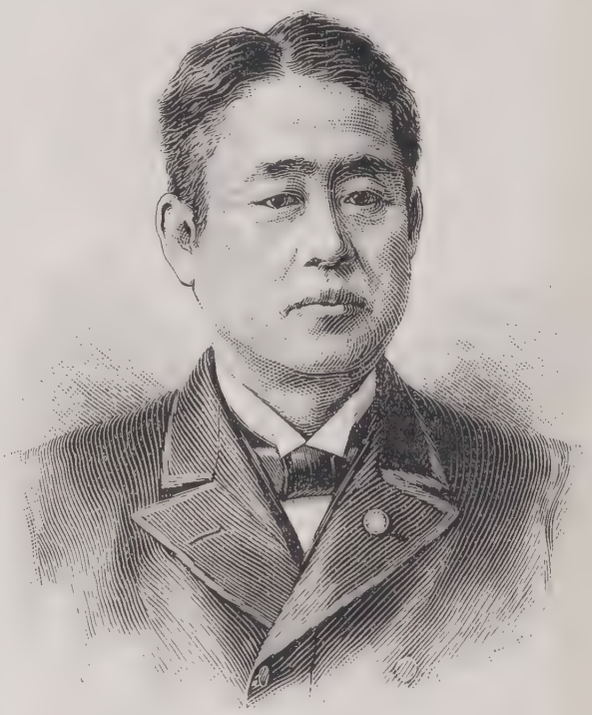
The result of much careful observation was that he returned to Japan filled with the idea that many and very important reforms were needed to secure the highest welfare of his countrymen; and, with a true patriotic and self-sacrificing spirit, he set about the introduction of a new and better state of things. In 1873 he and a few friends started a political association, of which he was made president; and through magazines, newspapers, and lectures he propagated his principles of reform. Missionaries and evangelists were welcomed to his province, and, together with some of his political friends, Mr. Kataoka began the study of Christianity.

The truest test of the earnest spirit in which all this was done, is that in May, 1885, this seeker after the truth made an open profession of his faith in Christ; and from that time took a decided and prominent position in religious matters. Some time after his conversion he went to Tokio with one of his friends, to petition the government for freedom of speech and of the press, and other important objects. Just at that time, however, a regulation was passed by the government excluding all men from his province from the capital, except such as were permanent residents.

Mr. Kataoka and his companion felt that the order was unjust, and refused to leave until they had accomplished the purpose of their visit. They were, therefore, arrested and imprisoned. This seemed at the time a most unfortunate affair, because Christians might consequently be accused of being unwilling to obey the laws of the country, and the progress of the Gospel be thus hindered.

But God overruled all for good. The two men were permitted to have a Bible, and the time spent in prison was devoted to a careful and prayerful study of God's holy Word. Others were instructed in its truths; and when released, Mr. Kataoka and his companion came out thanking God that this season of freedom from the cares and duties of ordinary life had brought them such a new and wonderful revelation of the riches of God's grace, as revealed in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. From that time forth they testified, as never before, to the joy and comfort that they experienced in the study of the Scriptures, and in daily communion with God.

In the course of time, the Liberal party became the most powerful political organization in the country. Mr. Kataoka has been vice-president for many years, and has steadily grown in the respect and esteem of the people of all classes. He has been a member of the House of Representatives at every session of the Diet since its first establishment, and a trusted and recognised leader. During several sessions he has filled the office of President.



HON. KENKICHI KATAOKA.

There was some fear that in the important position which he was thus called to fill he would be less zealous and faithful as a Christian; but the true and noble qualities of the man shone forth as never before. Like Daniel in the court of a Persian monarch, he has not denied his Lord, but, in the face of every obstacle, has gone boldly forward in the path of duty.

At the close of the Diet one year, he invited his Christian associates and other friends to the official residence for a prayer meeting. He then announced publicly that he had not sought the office of President, but had accepted it as a duty given him of the Lord, and had gone forward trusting in Divine strength and guidance. The great and continued confidence that has been shown in Mr. Kataoka's character, and his continuance in such an important and honourable position, is most remarkable, and shows what a strong foothold the religion of Jesus Christ has gained in Japan.

On the occasion of Mr. John R. Mott's visit to Japan last winter, when an unprecedented spiritual awakening took place among the young men of the country, Mr. Kataoka was one of those who extended a cordial welcome to the evangelist, helping forward the movement by every means in his power.

Opium in Australasia.

A HEARTY meeting was held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, on Wednesday evening of last week, to take leave of Mr. Joshua Rowntree, of Scarborough, who sails this week for Australia. Together with Mr. John Morland, of Glastonbury, clerk of the London Friends' Yearly Meeting, and accompanied by his wife, Mr. Rowntree is going out to represent the mother church in England at the first annual meeting of the Society of Friends in Australia.

Mr. Rowntree, by his masterly summary and review of the evidence given before the late Opium Commission, his able criticism of the Majority Report, and his chairmanship for the past eight years of the Representative Board of Anti-Opium Societies, has rendered essential services to the cause, and it was deemed fitting to acknowledge these. At the same time it is hoped that, without in any way neglecting the main object of his journey, he may be able to promote the cause in Australasia. Already New Zealand has adopted an Act, which came into force at the close of last year, totally prohibiting the sale of opium for other than medicinal use, and a similar Act once passed the Lower House in Victoria, though it failed to pass the Legislative Council. A prohibitory measure is also in force in Queensland. It is hoped, too, that Mr. and Mrs. Rowntree may be able, on their return journey, to visit Ceylon, where the opium vice is being spread among the Cinghalese by a system of Government-licensed shops similar to that of India, notwithstanding strong local protest, in which Mr. John Ferguson, the editor of the leading journal, the Ceylon Observer, has taken an important part.

Mr. John Hilton, who was called to the chair, as the senior member of the senior Anti-Opium Committee, said he well remembered the conference held at the house of the late Mr. T. B. Smithies in 1874, which led to the formation of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, of whose Committee he has been a member ever since. On the motion of Mr. Broomhall, hon. secretary of the Anti-Opium Christian Union, seconded by Dr. C. F. Harford, of Livingstone College, and supported by Mr. W. Hind Smith, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, and Dr. W. Evans Darby, a resolution expressing hearty good wishes for Mr. and Mrs. Rowntree, and commending them to the care and guidance of the Saviour whom they love to serve, was cordially adopted.

Mr. Rowntree, in reply, referring to a phrase used in prayer at the opening of the meeting by Dr. Aveling, that we might "rather seek the goodness than the greatness of our Empire," expressed his conviction that the Empire can only be truly great by being first of all good. He desired to help in freeing the young communities he is about to visit, from such evils as opium and drink. After a vote of thanks to the Chairman, the meeting closed with prayer by Rev. E. A. Dinsley.

"A History of the Ages" is the title of a new lecture by Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. Besides being a review, historical, prophetical, and missionary, of the great world-empires and Divinely-chosen Israel, it is designed to trace God's purpose, vindicate God's Word, and enforce the position and claims of His people. The lecture is effectively illustrated by photographs, views, &c., shown by a powerful limelight. After refunding expenses, the proceeds are to be devoted to the Lord's work among Israel. Mr. Wilkinson will gladly advise by correspondence about local arrangements. Address Central Hall, Philpot Street, London, E.

Shankill Mission, Belfast.

THE story of the work in which Rev. Henry Montgomery has been engaged in Belfast, before and since his ordination to the ministry in 1882, is a deeply interesting and instructive record. His ministry in the Albert Street Presbyterian Church was crowned with blessing from the outset, and a larger building became necessary to accommodate the attendances. During the first fifteen years of Mr. Montgomery's work the additions to membership on profession of faith—in addition to accessions from other congregations—averaged 100 per annum.

LARGE FIGURES AND A WIDER CALL.

The Sunday-schools grew till they included 2,250 young people, and expansion on a similar scale was the order of the day along the whole line of activity.

Success on the more or less beaten track did not, however, entirely fulfil the Lord's purpose for His servant. One day, while preaching the Gospel with wonted fervour, a direct and powerful message was borne in on his soul: "This is a very encouraging congregation to come to an unadvertised service in an out-of-the-way church; but go to those outside." The call was obeyed, and the outcome was the beginning of the work in Shankill Road, which now finds its centre of operations in the well-known Albert Hall. The reason of this choice of scene we give in Mr. Montgomery's own words:—

I had the rare opportunity of seeing one Sunday evening the congested condition o the streets where the working classes congregate and parade during church hours; and the astounding thing was that, while many of the churches were half and more than half empty, the streets were crowded, chiefly with young people, and a good many of them under the influence of drink.

Beginning without delay in the open air, a tent was erected in which meetings could be held with at least some protection from the weather. The storms of winter were, however, soon too much for the frail tabernacle, and its immediate successor was a wooden building. In 1898 this gave place to the Albert Hall, in which the services and varied agencies now find a home. The Shankill Road work would be more than enough to tax the energies of any ordinary leader; and when it is remembered that Mr. Montgomery has continued till now to be also sole minister of the large Albert Street congregation, it will be readily understood that such an arrangement could not continue permanently. On Tuesday of last week the hearts of all who are interested in this movement, and most of all Mr. Montgomery's own, were gladdened by the action of the Presbytery of Belfast in releasing him from the pastoral cares of Albert Street, and setting him apart to labour as a home missionary at the Albert Hall. This is a forward, and more or less an experimental step on the part of the Presbyterian Church, which it is hoped may be the forerunner of many more.

A SUGGESTION TO BE LAUGHED AT.

When giving his reasons for seeking the change, Mr. Montgomery recalled the unsuccessful attempts which had been made to find another superintendent for the Mission, and then continued:

After much deliberation and prayer I was led, I humbly believe by the good Spirit of God, to conclude that my duty lay in the direction of resigning my congregation, and asking you to appoint me as a home missionary to labour in the Albert Hall. The difficulties of undertaking to practically begin one's ministerial life over again, after twenty strenuous years in one charge, are not to be minimised. Difficulties, however, are not to daunt one when the path of duty is plain; and so I come, believing the proposal to be in the line of God's will. The condition of the lapsed multitudes, who live their lives and bear their sorrows and carry their personal and family burdens, without any reference to the Churches or their ministers, is appalling. What quantities of human wreckage one may find in almost any part of Belfast to-day, generally flung upon our city shores by the dark and damning waves of strong drink. To enter a church, or bring themselves under the influences of religion never dawns on them, and the very suggestion of it would be laughed at. We cannot afford to let these multitudes alone, and upon our Church, as constituting more than a third of the population of this city, a very heavy responsibility is resting. Are we realizing it sufficiently?

We are building our churches and organizing congregations, and for this we are all thankful; but are we reaching, as we ought to do, and might do, the sinful and sweltering masses away below the high-water mark of stipend-paying? God help us to seek earnestly that we may do the work and discharge the duty that lies at our very doors. About three months ago a half-drunken woman stood close to our open-air platform with her hand clenched, and her eyes filled with the fire of the drink fiend. She listened with a kind of careless, dare-devil mien, but gradually grew more subdued, and after a few words at the close of the meeting came indoors for further help. There was still some lingering beauty in her countenance, almost effaced by her evil habits. She appeared impressed, proferred to yield her life up to the Saviour, signed the pledge, and has, at any rate, been sober ever since.

"LIKES THE DRINK NOW AS WELL AS ME."

Said a young drunken mother to me about three months ago, who had three children at her foot, and was only twenty-five years of age, "I never stopped till I had made my husband as bad as myself. He likes the drink now as well as me." She had come up from the police-court to take the pledge at our mission hall, and on showing the card she was allowed out on her own recognizances, to appear when called on for an offence against the law.

Three years ago a slum boy, sent down to Bangor for a week along with a company of others, was being thoroughly overhauled in regard to bathing and clothing. The first night the worker who had gone with the boys said to this lad with the others: "Now, you must say your prayers before going to sleep." "What's that?" said he. "Oh," said the lady, "you know about God who created us, and who keeps us day by day. Prayer is asking Him for His pardon and grace, and thanking Him for His goodness." "Is He the Man above?" said the lad. "Yes," said the worker, knowing the expression as in common use among the poor. "Then," said the lad, "I don't know how to speak to Him." Our helper taught Him the Lord's Prayer, and by the Thursday of that week he had committed it to memory. About a month ago a well-grown youth touched this lady worker on the arm, and asked her if she knew him. Replying in the negative, he said, "I'm the boy you taught the Lord's Prayer to." "And do you remember it still?" she inquired. "Yes," said he, "and lately I have come to know the Lord Himself." We, who are put in trust with the Gospel, owe such people as these a very heavy debt.

LAPSING—ON WHICH SIDE?

If we will make ourselves fully conversant with the conditions of the humbler and poorer in our midst, there will be a deeper and more practical interest in the welfare of those who have not, perhaps, so much lapsed from us as we have lapsed from them.

It is with the hope of reaching this class, with the good news of God's salvation, that I ask to be set apart as a home missionary. The Gospel is the up-to-date message for the masses and the classes. It has lost none of its power, and having seen it work in the hearts of men, I would carry it lower down with full confidence in its immediate efficacy. Great problems front our civic authorities all over the land; they are face to face with the housing question, with juvenile truancy and crime, with the unspeakable drink curse, with poor-law administration reform, and many other important and pressing questions. We have a growing opulence on the one hand, and an accentuated poverty on the other. There are multitudes who live lives altogether unworthy of our civilization and our religion, and yet we can see many improvements being effected by public-spirited and able men. We are thankful for our libraries, for our public Press, for our seasons of recreation when moderately indulged, for an increased interest in general and technical education, for improved sanitation, for public parks, and all the other material blessings which have come for the general good. None of those things, however, can touch and change a sinful human heart. Within this sphere vain is the help of man. Until man is touched at the heart, he is not vitally and essentially touched at all. The truest philanthropy is Christian philanthropy, for it seeks to do man good both materially and spiritually.

These are the words not of any outside onlooker or casual visitor, but of one who has approved himself by long years in the thick of the fight. They breathe the true spirit of liberality, which welcomes every effort put forth for the good of the masses, but are still the utterances of a man who sees in sin the secret of all that is wrong. We wish our brother God-speed in his fresh start under altered auspices, feeling sure that his statement will strike a responsive chord in many hearts.

Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.—A warm tribute is paid in the Missionary Herald of the American Board of Foreign Missions to the help received from the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, enabling work to be carried on "which otherwise could not have been attempted. Our brethren at Marash, Aintab, Marsovan, Sivas, Van, Smyrna, Salonica, Broussa, Trebizond, and other stations testify to the great value of the assistance received from these grants. We return hearty thanks to this organization in Great Britain, which is co-operating so efficiently in missionary work in the Orient."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, September 14. Judges xxi.

This chapter is a curious revelation of the chaotic condition into which matters had drifted in Israel. First, the impetuous and awful vengeance which the tribes had wreaked on Benjamin had its rebound in the heart-break lest there should be a tribe lacking in Israel; then there was the perpetration of another terrible massacre at Jabesh-Gilead, in order to provide wives for the Benjamites; and, lastly, there was the forcible seizure of the young girls at Shiloh, with the connivance of the elders of the people.

We may infer from the 24th verse that each man went back to his inheritance highly satisfied and elated at what had transpired, but it was a sorry performance, and a terrible commentary on the fact that there was no king in Israel, and that every man acted as was right in his own eyes. Alas for a man when this is the case! He generally commits terrible blunders when he judges and acts according to his own limited wisdom.

So the Book closes, and as we turn from it, and think of the sermon on the Mount, with its exquisite ideals and conceptions of the holy life, it seems almost impossible that out of such a nation as that described in these pages came One who could strike the keynote of the music of holy living for every nation under heaven. Yet so it was. Just as the white loveliness of the water-lily arises out of the mud at the bottom of the lake, so did the peerless beauty of the Son of Man come, so far as its human origin was concerned, out of these conditions. If God's Spirit could do that, what may He not do for thee and me!

MONDAY, September 15. Ruth i.

Elimelech means "God is my King." It was sad that a man with such a name should go down to Moab for help, instead of waiting for the Lord to visit His people, in giving them bread (v. 6). The usual results followed, in the inter-marriage of the two young men with Moabite wives. If God's children will fraternize with the world, they have themselves to blame if their children mingle themselves with the ungodly. And their circumstances were not mended. Husband and sons were taken from her, and Naomi ("Pleasant") was left, a stranger in a strange land. You will not better yourself by disobeying the distinct command of God. Keep your position by faith where God has put you; your bread shall be given you, and your water shall be sure.

Mara ("Bitter") seemed to be her appropriate name. Yet bitter though her cup was, it was intended for the wisest purposes. Nothing less could have brought her back to God, or given her the greatest blessing of her life. Dare to trust God through bitter and dark experiences! Do not the writers of story-books like to bring their heroes and heroines to a happy ending? And will not God do as much for you?

The attitude of the two young women was very different. The one was bound by natural affection, which bore her to the top of the pass, and then yielded to the strong attraction of her home and religion. But Ruth had caught a glimpse of the true God. She said, "Thy God shall be my God." Her weary soul longed to find refuge under the wings of Jehovah (ii. 12). Thus friendship with a child of God became the golden link for her salvation. But Orpah had the same chance in vain. Thus fared the two thieves who were crucified with Christ.

TUESDAY, September 16. Ruth ii.

"Her hap was"! This was only speaking after the manner of men. There is no hap in this mortal life. All is under law to God. All is working out the Divine purpose. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and He delighteth in his way."

Boaz is a delightful character. He was evidently a good man of business, who gave personal attention to his broad acres. His promptness and reliability were proverbial (iii. 18). His word was his bond. There was no cant, nor hypocrisy, in his salutation to his reapers. And when Ruth came across his path, he bore himself with a purity and self-command, with a dignity and grace, with a tender compassion for her mother and herself, which fell like dew on the young heart, which had been scorched by bereavement and loneliness (10).

And the story of his kindness came to the heart of Naomi also, as a message from God. She felt that God had not forgotten them, after all (v. 20).

Do you feel lonely and sad? Does it seem as though God has forgotten to be gracious, and shut up His tender mercies? Does the memory of some backsliding or sin make you fear that a high fence has been built up, which will for ever shut out His lovingkindness? Be of good cheer! He has not left off His lovingkindness; He loves you as much as ever, and longs that you would know and believe His love towards you. He puts the touch of human love into your life, that you may climb up by it from the low dungeon, to stand with Him in the light.

WEDNESDAY, September 17. Ruth iii.

To us the behaviour of Ruth to Boaz seems rather indelicate; but we must not judge it by our standards. In the eye of Jewish law she was legally (so far as she knew) the wife of Boaz. It was the common usage for the nearest kinsman to marry the wife of the dead, that the child of the union might take the dead man's name and enter on his inheritance. That there was a nearer kinsman than Boaz had not occurred to either of the two women as they sat together in their humble home beating out the ears that Ruth had gleaned.

What noble continence Boaz displayed! He scorned to take advantage of the lonely girl who threw herself on his help. How careful he was of her honour, sending her home before the day broke; and how thoughtful of her necessities! These qualities stand out in refreshing contrast to those stories of wild licence which we have been considering in the Book of Judges.

It is interesting to notice the implicit faith that Naomi placed in the word of Boaz (v. 18). Would that each of us might repose as much faith in the word of Christ, with the same results. Sit still, O troubled soul! thou hast put thy case into the hands of God, and He will not rest till He has brought out thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday. Peace be unto thee. Be still, yea, be still. God undertakes thy case, and He cannot fail thee.

THURSDAY, September 18. Ruth iv.

We have in this chapter a quaint glimpse of old-world life. Books and parchment-deeds were rare. Most business was transacted in the gate, as the place of public resort; and all arrangements were made binding by the presence of witnesses.

This nearer kinsman refused to marry Ruth lest he should mar the succession to his own estate. The fact was, probably, that, as yet, he had no son born of his own wife; and he feared that marriage with Ruth might give him a son and heir, who would in that case, possibly, alienate his own estate from its proper family or tribal tenure. This, at least, was clear, that he was debarred from acting a kinsman's part, and the way was left open for Boaz to prosecute the plan on which he had set his heart.

With the goodwill of all his neighbours, Boaz married Ruth, who had given abundant evidence of her intention to abandon her own religion and people, and become to all intents and purposes a daughter of Abraham. It is beautiful to see how gladly she was welcomed into the Hebrew fold. There seems to have been no question about her. She had been far off, but she was made nigh, and was destined, with Rahab and Bathsheba, to be in the direct line of our Lord's descent, according to the flesh. Thus God putteth the solitary into families, and wipes away tears from our eyes. O broken-hearted Naomis, be of good cheer; you shall yet press to your bosom the child of promise, and on your sight shall rise the star of dawn.

FRIDAY, September 19. 1 Samuel i.

Ramathaim-Zophim lay a few miles N. of Jerusalem. It is known in the New Testament as Arimathæa. This story opens towards the close of Samson's career. Probably Elkanah had married a second wife because of Hannah's childlessness, and her suffering was of the most excruciating character, not only because of her desolate condition (Gen. xxx. 1), but because of the biting sarcasm and bitter taunts for which her rival made her the target. The needy sat upon the dunghills and the poor in the dust (ii. 5-8). But out of this soul-travail the joy of her life, and the saviour of her country, was born. Always out of the sorest travail the rarest gifts of God come into our hands.

This family, like many others, was devout in its observance of the annual feasts, and having offered part of a victim as a peace-offering was accustomed to feast on the remainder. It was at such a time that Hannah broke away, and returned to the outer court of the tabernacle. Orientals generally pray audibly, but she "spake in her heart" (v. 13). Hers was very definite prayer (11, 27), and in this she sets us a great example. It was prayer without reserve, "I have poured out my soul before the Lord." It was persevering prayer, for it came to pass "as she continued praying." It was prayer that received the boon she craved, and counted that the answer was given, and, therefore, "she was no more sad." Her glad and peaceful face must have attracted the notice of all her neighbours when she again reached Ramah; and as she had believed, so it was done to her. Notice those words, "I stood by thee here" (26). Where we have suffered, there shall we rejoice; where we have sown in tears, there shall we reap in joy.

SATURDAY, September 20. 1 Samuel ii.

What a song is this! From its materials many of the sacred writers have borrowed; and the song of the Virgin closely follows its model. Only one who had suffered, could have sung like this. There is a rapture in it which is due to the sudden re-bound from an overwhelming heart-break. All the greatest poets have learnt in suffering what they have taught in song.

It must have been something of a wrench for Hannah to resign her darling to the care of the women who were employed in the service of the Tabernacle, but there was no escape from the solemn obligation she had undertaken—to dedicate him to the service of God. But she trusted him to God, whose child he was, and breathed many prayers as she worked at the little Levite dress, which she made for him year by year. Parents still make the garments or habits that their children wear.

Throughout this narrative an evident contrast is intended between the guileless innocence of the young boy and the licence and sacrilege of Eli's sons. Not satisfied with their legally-appointed portion, they sent their servant to claim, as the priest's further perquisite, whatever meat was caught by the three-pronged flesh-hook; and they went so far as to insist on raw meat being supplied as well. Worse excesses even than these were perpetrated by them; but, instead of dealing strongly and drastically with them, Eli contented himself with a mild expostulation (23, 24). Therefore, he became involved in their punishment.

In these days the authority of parents is greatly relaxed, to the serious, yea untold detriment of family life; or, at least, it is asserted at the wrong time. If parents would exercise it in childhood, there would be little need for it when their children are in their teens. Then authority must be laid aside for companionship and fellowship. Love must succeed to law; reverent honour to unquestioning obedience. F. B. M.

Saved in a Railway Train.

By GRACE PETTMAN.

IT was a dull and cheerless winter morning. I had been up North for a ten days' mission, and was returning to London by train. The work had been done under difficulties. All the week I had been really too ill to conduct the meetings. Worn out and tired, I just longed to be alone, and when my only fellow-passenger got out at Doncaster a great desire filled me to have the carriage to myself the rest of the way to London. But I was disappointed. The train was on the point of starting, when a young railway man in uniform handed his wife—scarcely more than a girl—into the carriage.

The fast-melting snow was flooding the meadows, and the air was bitterly cold, so I said, "Wouldn't you like the window shut? It's very raw this morning."

The girl-wife started. "Oh yes, please; I forgot, I wasn't cold. I came away in such a hurry—I only had two hours' notice."

I closed the window and retreated to my corner, while the young woman leant back and gazed steadily out on the flooded fields; but a glance told that her eyes saw not, and her thoughts were far away. Suddenly an idea struck me, and I said:

"I expect you have had no lunch if you came away so hurriedly; will you accept some of my sandwiches?"

A rush of unshed tears came to the young woman's eyes, as she thanked me gratefully. The ice was broken, and she told me her story.

"My father is dying—they've just telegraphed for me—I am summoned home to see him die—It's hard, so hard!"

A few words of sympathy brought the ready tears, and they were falling quickly when I ventured a pointed question—tremblingly, it is true: "And your father; is he ready to die?"

"Oh yes!" the words came brokenly, "he is one of the best of men—as good a man as one could meet." "But goodness is not enough," I ventured; "is he really trusting in the Lord Jesus as his personal Saviour?"

"Yes, he is," she said, emphatically, "and he has been a Christian and a preacher of the Gospel for many years."

"Then you cannot regret his being called, if he is old and full of years; it only means going home to the Lord Jesus in glory, and you will meet him some day again—will you not?"

Another rush of tears, and she burst out: "Oh, I am not a Christian—I do wish I were! I have wanted to be saved for years, but somehow I could never understand the way!"

"Suppose God has sent you to meet me, in order that from His Word He may show you the way here and now! Are you willing to accept Christ as your Saviour?"

"Yes," she answered, "I am—that is exactly what I want."

Taking out my pocket Bible, I opened it at Isa. i. 18, and asked her to read it—"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." "There, you see, is the Lord's invitation; are you willing to accept it?"

"Yes, I am!" "Then let us tell Him so!"

The train was rushing on at forty or fifty miles an hour, but there, in the carriage of the express, we had a little prayer-meeting, and the Lord drew very near. From her lips came a sentence of earnest prayer, as in simple fashion she gave herself to the Lord Jesus, yielding heart and life and soul to Him, just as she was, for ever!

Then she read for herself those words in John vi. 37, "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out," and I asked:—

"You have come, here in this railway train, and given yourself to Him?" "Yes, I have."

"Then has He cast you out?" "Oh, no. He said he wouldn't." "Then what has He done?" "Why, He's received me!" and the light of sudden joy broke over her face. Then I asked:—

"Since He has received you, who has to deal with the question of your sin—you or the Lord Jesus?" "Why, He has."

"Yes; see what His Word says about it: 'He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities.' Whose transgressions was the Lord Jesus wounded for?"

"Mine!"

"Then you are free!" and together we read the verse in the first person, "He was wounded for my transgressions, He was bruised for my iniquities—the chastisement of my peace was upon Him, and with his stripes I am healed!" Then together we thanked and praised Him for so great salvation.

The train slowed down at a big junction, and my companion changed to a branch line for her home. But oh, the change in her face! Despite the fact that she was on the way to her father's dying bed, the light of a holy joy shone in her face, and God had stamped His own peace upon her brow.

A few days later I had a letter from the railway porter's young wife—a sweet little note, full of joy and assurance in God. "Perhaps," she said in closing, "I may never meet you again on earth, but I shall see you in heaven, where I shall be one star in your crown!"

So far we have not met—our paths never crossed again; but through a long eternity we shall praise Him who is able to save anyhow and anywhere, even in flying express or dashing railway train!

Bible Study Notes.—I.

By Rev. W. HOOPER, D.D., Mussoorie, India.

I SUPPOSE I may assume that all Christians, who read or otherwise use the Bible, do so with a genuine and hearty desire to learn, and to convey to others, the true meaning of it, or, in other words, God's mind as revealed in it. Yet there are many texts, phrases, and words of Scripture which are continually being misused, and, in some few instances, even misquoted; and to some of the most important of these I would like to draw attention.

I have not in view, at present, at all those misapplications of the language of God's Word which are to be found ad nauseam in the speeches and writings of worldly, and in many cases even sceptical, people. I am concerned now only with the practice of earnest Christians, who reverence the Bible as God's Word, and love it and joy in it, as being His message to them, and for them to give to others. Such, I am sure, will never knowingly misapply any part of their Father's Word; but though it may cost them a pang to be told that a text or a phrase, which has been very dear to them, and constantly used by them, in a certain sense, really has a quite different sense; yet they will afterwards be thankful to know what their Father really means by the text or phrase in question, and in time they will be reconciled to finding the meaning they love in some other portion of His Word.

I propose, therefore, to give instances of common misuses of Scripture under five heads, viz., (1) cases in which a little more care, even in the use of the Authorized Version, would have prevented the misuse or misquotation; (2) cases in which misuse would have been prevented by a deeper study of the way in which a word or phrase is used in Scripture; (3) cases where misuse would have been prevented by consulting the Revised Version; (4) cases in which the Revised Version might have prevented the mistake, but unhappily has not; (5) cases in which no plain English translation could prevent the mistake, which, however, is none the less a mistake.

CARELESS MISAPPLICATION OR MISQUOTATION.

1. Psa. cxv. 1: "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory." This is not indeed misquoted as a text, but it is constantly misquoted when taken up into prayer or address. It is treated as if it were "we give glory." In other words, it is used in thanksgiving; as a deprecation of some benefit or success being ascribed to ourselves; and an ascribing it all to God. In the Latin form of the beginning of it, "Non nobis, Domine," it must be familiar to us all in that sense; whereas the fact that the verb is in the imperative mood would be enough of itself to show that the text is a petition, an asking of God to do something. And while the remainder of the verse, "for Thy mercy, and for Thy truth's sake," emphasizes the supplicatory character of the text, the following verse, "Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is now their God?" shows what is the object of the petition. The fact is, the words in question are very parallel to those in Dan. ix. 18, 19; and God's promise, which answers to both, may be found in Isa. xlviii. 11 and Ez. xxxvi. 22. In a time of deep distress, when God seemed to the world to have forsaken his people (and they knew only too well that they had deserved it), they cry to Him to give glory to His own name by their deliverance.

2. Deut. xxxiii. 25, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." There is some doubt as to the meaning of the word rendered "strength," seeing it occurs nowhere else in the Bible; but for my present purpose I can assume that it means "strength." Now this text is constantly quoted as if God promised by it that strength would be given to His people according to the special needs of each day as it comes—a beautiful truth, which is confirmed in Psa. xlvi. 1 and many other passages. But there is a half-unconscious feeling in the minds of many who quote it in this sense, that the words in themselves do not very easily or naturally bear this sense; and, therefore, they quote it as if it were "day" and not "days"; or else they turn "days" into "day is." Whereas the meaning evidently is that strength would be continued as long as life; however long the latter might be prolonged, strength would be prolonged with it. In other words, there would be no senile decay. The promise is, of course, primarily given in a national sense; but Psa. xcii. 13-15 shows that it may also be spiritually applied to individual servants of God.

3. 1 Thess. iv. 16, "The dead in Christ shall rise first." This is often quoted as a proof that the dead in Christ shall rise before the other dead; a truth which seems, indeed, clearly stated in Rev. xx. 5, 6, but there is no reference to it here. The "first" is in contradistinction to the "then" following. The resurrection of deceased believers will first take place; afterwards the transformation of the living.

4. Heb. xiii. 8: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." The first "and" is continually omitted in quoting this text; even a well-known poem is entitled, "Yesterday, to-day, and for for ever." Nor is this to be wondered at, as long as people misunderstand the text, i.e., as long as they regard the past, the present, and the future as on a level (so to speak) in the mind of the sacred writer. But the Revised Version has done its best to obviate this misapprehension by putting a comma after "to-day," and adding a "yea" before "and for ever." It would have accomplished its purpose still better by putting the words in the order of the Greek, viz., "Jesus Christ is yesterday and to-day the same." This shows, as does also the context, that the main thought in the writer's mind is the identity of the Jesus of the past (whether the past of His earthly life, or the Hebrews' past condition, or however we may explain it) with the Jesus of the present (whether His present or ours); and having written this main thought, he adds as an afterthought (though a precious one indeed) that the Jesus of the eternal future is identical with Him of the past and the present.

Heart-Searchings of the Home.

SIR,—I have long been impressed with the idea here expressed, and I reprove myself when venturing to reprove others.

I have thought that the Christian husbands, up and down the land, men whom one has known and respected, and about whom one thought—"What a lucky girl is she who gets him for a husband!"—seem, as they grow older, to become selfish, inconsiderate, careless of the likings of their families, and often sadly nonchalant about the love, and indifferent to the preferences and wishes, of the wife whom once they tenderly cherished and caressed.

Is it so that we, who daily study our Bibles, read in vain the practical exhortations on such matters, or fail to see that God expects us daily to grow in grace? Ought we not to become sweeter, more attractive to those about us, as we ripen under the rays of the Sun of Righteousness, and yield to the disciplining power of the storms of life?

Instead of this, it sometimes happens that spiritual life is partially choked by the "other things entering in," while the children, growing up around us, notice a fatal discrepancy between Bible-teaching and our daily practice! This leads to a similar defection among the sons and daughters; and indeed it does not end there, for young ones from other families notice it, and mentally comment on it. The pastor knows it when he feels the lessened spiritual force in the prayer meeting; the servants know it; but most of all the wife knows it.

At this point I will venture to touch on a problem of to-day which I believe to be akin to our subject. Is it not the case that many of the brightest and best of our maidens seem to hold back from marriage? Women are keen observers. Are the young men of our country worthy servants of the God whom many of them profess to serve? This is a matter of deep import for the future of our homes, and of our nation.

Let us search and try our ways. We live in a land laden with privilege and Gospel light, and to whom much is given, of him shall be much required.

September, 1902. A Thinker.

Home Missions.

Mildmay Mission Hospital.

THAT there are many hospitals in London, admirably conducted from a scientific point of view, is obviously a great blessing to the metropolitan poor; but Christian people will find an especial interest in those institutions where medical skill is exercised, not only for the alleviation or removal of physical suffering, but as a means of attracting the soul to the great Physician. Such a hospital is that maintained in Bethnal Green, E., in connection with Mildmay.

The patients come from all parts of London, as well as from the districts around the hospital. Within a prescribed area only is the visiting done, but from all parts patients are sent, chiefly in connection with the various Mildmay Missions in the poorer districts of London. The hospital is also helpful to various other Medical Missions in London, as, having no hospital of their own, they are glad, from time to time, to send their more serious cases to Bethnal Green.

No "letters" are required, and no needy case is refused, if suitable for treatment, and if there be a vacant bed, whether for men, women, or children. The hospital is entirely undenominational, and no questions are asked as to the religious belief of any applicant. If he is ill, and requiring hospital treatment, he is welcome.

Nor do the patients require to supply anything while in the ward. Everything necessary, as regards clothing, food, and medicine are supplied by the hospital, although their friends are permitted to bring little delicacies to them. Many come so poorly clad that their clothes have to be destroyed and others supplied when they leave the ward.

To quote the annual report:—"The teaching of the saving truths of the Gospel in the wards, commended by the kindly care shown for the bodily welfare of the patients, has, by the Holy Spirit's enlightening power, resulted in the leading of some to the Saviour. Their changed lives testify to the reality of their conversion.

"A woman lately in the ward, who remembered with pleasure her visits as a patient to the Medical Mission in Turville Street, a good many years ago, told us that her husband first became impressed by the truth while a patient in our hospital there, suffering from heart disease. He spent his last weeks at home, and was quite a changed man, his wife said. It was a great comfort to him that he was able now 'to leave her in the Lord's care.'

"A young man came to the surgery suffering from an accident. He was quite irreligious, but, having to come daily for the dressing of his wound, he became interested in what he heard at the short service held before commencing the surgery work. He began to think of his soul, was convicted of sin, and realised his need of salvation. His injury required hospital treatment, and he was admitted into the ward. There he got further teaching, but was still undecided when he left for a seaside home along with a fellow-patient, who was also having serious thoughts. On returning to London, they both went one evening to a tent mission near, where the clear and earnest exposition of the Gospel was blessed to their conversion, and they decided for Christ."

The district visiting of the more serious cases by the doctor and nurses has both variety and interest. One of the lady visitors says: "A woman, suffering from cancer, slowly received the light, and after she was apparently unconscious of those near her she responded when the name of Jesus was mentioned. Another gave satisfactory proof that she had taken the Lord as her Saviour before she died of consumption."

An amateur pugilist was convicted of sin by a word spoken by the deaconess who visited him at home. He afterwards declared he had got "many a knock-down blow, but never such a one as the lady gave him that day." He came into fuller light, and was induced to accept Christ as his Saviour when at the Barnet Convalescent Home.

An important feature of the district work is the supply of coal, milk, bread, groceries, and dinners; also the lending out of sheets, blankets, steam tents, bronchitis kettles, &c., to needy cases among those visited by the doctor and deaconesses.

The Sunday evening Gospel meeting and the Bible classes are fruitful in spiritual results. Several of the most regular members have been patients converted in the hospital or at the Barnet Home. Many of the men went to no place of worship, and practically never gave themselves the opportunity of hearing the Gospel till they came to attend the Bible class.

For Discharged Prisoners.

EVENTS have fully justified the action of the Home Office in granting permission to the Church Army to visit the four convict prisons — Borstal, Dartmoor, Parkhurst, and Portland—with a view to helping the inmates on their release.

The following are a few of the many letters received from men who have been helped by the Army's officers:—

"Just a few lines to thank the Army for being the means of getting me another start in life. I trust that, God helping me, it will be a stepping-stone from a bad past into a better and honest future."

X. writes:—"I have entered upon my old employment again, and am reinstated in my old position, and am pleased to say that I am happy and comfortable, and I thank you sincerely for giving me the first start up the hill. God speed you in the good work you are undertaking so successfully."

Z. writes:—"I am fully sensible of the generous act you have done, and the manner in which you have done it. Sir, I have had so little kindness shown to me in the course of my life, I began to doubt whether there was any one who cared for the welfare of another. I know differently now; I am aware that you have a trying duty to perform, that you will have many tares among the wheat, but believe me, Sir, you will find men worth helping even in the criminal ranks."

The wives and families of prisoners are almost necessarily in a distressful condition. Left, as a rule, without means of support, and often regarded with suspicion and dislike, they urgently need sheltering care, that the innocent may not suffer with the guilty.

The following reports from the Army's visitors will convey some idea of the sorrows of these unhappy families:—

"F—'s husband is in a convict prison. When visited, the agent found that the woman, through worry, had nearly lost her eyesight, and, although it was a bitterly cold day, there was neither food nor firing in the house. These things were obtained for her, small grants of money and clothing given from time to time as she was not well enough to work. After a week one of the children got work, and the woman's eyesight improved. Visited and help given her until husband's return from prison, when he called to thank the agent for what had been done for the wife."

"D—is a dressmaker, and a very superior woman. Very poor, and has several children. Was visited by Society's agent, who after a time obtained a sewing-machine for her, and gave her work; also helped with food, clothing, &c. D.—subsequently wrote:—'Cannot express my gratitude to you for so thinking of my needs, the knowledge that you know and sympathise with my troubles has made them seem lighter. Am so glad to have some home-work, especially near holiday time, as there are several days then in which I can earn nothing, and find it very difficult to struggle on. I need not say how much I think of your kindness, it makes me feel less lonely to have such a letter.'"

A needlework room and laundry have been started at 6, Banner Street, St. Luke's, E.C., so that, where possible, money is not given without a woman proves her willingness to work.

London Wesleyan Mission.

CONTINUANCE in well doing has been characteristic of the London Wesleyan Mission during the past year. Its eight branches employ 22 ministers, 25 lay agents, 70 sisters, who carry on their work in forty buildings, and the membership now numbers over 9,000. The annual report just published is a comprehensive record, in which Rev. W. D. Walters furnishes a summary of the work of each centre.

The East branch has passed through a season of trial in the absence for a considerable time through illness of one of its chief missioners, Rev. John Howard, and the sore bereavement sustained by its superintendent, Rev. Peter Thompson; but the work is in a healthy condition, and steadily advancing.

IN FULL VIGOUR.

The Central branch continues in full vigour, and is exerting an ever-increasing spiritual influence throughout the district of Clerkenwell. Liverpool Road church is rapidly filling.

In consequence of the prolonged illness of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and the withdrawal of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, the West centre has suffered, but it is satisfactory to know that the congregations at St. James's Hall, as well as the minor halls, have been fully maintained. The social work has been vigorously prosecuted. The South branch is fulfilling the highest expectations in the crowded congregations at the Central Hall, as well as the continued progress at the other centres.

The South-West, Poplar and Bow centres, although as yet in their infancy, are full of promise for the future; and the Grove Mission was never more efficient in all its departments of aggressive work. The Leysian Mission continues its onward career, and the contemplated extension will give a great impetus to the work.

FIRST, THE GOSPEL.

While unremitting efforts are made in the social interests of the people, the primary place is given to the preaching of the Gospel, indoors and out, by public utterance and private ministration, the good news of a free and present salvation from sin. Week by week the superintendents and helpers are cheered by conversions, and many of the teachers, officers, and workers have been brought to God in the mission, and trained for His service. Much financial help has been forthcoming from the provinces, and the country meetings in aid of the metropolitan missions have been marked by good attendances, spiritual power, and large-hearted generosity.

One of the most encouraging features of the work is the frequent glimpse permitted into lives that have become transformed through the love of God. Again and again it is found that in many a mean street there lives a veritable saint, whose saintliness is thrown into relief by the dark and sordid background of his life, for amid the show and glamour of sin, and the unreality and falseness of much that goes on before the public eye, there are still those in humble life "who have not bowed the knee to Baal."

LONELY ATTICS AND BASEMENTS.

Turning aside from the streets of the city the workers of the mission enter lonely attics and basements, where dwell heirs and heiresses of heaven—not many great, not many mighty, but many poor and humble, in whose lives there is a daily consciousness of God. In their visitations the sisters and helpers report many such cases of Christians in needy circumstances, and it is their joy to assist in ameliorating their distress.

In various ways the workers seek the outermost and non-churchgoing classes, to whom a constant move is being made, trying to touch them at every point, to encompass them with kindness, and anticipate their needs, in the hope that by some means they may be led to higher things.

From whatever standpoint the London Wesleyan Mission may be regarded, it is acknowledged that the organization is doing much to solve the problem of city evangelization and to hasten the day when all London shall be held for Christ.

Orphan Homes of Scotland.

THE biennial thanksgiving and dedication of new property in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland and the Consumptive Sanatoria took place last Thursday. The additions made to the buildings during the past two years include three new "cottages," known respectively as the "Macfarlane," the "Peddie Alexander," and the "Robertson" Homes; with a fire station (including engine and equipment), new stables, and an organ for the chapel. Mr. Quarrier has also been enabled to make alterations on the Sanatoria and stores—the contributions for structural purposes having amounted to £20,000. Notwithstanding the unfavourable character of the weather, a large and influential company gathered at Bridge of Weir to join with Mr. Quarrier in praising God.

The chair was taken by Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P., who referred to these thanksgiving services as showing that the religion of Christ has in no degree lost its power, and that after the centuries that have passed since God revealed Himself upon earth in Christ there are men who earnestly desire to do His will. Personally he had followed Mr. Quarrier's work with interest and some knowledge since his boyhood, and when he considered how the needs of those orphan children were met, with nothing more than a sufficiency, he knew of absolutely no explanation which could be given of it upon any materialistic grounds; he knew of no possible explanation except the one given by Mr. Quarrier, that he had trusted the children to the personal care of God, that God had taken a personal interest in them, and that He had exactly supplied their needs from year to year.

A MIRACLE OF FAITH.

As representing the ministers and Christian workers of the city which has reaped the greater share of the benefit of the institutions, Rev. Dr. James Paton (St. Paul's, Glasgow) paid a high personal tribute to Mr. Quarrier. As an example of pure philanthropy, he knew nothing to be compared with the Homes. Not only were they an example of philanthropy: their history was the standing miracle of faith in Scotland.

That the work among consumptives has inspired the confidence of the medical profession was proved by the hearty expressions of Dr. Eben. Duncan, who is a member of the Advisory Board of the Sanatoria. He claimed that Mr. Quarrier was one of the pioneers of the open-air treatment of the disease. When he began his advocacy for the Sanatoria, there was no institution of the kind in this country. Referring to the success that had attended it, Dr. Duncan said that no similar institution in the world had shown better results than the one at Bridge of Weir. Mr. Quarrier had shown great sagacity in the matter; he had always taken the advice of the professional Advisory Board, and he did not interfere in any way with the treatment of the patients. The speaker dwelt on the necessity of having sanatoria where men of the artisan class could be treated, and expressed the opinion that until these were established there was little hope for the cure of consumption among the masses in our large towns.

PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

The difficulties which had arisen with the educational authorities were explained by Mr. William Quarrier, who also referred to trouble which had been experienced in dealing with the sanitary authorities with regard to infectious diseases. It was mentioned that during the past two years about £67,000 in money had been subscribed to the institution. Regarding the Sanatoria, Mr. Quarrier said each female patient under their care at present cost them £2 per week. He desired to have also a male sanatorium equal to the one they now had for females, which cost £50,000. Towards this £2,500 had been received. He had at present another movement in his mind, and that was for a colony of mercy for epileptics. For the accomplishment of this object £20,000 was needed. Then they wanted a swimming bath, as well as the church lighted by electricity, and these things would require about £4,000.

Chelsea Rescue Home.

SOME of the preventive cases dealt with at the Chelsea Rescue Home, S.W., are pathetically interesting. "One pretty, bright girl, seventeen years old, was decoyed from her situation, where she had been for three years, and brought to London by an actor and his wife, with intent to persuade her to go on the stage. This the girl refused to do, and finding persuasion useless, her supposed 'friends' persecuted, and finally threatened to turn her out of doors. The poor girl was penniless, having received no wages for her five weeks' service, and when she found a half-sovereign lying loose, thought it would serve as wages and pay her fare home. Conscience, however, troubled her, so taking the money to her employer she told him her intention. He at once took her to the police court to charge her, but the magistrate condemned his heartless conduct, dismissed the case, and sent the girl on to our Home."

Many of the cases, both rescue and preventive, prove highly satisfactory. One girl who, years ago, came to the Home from the hospital, with nothing but the clothes she was wearing and her baby, remained in her situation fifteen years, provided for her child, and assisted to maintain her widowed mother. She has just left this situation to attend to her aged mother, who is now too feeble to work. The Home is at 93, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.

In Spitalfields Lodging-Houses.

THE notorious district of Spitalfields, E., where common lodging-houses abound, affords a fruitful field for visitation by Christian workers, as well as for evangelistic meetings.

In connection with the Spitalfields Lodging-House Band (auxiliary to the London City Mission) there are visited every Sabbath evening six houses, containing in the aggregate from 400 to 500 lodgers.

"Our coming among them," says a recent report of the operations, "to hold the service of Gospel song and story, is looked forward to with no little eagerness. These services are the brightest hour of the week to many of the inmates, when the dull monotony of their wearisome life is broken. As we look at those faces, some marred, and deeply too, by the sins of years, others with wan and pinched features telling so plainly of the anxious strife for bare existence, the hardest heart must melt in pity. We would try to forget what they are, or have been, in the desire to give them present and permanent good."

Near by, in the Hoxton district, two lodging-houses are also visited, and much blessing has attended the services. The inmates are socially a step or two higher than their Whitechapel brethren. An interesting case in connection with Hoxton is that of a young man who, while undergoing a term of imprisonment, thought over the words he had heard spoken by the Mission Band, and spoke to the chaplain on the matter. He is now at honest work, has left his old associates and surroundings, and gives every reason for the belief that a spiritual change has come over him.

Welsh Notes.

INHABITANTS of the village of Newborough, Anglesea, are to be made the recipients of a munificent gift. Mr. Pritchard Jones, of London, who is a native of Newborough, is about to erect several almshouses for the deserving poor of the neighbourhood. In addition there are to be a parish hall, reading-room, and coffee-room. The total cost of the buildings will be £6,000, together with £13,000 by way of endowment.

"The Tyst," the organ of the Welsh Congregationalists, devotes a leading article to the duties of the Executive Committee of the Congregational Union. The programme of the annual meetings of the Union is decided upon solely by this committee. Some of the suggestions made by "The Tyst" are worthy of general attention and acceptance. It counsels the Committee not to be afraid to give a prominent place in the Union meetings to men who labour in comparatively insignificant spheres, and under circumstances by no means of an inspiring character.

The need of paying greater attention to young people is being increasingly realized by the leading religious denominations in the Principality. As a proof of this may be instanced the fact that, in addition to special preaching services, the programme of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association at Carnarvon concluded on Sunday, August 31, with a huge young people's meeting. Between 3,000 and 4,000 were estimated to have been present. Rev. Griffith Ellis, M.A., of Liverpool, spoke on "The Duty of Young People in the Face of Doubt;" while Rev. J. Cynddylan Jones, D.D., delivered a powerful address on "Strength: Intellectual, Moral, and Spiritual."

Christian Endeavour Rally.

DR. AND MRS. F. E. CLARK IN LONDON.

ARRIVING in London from Switzerland, Dr. and Mrs. F. E, Clark, the founders of the Christian Endeavour movement, were given a hearty welcome on Tuesday, as well as a fervent God-speed on their way homeward to America. In the afternoon the visitors were entertained by the London Council, representing 700 metropolitan societies.

For the subsequent gathering in the Metropolitan Tabernacle the congregation began to assemble at 6 o'clock. The meeting did not commence till 7.30, but a service of praise was commenced half an hour earlier. Mr. Harry Harmsworth, who presided, briefly explained that they had met to honour and welcome Dr. and Mrs. Clark on their passage through the city. Referring to the fact that this is the twenty-first year of Christian Endeavour, he recalled the little gathering in Dr. Clark's parlour, when the first pledge was taken. Alluding to the remarkable growth of the movement, and the unflagging devotion of the founder, the Chairman remarked that it was better to set ten men to work than to do the work of ten oneself.

Speaking on behalf of London Endeavourers, Miss E. M. Weatherley said they welcomed Dr. and Mrs. Clark with glad enthusiasm and love, loyalty and reverence, as a "father" and "mother" who had led thousands into the service of Christ through Christian Endeavour. They had in London 30,000 Endeavourers, pledged to serve Christ, and surely they might believe that their loved city was a little purer and nobler because of Christian Endeavour.

Rev. Albert Swift (East Dulwich) followed with words of cordial welcome. He spoke of Christian Endeavour as one of the movements which have done so much to bring about that better feeling which has sprung up in recent years among the Anglo-Saxon peoples.

On rising to speak, Mrs. Clark was warmly received by the vast assembly, which rose spontaneously and cheered for some minutes. They could not tell how pleasant it was, she said, after wandering through many lands, to come to such a meeting and to receive so warm a welcome. Both in numbers and popularity Junior Endeavour (which Mrs. Clark represents) is on the increase, and she spoke at some length of methods among the younger branches.

On the suggestion of the Chairman, Dr. Clark was greeted with the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds." When the cheering which followed had subsided, Dr. Clark recalled the first occasion on which he had spoken in London on C.E. work in 1888. Referring to the great London Convention of 1900, he said that wherever he went he found echoes of that remarkable gathering. This year had been one of advance all along the line, especially on the Continent of Europe. He had visited nearly every country, travelling 23,000 miles, and had spoken through interpreters in nineteen different languages. In almost every country a beginning has been made. He pleaded that, in extending the movement, two things should be borne in mind: its simplicity of purpose, and directness of method and aim. It was to train young people in the service of Christ, and for His Church, and to stand for righteousness and temperance.

Dr. and Mrs. Clark sailed for America on Thursday, taking with them the heartiest wishes of Britain's Endeavourers on their return journey across the Atlantic.

The College by Post.—This branch of the Christian Women's Education Union has quietly pursued its way for the past twenty-one years, and is still ready as ever to give a helping hand to those who desire aid by correspondence in regular Scripture and secular study. Its three main divisions are classes for: (1) Scripture studied chronologically. (2) Bible and Prayer Union, Christian Progress Union, Church of England lessons, Y.W.C.A. portions. (3) Various subjects—history, literature, languages, &c. There is a nominal fee for membership. Applications for the winter term must be made during the month of September to Miss Woodd Smith, Oak Hill Lodge, Hampstead, London, N.W.

Home Mission Week.

BABYLAND.

THERE were babies awake and babies asleep; brown-eyed babies and blue-eyed babies; babies with bald heads, and babies with sunny curls; all sorts and conditions of babies, from a few weeks old to several years' acquaintance with the world.

The babies who were asleep were tucked away in green swing cots with white trimmings; those who were awake were engaged in various ways. Several of the bigger ones were playing games, while one was mounted upon a rocking-horse, and the rate at which he was going led one to imagine that he was in hot pursuit of an enemy! Some of the babies were cooing and saying a great deal which it was impossible to understand without a mother present as interpreter! One little maiden (who informed me with a self-important air that she was "two-and-a-half years old") was busily employed in pushing round, in a wooden chair on wheels, an infant of some six months old, who showed his appreciation of her efforts by setting up a lusty yell whenever she ceased in her journeys round the room. I noticed that whenever he gave vent to his feelings in this way, several other babies showed sympathy by doing likewise; in the noise which ensued, one realized that life in Babyland requires a good deal of patience and love on the part of the nurses.

But where did all these babies come from, and what were they doing? They had come from slums and alleys, from homes of poverty, from scenes of crime. They were the babies who are brought daily to the Marie Hilton's Crêche in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes at Stepney Causeway. They begin to arrive as early in the morning as seven o'clock, and they are called for in the evening when the mothers have finished their day's work. This Crêche is a great boon to these mothers, who have to toil so hard to earn a living. For the sum of 2d. per day (or 1d., if the mothers are widows) the little ones will be fed and cared for.

There is Mrs. S——, whose husband is dying of consumption. She has two little ones aged two years and six months respectively. The only way in which she can keep the home together is by working all day in a factory. This she would gladly do, but what about the little ones? They cannot go to school, and their father is too ill to take care of them. The neighbours are kind, but they have their own children to see to. Mrs. S—— feels she cannot leave them; Florrie might fall in the fire, and baby might swallow something which would choke him. To stay with them means starvation for the family, the workhouse, or, worse still, that continual shifting from neighbourhood to neighbourhood to escape the payment of debts. What shall she do? Mrs. S—— heard of Dr. Barnardo's Crêche, and away she hurried to make inquiries. "Will they take her little ones?" "Yes, gladly," answers the nurse, and the next morning finds Florrie and the baby safely installed in their new home, and the mother can go to her work with a heart at rest concerning them.

The first thing that happens to the babies is that they are given a nice warm bath, and dressed in a suit of clean clothes lent them for the day, and very sweet and fresh these mites look. The rest of the day is spent in playing, sleeping, and eating (and crying), and in the evening the mothers call for them; and they exchange what must seem to them like fairy garments (if babies have any thoughts on the subject) for Cinderella's rags, and return once more to slumland. But I think sometimes the mothers, when they see the bright, clean nursery, must be stirred with the desire for a purer and healthier life for their little ones, and a determination to do what they can towards this end.

Dear little, helpless mites, so entirely dependent on the love and pity of others! Who will aid them? You can guess that 2d. per day does not cover the expenses connected with the work!

Looking at the baby faces, and thinking of the story hidden behind each little life, and the story that shall yet be written, one can only pray—

> Tenderly guide them, O Shepherd of love,
> To the green pastures and waters above;
> Guarding them ever by night and by day,
> Never from Thee may they stray!

God and the Children.

God gives each thirsty daisy
A little drop of dew;
God thinks about the sparrows,
Providing for them too;
God always lights the stars at night,
Not one is e'er forgot;—
Will He not guard each little child
Within its tiny cot?

God hears the happy skylark
Up at the gate of heav'n;
God sees the fleecy cloudlet
Sometimes by rough winds driv'n;
God knows about each drop of rain,
Each snowflake white and fair;—
Will He neglect a little child
Who lifts to Him its prayer?

Word Pictures.

1. Here is a picture of a man who has been ordered on a very important errand. He is fearful of his success and questions his fitness for the task, whereupon he is given two wonderful signs, but being still afraid, is provided with a companion. (a) Who was the man? (b) What was his errand? (c) What were his excuses? (d) How were these answered? (e) What were the signs? (f) Who was the companion?

2. What is this picture? We see coming through the wilderness a procession, and in the distance an army in pursuit. Those in the procession perceive this with dismay, for their way is barred. But a man steps forward, raises his staff, the barrier disappears, and he and his followers pass on their way in safety. (a) Who formed the procession? (b) Who formed the army? (c) Who was the man? (d) What was the barrier? (e) How was it removed? (f) What became of the army?

3. Here is a very brilliant and dazzling picture; it is the picture of a feast. As the meal advances something happens, and we see the host becomes uneasy and troubled; he is no longer merry with his guests. He calls for help, but none is found. Then a woman offers advice which is accepted, and his uneasiness is at an end. (a) Who was the man; to whom did he give the feast? (b) What caused his uneasiness? (c) To whom did he turn for help? (d) Who was the woman, and what was her advice? (e) What was the explanation? (f) What happened to the giver of the feast?

Delight in God's House (Psa. lxxxiv.).

THOUGH this Psalm was handed over to the sons of Korah for musical setting, it surely came from the hand of David. It was probably written at some time when he was an exile, and could not go up to Jerusalem. He envied the sparrows and swallows who built around the sacred edifice; and even the doorkeepers (3, 10). I am not sure that we have enough of this passionate love for God's house. It may be, in part, the fault of the ministry that there is not enough scope in all our churches for the pure acts of worship—a feature which was specially prominent in the old dispensation. It may be, in part, the result of our modern life, which must be always in action and service, not giving time enough for God to do His work in our hearts. Oh, Spirit of God, create in us an appetite for Thy house!

The Psalmist sees the multitudes gathering from all parts of the land for one of the great annual feasts. Here is a man whose strength is in God, and who is so set on going up to Mount Zion, that its highways lie through his heart (v. 5, R.V.). One would like the highways of heaven to lie through one's heart, so that there might be a clear track between us and God! One would wish to be so familiar with them as to know them by heart. This is surely our English way of saying what the Psalmist has said in verse 5.

The valley of Baca was perhaps called so because of its barren and arid condition. It was perhaps a long scorching stretch of sand, and those who traversed it found it indeed a vale of tears, a valley of weeping. When I was travelling last year in Syria I saw many of those valleys. In the early spring, when the snows melted, they were doubtless covered with verdure. "The early rain covereth it with blessings." But at that time they were barren, scorchingly hot, with heaps of stones to show where water flowed once a year. R.V. says, "They make it a place of springs." But the prayer book has another rendering—"Who going through the vale of misery use it for a well; and the pools are filled with water."

The pilgrims used the vale of misery for a well. They were, of course, looking forward to Jerusalem, and feeling that they would be well repaid when they reached the holy city. They were also glad, of course, as any travellers would be, when some greener spot made the best of their circumstances. They looked deep down into them, resolved to get as much comfort from them as they were able. Do not always be looking on for compensation to your present anxiety, look down, look in, above all look up. There is comfort here and now, just where you are. Use it.

Now, to the Psalmist's eye the pilgrim bands have left the valleys, and are beginning to climb up to the tablelands. They go from strength to strength, from the lower to the higher level of the hills; and at last Jerusalem looms in sight. At first distant, then nearer and nearer still. Finally every one of the pilgrim-hosts appears in Zion before God (v. 7).

From the worshippers the Psalmist turns to the God whom they worship, and magnifies Him as Sun and Shield. The cloud which accompanied Israel in its march was alternately light and shadow. In the night it was light, shedding its beautiful radiance on the sleeping host; but in the day it was like a great umbrella. So with God—now sun, and again as "a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall" (see Isa. xxv. 4, 5, R.V.). Live in the presence of God! In dark and stormy days, when it seems as though the light of our life had fled, He is our sun, and our light no more withdraws itself, because the Lord has become our everlasting light; but in days of prosperity or temptation, He becomes our shield. "The sun shall not hurt by day, nor the moon by night."

Whilst we are in this world we need grace. In the next we shall need glory. But God will give each to us in due season. And the Psalmist at last felt that he could trust God, even when He withheld, sure that He would withhold no good thing from him if he walked uprightly.

The Death of Moses. Deut. xxxiv. 1-12.
Golden Text. Ex. xxxiii. 11.

FORTY years had elapsed since Moses sang his triumph song on the shores of the Red Sea; and he commemorated the close of the wilderness wanderings by another song (xxxii.) wherein mercy and judgment are strangely mingled, but without one word of personal bitterness. The name of the Lord was published, and greatness ascribed unto our God (3). Once more he solemnly impressed upon the people to "set their hearts to obey, and teach their children to observe the words of the law" (46); and "on the self-same day the Lord spake to Moses, get thee up into the mountain . . . and die in the mount."

Did he need time for preparation? No! he had "prepared to meet his God" long before. While a youth in the palace of Pharaoh's daughter he had made his choice for time and eternity. Note Heb. xi. 24-26. Jehovah had revealed Himself to him in the burning bush at Horeb, and his promise given then held good this day also. "Certainly I will be with thee" (Ex. iii. 4, 12). At "the word of the Lord" he had taken up his life work, and at the same loved word he could lay it down when God pleased. "And Moses went."

The View from Pisgah.

The aged prophet's last thoughts were for his people, and before he turned to ascend the mountain path of Abarim he poured out upon them in words of blessing, which have echoed down the ages like "Gospel bells." Who has not heard the notes of this chime (3, 12, 25, 27, 29)? He had passed forty years in the school of Egypt's wisdom and luxury, forty years in God's school of humiliation and teaching, forty years at the head of a great host of freed slaves, to educate, train, and discipline Israel into a nation for the Lord (Acts vii. 22, 29; Ex. iii. 1-10, xix. 10).

He was 120 years old, in full vigour of body and mind. The work was the Lord's, his part of it was done. With practised obedience and unswerving faith, staff in hand, he went up to lay down his "rod" of service at his Master's bidding.

With his undimmed eye he was permitted to take in at one view the promised land. Northward the wooded hills and green pastures of Gilead, the rich plains of Bashan right up to snow-crowned Hermon. Turning, he saw the sunny slopes of Galilee, the fruitful valleys of the centre of the land, and, further south, the vine-clad mountains, Jericho nestling among the palm trees; while below at his feet lay the Dead Sea, and, closer still, the tents of the people he had guided so long, but may guide them no further; the mountains of Abarim, of which the summit of the highest peak (severally named Nebo and Pisgah) was 4,000ft. above the level of the Dead Sea, and 2,643ft. above the Mediterranean.

Was the sight of the land an aggravation of his disappointment? Moses had left that sorrow—"left it with the Lord in prayer," and no mention of it is heard after Deut. iii. 25, 26. He lost none of his interest in the people's entrance either. The sight was compensation. He saw with his own eyes the fulfilment of the promise he had believed, and the Lord Himself showed it to him (4), and then "underneath were the everlasting arms," "the beloved of the Lord dwelt safely by Him."

"The Servant of the Lord."

Faithful and honoured in life and in death (Acts vii. 22). But not too learned to know God and to obey Him humbly (Ex. iii. 11,; iv. 10; Deut. iii. 24), loyally, faithfully, earnestly, and all from love. He had many titles—prophet, judge, leader, historian, conqueror, poet, intercessor. The uncrowned king of a nation, but none equalled the name given to him by Jehovah—"My servant, faithful in all Mine house" (Num. xii. 7).

God's command drew from Moses two prayers, one for a leader to carry on the work (Num. xxvii. 17, answered, vv. 18, 23); and one for himself which was denied. Why? The trespass at the waters of Meribah is mentioned over twelve times under various names. "Unbelief," "rebellion," "trespass," and failing to sanctify the Lord before the people. The people had sneeringly asked, "Is the Lord among us or not?" This "meekest of men" was angered at the taunt, and his spirit was provoked (Psa. cvi. 32); and he failed to proclaim before the people the presence of the Lord, and give the glory to Him.

Moses came to meet Jesus in the land of Palestine centuries after.

Learn.

1. What great things the Lord can do through a boy who gives himself wholly to Him in his youth, according to the needs of his generation.

2. How to meet death without fear (Heb. ix. 27). Jesus took the sting of death on Himself for all who trust in Him (1 Cor. xv. 54-57). Could Moses fear to meet the Lord again whom he had known face to face so long?

3. Children had better obey their parents in life, and love and serve them, than weep over them in death. Tears then are mostly selfish or useless. Let them carry happy thoughts of you with them into the presence of the Lord.

Illustrations on S.S. Lesson.

A VIEW FROM PISGAH.

Anyone who has travelled across Dartmoor knows the advantage of the many "tors" or hills to be found in various localities. When a tourist is lost on the moor, he usually makes his way to the nearest tor, and having climbed to the summit, can look many miles across the country, and may, possibly, be able to trace a suitable path leading in the desired direction. So the Lord led Moses up from the level of the wilderness to the top of Pisgah, and showed him all the land which the people should possess, because He had sworn unto Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed (vv. 1 and 4). We may rise from the low levels of life, and from the hill-tops of communion with God view the promised land, the heavenly Canaan.

FULL OF THE SPIRIT.

When a thermometer is made, great care must be exercised lest any air should remain in the tube after the mercury has been inserted. If there be any atmospheric interference the mercury will be divided, and as a result the record of temperature will not be accurate. Joshua, the son of Nun, was full of the spirit of wisdom (v. 9), and in consequence was made leader of the people. Had Joshua been half-hearted, or had selfishness been exhibited, the Lord would not have used him to indicate to the people the will of God concerning them. When the Holy Spirit fills a man there is no room in the heart for sin or worldliness.

FACE TO FACE WITH GOD.

On some of the dangerous rocks of the Scottish coast, where it would be difficult to fix permanent lights, reflectors are arranged so that each may be exactly face to face with a lighthouse on the mainland. By this means the flashing of a light on the shore is caught by the reflector on the rocks, and again the warning rays are flashed across the ocean. The reflector is only useful as it stands exactly opposite the lighthouse. And so it was with Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face (v. 10), and who was thus able to reflect His word and His thoughts to the people of Israel.

FITTED FOR HIGHER SERVICE.

On one occasion Daniel Webster was approached by a young lawyer, who complained that there were too many men in the legal profession. The famous American, looking intently at the young man, replied, "Remember, though, there is always plenty of room higher up." Moses had served God in all the signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, and God, honouring his services, had used him for the nobler and higher work of leading the Israelites to Canaan. And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses (vv. 10 and 11). If we serve God faithfully in our present spheres of labour He will in His own good time use us for higher service, where "there is always plenty of room."

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE World's Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s, held triennially, is eagerly looked forward to as an occasion of mutual encouragement and the interchange of thought and counsel. The 1902 Conference, held at Christiania during the last week of August, was of an inspiring character, far surpassing the high expectations that had been formed regarding it. Over 2,100 delegates attended, representing thirty-four nationalities. The Norwegian Parliament, and the municipality of the capital, each voted 5,000 kroner towards the expenses.

The invitations were issued by the Christiania Y.M.C.A. council, and Dean C. Hall (of the Lutheran Church), president of the City Association, occupied the chair. Among the prominent delegates present were Dr. Karl Fries (Stockholm), Pastors Klug (Barmen), Em-Saulter (Paris), and Da Silva (Oporto), Count von Bernstorff (Berlin), and Mr. John R. Mott (New York), the English representatives including Lord Kinnaird and Mr. M. H. Hodder. The Central International Committee (Geneva) sent Professor Barde and MM. Ch. Fermaud and Christian Phildius.

Prince Oscar Bernadotte, on behalf of the King, welcomed the delegates at a social reception at the Palace, and the chiefs of the army showed their sympathy by placing a splendid pile of buildings at the disposal of the organizers. The large gymnasium made a capital council room. Mornings and afternoons were devoted to the consideration of practical questions, while public meetings were held in the evenings. The closing day, August 24, was marked by a great gathering in the Fressler Church, at which Prince Bernadotte gave a striking address.

At a garden party in connection with the Tottenham and Edmonton Association, Mr. W. Cameron stated that the membership is rapidly increasing, and the erection of suitable premises is in contemplation. Mr. F. L. Porter, of Hackney, congratulated the association upon the inauguration of a building fund. Miss Howard urged all present to yield their lives unreservedly to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. C. E. Derham, secretary of the Sheffield Association, has been appointed to the general secretaryship of the Association at Cape Town, recently vacated by Mr. W. Gordon Sprigg. In view of the wide developments anticipated in the South African work this centre is one of the utmost importance. It possesses a very fine building, and a membership of over 1,000, recruited almost entirely from the home country.

Mr. Sprigg, who was one of the delegates to the recent World's Conference at Christiania, has consented for a time to assume oversight of the work at Johannesburg. The premises in Pritchard Street have been advantageously disposed of, and a new scheme is now contemplated, involving an outlay of over £50,000.

The National Council has received gratifying reports of the work done by the associations of various district unions amongst volunteers in recent encampments on Salisbury Plain, Dartmoor, the Denes, Great Yarmouth, and elsewhere. The work called forth many expressions of appreciations on the part both of officers and men. All the workers told of crowded tents for purposes of reading, writing, and recreation, also of large and enthusiastic Gospel meetings held each evening.

The All-Ireland Conference of the Irish Union of Young Men's Christian Associations has been held in Dublin, and was largely attended by delegates from various parts of the country. Papers were read by Mr. W. J. W. Roome, C.E., of Belfast, on "Prayer and Its Relation to the Worker and the Work;" by Mr. R. A. Norman, of Waterford, on "The Necessity and Importance of Foreign Mission Work;" and by Rev. A. Macafee, M.A., of Omagh, on "The Bible, Its Relation to the Worker and the Work." The Conference extended over three days, and Rev. John McNeill delivered three very impressive addresses. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. Samuel Prenter, D.D., and others, and altogether the Conference was calculated to encourage and deepen the spiritual life of all who were present.

Anna Shipton's Writings.

As executor of my late dear friend, Mrs. Shipton, I have seen a large number of testimonies to the value of her books. It is my conviction that to very few authors indeed come so many assurances of direct spiritual enlightenment, leading in some cases to conversion and in others to a definite growth in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. The evidences are many and unmistakable of an advance from the monotonous and depressed lowlands to the joyous heights of Christian experience, to an ever upward progress from faith to faith, from the forgiveness of sins to righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

The following are a few brief extracts. Some longer passages of much interest are reserved for future occasions. I should add that Mrs. Shipton had been careful to eliminate from her correspondence and other papers matters which I presume she considered were intended for no eyes but her own.

R. C. Morgan.

"I have enjoyed the perusal of 'The Secret of the Lord' and 'Tell Jesus,' which have been a blessing to others beside myself. 'Tell Jesus' has been the means of much blessing to my soul."

"My wife and myself have received a blessing from the Lord by means of your books. 'Tell Jesus' has brought much joy and help to a friend of ours who was in doubt. Your books are so practical, and just what one wants—whether we are in the depths or the heights there is always some helpful thought."

"A lady asked me to tell you how for years your books had been the very greatest blessing and comfort to her and her husband."

"After I had read through one of your books, I thanked God for what he has enabled you to write. I was empty, and depressed, and fearful; your book helped me to realise liberty."

"Your words are always fresh and stimulating. What your books have been, and still are, only God knows."

"I gave 'Tell Jesus' to a young servant two years ago. She has just written me saying what a blessing it has been to her. 'The Believer's Portion' was also a help and blessing.

"A friend of mine writes:—'I should like Mrs. Shipton to know what an unspeakable comfort her books are to us.' The works you have written have been for many the message from death unto life. I always turn to them in time of bereavement. They have been wonderfully used for the strengthening of a friend of mine."

"Your inspired lines in 'Retrospection' are a tonic to the soul. You must have enriched and strengthened many through 'The Lord was There.' You have made others strong by your writings. What a Christ-like mission is yours, to scatter the seeds of Eternal Life in all corners of the globe, and have the assurance from those who are so richly benefited, that they are reaping the harvest from your consecrated writings."

"Dear Mother in Israel,—I had never thought of the possibility of thanking thee personally for the precious blessings the dear Lord has allowed thee to bring to my heart and life, but on speaking the other day to a dear friend on the timely aids that have come to me in the life of faith, I spoke with much feeling of thy writings, particularly, 'The Promise and the Promiser.' He handed me thy address with the request, afterwards repeated, that I would say as much to thee in writing. I cannot tell thee, dear friend, how much I owe under God to thy writings. Mine has been a life of great trial and constant discipline. The hand of Christ found me in very great darkness, my heart hungered for God's very best, but how to attain it I knew not. The Spirit of God seemed calling me onward and upward, but His providence seemed beating me back, and in the face of this seeming contradiction I was about to make shipwreck of faith when thy book above mentioned was put in my hands. Then for the first time I learned that God's promises are indeed yea and amen to him that believeth. The promises became personal and real, God's presence became a living fact, and my happy soul took up George D. Watson's hymn:—

> And now I have flung myself recklessly out,
> Like a chip on the wave of His infinite will;
> I pass the rough rocks with a smile and a shout,
> And I just let my God His dear purpose fulfil.

Surely, dear Mother in Israel, thy God will sustain thee in the midst of bodily weakness. Let one of thy Gospel children cheer thee with the message that 'He is faithful who hath promised.'"

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

Individual effort in soul-winning is indissolubly bound up with revival. In the fascinating story of the '59 awakening, no vital principle was more deeply realized and strikingly translated into action than that of personal responsibility.

The same important truth was illustrated in address and testimony at the noon meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last. It ran like a golden thread through the vivid description by Mr. S. E. Burrow of the varied operations among military men at home and abroad by the Soldiers' Christian Association, for one of the basal principles of this valuable auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. is that of the evangelization of soldiers by their comrades. The enthusiasm of the week-night prayer meetings, held by local branches on their own initiative, affords an apt illustration of this, and the fervour manifested is directly traceable to prayer and Bible study.

Mr. Burrow's thoughtful addresss covered a wide field, showing that the Association exercises a helpful influence both at home and abroad. Inter alia, the Alexandra Palace—the administration of which causes anxious thought among Christians in North London—was referred to. Mr. Burrow had prepared a marquee for the troops attending the Coronation festivities who were camping in the Palace grounds, and had also arranged for the distribution of New Testaments. At the last moment the Palace authorities, pleading a clause in the trust deed, prohibited all Gospel effort. Even the Chaplain-General of the Forces was likewise excluded from religious work; "but, said Bishop Taylor-Smith to Mr. Burrow, "I have an office in the place, and I will distribute your Testaments for you." And the worthy Bishop was as good as his word.

A striking instance of individual effort to reach the people was subsequently reported by Mr. W. R. Lane. Passing through the neighbourhood of Latimer Road, W., on a recent Saturday evening, Mr. Lane came upon two young brethren, who, deeply impressed by the lamentable state of the district, viewed from a spiritual standpoint, had determined to erect a tent and commence preaching the Gospel. When Mr. Lane passed, they were busily engaged in putting up the canvas, and the evangelist was able to give them the benefit of his experience in such matters. On the following day services were commenced. Many, of a class seldom seen within the walls of church or chapel, came together, and the addresses of the young evangelists were listened to with profound attention.

Other words of witness, bringing out the same thought of personal responsibility, were added by one brother, who spoke of open-air gatherings at the Lea Ferry at Tottenham, N., and another who told in graphic language of a returned reservist, of Christian upbringing, being convicted of sin while listening to an address at an open-air meeting at Ilford.

A Mind Stayed on God.—To speak with the tongues of men or angels on religious matters, is a much less thing than to know how to stay the mind upon God, and abide with Him in the closet of our hearts—observing, loving, adoring, and obeying His holy power within us.—William Law.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

REV. DR. HENRY AT LOUTH.

With the opening of the present month, the work of this campaign for the autumn and winter season may be said to have fairly begun, and a glance at the list of future meetings will indicate how rapidly Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry's missions succeed each other, and over how wide an area they extend.

On Thursday last meetings were held at Louth, concerning which Rev. J. Arthur Turner, secretary of the Free Church Council, writes:—"The day was favourable; every preparation had been made beforehand to ensure success. The Free Church Council had secured the co-operation of the B.W.T.A. and Good Templars in thoroughly advertising the meetings, and "officialling" the Town Hall. Intercession was made in all the churches at the weekly prayer meeting.

"The afternoon attendance was exceedingly good. Mr. William Faulds (president of Louth Free Church Council) was chairman, and gave a most appropriate and touching address; he was supported by the ministers of the town, and a large united choir occupied the orchestra. Dr. Henry made a great impression.

"In the evening the great hall was packed. Mr. J. Whiteley Wilkins, chairman of the Grimsby School Board, and a tried friend of the temperance cause, presided, and gave a telling address, illustrated with present-day facts from his own town. Dr. Henry was at his best; the audience was taken by storm. The applause was constant; the appeals and arguments of Dr. Henry were convincing and irresistible, while the spiritual impression was profound. Forty-five pledges were taken, and we have every reason to thank God for the visit to Louth of so able a champion of the oppressed and drink-enslaved people. I do not see how Dr. Henry could well be surpassed by anyone as an advocate of the cause of temperance. And the final effect of his work must be to greatly raise the public sentiment on this vital question of temperance work and life. It is in my heart to write more fully if duties were not so numerous and pressing, for great as were our expectations, 'the half was not told us.'"

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Sept. 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 2, Alloa; 3, Dollar; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Waterford; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 27-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn; 31-Feb. 6, Newton Abbot; 7-13, Neath; 21-27, Sunderland; 28-Mar. 6, Middlesbrough; 7-13, Dundee; 14-20, Stirling; 21-April 3, Falkirk.

Scottish Notes.

At the thirty-third annual meeting of the West of Scotland Convalescent Seaside Homes, Dunoon, it was shown that at the date of last report 230 convalescents remained in the homes, and since then 4,460 had been admitted—being no fewer than 350 in advance of last year's number. They comprised 1,971 men, 1,910 women, 288 boys, and 291 girls. Of the total number of invalids, 4,226 were restored to health and strength, and fitted to resume their various occupations; 156 derived benefit to some extent, although they did not recover sufficiently to permit of their resuming work; ninety were not improved, two died, while 216 are still sojourning at the institution. Up to this time 91,619 persons had been received into these homes, of whom the largest proportion were restored to their wonted health and strength.

As the outcome of a series of conferences of ministers and others held last winter the congregations of the United Free Presbytery of Glasgow are (with only one or two exceptions) arranging for special services during the present and succeeding months. In preparation for these much activity has been displayed in the direction of territorial visitation, and "there are numerous indications that the congregations are not to rest content with the mere holding of special services for a week or fortnight, but are throwing themselves with increased energy into the work of caring for the spiritual well-being of the people within their assigned district."

Obituary.

MISS JESSIE M. HEWLETT.

AFTER a painful illness, borne with Christian fortitude, Miss Jessie Mary Hewlett, for over fourteen years a devoted worker in connection with the London Missionary Society, passed to her rest from Almora, North India, on August 4. We hope to give a portrait and further particulars in a future issue.

MR. JOHN E. KIRBY, CROUCH END, N.

A dearly-loved and enthusiastic labourer in the Master's vineyard has been called home in the person of Mr. John E. Kirby, secretary of Mount View Congregational Church, N. As a devoted Christian man of business in a large London warehouse, he used his splendid gifts and gracious manner to win young men for Christ, and many owe their entrance into life to his earnest words and inspiring example. As a lay preacher he was in great request in and around London; and in the church of which he was a member his place will, humanly speaking, be well-nigh impossible to fill. Like Barnabas, "he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." He was in his fifty-sixth year. G. E. M.

MR. BENJAMIN PERRY, BRISTOL.

With deep sorrow we have to record the home-call, which took place on Monday evening, of this devoted servant of God, after a prolonged illness, at the age of sixty-seven. A member of the Open Brethren associated with the honoured name of George Müller, and engaged in a large way of business in Bristol, he had ample opportunities of letting his light shine in Christian service; and seldom, if ever, did he fail to use every such opportunity he had. A "faithful servant" in every sense of the word, he has now entered into the rest that remaineth unto the people of God, but he leaves behind many a living witness to his earnest and consistent life. We mourn the loss of this good man, but his dying hours, as well as his earlier life, will remain a treasured memory, as a testimony to the faithfulness and unerring love of God. G. E. M.

REV. R. HANDCOCK.

A widely known and esteemed clergyman, Rev. Robert Handcock, vicar of St. Simon's, West Kensington, has passed to his rest. In 1876 Mr. Handcock was appointed curate of St. Matthew's, Hammersmith, under his brother, Rev. William Handcock. The rapid increase of the population in this growing suburb necessitated the carving out of a new district, and Robert Handcock was selected for the post. He rapidly gathered a devoted and loving congregation around him, and it soon became evident that a permanent church was required to meet the needs of the district. Into this work he threw his whole heart and soul; the district was a poor one, and almost all the funds had to be obtained outside the parish. For twenty years he wrought with unceasing energy, but the severe effort of raising £20,000 to complete the church, the church hall, and the vicarage, told with terrible effect upon his active frame. He was an able and thoughtful preacher, but his chief success as a minister was in his individual dealing with the souls of his parishioners. For many years he made it an invariable rule never to allow one day to pass without having spoken on the highest concerns of the soul with some one individual.

The Boys' Brigade grows apace. At the eighteenth annual meeting of the Brigade Council, held last week at Newcastle-on-Tyne, it was reported that the number of companies in the Home Brigade is now 1,100, an increase of eighty-six over the previous year. These companies are connected with churches and Sunday-schools belonging to nearly all branches of the Christian Church. The total enrolled strength is 54,926. To the above figures must be added brigades in the United States of America, Canada, the West Indies, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Ceylon, and other parts of the world, which bring the total strength of the Brigade up to 1,900 companies, with 6,500 officers and 85,000 boys.

The Kensit Crusade.

IN connection with the Wycliffe Preachers' open-air mission at Liverpool, Mr. John Kensit, jun., appeared before Mr. Stewart, stipendiary magistrate, on Monday last, "to show cause why he should not be ordered to find sureties to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for the next twelve months." Mr. Othen, the defendant's solicitor, having asked that the case might be taken before other magistrates, as he was instructed that Mr. Stewart, who held particular views on the dispute which came before him, might be a little biased, Mr. Stewart said he would certainly not allow any such application. Meetings took place on Sunday last, when disturbances, of which complaints had already been made, again took place. In the result the stipendiary ordered that Mr. Kensit, jun., must, in the sum of £200 and two bails of £100 each, undertake to abstain from holding meetings in the streets for twelve months, in default three months' imprisonment. Subsequently Mr. Kensit, sen., despatched the following telegram to his London friends:—"Our brave son has gone to prison for three months. Praise God, it will be a witness for God's truth.—John Kensit."

Oxford Notes.

REV. H. A. INGLIS, M.A., of Mansfield College, Oxford, is mentioned as the probable assistant and successor to Dr. Stark, the eminent minister of Belmont Congregational Church, Aberdeen.

It is 300 years since the Bodleian Library at Oxford was first opened to readers. In view of the coming tercentenary gathering it is interesting to learn that there are on the shelves of the Library to-day, exclusive of periodicals, pamphlets, &c., 588,000 volumes. This number is augmented at the rate of 10,000 volumes a year.

At the annual festival of the Oxford Christian Endeavour Union, the president gave utterance to some encouraging facts. There are in the Union twenty-one branch societies, with a membership of 617. Of this number 348 are members of Christian churches, and no fewer than 500 are total abstainers. In the Oxford Union several of the members have pledged themselves to spend fifteen minutes each day in quiet devotion, and not a few have joined the Tenth Legion, who promise to devote one-tenth of their income to the service of the Lord.

Personalia.

Friends in America, who are hoping to have the pleasure of welcoming Mr. CHARLES INGLIS in October, will be interested to know that his address will be 99, Clinton Place, New York City.

As Rev. J. C. LAWSON has left for America, will donors kindly make cheques, &c., for his Famine Relief and Industrial Work, Aligarh, payable to the order of "Messrs. Morgan & Scott, for Rev. J. C. Lawson."

Notices.

The verse beginning, "Angels, assist our mighty joys," is the last of the hymn by Isaac Watts, of which the opening line is "Plunged in a gulf of dark despair." The hymn is in most of the Evangelical collections of the last generation, and in many of those in present use in Evangelical churches.

About Books.

NEW STORY BOOKS.

Religious Tract Society.

A Dog with a Bad Name. By Talbot Baines Reed. (3s. 6d.) A capital story by the author of "The Fifth Form at St. Dominic's," and other tales that have become general favourites with our boys. Nothing more needs to be said, except that the vivacious pages have been enriched with seven illustrations by Alfred Pearse.

The picture of life towards the close of the ninth century which is given in Kormak the Viking (3s. 6d.) by J. F. Hodgetts, is vivid and deeply interesting. The book deserves a hearty reception by growing youth. The coming into contact of paganism and Christianity will throw helpful light on an obscure period of church history.

There is much skilful analysis of Scottish life displayed in Another Man's Money (3s. 6d.), by David Lyall. The struggles of the crofter striving to extract a living from an unfavourable soil are sympathetically depicted; and in a second story—"The Pharisee"—which follows, the interest centres round the Glasgow bank failure nearly a generation ago. The book is healthy, stimulating reading; the ideals held up before the reader are pure and lofty; those who ponder well the lessons taught will go forward with their faith strengthened.

Though certain to be classed by many as "a capital girl's book," The Head of the House (2s. 6d.), by Evelyn Everett-Green, is a great deal more. It is a story with a deep lesson for many a household, where barriers of mutual misunderstanding have prevented the display of affection which was all the time strong enough to be kept back only with great effort. The young people into whose hands this book comes are thereby supplied with much food for reflection, yet presented with the attractiveness which only the skilled raconteur can impart.

Always a favourite among boys, Rev. T. S. Millington, M.A., has sustained his well-earned reputation in his latest effort, A Great Mistake (2s. 6d.). Every chapter is alive with entertaining characters and events. The writer's intimate knowledge of the pranks and experiences associated with school life, and the happy vein in which they are related, combine to make a story in which the youthful reader will revel with delight and safety.

Tact and discretion are eminently the characteristics which mark the weaving of the diverting and wholesome narrative—The Household of Girls (2s. 6d.). The young ladies whose vocations and dispositions are so cleverly portrayed by Mrs. George Dettorne Vaizey are of high rank; they were not above stooping to share the "trivial round, and common task." The development of the story reveals the author's sense of ingenious humour as well as her capacity for setting forth the pathos from which few lives are exempt.

Boy readers will follow with interest the story of the chequered fortunes of a Christian lad, in slum, garret, or West London mansion, as depicted with some force and descriptive ability by Mr. Henry Johnson in All for Number One. (2s. 6d.)

A capital gift book for young people is The Children of Brookfield, by Lydia Phillips. Without any exciting plot, the book has abundance of incident, and the dialogue is enriched with parables from nature which are likely to abide in the minds of readers. (2s.)

Mary Marston's Mission. By A. Fraser Robertson (1s. 6d.). A book with a mission, showing that home-life is wonderfully sweetened when cleanliness and godliness are given their proper places, and allowed to assert their influence in the round of daily duty.

My Morning Counsellor. The morning readings of this beautiful compilation make a manual which many Christians will greatly prize. Interleaved with fine writing paper, the book will become, in many a home, a record of the mercies of God, and a remembrancer of blessings of past years. The Morning Counsellor sets the note for the day in the passages of Scripture, and affords helpful direction for prayer and praise in words of edification, guidance, and comfort. (Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; paste grain, 3s. 6d. net. Morgan & Scott).

Owing to the continued demand for the popular missionary hymn, "Coming, coming, yes, they are," a special art edition of music and words has been published. Lovers of this stirring melody will welcome it in its new and attractive form. (9d. per dozen. Publication Department, Harley House, Bow, E.

Evangelists at Work.

Mr. William Forbes at Skegness.

A FOURTEEN days' mission commenced on Monday, Sept. 1, at St. Paul's Church, Skegness, and under "The Umbrella Tent" on the sands. Seventeen meetings are being held each week, and Gospel and Temperance tracts given away to the people. The work being almost exclusively among visitors, makes the audiences not only very varied, but creates an opportunity of preaching the Word of Life to a large number of people. Mr. Forbes' appeals have made solemn and serious impressions upon many. The mission continues until the 15th inst.

Geo. Goodchild, Minister.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell.

Evangelistic services were carried on last week by the American evangelists, Rev. Edgar L. Williams and Mr. H. L. Maxwell, at Aberdeen. The first meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall, which was packed in every part, while several hundreds of people were unable to gain admission. Previous to the meeting a service of sacred song was conducted by Mr. Maxwell. Mr. Williams conducted the meeting, and delivered a very impressive address, which was attentively listened to by the large audience. On Sunday week the evangelists conducted the morning service in Rutherford United Free Church, and in the evening they had charge of the service in Holburn Parish Church.

Tent Mission at Perth.

The annual three weeks' tent mission arranged by the Perth Evangelistic Association has just been concluded. The evangelist was Mr. Arthur Klein, B.A., of the Evangelization Society, ably assisted by his wife, who sang and helped in the after meetings. Throughout the mission the weather was somewhat broken, and during the last week a severe gale of wind blew down both tents. Despite these unfavourable circumstances the people turned out in large numbers every night. The Bible readings and the Gospel addresses were a source of much blessing to God's people, while a good many young men and women and others were brought to decision for Christ. Much fruit yet remains to be gathered in, and for this purpose the Y.M.C.A. have asked Mr. Klein to continue the work for a further period. J. A.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Dundee.

The secretary of the Dundee Tent Mission, Mr. P. Will, writes:—"I am very glad to report that Mr. C. E. Barraclough's work amongst us was very fruitful. Although a little stiff at the start, the interest spread and deepened as the nights went by. The evangelist's zeal and deep earnestness for souls told on the Christian workers, who, catching some of his enthusiasm, went most heartily into the work, and so the meetings grew in interest and power. The Lord owned the work from the first meeting, and during the last two weeks not a night passed without a number of souls deciding for the Lord.

"The large meetings on Sabbath evenings were times of special blessing. The closing meeting on Friday night (22nd ult.) was very large, and deeply interesting. Mr. Barraclough gave a short account of his conversion, the large audience listening with the closest attention."

Gortmessen, Ireland.

The mission which has just closed at Gortmessen has been full of encouragement. There, as in other places, the visit of the (Wesleyan) General Missionary, Rev. James Kirkwood, was preceded by the earnest and successful labours of the two students, Messrs. Thompson and Young, who have been associated with him this year in tent work. The tent was pitched in a field belonging to Mr. Christie Wilson, who took great interest in the meetings. The mission was well announced, large congregations attended, and from the first service right on to the close the word was with power.

The people showed interest in the work by walking, cycling, or driving long distances every night. Overcrowding at the Sunday services was prevented by having two meetings in the evening, yet at each service the tent was well filled, chiefly by a large number of young men and women, who manifested desire for blessing. It is always difficult, and perhaps not desirable, to tabulate results, yet it is gratifying to know that about sixty persons gave their names to the mission preachers as having decided for God. Each one of these received a covenant card as a memento of the mission, also a small book containing much helpful counsel for young Christians.

The Evangelization Society.

Over 200 tent missions have been held so far this season, of which thirteen have been in and around London. Many of the missions have been for periods of five or six weeks, and in some cases eight or ten weeks. Usually the best results, so far as man can judge, are from the longer missions, where large audiences are drawn together even on the week nights. Some of the tents have been crowded night by night, while a public hall or other large building has been used for the Sunday meetings. In October a condensed report of the work will be issued, and would be forwarded (free) to any who are interested. The gales of September 3 caused considerable damage to five of the tents, thus adding to the expense of fitting them out again for next season.

John Wood, Hon. Sec.

Tent Mission at Billesdon.

A tent mission has been held at Billesdon, Leicester, during the last three weeks, conducted by Mr. F. Chapman, of the Evangelization Society. The tent was erected in the orchard of Mr. Josiah Stafford. For the first few evenings the congregations were small, but subsequently the people flocked in until the place was packed. On the last Sunday evening the passage was filled also with attentive hearers. The eloquence and earnestness of the preacher riveted the attention of the hearers in a remarkable manner. On the front of the platform was an embroidered text, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Mr. Chapman gave a powerful address from this text in the afternoon. Persons living at a long distance attended the evening services, notwithstanding the darkness of the last few evenings. The prayers of numerous friends, both Churchmen and Dissenters, who have had the privilege of attending the meetings go with the evangelist.

Mr. Chas. Cook's Work.

At the close of the Hyde Park Open-Air service on Monday night, September 1, a number of men followed to the after-meeting in Hyde Park Hall. Among those who decided for Christ, a man who had for years been addicted to drink said: "I have long listened in the Park, but this is the first time I have ventured in here; and I take Christ as my Saviour." He subsequently wrote, "I am endeavouring by God's help to lead a true Christian life."

A young man who had come to London from Birmingham on business, was spoken to by a worker, and at the close was asked by Mr. Cook, "Are you a Christian?" "Yes." "How long have you been one, some months?" "About five minutes," was the answer. After reaching home the following day, he wrote, "I thank God for bringing me to the light last night, and leading me to the Park meetings; pray that I may be kept faithful in His service.

A young Russian, a teacher of languages, found rest from John v. 24. Without a friend or relative in London, his loneliness and scepticism had brought him to the verge of suicide.

The services close this month, and it is hoped again to secure the Metropolitan Theatre for the winter.

The Australian Revival.

Good news has been received of the tent missions which are being conducted in various parts of Australia in connection with the Simultaneous Mission. Writing of the work at Muswellbrook, N.S.W., Rev. D. O'Donnell says:—

"At first the people came in a shy sort of way, but the numbers grew steadily, and ere long the tent was filled. We had conversions at every service; sometimes only two or three, and at other times as many as twenty; the total number for the ten days being 109. Several persons were led to decision for Christ in their own homes. Numbers of Christians were enabled to enter upon a life of 'full surrender' to Jesus. The meeting for men only was regarded as the most remarkable gathering the town had ever seen. Fully one-half of those present took the Purity Pledge. Despite all opposition, we praise God for a glorious victory."

Of the mission at Inverell, Rev. T. F. Potts, the Methodist minister, writes:—"The mission has been a gracious season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Mr. R. Robertson threw himself, heart and soul, into the work, and won the love of the people. The religious life of the people has had a thorough quickening, while the careless and indifferent have been much impressed, and some have professed conversion. As a result of the mission, we are looking forward to a period of quickened religious activity. The interest increased as the mission went on. We have had as many as 600 in the tent. The end of the mission came all too soon, and it was with deep regret we saw the tent taken down, to be forwarded to Glen Innes. It has been a gracious season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and our mouth has been filled with laughter, and our tongue with thanksgiving."

St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow.

After being away four weeks on holiday, Pastor D. J. Findlay resumed service at St. George's Cross Tabernacle on the last Sabbath in August. In the morning at 11.30, and in the evening at seven, large congregations gathered, the floor and gallery on each occasion being full. On the same day a month's tent mission in connection with the Tabernacle was inaugurated, Mr. Richard Hill, of the Evangelization Society, who is to conduct the first fortnight's services, preaching in the afternoon at three, and in the evening at eight. The service in the afternoon was not largely attended, but in the evening the tent was crowded to its utmost capacity, while hundreds failed to find admittance. Mr. Hill is preaching the grand old Gospel of salvation through the blood of the Lamb, and sinners are repenting and turning from the evil of their ways. On week-nights the tent is comfortably full, and by liberal advertising, open-air meetings, &c., Mr. Findlay and the Tabernacle workers are making a determined effort to awaken interest among the unsaved masses that exist on every hand. The newspapers every now and again, in recording the doings of ecclesiasticism, furnish news concerning "Church Extension" schemes, but true church extension is assured in souls being won for Christ. This adds to the church's dimensions, and the glory of the Saviour in a way that stone and lime never can. J. C.

Some Edinburgh Missions.

During the past week Mr. Jack Cooke, the boy preacher, previous to beginning a mission in Glasgow, paid a brief visit to Edinburgh, and gave two addresses to crowded audiences in the Carrubbers Close Mission. His treatment of the subjects dealt with, viz., "Conversion" and "Friendship," created a great impression, showing remarkable clearness and spiritual vigour. It is to be hoped that he may yet pay a much longer visit.

General Booth conducted a campaign in the Empire Theatre on Sunday, the 7th inst. Forenoon, afternoon, and evening, the building was crowded. The General preached with power, and at the close of each meeting large numbers went forward to the penitent form.

Encouraged by the blessing which attended a tent mission last summer, the Railway Mission, Gorgie, Edinburgh, considered it advisable to attempt the same this year. During the past weeks the meetings have been going on; the attendances have been most encouraging, and anxious souls have been led to a knowledge of peace with God. Mr. Snaith has been the evangelist, and the Lord has owned the clear setting forth of the Gospel by his servant. It has been found that many come to a tent who would not attend a hall or chapel. Mr. Snaith has also been helping at a series of meetings at Abbeyhill, conducted by Messrs. Williams, Maxwell, Dunn, and Christian. There, too, the Lord has manifested His power in saving souls.

The Boy Preacher at Harrogate.

Though the pleasure seekers of this fashionable resort are not distinguished for any marked religious enthusiasm, yet Sunday last must be placed on record as a memorable exception.

Vast throngs assembled morning, afternoon, and evening in the spacious concert room of the Royal Spa, to hear the youthful preacher, Jack Cooke, who delivered, during the day, four most impressive discourses.

Needless to say, this being the height of the season, his auditories contained not a few critics of fastidious tastes, socially and intellectually—a fact that did not in the least appear to daunt the youthful speaker either in the fearlessness of his utterances or in the forcefulness of his delivery, shifting, as they did, naturally and easily from measured deliberation to a lightning rapidity that knitted many a brow in the effort to follow the scintillating sequence of his thought.

The morning theme dealt with the exhaustless problems of time, immortality, and future judgment, the presentation of which was brought to bear directly upon the consciences of the auditors.

In the afternoon the young speaker discoursed on the relation of business and pleasure to the essentials of a Christian's life.

At night a practical and powerful plea for the Christ riveted the attention of all within reach of the preacher's voice.

Meanwhile thousands had congregated outside, unable to gain admission. For these the gates of the beautiful Spa Gardens were swung open, and an immense crowd gathered around the bandstand, where a simultaneous service was conducted by the youth's colleague, Mr. J. Russell Coutts. On the conclusion of the indoor meeting the congregation without assumed yet larger proportions, all evidently anxious to hear the juvenile preacher's final exhortations. It was a scene long to be remembered—the peaceful Sabbath eve, the flower-scented air, the thousands of up-turned faces, the solemn hush that overspread the multitude as their thoughts were turned for nearly an hour to eternal realities, in which the vagaries of philosophy and the materialism of modern science were contrasted with the simplicity that is in Christ.

Then followed the exquisite blending of cornet, piano, and organ, as skilled performers led the people in the concluding hymns, which were heartily sung and repeated, the crowds seeming loth to disperse.

So closed a Sabbath's mission, which a later day will doubtless prove was fraught with everlasting issues to many lives.

Mr. Frank Penfold is conducting a tent mission at Dunstable. The names of many inquirers have been taken, and the mission is to be continued until the end of September.

Mr. Wm. McNeill has just concluded a most successful series of meetings, extending over a fortnight, in the Grassmarket Mission, Edinburgh. The attendances were most encouraging, while the results gave abundant cause for praise. James Stark.

Evangelistic meetings have been conducted at Broughty Ferry, N.B., during the last five weeks by Mr. Charles Norton Hunt. The meetings steadily increased in numbers and interest, while the afternoon Bible studies were blessed to many hearers. The tent was demolished by a storm during one of the Bible studies; but happily no one was hurt. The meetings were continued in the large hall.

For blessing upon Mr. Chas. Inglis' visit to Ipswich, in connection with the monthly meetings, September 16-18.

For mission to men at Y.M.C.A's., in the north-eastern district of London, conducted by Mr. P. Russell Hurditch.

For blessing on Dublin Christian Convention, to be held in the Christian Union Buildings, during the week commencing Sunday, September 21.

For revival in connection with Standburn Congregational Church and Forward Evangelistic Temperance Movement in East Stirlingshire, under Rev. D. H. Ritchie Snaddon.

For the mission to men by Mr. J. J. Sims, Canadian Evangelist, under the auspices of the Dublin City Y.M.C.A., September 28 to October 10.

Consecration.—What folly to fear giving yourself too entirely to God! It merely means that you are afraid of being too happy, of loving the will of God in all things too heartily, of bearing your inevitable crosses too bravely, of finding too much consolation in the love of God, and too much relief from the passions which make us miserable.—Fenelon.

Church of England.

The Bishop of London is organizing a "missionary mission" in Kensington and Paddington. About fifty parishes will be visited during the next few weeks, and missionary literature will be distributed from house to house.

Bishop Sandford has addressed a letter to the parishioners of Boldon, on his retirement from the position of Assistant-Bishop of Durham, in which he states that he will also retire from the incumbency of the parish. He says that this step has been taken owing to failure of physical strength and increasing infirmities of age.

Although the health of Bishop Carr Glyn has greatly improved during his residence at Wicken and at Walmer Castle, his medical advisers are still of opinion that he should not undertake the full discharge of his active duties in connection with his diocese until Easter, 1903. Meanwhile, Bishop Mitchinson will administer the affairs of the diocese.

"An impression seems to prevail in some quarters," says The Record, "that Mr. Eugene Stock is about to retire from the service of the C.M.S. There is, we believe, no truth whatever in the statement. It has, perhaps, originated in the fact that after Mr. Stock's illness earlier in the year the committee gave him six months' leave of absence from departmental responsibility. He was not able at once to leave these responsibilities, but is now free from them until Christmas."

Congregational.

In response to the unanimous request of his people Rev. E. H. L. Jones, pastor of Millfield Congregational Church, Peterborough, has withdrawn his resignation.

Rev. Stanley Rogers will celebrate next month the completion of his twenty-fifth year as pastor of the Westminster Road Church, Liverpool. Revs. Dr. Guinness Rogers, J. H. Jowett, M.A., and others, will take part.

Preaching at Birmingham in connection with the Conference of the Institute of Journalists, Rev. J. H. Jowett urged that editors should make their papers more than a portrait of the common life, adding the element of vision, so that a newspaper shall be not only a representation of life as it is, but also an unveiling of life as it may be.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan preached at the City Temple, E.C., on Lord's Day last. In the morning Mr. Morgan gave a striking address, on 1 John i. 3, to a large congregation. The speaker enlarged on the fulness of meaning of the words "Fellowship with the Father," and his sermon was one of much spiritual profit. Mr. Morgan took the service at night in the same building.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone, commenting on the L.M.S. deficit, advocates the general observance of a week of self-denial. "If all the churches would adopt this method, it would be easy to increase the income of the Society by no less a sum than from £20,000 to £30,000 a year, or just about the sum required to carry on its present work. I have no preference for any method, but I see in this a method which is possible for all, and which has proved an excellent auxiliary to the old and honoured ways of our fathers."

Rev. Albert Swift resumed his ministry at the Dulwich Grove Congregational Church on Sunday last, after six weeks absence in America. The pulpit was supplied during the month of August by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, whose ministry attracted great crowds, the church being filled to overflowing, while many people had to be sent away each week. His teaching and work has been very far reaching, and will long remain as an inspiration. The month has been a splendid preparation for the mission which Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is to conduct during the third week of this month.

There was a remarkable gathering at Hawkstone Hall, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E., last Saturday evening, to welcome Rev. F. B. Meyer, who had just returned from America, and to wish him God-speed on his immediate return to that country to undertake a six-months' mission. When he entered the hall, which was crowded, there was a warm demonstration of welcome. On Lord's Day morning Dr. Pierson was introduced to the congregation by Mr. Meyer. The esteemed American minister was cordially received. In the course of a striking sermon he expressed a prayerful anticipation of a season of revival.

The ministry of Rev. Henry Varley (formerly of Bradford) began at Bowes Park, N., under most satisfactory circumstances last Sunday. The beautiful hall, in which the congregation is worshipping until a chapel can be erected on the adjoining plot of land, was crowded in the morning, when Mr. Varley's text was, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation" (Titus ii. 11). The sermon was of the nature of a keynote to the preaching which is to characterize Mr. Varley's pastorate—the Gospel of the grace of God, in distinction from a legal, scientific, or merely ethical message. It was a faithful exposition of the truth on these lines; and if the ministry which is to follow be of the same order, with the accent of conviction and earnestness of purpose in the power of the Spirit, it cannot but receive the blessing of God.

Baptist.

The new church at Lewin Road, Streatham, of which Rev. J. Ewen is the pastor, is to be opened on the 13th of this month. Rev. J. R. Wood will conduct the opening service. On the following Sunday Professor Hackney, M.A., will preach.

An interesting ceremony took place recently in the Baxter Gate Chapel, Loughborough, when a memorial tablet to Alfred Woodroffe, who was massacred in the Boxer rising in China, was unveiled. The service was conducted by Rev. R. F. Handford, who delivered an impressive address. The martyred missionary was a scholar at Baxter Gate, and bade farewell on August 25, 1897, to go as a missionary for the China Inland Mission in North China.

New schools and lecture hall in connection with the church at East Finchley were opened on Sunday last. In the morning a devotional address was given by Mr. Cecil Polhill, M.A., and a sermon by the pastor, Rev. J. J. Bristow. In the afternoon Rev. Carey Bonner addressed the united Sunday-schools, and in the evening Rev. Dr. McCaig, Principal of the Pastors' College, conducted the service. There were good congregations at each meeting.

Splendid congregations gathered last Sunday at the East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, Bow, to greet Pastor Edwin H. Elvis on his return home from holiday. The future of the church is bright with hope. On September 20, a united evangelistic mission is to commence at the Tabernacle. Dr. Harry Guinness with many other well-known helpers will endeavour to reach hundreds of persons outside the Church of God. The prayers of God's servants are asked for this forward movement.

Methodist.

The new Wesleyan church and schools at Radstock (Som.), which have been erected at a cost of £5,000, are among the finest buildings in the town. The church holds about 550 persons, and the schoolroom will accommodate 250 children. There are also five class-rooms.

The amount promised for the Bible Christian New Century Fund up to the close of the Conference was £24,860. It is expected that the £140 remaining to complete the original sum contemplated will be fully met when all the returns of the simultaneous collection are made.

In connection with the Wesleyan extension scheme at Sunderland a new mission hall, to hold 650 persons, has been erected in Trimdon Street. There was a large attendance at the opening services, and the building was much admired. Rev. Thomas Waugh preached the dedicatory sermon.

For many years Primitive Methodism has been represented in Whitby only by an unsuitable chapel in a back street. A determined effort is now being made to remove the reproach. A church is to be erected in a good thoroughfare, to cost £4,000. The Church Extension Fund is aiding the project.

Arrangements are being made by the officers of the Bible Christian Foreign Missionary Society for the return of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Savin and Rev. W. and Mrs. Tremberth to their work in China. They will leave England early in the autumn. Miss Bull, of Southampton, who has been accepted as a missionary, will accompany them, and an earnest appeal is being made to the young ministers of the Connexion for at least one of their number to go as well.

The Wesleyan church at King Street, Bristol, which in the middle of the eighties was a serious problem, has entered on a new career of usefulness and blessing. Then it was a question of turning it into a mission-hall, or of disposing of the church and premises. Now, "the church is humming with life and energy." Rev. J. Forster Holdsworth has devoted himself most energetically, and among other things he has helped to place the men's Bible-class on a sound working basis.

Presbyterian.

The call from Westbourne Grove Church, W., to Rev. P. Carnegie Simpson, M.A., of Renfield U.F. Church, Glasgow, will be abandoned at Mr. Simpson's request.

Much satisfaction is expressed at the contemplated formation in October of a second congregation at Brighton. If this new congregation at Hove proves a success, it is hoped that a third may be established, without unnecessary delay, at Kemp Town.

At a recent meeting of Newcastle Presbytery a most interesting report on "Leakage" was submitted by Rev. J. Victor Logan, proposing a scheme for the systematic visitation of the population around the churches, with the object of getting to know of Presbyterians arriving from other towns, and securing and preventing their lapsing from all Church connection. The Committee was instructed to still further mature the scheme, and bring it up at a future meeting.

Portraits of the Prince and Princess of Wales have been sent by her Royal Highness to Miss Child, to be hung up on either side of the portrait of her beloved mother, the late Duchess of Teck, in the Welcome Home for Sailors at Canning Town, E.

The church buildings of Meelan (an outlying district in the parish of Achill, in the West of Ireland, which will be remembered in connection with the devoted labours of the late Rev. Edward Nangle) are in need of restoration. The population is chiefly Roman Catholic, and the worshippers at the Protestant sanctuary are too few and too poor to meet the expense. Rev. Robert Hayes (The Parsonage, Dugort, Achill, Westport, Ireland) is compelled to seek the aid of outside friends in the matter.

The story of the Dulwich Hall Mission, S.E., is one of much interest. Built in 1882, it was closed after a few years, and was in an advanced state of dilapidation when the present lessee took it as headquarters for an athletic club. The club, however, was abandoned, and the hall restored to its original purpose. Regular mission services, Band of Hope, Sunday school, &c., are held, the whole up to the present superintended by the lessee. In every department of the work God has abundantly owned and blessed it. Now, however, owing to the mortgagee having called in his loan, the work is threatened, and the hall is in danger of being sold for secular purposes. £600 is needed to pay off the debt. On the one hand is a prosperous work in a crowded neighbourhood, and on the other hand the comparatively small sum of £600. The work has been put in trust. Only a few "days of grace" have now to run before the sale. The hon. secretaries are Messrs. J. P. Brown and G. J. Webb, Dulwich Hall Mission, Hindman's Road, East Dulwich, S.E.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. Rowland Young, wife of Rev. Rowland Young, Congregational minister of Gorleston, has passed away. She had been married only a year and a half, and general sympathy is expressed with the pastor in his sad bereavement.—Mr. A. H. Whitworth, of Manchester, well known as the secretary of the Ship Canal. He was connected with Eccles Wesleyan Church, where he was honorary organist and choirmaster.—Rev. Henry Barron, of Balham, passed away on August 27, in his fifty-fifth year. Mr. Barron had an attack of pleurisy in November last, from which he never recovered. He entered the Congregational ministry in 1872 as pastor of the church at Buckland, Portsmouth, and was successively stationed at Batley, Peckham, and East Finchley.

"Rejoice in the Lord Alway"—I hope you will learn what I am always trying to learn: to rejoice in God continually—knowing that He is really ordering all your circumstances to the one end of making you a partaker of His own goodness, and bringing you within His own sympathy.—Thomas Erskine.

NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

In thanking the readers of The Christian for their kind response in the past, I again bring before them two more cases that require immediate aid.

A BLIND MUSICIAN.—L. A., aged 50 years, has become blind through overstudy. She worked 10 hours per day to gain a gold medal for music in order to support her parents, who died at the age of 92-82. She is extremely delicate, and, owing to a cancer at the back of her eyes, suffers constant pain, and quite unable to earn her own living.

G. S., in whom I am interested, has been blind from lead poisoning since 1897. He was sent to the Exeter School for 2½ years, and then went to the Normal College. He had to leave the latter as the Doctors said the poisoning was beginning to affect his brain.—R. D. C.

The Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or they may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Theatrical Mission & Home,

Patron—
HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

Vice-Patrons—
REAR-ADMIRAL H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G., the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS and EIGHTY BISHOPS, &c.

INCREASED FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of the Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 189 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 74 seaports in every part of the world.

Seventy-three Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels and Boats, and 105 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1901, £40,770 10s. 6d.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing-Room Meeting Collections, &c., should be sent to Commander W. DAWSON, R.N.

The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The Coming Struggle. The formation of (Roman) "Catholic Democratic Leagues" in this country and in America points to a covert source of grave danger to the State. The movement is intended, in England, to advance the aims of Romanism, not only "by removing the Royal Accession Declaration from the Statute Book," but also "by striving to remove remaining Catholic Disabilities, even the disability as to the Sovereign's religion." The members of the League, too, are bound to help "to place as many Catholics as possible in positions of influence, as Members of Parliament, of School, Urban, and Parish Councils, Boards of Guardians, public inspectorships, and other offices;" and so on. In America, also, the avowed object is that of "making the country Catholic," and a federation of voters has been arranged to be "ready for the next emergency," or, as a leading New York review puts it, to make the Republic "a feudal appendage of him whom the Civilta Cattolica not long ago presumptously called 'King of kings and Lord of lords.'" Evidently things are fast ripening for a serious struggle between the servants of Christ everywhere and the papal system.

Behind the Bars. Since 1892 the inspection of Religious Houses in France has been enforced by the Government, and the results have shown the necessity for such supervision, especially in regard to the convent traffic in lay labour. It was found that mere children were employed from 5 a.m. to 5 p.m., and that young women who had grown up under the Sisters' rule were turned out, at 20 years old, unable to read or write, and incapable of earning their living. In one year—1899—there were no fewer than 4,429 infractions of the law in convents brought to light. With such an object-lesson before them, however, the English Government quietly dropped, in March last, the Factory and Workshop Act Amendment Bill, the clauses affecting laundries in convents having previously been removed in deference to the objections of the Irish party, who wished to preserve the secrecy of the conventual establishments. There is, however, an intention to bring forward the measure again at an early date, and it is to be hoped that the clauses which provide for the due inspection of methods of exploiting the toilers in English and Irish convents will be re-inserted, and their retention be insisted upon.

National Responsibility. There was a much graver tone in the proceedings of the British Association this year, at Belfast, than was the case upon the occasion of the last visit, in 1874, when Dr. Tyndall delivered his disquieting address on Science and Religion. For one thing, some of the leading scientists to-day are much more modest than were a few of their predecessors. There is less flippancy in dealing with sacred things. For another thing, the gravity of our national life has been brought home to thoughtful people in many striking ways lately. One of the addresses this year, which was much applauded, dealt with national responsibility, and the need for discharging it faithfully. Professor Armstrong was not too severe when he charged the public at large, and even "the majority of our statesmen and politicians," with "flippant unconsciousness of responsibility." But the remedy he proposed, viz., that of improved education, will not remove the thing which we all deplore. Certainly we need a drastic reform in education, particularly in the direction of teaching modern languages, if we are to hold our own in Europe; but the education must be radical, and deal with the roots of life. Absence of the sense of national responsibility arises from a lack of the sense of individual responsibility; and this is the danger we have to face. It is pleasure, and not responsibility, that men are absorbed in. To restore this lost sense, the truth of our relation towards God—Master of all—must be recovered and preached. This is the chief need, to which the other is secondary.

The Culture of Personal Religion. The Conference of Ministers held at Oxford last week, was remarkable for the high tone of spirituality which pervaded all the meetings. It was a happy thought to invite this large number of ministers to consider, not the burning topics of the hour, but the deeper and more radical questions of the soul's personal life. The keynote of the Conference was struck in the remark made by one of the first speakers, that in the multiplicity of meetings, and in the present unsettlement of thought which has resulted from criticism, the danger is that men forget their own deepest needs. This is far truer than many care to admit. We cannot possibly withdraw from the activities of life. Indeed, to-day the servants of God are being compelled to take the lead in social reform. It is an imperative duty which they dare not neglect. But there is the other side, too, to be kept in view—the culture of the personal life. Our Lord has given an example of the perfect blending of the two things. When the multitudes thronged around Him to be healed, "He kept withdrawing into the wilderness and prayed" (Luke v. 16). Only in this way can the balance be preserved.

"Attractions" to Church. One of the most outspoken articles we have seen, dealing with the spirit of amusement which prevails in many churches, appears in the pages of a contemporary. It is pointed out, with much force, that the gain in attendance which results from pandering to the lighter side of things, is more than counterbalanced by the loss in spiritual force:—

> We believe that this perpetual pandering to the young person is a great mistake, and that he does not in the least thank or respect the church for it. We are sure also that the kind of young person who is won to the church by such means is not worth winning—at least in that way. If the church really thought him worth winning, she would loathe and scorn these appeals to his lower self.

It seems to us that some of the schemes advertised to attract the young people to church are an unconscious admission that the preacher distrusts the attractive power of his message. We are well aware of all that is urged on behalf of such means, and the best answer to these pleadings is the great prosperity of the many churches where the warmth of a Gospel service draws young people in crowds. Life must attract life, and a vigorous Christian life never fails to attract and to retain. Success obtained by means external to the Gospel, in the name of the Gospel, is a sorry compliment to its power.

Individual Effort. Rev. Charles Brown, of Ferme Park Chapel, in preaching on Rom. i. 14, said what so often has been said before, that if the world is to be converted to Christ, it must be through individual effort. To the great bulk of the people the pulpit is a thing in the clouds, as so many never enter a church. The preacher desired that there should be a united simultaneous mission carried on during the coming winter by each professing Christian determining to be the means of winning to Christ at least one soul. If carried into practice, such a method of mission work, without requiring any organization, would certainly be the simplest, cheapest, and most effective in its result. Oh for a heart to serve our God!

The Bright Side of a Disaster. The sayings and the letters of young children are among the most interesting, and sometimes the most pathetic, records in our lives. We have before us a book, of which only a small number are on sale, containing some of the most touching words of children, spoken and written, that we have ever read. When in Calcutta last year, we were the guests of Rev. D. H. and Mrs. Lee, whose six children were carried down in the terrible landslip at Darjeeling, on September 25, 1899. Five of them lost their lives on that awful night. Wilbur, a boy of thirteen, was thrown a hundred feet down the mountain side. He was found, covered with the debris, still alive, but severely injured. Before he died, he gave a vivid account of the disaster. The heroism of the children, their earlier lives, and their conversion one by one, told mainly in their own letters, bear witness of the love of children to the Saviour and of His love to them. The title of this story, as thrilling as it is true, is The Darjeeling Disaster: its Bright Side. The Triumph of the Six Lee Children. By Rev. F. W. Warne, D.D. But the greater part is in the words of the brave mother and of the children themselves. (2s. Morgan & Scott.)

Medical Missionaries. It is, perhaps, impossible to over-estimate the value of the medical missionary as a factor greatly blessed of God in the work of the evangelization of the world. Rev. J. Duthie, of Travancore, in giving a glowing account of the progress made during his forty years of service in that district, including an accession of 209 native preachers, 9,200 communicants, 27,500 baptized adherents, and 48,000 native Christians, with 100 self-supporting congregations, adds:—

> Last year the number of cases treated in connection with the Travancore Medical Mission was upwards of 100,000, which meant a great spiritual influence throughout the country.

A lady medical missionary in Bombay treated 3,110 patients last year, and has charge of 800 children in orphanages and boarding schools. At another mission the doctor attended over 12,000 cases during the year, besides visiting patients at their homes. Yet, while the average constituency of each missionary has been estimated at 500,000 persons, as yet England and America have, it is stated, sent out only about 650 medical missionaries, and these are scattered among 5,000 mission stations. Surely this is not as it should be.

Artificial Living. It is very gratifying to note how steadily and certainly the movement for the bettering of the conditions of daily living among the working classes is spreading. Three great Congresses which met last week gave a prominent place to these important matters, and the recommendations they made are so urgent that practical notice must be taken of them. The Earl of Egerton, as president of the Sanitary Institute, laid much emphasis upon the immediate need for counteracting the baneful influences of crowded town life. Everybody is now alive to the fact that industrial life in many cities imposes such artificial conditions upon operatives that already serious physical deterioration has set in. We have become accustomed to the cry that these conditions are "inevitable." It is more than time to abandon this plea. We are paying the price for our unnatural way of living, and we all see that an immediate change must come. Many fortunes will probably go in this work of reform, but the health and stamina of the people must be the first consideration.

Magistrate and Publican. If only the magistrates generally would grasp the fact that they undoubtedly have the right at law, not only themselves to object to the renewal of licences, but also to extinguish existing ones on the sole ground of superfluity, there would soon be a considerable limitation of the drink traffic, and a consequent decrease in crime. The justices of the Ripon district have recently taken steps to make themselves acquainted with the circumstances in that neighbourhood, and have, it is said, resolved to object to the renewal of each and every licence, so that an impartial selection may be made of a number sufficient for the so-called "needs" of the locality. They, too, refuse to admit the brewers and publicans' claims to vested interests, although the Government, wilfully ignoring both the Farnham and the Dover decisions, recently went out of their way to create for the grocer-publican a platform of permanency.

Clean Hands. The recent action of one or two heads of religious societies, in refusing money obtained by somewhat objectionable means, should not be exceptional but the rule, and the fact that prominence was given to it in the Press points to the deadening of the sense of moral responsibility in regard to methods of accumulating wealth. A contemporary has urged very forcibly that much modern philanthropy, so widely "known of all men" through the publicity given by the newspapers, is false, the generosity being built upon ill-gotten means, and the writer says:—

> To buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market is an excellent maxim, if the cheapest market is not cheap at the price of human degradation, and the dearest is not dear by reason of fraudulent misrepresentation . . . The rigid personal application of the truly Christian life to all the details of the interchange of work for wealth, and wealth for work, is the only possible political economy. This is very different from the usual cheap assertion that Christianity is of its essence socialistic. It is the personal application, rather than the corporate application, with which Christianity is concerned. The true philanthropy, therefore, is the application of the Christian religion.

Compliment or Adoration? A small book has just been issued by a prominent Unitarian minister, in which everything complimentary and beautiful is said about Jesus our Lord, even to the verge of employing terms of adoration, and yet the writer stops short of saluting the Saviour as the God-man. The best there is in man is traced to Christ, as His work within us. Jesus is credited with having made God the Father real to men, yea He has revealed Him; and yet with all this, very beautifully and reverently stated, there is the great and fatal lack we have indicated. There is a vast difference between this Unitarianism and that of two decades ago, but the same sorry gap remains in this as in that. Compliment has not come to adoration. To us it is simply inexplicable how men can see so much in Christ, and yet fail to understand that the very nature of the case demands belief in the Deity of Him who has wrought so unique a work for men. The words of the late Canon Liddon still hold good, "To compliment Jesus Christ is an impertinence—nothing short of the heart's adoration will suffice."

The Secret Girding of God. There is a statement in the Book of Isaiah which is full of consolation for the servants of God. To Cyrus, the pagan king, who was designated to deliver Israel from captivity, God said, "I girded thee, though thou hast not known Me." A wonderful vista is opened up in that one word. It shows us God, the active worker, behind all the schemes of men. Cyrus knew nothing of the mysterious power that urged him on, and at one stage of his career he would flatly have denied the existence of any such power. But it was there, and operating all the same. There is nothing more strengthening than to be assured of this truth, that God is working out His own plans in His own way, and that in their accomplishment He often uses men who are in utter ignorance of the part that they play in the Divine Providence. We must look beyond Cyrus to the God who rules all things. Only as we do this can we be assured of perfect repose of mind, and the quiet power which results from perfect confidence.

The Pathway of Folly. The religious crazes which have broken out during the last year or two, how much soever they seem to differ from each other, really have a common origin, and wise Christian people will experience no difficulty in discovering what it is. The follies, and, lately, the shocking blasphemies which have been uttered in England and America are the legitimate fruit of the seed of self-will and self-sufficiency. In each case we have noticed that these abominations commenced with a replacement of God's Word by men's own fancies. At first they appeared to be innocent enough: to-day everybody can see their real character. Terrible danger attends forsaking the Word of God. The blasphemers, whose words in Chicago and London have shocked all decent people, never started out with the intention of doing what they have done. The pathway of folly has been with them a gradual and easy descent from one step to another, until the final one has been easy to them. Many professing Christians have of late received God's Word with qualification and reserve. This is not simply disloyal, but perilous. It is the natural and inevitable outcome of what is falsely called criticism. For true criticism means impartial and enlightened judgment.

And after that the Judgment. There is a curious contrast between the waning faith of the worldly in the old doctrine of the "Recording angel," and the increasing scientific proofs that every event, however trivial, is indelibly written in Nature's book of days. The seismograph, an instrument for recording earth-tremors and earthquakes, has now been perfected, so that it records convulsions 4,000 miles off. Geologic remains are constantly turning up which contain the biographies and even the habits of extinct creatures. Archæology is full of evidence concerning the customs, dispositions, and doings of men and women who died thousands of years ago. The Bible shows an analogous process in the spiritual world, by which the secret thoughts and impulses of men are written down in the unfading book of Divine remembrance, and will be brought home to us all some day, when God's accounts are made up. Nature here corroborates this teaching with ever deepening emphasis and impressiveness.

Saints in Wrong Places.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH.

SOME get under the tree of discouragement, like Elijah (1 Kings xix. 4). Discouragement is a destroyer of faith, a damper upon love, and a vail upon the face of hope; therefore it is a sin to be discouraged.

2. Some get on the slippery path of worldliness, like Abram, when he "went down" to Egypt. There is no tent of separation, no altar of communion, and no revelation of joy in Egypt. These are only found at the Bethel of fellowship with God (Gen. xii. 7-10; xiii. 4).

3. Some get on the house-top of self-ease, like David (2 Sam. xi. 2), who stayed at home when he should have been in the battlefield. His self-ease led to self-indulgence, which brought upon him the chastening hand of the Lord. Self-ease, like rust, corrodes the spirit with the mildew of unbelief, warps the moral fibre of consecrated work, and blinds the eyes of its devotee to the sight and attractive beauty of Christ.

4. Some are ensnared in the meshes of disobedience—like the man of God out of Judah, who was entrapped by the wily old prophet of Bethel (1 Kings xiii. 9). No saint on earth, no angel from heaven, no devil from hell, and no man under the sun, should turn us aside from the plain direction of God's Word.

5. Some get into the doubting castle of unbelief, like John the Baptist, who sent his disciples to Christ to know if He was the Messiah (Matt. xi. 3), after he had proclaimed Him as such (John i. 34). Doubt is a faith-crippler, joy-killer, zeal-damper, mind-darkener, love-retarder, hope-annuller, and Christ-hinderer.

6. Some get into the sieve of self confidence, like Peter (Luke xxii. 32, 33). When self puffs up, and we warm ourselves at the world's fire, we place ourselves where Satan can grab us, and when he gets hold of us he riddles us to the loss of our power and joy.

7. Some get into the ring of wrangling, like the disciples, who "disputed among themselves" as to who should be the greatest (Mark ix. 34). They did not strive for the lowest place, nor as to who should be nearest to Christ. Strife is the child of pride, the companion of ambition, the killer of unity, the grief of the Spirit, the bane of humility, the hinderer of the Gospel, and the despiser of love.

"By your Words ye shall—"

"As he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. xxiii. 7).

"By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned" (Matt. xii. 37).

I RECENTLY travelled hundreds of miles with a gentleman who wore a grey travelling suit. Two days after, he accosted me in the City quite differently dressed. I asked his name, for I did not perceive that he was my fellow traveller. Sometimes we recognize people by their clothes. But it is not written, "As he dresses so is he," but "As he thinketh in his heart so is he." Yet how much more attention is given to what we put on our bodies than to what we receive into our minds and hearts. It is not the outward appearance but the inward life that determines what we ARE.

John the Baptist knew Jesus as his relative, and as one greater and holier than himself. Yet twice he declares that he knew Him not. But when Jesus, having been baptized, and praying, came up out of the water, when John heard the Father's voice from heaven saying, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," and when he saw the Spirit, like a dove, descend and abide upon Him, he testified that this is the Son of God (John i. 29-34).

Simon Magus was baptized, but God was not well pleased in him. He thought the gift of God could be purchased with money, and as he thought in his heart so was he—in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity.

Our words are the most frequent, the most spontaneous, the most accurate evidences of what we really are; they are the expression, the utterance, of the thoughts of our hearts, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

We say, "Like father, like son." Physical, mental, and spiritual qualities are transmitted from parents to children; but sons and daughters are not at all so exact an expression of ourselves as are our words. These are more intimately and intensely our offspring. Our children are like us, but our words are in a very real sense ourselves.

The great illustration and proof of this is that the Son of God, who was with God, and was God, and is God, is the Word of God. God reveals Himself not so absolutely in His works as in His words. He utters Himself, He speaks Himself out to the uttermost, in His Word. He hath spoken unto us in [His] Son, who is the brightness of His Glory, and the express image of His Person—the effulgence of His glory, the very image of His substance.

"And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us; and we beheld His glory (the glory as of an only-begotten from a Father) full of grace and truth."

"Like father, like son," is largely (though not absolutely) true of human nature; but Jesus said, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," "I and my Father are one." As seen in John's vision, "He was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood, and His Name is called THE WORD of GOD." He was "God manifested in flesh."

We may be reminded that every man shall be rewarded "according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Truly, but our words are acts. Our works are done with our hands, and our words are spoken with our tongues. When written or printed they become acts and deeds. When we sign a contract in legal form, we say, "I deliver this as my act and deed." And our laws are published as "Acts of Parliament." Therefore our words have the importance and significance of deeds, acts, works.

Our words and acts are the outcome of our thoughts. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." How careful, then, we ought to be as to the thoughts we receive into our minds, and what desires we encourage in our hearts.

Sow a thought, reap a desire, a word, an act.
Sow an act, reap a habit.
Sow a habit, reap a character.
Sow a character, reap a destiny.

God knows the secrets of the heart, but neither men nor angels know them; therefore, it is not by our unuttered thoughts but by our spoken words, and by the acts that we have done, that we shall be justified or condemned before the universe. For the judgment will be public, and the decisions from the Throne must accredit God as the righteous Judge.

And let it ever be held fast that thoughts which originate words by which we are justified can only come from obedience to the Holy Spirit of God, when He convicts us of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; and through faith in the Lord Jesus, whom the same Spirit reveals to us in His atoning, intercessory, and sanctifying work. M.

The Two Fatherhoods.

IT should be clear to the ordinary student of the Word of God that two families are found right down the whole history of man, and that these families differ in nature, character, aims, and works. Moreover, it should be equally plain that they are not only of different origin spiritually, but also that there is an implacable and essential antipathy, culminating at times in the most bitter and barbarous persecution on the part of the world against the Church of God, whether this persecution be carried on under the name of religion or irreligion. There is the family of nature, and there is the family of grace; and that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. There is the spiritually dead, and the spiritually living.

It is specially important also that preachers, teachers, and evangelists should be clear and definite in their views on this momentous truth, and that they declare, with equal clearness and emphasis, the truth which they believe. It will be dangerous to any ministry if this be lost sight of, or if the truth be suppressed; and it will be equally dangerous to the hearers who attend a ministry where this great Biblical truth is not enforced upon the conscience. Confusion herein may lead to fatal confusion on the part of the hearer, for reformation may take the place of regeneration, and a false position and hope may result. It may be easier to announce a milder view, and thus acquire popularity and secure a ready audience; but the minister should have an eye to faithfulness, and to God's approbation.

A MISLEADING PHRASE.

"The brotherhood of man" is an expression which falls with pleasing effect upon present-day audiences, and appeals powerfully to the sentimental emotion of the people. It arises out of the ambiguous and equally unscriptural expression, "the Fatherhood of God." It is used with an assertiveness that indicates impatience with anything of a qualifying character. There is nothing objectionable in the phrase itself. It is only when it beclouds the truth, and supplants it, as it usually does, that the danger appears. Surely all believe in the brotherhood of the human family, for God made of one blood all nations to dwell on the face of the earth; but the spiritual family of God is another family, the members of which are born "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

Members of the human family may be, or may not be, therefore, members of the spiritual family. The new birth, or regeneration, decides the matter of membership in the family of faith. Without the new birth, no person can possibly be a child of God in the spiritual and saving sense—"Ye must be born again." When born from above, by the power of the Holy Ghost, having been brought to believe in and receive the Lord Jesus Christ as our own personal Saviour, we can joyfully and rightfully claim God as our Father, and Christ as our Brother, in the Gospel and spiritual sense. It is only in the sense of God being his creator, preserver, and provider, and Christ becoming man and dwelling amongst men; that the unregenerate man can call God his Father and Christ his Brother. But that is not enough. Only those who believe in Jesus are reckoned His relatives; and Jesus said, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again."

IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS.

The condition of every member of the human family, apart from God and without the new birth, is one of spiritual death. This the Scriptures make most plain and prominent, as we may see:—"Dead in trespasses and in sins"; "All have ... come short of the glory of God." The principle of life must be imparted and implanted by the Spirit of God. By Him we are enabled to see Christ as our Saviour, and to believe and receive Him. "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Nothing can possibly alter the Scripture plan of salvation; or become a substitute for, or a supplement to, the means and might of God's salvation. A man may be moral outwardly, and be religious; he may be well instructed, and evince excellent qualities; he may even perform pious acts, and have a wonderful interest in good things, and yet be without spiritual life—not being born of God. Alas! this is not unusual; it is also one of the most difficult conditions to deal with. To enforce this very unpalatable truth may prevent a false step under conviction of sin, and warn against entertaining a false hope.

The Scriptures are plain and unequivocal in their teaching on this point. We find references to the children of light and the children of darkness; the children of this world and the children of the Spirit; the children of God and the children of the devil. Jesus declared to religious men that they were of their father the devil, and that they did the works of their father; He declared also to a pious and earnest man, "Ye must be born again." On the other hand, He spoke to His believing followers, and exhorted them to "abide in Him," and "bring forth much fruit," and His Father and their Father would be glorified. There is the "Fatherhood of God" therefore, and the "fatherhood of the devil." Blessed are those who are able to say, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." R. J. P.

C.M.S. Day of Intercession.—In view of the abundant openings for work in the mission-field, the Committee of the Church Missionary Society is filled with deep concern at the lack of candidates and at the failure of the expansion in income which had been hoped for. Friends are invited to join in special intercession on Tuesday, September 30, or on some convenient day in the same week for (1) The Church at home. (a) For more European missionaries to go forth as (i.) clergy; (ii.) laymen; (iii.) ladies; (iv.) doctors and nurses. (b) For a deeper realization of missionary claims by English Christians. (c) For a willingness on their part to give generously for the support of all whom the Lord our God shall call to the mission-field. (d) For an increase of candidates (men and women) for training. (2) The Church in the mission-field. (a) For more native agents. (b) For the growth of the spirit of sacrifice among native Christians in providing both men and means for the Lord's work. (c) For less dependence on supplies from England. (3) Foreign missionary societies in general. (a) For the growth of love and holy fellowship among all who send or carry the Gospel to the heathen. (b) For generous appreciation of, and hearty sympathy with, each other's work. (c) For abundant blessing on all missionary work that is after the mind of Christ, and for the supply of every need.

The Gospel of God.

By Principal McCaig, LL.D., Pastors' College.

THIS title tells (I.) of the Divine Origin of the Gospel—it is a gospel from God. Very little reflection will show that no real gospel could come to men from any other quarter. Men are sinners; rebels against the authority of Heaven, in a state of condemnation. This, which is the unmistakable testimony of God's Word (Rom. iii. 9-24), is confirmed by our own consciousness. We know, we feel, that we have sinned. When brought before the bar of conscience we hear the same verdict which is pronounced at the bar of God's Word, "Guilty." The universal experience of men attests the same sad truth.

Now, good news for sinners must include pardon, the removal of condemnation, the power to overcome the sinful propensity within us. From whom, then, could a message containing such assurances come except from God? It is God's pardon that we need, for it is against Him that we have sinned; and no man could, on his own authority, dare to assure us of the forgiveness of God. All merely human messages would be open to the fatal objection that they could give no guarantee that God was appeased. All human messages would be but as the assurances which one rebel might give to another, while all were alike ignorant of the King's intentions. Still would the cry be wrung from the troubled conscience, "How can man be justified with God? How can he be clean that is born of woman?" Such questions would have been for ever unanswered had not God Himself spoken.

The Gospel is the Divine answer to the questions of the human conscience. In the Old Testament there are many hints of the Gospel given, and all such intimations given from God we highly prize; but His glad message, in its full and final form, has been given in the New Testament through His glorious Son and His inspired Apostles.

Marks of Divine Origin.

The Apostles always give prominence to the fact that the message they delivered was of Divine origin, and it was this great fact that inspired them with such holy boldness and gave such marvellous emphasis to their words.

To those who accept the Holy Scriptures, the assurances therein given are sufficient to prove the Divine origin of the Gospel. But we also believe that the Gospel bears upon it the marks of Divinity. The Gospel is not simply a proclamation of pardon, but of pardon through atonement, and an atonement of such a nature as at once shows it to be "not of men." The idea of obtaining the Divine favour through an atoning sacrifice is, of course, not an unfamiliar one, even apart from the Bible. It is, indeed, deeply rooted among men, and it finds a place in all ancient systems of religion. The great peculiarity of the Atonement, as foreshadowed in the Old Testament economy, and clearly "set forth" in the New, is that it is accomplished through the vicarious expiatory sacrifice of the Son of God.

The declaration of Abraham that God would Himself provide a lamb for the burnt-offering is the teaching of the Law and the Prophets. David, Isaiah, and Zechariah see the coming Messiah as a sinbearer; John the Baptist points out that Messiah when He does come as the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"; and the full revelation of the Gospel but emphasizes and amplifies the Baptist's proclamation. Now, is it possible that this message, in its fainter or fuller lines, could be from any other than a Divine source?

Think of it, that God should give up His own dear Son to take the sinner's place, and bear the penalty due to sin! This is, in effect, saying that God Himself should come in human flesh and make the atonement demanded on behalf of sinners. Could such a thought ever have been conceived apart from Divine revelation? Assuredly not. We can believe that men could, and did, feel the need of an atonement; we can understand that men could, and did, feel that all the atonement they could make was insufficient; we could imagine them feeling that if an efficient atonement were to be made, God Himself must, in some way, interpose. But we can neither understand, nor believe, nor suppose, that the guilty sons of Adam should ever think it possible that God should give His Son, that God should give Himself in the person of His Son as a sacrifice for the sons of men. The idea is of such a nature that it could only take its rise in the Divine mind, and the message which unfolds that idea must be a Gospel from God.

The Basis of Pardon.

The opposition of Rationalism to the Gospel doctrine of Atonement is simply a proof of what we have said—a confession that such a doctrine is not the native growth of the human mind, is alien to human speculation. At the same time, its Divine origin is confirmed by the marvellous adaptation of the Gospel to the needs of man. While the conscience cries out for pardon, it needs a pardon based on righteousness, and only in the Gospel is such a pardon presented. The Gospel, assuring us that satisfaction has been rendered to Divine justice, that the righteous claims of law have been fully vindicated, that sin has been effectually punished, sets the conscience at rest, satisfies the heart, and convinces the judgment that such a message must indeed be from God.

II. The title tells of the Divine Authority of the Gospel. The Lord Jesus attested His claims by His miracles, and to these miracles He never hesitated to appeal as proofs of His Divine mission and reasons for receiving His testimony. The miracles attending the preaching of the Apostles were a constant confirmation of the Divinity of their mission and their message. As it is forcibly and beautifully put in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to His own will."

It is impossible to divest the Gospel of the miraculous, the supernatural element. The miraculous is just, in the language of the New Testament, God's witness to the truth of the Gospel. Christianity rests upon the supernatural. The Incarnation of the Son of God is a stupendous miracle. The whole ministry of Jesus Christ, opening with the supernatural incident on the banks of the Jordan, is a manifestation of the supernatural. God was speaking in Him, God was working with Him, God was witness to the truth of His message.

Christ's Resurrection.

The Resurrection is a miracle, and a miracle with which is bound up the whole existence of Christianity. As we read the Gospel record, we feel that the closing of the wondrous life of Christ in death is a dreadful disappointment, an unutterable catastrophe, an unaccountable anti-climax, if it be not followed and crowned by a Resurrection. And as we see that Resurrection taking place, we see reflected back upon the life of Christ the light of Divinest glory.

The Life demands a Resurrection. The Resurrection confirms all the claims of the life. It is God's witness to the truth embodied in His Son, the truth proclaimed by His Son, the Gospel of God. The glories of Pentecost, and the miraculous manifestations of the apostolic era, are the natural complement, the necessary consequence of the Resurrection. In them we have a continuation of God's witness to the truth of His Gospel.

Moral and Spiritual Signs.

Not only has the Divine authority of the Gospel been attested by the miracles attending its early promulgation, but through the moral and spiritual results attending it, God has borne witness, and in this way He still bears witness to it. The conversions, the spiritual triumphs effected by the Gospel, have been ever-recurring miracles of grace, and herein is that saying of Christ fulfilled, "Greater works than these shall ye do because I go to My Father." The spiritual miracles far transcend the physical. The messages of other ancient systems may be read or preached, the findings of science and philosophy may be set forth simply or learnedly, but no Divine power attends them.

The Gospel stands alone as the Divine message which can deliver men from the power of sin; raise them above earthliness and selfishness; bring them into loving fellowship with the living God; inspire them with devotion that no difficulties can daunt, no dangers quench; enrich them with all spiritual blessings; fit them for dwelling with the Eternal; enable them to glory in tribulation, to be patient under persecution, and to triumph over death and the grave. Let men say what they will about the Gospel, no unprejudiced mind can fail to see that the moral and spiritual effects accomplished by it could have been accomplished by no other agency. Human philosophy and philanthropy, artistic culture and political legislation, the repressions of coercive force, and the refinements of civilization are all confessedly powerless to deal with the deepest needs, the deadliest diseases of the human race. The Gospel coming forward, clad in all the authority of the Eternal, has never had to confess itself beaten, but has been victorious "all along the line." Its triumphs in the present day unite with its victories in past ages in attesting the Divinity of the message, while many of its opponents, beholding the numbers who have been healed by it, "can say nothing against it."

The Burden of the Gospel.

III. The title tells of the Divine Subject of the Gospel; it is the Gospel about God. The burden of the Gospel is not what we are, but what God is. No message which had man alone for its subject could be a Gospel. It is idle to talk about the dignity of human nature, the regality of reason, the supremacy of conscience, the grandeur of the moral instinct, the majesty of the human will. We may talk till doomsday upon such topics, and however much truth there may be in them, we shall find they have no power apart from a consideration of the character of God to influence the soul for good. There is no Gospel for the sinner in such dissertations.

On the other hand, it will profit little to enlarge upon the absolute ruin of the sinner, the total depravity of his nature, the utter estrangement of his heart from God—these solemn truths, if preached apart from a consideration of God's attitude in the Gospel, will only deepen the despair or harden the soul in sin. The Gospel is good news because of what it tells us about God. It is a revelation of His infinite love for sinners; love for sinners in their sins; love for sinners in spite of their sins; love that lifts the sinner out of his sins; love that can take the sins from the sinner; love that does not condone sin, but, in perfect righteousness, atones for sin. Such a message will ever be good news to a sinner

SUNDAY, September 21. 1 Samuel iii.

RELIGION must pass from the traditional stage to the personal. We begin by accepting what our parents tell us of God, but we are not left to this; in the process of time God draws near to us Himself, and speaks to us, as if there were none in the world but He and we. This is illustrated on this page of the life of Samuel. In his earliest years he was consecrated to the service of God; his little tunic, woven by his mother's hands, was the constant evidence of the prayers and hopes that gathered around his young life; and the services of the Tabernacle must have confirmed those earliest impressions; but now God came and stood beside his bed, and called him, in accents that thrilled his soul with a strange ecstasy.

How wisely Eli dealt with him. He was not jealous that another than himself was claiming the boy; not anxious to attract or attach him to himself; had no thought of playing the part of a priest, and interposing as the medium of intercourse between God and this sweet young soul. He said, in effect: "Go; be quiet; listen;" and these words are always true for such as God is dealing with. Go—withdraw yourself from the babble of human voices, and the touch of human hands. Be still—till your eye and ear be accustomed to the light and sound of the eternal world. Listen—for there is a voice that speaks deep down in the heart, which the sheep knows. One sign of that voice is its persistence, He stands and knocks, He stands and calls (v. 10). Another sign is its consistency with Scripture (v. 21).

The tidings were heavy with dread import for Eli and his house; and the child, with a beautiful and guileless modesty, hesitated to announce them. He simply gave himself to the morning duties of his office.

MONDAY, September 22. 1 Samuel iv.

Very distinct were the directions issued by Moses as to the way in which a campaign should be commenced and conducted (Deut. xx.), but none of them seems to have been put in force on the present occasion. Israel threw down the gage of battle, but no priest was called in to ask counsel of God, or bless the going forth of the Israelite hosts. It was the sudden flaming out of revenge from a race of slaves, who were stung to the quick by the taunts, the insults, and the scorpion whips of their masters. Such has sometimes been our spirit against the powerful sins which have asserted their mastery over us. We have seen the ruin and have winced at the shame, which were imminent; and we have turned on our tormentors, but it has not gone better with us than with Israel, for this battle is not to the strong, nor this race to the swift. Only Christ can save.

In the anguish of defeat the elders of Israel seem to have suddenly realized that they had left God out of their calculation, and that He was wroth (v. 3). They suddenly, therefore, hit on what seemed to be a happy expedient for bringing Him into the fray. They remembered the wonderful scenes in which the Ark had played a part, and thought that if it were present, it would secure the present help of Jehovah. It was much as though any of us should wear an amulet or charm, or carry on our person a morsel of bread consecrated by a priest, as a defence against our spiritual foes.

It was necessary that a decisive answer should be given to these materialized views of God. The Hebrews must learn that God's help did not depend on the Ark, but on right relations with Himself, and specially on the abolition of strange gods (vii. 3, 4). Our defeats can only be corrected by a more complete severance from all sin, and a more entire surrender to the will of God (Isa. xxxiii. 22).

How touching the climax! Eli was hard hit by the three first shots of information, but the mortal wound was from the last. The glory had indeed departed, and the result is told in subsequent Scriptures (Ps. lxxviii. 60; Jer. vii. 12).

TUESDAY, September 23. 1 Samuel v.

This chapter concerns the process by which the surrounding heathen nations were illuminated with the true knowledge of Jehovah.

The Philistines bore the Ark to the Temple of Dagon in exuberant triumph. They had apparently triumphed, not only over Israel but over their tutelary deity, and Dagon was demonstrated as greater than Jehovah. It would have been a great disaster had they been allowed to cherish this idea in perpetuity. God cannot give His glory to another nor His praise to graven images, and therefore He suited Himself to the crude and materialistic conceptions of these blinded idolaters, and met them in their own sphere. They would not have been impressed by the message of a prophet, but could hardly resist the conclusion forced on them when on two following mornings they found their fish-god prostrate before the Ark.

The same lesson was taught by the painful plague of tumours and the devastation of their crops. Could all these be coincidences? They felt that such an explanation was absolutely inadequate, and they cried to Heaven (v. 12). The very terms in which they began to refer to the God of Israel show how a new reverence was coming into their hearts.

God often has to break our idols, in order to wean us from them, and bring us to Himself. Do not be surprised that your dagons fall, or that your plans are discomfited, but turn ye to Him with your whole hearts, and learn what He is, not only in destruction, but in love and tender mercy. (See John i. 17, 18.)

WEDNESDAY, September 24. 1 Samuel vi.

God must always speak to men in language that they can understand. In after days He stooped to show Thomas His hands and His side. If the Philistines could have understood Epistles like those of Paul or John, they would, without doubt, have been written for their learning and correction, and been communicated to them by the hand of some man of God; but since they could not understand such methods of instruction, they were convinced by the plagues which befell them, and the direction taken by the milch kine. Even their priests advised them to give glory to the God of Israel (5).

Similarly the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh must learn that wanton curiosity and irreverence could not be suffered in respect to the holy symbols of their religion. Reverence had always been exacted towards the Ark, for the sake of its associations with God Himself (Num. i. 50, 51; iv. 5, 16-30). And the swift retribution which followed on their looking into the Ark extorted the confession of His holiness (v. 20). But that there was nothing to fear, and everything to gain by a loving recognition of His Divine nature became evident in the blessing that befell the house of Abinadab. (See also 2 Sam. vi. 11.)

Let us open our hearts to receive, not the Ark of the Covenant only, but Him whom God set forth to be a Propitiation, i.e., the Mercy-seat, which covered the Ark of the Covenant, which was sprinkled with blood, and which exactly fitted and hid the tables of the law beneath (Rom. iii. 25). It has been thought by some that we do not always properly interpret the method of the Hebrews in counting figures; and they have suggested that in verse 19 the numbers should be added together—70+50+1,000=1,120.

THURSDAY, September 25. 1 Samuel vii.

During all these weary years Samuel was giving himself to the work of reconstruction. He seems to have taken up his abode in his birthplace, Ramah, and to have itinerated thence with a double object in his soul; first, to recover the lost national unity, secondly, to put away the sins which had eaten out the people's heart. It was evident that only a widespread revival of religion could save Israel from rotting away before the very evils for which the ancient Canaanites were destroyed.

As the result of twenty years of patient labour, all the house of Israel "was drawn together" after Jehovah (v. 2, R.V. marg.). In being drawn to him, they came near each other, and a visible demonstration of this movement was given at Mizpah, a commanding summit in central Palestine, which can be still identified. The day was devoted to fasting. Oh that the Church of Christ might be led to a similar confession of the sins which now separate her from her God!

The tidings of this great convocation aroused the suspicions of the Philistines (v. 7), and they went up against Israel, who were to them as timid sheep to wolves. They had no hope save in the intercessions of Samuel, and the interposition of God (v. 8). But the prophet did more than pray. The sucking-lamb was the symbol of Israel's desire to be wholly yielded to the Divine will. There must be consecration before there can be deliverance. Yield thyself to God, dear soul, and thy Philistine sins, stealing up the valleys and over the mountains, will fall back discomfited, and thou shalt raise thine Ebenezer, to refer to and quote in all coming years.

FRIDAY, September 26. 1 Samuel viii.

The names of Samuel's sons are suggestive of their father's piety and walk with God, Joel standing for "Jehovah is God" and Abiah for "Jehovah is my Father." But his children did not inherit the purity of his irreproachable character. The experiment of delegating to them a share in his authority amid his growing age proved to be a disastrous failure, and precipitated the catastrophe which he was most eager to avoid. (See v. 6.)

It was a supreme disappointment to that loyal heart when they asked a king. It was not only, or so much, that the people rejected himself, but they rejected God. They had put from them the vision of the theocracy, and sunk to the level of the nations around, and he turned to God, the ever-present Refuge of broken hearts. Go to God, and tell everything—what you hoped, how you endeavoured, how you failed. Weep your tears out at His feet! He can understand, can sympathize, can bind and heal. There is balm in Gilead, there is a physician there.

In answer to Samuel's appeal, the distinct impression was borne in on his mind that he must abandon his ideal, and become the procurer and maker of a king. But he was comforted in learning that God was his fellow-sufferer. So, having protested solemnly against the national choice, he set himself, with all the force of his nature, to realize their wish in the best form that he could discover.

This is one of the noblest acts on the page of history, and may be compared with the heroic answer of the Baptist, when he learnt that the people which had left him were gathered around the Christ. Oh, for grace to follow God's will, cost what it may to ourselves!

SATURDAY, September 27. 1 Samuel ix.

This chapter records the loss of she-asses. What of them? Let them stray! No, they are worth seeking, not only for themselves, but because faithfulness, with respect to them, is a test of character, and the search will be a tiny link in the long series of cause and effect which will eventuate in a kingdom. How many links there were in that chain! The lost asses, the prolonged search, the fear for Saul's father, the suggestion of the servant and his possession of a few coins, which would serve as an introduction to Samuel, after the fashion of the East.

Notice, also, that while Divine Providence was leading Saul to Samuel, it was preparing Samuel for Saul. We are reminded of the corresponding visions of Saul and Ananias, and of those of Peter and Cornelius. Let us yield ourselves to God. He will prepare us for our work and ministry, and them for us. If we follow Him, we cannot walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

Nothing is too trivial to be part of the Divine plan. Even though many incidents befall us at the instigation of evil men, yet they can only come to us through the permission of God's will, and we may as much trace God's will in them, leading us to a given goal, as in those which clearly bear the Divine hall-mark. Let us follow the indications of God's will—they lead to the vacant seat and the waiting portion.

Other Lands.

The "Lone-Star" Mission.—2

THE Lone-Star has now many sister-stars, some of them shining even in the Nizam's Dominions; for while the greater part of the Telugu country is under direct British rule, the North-West portion of it is governed by the Nizam of Hyderabad.

Telugu, the vernacular of over seventeen millions, is called the Italian of India, and ranks next to Tamil in point of culture.

Ongole is 180 miles north of Madras. We reached it in a clear March night, and were met by Rev. H. Huizinga, formerly missionary in connection with the Dutch Reformed Church, which he had been obliged to sever subsequent to his being baptized. He has joined the A.B.M.U., and is now director of the Ongole Faith Orphanage, an independent institution, which receives no money from any Board or Society, but only from freewill offerings.

At the time of our visit the orphanage contained 255 inmates, a number of whom were taught industrial work, such as cooking, farming, sewing, rope-making, and work of various kinds in aluminium. Whereas to some extent the orphan schools may be looked upon as feeders of the high school, there is at the same time a great need of an efficient industrial school for training an independent and self-supporting community, which would supply a native rather than a foreign market. Mr. Huizinga thinks that the time for such a school has come. He also aims at establishing a laundry, which would be self-supporting by gaining customers from the European residents, schools, &c.

The children receive daily instruction out of God's Word, while they also have their own prayer meeting every evening, in which some of them take part. Many of these little ones, we were told, are trying to live as followers of Jesus. Over a hundred boys and girls having on their own accord requested to be baptised, we were present at two meetings preceding the examination, and from the intelligent answers to questions pertaining to the truth of redemption and salvation we gathered that the youthful candidates for the most part were fully aware of their own responsibility to God and of the importance of the step they were about to take.

As it was the time of the Quarterly Meetings large numbers of Christians from the district, which contains about 20,000 believers, had flocked together for the following Lord's Day. Sunday-school began at 8 a.m., attended by 1,135 scholars, old and young. At 9 a.m. followed the regular service, closing with the Lord's Supper. Dr. W. B. Boggs, who first came to India in 1879, and who is now in charge of the Theological Seminary at Ramapatam, preached the sermon, throughout which the hush of a reverent silence lay on the whole packed congregation.

In the afternoon 143 boys, girls, and adults were baptized in the open air in the large baptistry, which in 1869 was dedicated by Dr. Clough by the baptizing of forty-two converts.

Dr. J. E. Clough, whose name is so closely associated with this prosperous mission station, having met with an accident while on furlough, has not been able yet to leave America. How all his intimate interests were interwoven with his mission work may be seen from the somewhat curious fact that two of his daughters, who are now in the field, were named after the two chief stations—Nellora and Ongola. We had the pleasure of meeting one of them in Mrs. L. E. Martin, wife of the principal of the Ongole High School, attended by 350 students, of whom half are Christians. There are also Girls' Schools under the superintendence of Miss Kelly, Miss Dessa, and Miss Smith.

With our friends we drove one evening to the Prayer Meeting Hill, where, on the first day of the year 1854, Rev. and Mrs. Jewett, with other helpers, assembled before sunrise to pray to God that the country might be won for Christ. "As the sun is now about to rise and shine upon the earth, so may the Sun of Righteousness arise quickly and shine upon this dark land," prayed Mr. Jewett, and later, as if forced by a prophetic vision, he stretched out his hand, saying, "Do you see that rising piece of ground yonder, all covered over with prickly pear? Would you not like the spot for our mission-bungalow, and all this land to become Christian? How would you like it? Well, that day will come." The first part of Dr. Jewett's prediction has been fulfilled to the letter; for it is on that very spot that Dr. Clough's house, now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Baker, is standing. And this is the more remarkable, because it was not selected by the Mission, but by a gentleman who built the house for himself, and afterwards sold it to the Mission.

About ten miles from Ongole is the spot in the Gundlacumma River, where on July 3, 1878, as many as 2,222 were baptized. Where large numbers are received at one time into Christian fellowship, a sifting process for years after becomes necessary.

On our way back to Madras, we spent a day with Dr. and Mrs. Downie at Nellore, who have recently been bereaved of a lovely daughter, and the Mission of a valuable helper.

There is a pretty booklet from the pen of Mrs. Downie, treasuring the memory of another daughter, called home at the tender age of eight. The brief story of the life of Elsie, the little pilgrim, is a clear answer to the question so often asked: "Can a child really give his heart to the Saviour? Can he understand the plan of salvation and take in what is meant by the Atonement?" "Yes," says this touching account, triumphantly. The little missionary child proved a missionary herself in her influence over others, and when removed to her reward, the mother could say:—

Sweet words, "Thy will be done," till now
I never knew their power,
Nor how it soothes and melts the heart to bow
Submissive in the dark, dark hour.

Dark, did I say? with such a light
Behind the shadowing cloud,
As if the golden gate and land so bright
Were just beyond the gloomy shroud.

And she is there! Safe home at rest,
Beyond all sin, all care,
For ever and for ever blest
My darling one is there.

WILMA MORGAN.

The Gospel in Mexico.

IN a recent communication Mr. Eglon Harris writes:—Here in Orizaba all goes on happily in our Homes, in the Church, and in Gospel service. To meet the demand for "El Sembrador" we have now to print 28,000. I have now in the press an equal number of Mr. C. J. Baker's "Two Ways and Two Destinies," which I have translated. I believe this pamphlet will meet a great need in Spanish-America, especially among those who have been brought out of Romanism. I hope you will pray that it may be a great help in leading souls to examine the Word of God, and that therein Christ may be revealed to them.

It is just eight years since we took the first sheet from the press. How wonderfully the Lord has helped in all the details of this work! The supply of funds has been a great thing, but the breaking down of barriers in many thousands of hearts, and the making them willing to read of their danger and of salvation without works, is (after knowing the hold Rome had on these people) the greatest marvel I have met with in my experience of the workings of God. We have just got the sad news of the death from yellow fever of a young brother whose work took him, for a time, to the unhealthy town of Cordova, only a few miles from Orizaba. He had no friend near him when he died, but his testimony before he left us was such that we know we shall meet him in heaven. How pleasant to remember several such who have left this land of sadness for the "Happy home above." The life of the ordinary Mexican is a sad one at its very best.

A Visit to Figueras.

AFTER a five months' sojourn at the headquarters of the Figueras Evangelistic Mission, it is both a privilege and a pleasure to tell friends in England something of the work.

As in all labour for the Master, there is both light and shade, and here may be found the encouraging side and the reverse, telling of failure and disappointment.

The bright side of the work shows that this mission fully justifies the confidence of its friends, is eminently progressive, and is probably making as much headway against the darkness and superstition of Rome as any mission in Spain.

When one sees this stalwart tree, of now more than twenty years growth, well known, beloved and looked up to in its home in Figueras, and sending forth both root and branch into many of the towns and villages of the Province of Gerona, one is compelled to say in wonder and admiration,

"WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT!"

At the Sunday school in Vilabertran in the morning, and Figueras in the afternoon, there you will see a company of all ages, from grey-haired "grannies" down to tiny children of three years old, gathered for simple lessons by the teachers, which are afterwards driven home, and questioned out by the pastor. In the day schools a strong bond of love and confidence seems to unite teachers and scholars, and the excellence of the teaching has secured for the Figueras Evangelical schools a high reputation, not only of the town but of the Province.

Most interesting of all we saw, perhaps, were our glimpses at the village work. At Armentera, San Pedro Pescador, and Llansá, a sweet village on the coast, nestling at the foot of the Pyrenees, and the summer quarters of the mission party, we were privileged attendants at evangelistic services, where just such simple folk, fishermen and vine dressers, as our Lord addressed by the Galilean lake, drank in the Gospel message.

Some 600 peasants, men in their picturesque red Catalan caps and scarves, bare-headed women in work-a-day attire, and children of all ages were present. This crowd gathered in a dancing saloon, and cheerfully stood (for seats were few, and the children squatted on the floor) more than an hour, listening with rapt attention, while the pastor told the story of our Lord's death and passion, illustrated by lantern slides, and followed by a distribution of Gospels.

ENCOURAGING PROSPECTS.

At the little port of Llansá, where a very happy Sunday was spent, we saw much of the brightness and intelligence of Spanish children. Whether from the affectionateness of childhood, or simply from love of variety, the children of the village dogged our footsteps all day long. It was impossible to get away from them. They sat in happy semi-circles on the beach before us, talking, singing and presenting little offerings of flowers and shells, or listening to Madame Rodriguez, as she told them in their own Catalan vernacular, the "old, old story."

Wherever we went the splendid possibilities of the mission presented themselves to our minds with overwhelming force. It needs more evangelists and school teachers, leaders of religious thought, both men and women, who shall go into every town and village proclaiming salvation through Christ alone.

English lady workers are specially desired, who would find a happy home at the Mission House, and plenty of employment while learning Spanish. One who is at the same time a "Dorcas," loving humble handiwork as a means of ministering to the "necessity of saints" would be most acceptable.

May the friends of the Figueras Mission be instant in prayer, and so share in the blessed work of upholding and sustaining the faith and effort of those who are bearing the burden and heat of the day in that difficult, though deeply interesting and encouraging, portion of the great mission field. Light and Shade.*

AMONG CHINESE WOMEN.

AT the end of last year three of our Christian women paid them a week's visit, and received as well as gave a great blessing. It was Christmas time, and the church were having a great festival of several days to celebrate the opening of a larger building for worship. Many of the members had just received their compensation, and some had given the whole of it to the church, some half, and others large parts. Others gave gifts in kind—the fire-wood, chickens, bread—each vieing to outdo his neighbour in generosity. The three Tientsin sisters were much struck by this spirit, and confessed that they had learnt a great lesson on this manifestation of love. But they gave as well as received; each day they were in three different houses, preaching and teaching till their throats were dry. The women were most anxious to read, and even when they had lain down to sleep, would come to ask the name of some character. One woman learnt to read half of the Catechism in three days, and others were very quick indeed, compared to our city women. Mrs. Li reports that about forty women listened daily to the preaching.

FRUITFUL TESTIMONY.

Malagasy boys are very easy to manage, for, as a rule, they are obedient, gentle, and polite. Added to this, most of our elder "boys" are decided Christians, and their influence over the younger ones is so helpful as to render my work much easier than otherwise it possibly could be. We have had a number of instances where one boy has attributed his entire change of life to the prayers, conversations, and influence of one of his senior companions. There is a definiteness of aim with many, and the younger boys have such a respect and admiration for some of the elder ones that the tone is made decidedly healthy.

COST OF MEDICAL WORK IN CHINA.

It may astonish our home friends to know that the whole cost of upkeep of hospital, feeding, and treating in-patients and out-patients throughout the year, averages 9d. per head. When it is remembered that every out-patient has on an average returned for medicines or surgical treatment at least four times, and that the in-patients have remained for periods varying from ten days to two months, the significance of the figures will be manifest. To achieve this result we have had to be a kind of "Jack of all trades." Old packing-boxes and oil-tins have been converted into useful hospital requisites, and to the utmost of our ability we have tried to keep within our income. Notwithstanding all, we close the year with a debit of taels 145.09.

SELF SUPPORT IN INDIA.

How to raise up a self-supporting church in this famine-afflicted region is a great problem. It is one we can see no means of solving at present. We can only feel it to be our duty to go on teaching old and young, and leading them to a fuller knowledge of Jesus Christ, leaving the formation of an independent native church to the guidance of the great Head of the Church in the future.

The class of people who form just now the great bulk of our Christians might in good seasons do something towards the maintenance of their spiritual guides. A group of ten villages contributing each one rupee a month could pay the salary of a catechist, who would be the pastor of that circle of villages. He would find a sufficient field of work, and the people could be well ministered to by such a travelling pastor. By his exhortations they could raise also enough money to keep their places of meeting in repair. It is, however, when the education of the children in these small communities has to be arranged for that the people are too poor to afford any more contributions. External aid must come in if the rising generation is not to be left entirely uninstructed. The Government will not be able to provide universal education.

Preaching and Healing.*

IN FAR AWAY JAPAN.

THE Medical Mission at Hakodate was carried on as usual by Dr. and Mrs. Colborne during the past year. Last autumn the Committee were able to reinforce the staff by the addition of a fully-trained nurse. Some of the old patients who have been baptized are doing their utmost to assist in the work. Mrs. Colborne wrote of one: "It was wonderful to see him. He had eight or nine sick people gathered in his house for Dr. Colborne to treat; and then he led the way to the house of another patient, too ill to move, who is shortly coming here. He talks to the people, cares for them bodily and spiritually, and tell them what great things the Lord has done for him." She speaks also of a blind man who was in the hospital, who was the means of bringing to Christ three more.

The following extract from her letters will give some idea of the way in which God is blessing the work:—"There are quite a number of people around us anxious to help us in every possible way; two come every dispensary day and sit with the people in the waiting-room, and talk to them quietly and explain anything they may not have understood in the teaching. One lives in the hospital most of his time to see things go on all right whilst we are out of the house or at the dispensary. Several times in the week one or another comes in to talk to the patients and sympathize with those needing sympathy."

It is very wonderful how these converts in connection with the hospital seem at once to feel their responsibility for making known the good news to others. A little later Mrs. Colborne writes:—

"Five of our people are to be baptized to-morrow. One was not here at the hour Mr. Andrews called, so could not be examined, but the in-patient near by, who knew the candidate, said, 'Oh, you need not mind that; that man does not need examining, anybody can see that his faith is real; you have only to look at him and you know he is changed and repentant,' and others agreed." Dr. Colborne refers to some special services held last August in the mission-hall, at which, on two nights, the names were given in of eighty-nine inquirers.

PROGRESS IN EGYPT.

The hospital buildings at Old Cairo have been completed by the erection of the casual wards for patients suffering from Egyptian anæmia.* Dr. Harpur reports that in all no fewer than 1,400 patients used either these wards or rooms hired before the wards were built, and adds:—

"Not the least of the advantages of the work being all in the one compound, is that now all the workers can meet for daily prayer every morning. This we feel to be a great source of strength, and here I would ask for prayer that we may be able to train a native staff to do the double work of ministering to the souls and bodies of our patients."

Miss Cay, in her annual letter, pleads earnestly for more helpers. She writes about one of the villages visited by her last year:—"This hamlet affords an instance of the way in which the villages are open to us. It stands on an island in the Nile, and my Bible-woman and I came upon it quite accidentally when on our way to another place. However, as soon as we entered it a woman greeted me warmly, and inquired whether I had my Book with me. On being asked how she knew me or the Book, she explained that she had been an out-patient of the Medical Mission, and had heard me speak in the waiting-room.

"After giving an address to an attentive group, we went to another part of the village, and there were two more ex-patients who both knew me at once; so we found ourselves among friends in a place the existence of which had been unknown to us. This experience might be repeated in dozens, or perhaps hundreds, of villages, many of them not little hamlets, but places large enough to deserve the name of towns. But where are the workers?"

Awakening at Lovedale.

IN an account of a visit paid a few weeks ago to the Lovedale Missionary Institution—contributed to The Missionary Record of the United Free Church of Scotland—Rev. David Russell says:—

The visitor to Lovedale cannot fail to be struck with the deep, strong, spiritual atmosphere in which everything is carried on. There is an Institution church, to which students are invited for worship. Prayer meetings and Bible classes lay hold of the students, and bring them under the very best influences, and the members of the staff who can teach or preach are kept continually at work; in fact, one wonders in some cases how flesh and blood can stand the constant strain.

Soon after the beginning of each session a week of evangelistic services are held. If no specialist can be obtained for the work, it is undertaken by the members of the staff. They, I should say, are all specialists. The results are always satisfactory. This year they have been specially so. Mrs. Stewart assured me that there has been nothing like it since 1874, when there was a great outpouring of the Spirit. Two great revivals stand out prominently among all the work I have undertaken in this country—Durban in 1878, Greytown in 1882. A third must now be added—Lovedale in 1902.

The services covered eight days in all. There were, I think, about one dozen meetings of various kinds. There was almost an entire absence of excitement. The attendances at the principal meetings probably averaged six hundred persons. The attention was always remarkable, and the after-meetings were as large as I have ever seen. Two hundred and forty-two decision cards were signed. They are registered, every one of them, and arrangements have been made to follow up the work in every case. Of course, I do not say that all these are conversions; these are simply inquirers, decisions registered here below. The real work is known to God alone, and the laborious work of bringing the grain into God's storehouse belongs to others; but I, for my part, earnestly and thankfully bless God that it has been my unspeakable privilege to help for a few days those honoured servants of the Most High, who, with a devotion which fills one's soul with gratitude to them and to the Master whom they serve, are bearing the burden of the great soul-saving and mind and hand training work for Christ at Lovedale.

Progress in Costa Rica.

THE latest issue of the Central American Bulletin gives some encouraging details of the advance of Gospel effort in Costa Rica:—During the past three months our brother McConnell has been putting some finishing touches on the Mission House. The Lord has been graciously sending in means beyond the 5,000 dollars as needed to complete the house. Bro. Penzotti, who spent three weeks at San Jose, was present at the opening of the new chapel and held a good number of special meetings, which were well attended. Mr. Witt, successor to Mr. Sobey at Limon, has been ill recently; the Lord has raised him up.

The matter of an orphanage has been laid upon the hearts of many and it is intimated that land situated a mile from San Jose will be offered upon which to erect the buildings necessary. Let us continue in prayer for this so much needed institution in the work of evangelizing Central America. Miss Chadbourn, with Miss Johnson, reached San Jose on April 10. She found the church in its new home and in good spiritual state. While Miss Johnson is acquiring the language she is able to distribute tracts and Gospels, and to labour among the English-speaking inhabitants.

The work on the West coast has been carried on vigorously by Sisters Eaton and Blackmore. Our sisters are still praying and longing for a missionary who can come and organize the work in this field so ripe for the harvest.

Returning to China.

A CHASTENED spirit marked the gathering held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday of last week, to say an affectionate farewell and God-speed to members of the China Inland Mission who are now on the point of leaving for their field of labour. In view of this outgoing, a statement which has been issued by the Council of the Mission, shows that they are not unmindful of the terrible facts of the Boxer outbreak in 1900. The recent reception of the sad intelligence that two other members —Messrs. J. R. Bruce, of Australia, and R. H. Lowis, of Cumberland—have, as already reported in our columns, been murdered in Hunan, accentuates the reality of the malicious activity of Satan against God in the person of His people.

Recognizing the gravity of the situation, it is felt that the question of the duty of the Christian Church must be faced and answered by directors and missionaries alike. There has been much prayer and waiting upon God on the subject, and the conclusion arrived at thereby is that—"Fully estimating the value of human life, and carefully considering the possibilities of danger; in the light of Calvary, in the light of Christ's command and the eternal woe or weal of each immortal soul, we must unhesitatingly state that we believe the only path of duty is that followed by the Apostles, to 'cease not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ.'"

ATTITUDE TO PERSECUTION

It is frankly recalled that He who demanded of His people willingness to give their lives for His sake, provided also for the need for flight in time of persecution. The present situation is viewed with no little concern, fraught as it is with possibilities for good and evil. Yet it is not regarded as discouraging, but as calling for renewed and determined effort to win China for Christ.

From the chair, Mr. Theodore Howard (home director) touched the hearts of all as he spoke of the missionaries as belonging to two classes. "(1) There are those who have seen war, and are going back into the thick of the fight. They have suffered acutely in their work and testimony for God. They have been through fire and water, and are going back full of faith and love and hope. (2) There are recruits who have never been in the battle in foreign lands, and have little idea what they are going to be exposed to, this great fight with the powers of evil in China."

PROBLEM OF THE BACKSLIDERS.

Directing attention specially to the northern province of Shansi, where the Boxer outburst was felt in all its fury, and where he laboured for thirteen years, Mr. A. Lutley announced that of the twenty-seven stations of the Mission which were forcibly closed by the Boxers, seventeen have now been reoccupied by Europeans, and nearly all the others by native evangelists. The future, however, is full of perplexity. Under the pressure of persecution very many of the church-members have, in some way or other, recanted or ceased to bear witness for their Lord; and the missionaries are much concerned that these should be faithfully and lovingly dealt with, in such fashion as will lead to full confession of the wrong-doing, as well as restoration to Christian privileges.

"After much prayer and conference it has been thought well to lay the matter before the native elders and Christians concerned, pointing out to them that they have, by their own act in recanting, put themselves outside the church; and that the question is not one of exclusion, but of receiving back. The native office-bearers have then been asked to send in a written statement acknowledging that they recognise themselves as outside the church. It was at first thought that, in a short time, steps could be taken to receive those who were known to be in a state of great grief at their position, but many difficulties have presented themselves. Only workers of short experience in China have yet been able to go to the province. The church is still disorganized, and many of those who were formerly elders are now outside.

"After our return many months must be taken up in visiting the stations, and in consultation with those natives who remain true as well as with the other missionaries, in order to devise some means and lay down some rule to guide in receiving back those who have fallen. It will be an intense joy to receive many of them back; but there are others who before the crisis gave much concern, and concerning whom there is special difficulty.

"With regard to those who were pastors and office bearers in the church, they may be received back; but, even then, the question remains of their future position and relation to others. Bear this in mind as a matter to deal with before God, feeling that you are the greater partners in this work. We are going out there, but we depend on you. More may be accomplished in China at this time by prayer than by anything we can do."

REMOVAL OF HINDRANCES.

Representing the far western province of Sichuen, Rev. A. E. Evans pointed out the pleasing aspects of the change which the work has undergone during past months. "(1) The old opposition is now very largely a thing of the past. Where we were hindered and opposed, where we were prevented from opening stations or forcibly expelled, we are now being invited on every side. (2) A great deal of the prejudice is giving way. We shall no longer be jeered at, cursed, and have the back turned upon us simply because we are foreigners. The Gospel will no longer be turned out because a foreign hand presents it. (3) The ignorance also is beginning to break up. An inquiring spirit is going out, though not yet concerning the Gospel."

Recalling the terrible time of suffering through which he and his dear ones were called to pass, Mr. C. H. S. Green admitted frankly that it was not without a natural shrinking that they were returning; but assured his hearers that no pressure had been used, or required, to take them back when the Lord graciously opened up the way.

Out of similar trials, Mr. E. J. Cooper recalled how the Lord delivered him, though wife and little ones were taken home to glory, and gave expression to the deep-seated joy with which he returned to China, having a proved God as his companion.

Three ladies who are now going to the mission field for the first time—Misses H. L. Thomas, H. A. Gough, and M. Gregory—expressed their gratitude to God for the privilege, and recounted the different paths by which they had been led.

OBLIGATION LOST IN PRIVILEGE.

Reading Eph. iii. 8-13, Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson asked whether, if the Lord had written the words specially for the occasion, they could have been more appropriate? "The whole conception of duty is quite lost sight of in the overwhelming glory of delight. It is not obligation, it is consummate privilege—'Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace, this favour, given that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.' In what does this consummate exhibition of grace consist?

"(1) In the proclamation to the nations of the unsearchable riches of Christ, in storing up God for every believing soul, in opening up the bank of Heaven to bankrupt men and women—coming up to a bankrupt world to say, 'Your debt is paid, and all your need supplied, according to His riches in glory.'

"(2) We are interpreters of the mystery which was hid in God until it has been unveiled in Christ to Paul alone. Of all the apostles and writers of the New Testament, he is the only one who deals in such mysteries.

"(3) There is to be a revelation to the principalities and powers in the heavenly places, to angelic hierarchies, by the Church, of the manifold wisdom of God in human redemption.

"(4) You are to fulfil the eternal plan of God. That plan is waiting for your co-operation, in order to reach its fulfilment. In 1 Cor. xii. we are taught the inter-dependence of the members of the human body, but then there is added the tremendous statement that even the head cannot say to the feet, 'I have no need of you.'

THE DEPENDENCE OF CHRIST.

"Christ could have done this stupendous work without us, but when He chose to take the position of Head over all things to the Church, He chose to depend upon the members. How are you saved? By the death of Christ. But Christ might have died in vain if somebody had not told you of His death. Christ spread out His hands on the cross as far as He could. You are to go and touch one of them, and with the other be a current bearer of redeeming love. He is going to reach some whom He would not have reached, if you had not stood between Him and them.

"How is the head to go anywhere if the feet do not carry it? How is Jesus Christ to go to this dying world if you do not carry the message. We are the fulfillers of the plan of God, the necessary instruments and agencies of carrying out His eternal purpose.

"Have you noticed how suffering and success are so linked that the highest success never comes without suffering. If you succeed without suffering, it is because somebody else suffered instead of you. If you suffer without succeeding, it is that another may succeed because of you. The Church needs a baptism of sorrow and suffering. It requires but a very little study of the past to see that the days of peril are the days of greatest prosperity. In the apostolic days, when it was a dangerous thing to confess Jesus Christ, look how powerful the Church was. The via crucis became the via lucis."

A Resurrection Hymn.

O Risen Lord, ascended,
Thy seat, the Father's throne
By glory now attended,
And Majesty Thine own.

No more humiliation,
The shame and sorrow o'er,
Gethsemane, the Passion,
The Cross and tomb no more.

What Thou, my Lord, hast spoken
Was all that I might know,
The bonds of death were broken
To free me from its woe.

Henceforth my life is blended,
My Risen Lord, with Thine,
In Thee I have ascended,
Thy hidden life is mine.

Be mine the daily dying,
The watchful, prayerful strife;
Thy fulness strength supplying—
The Resurrection Life.

By faith new power receiving
For duty's new demands,
May I Thy Word believing
Obey all Thy commands.

A. T. Pierson.

THE LATE

Mr. Benjamin Perry, Bristol.

By Mr. JAMES WRIGHT,
SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BRISTOL ORPHAN HOUSES.

THE dear friend and brother of whom I have the sad privilege to write entered the presence of the King on the 9th inst. He inherited, through grace, the inspired blessing pronounced by Moses upon his namesake among Israel's sons: "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him; and the Lord shall cover him all the day long, and he shall dwell between His shoulders." Though the psalm of his life was interspersed with passages of sadness—as anxieties in business, family bereavement, and personal physical suffering were permitted to test his faith and patience—yet we are sure that in the retrospect of the whole pathway his own glad testimony would be well expressed in the words: "Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O Lord, according to Thy word."

His worthy father, Mr. Joseph Perry, filled for years an important position in the large and then prosperous business of Messrs. Finzal and Son, and some of young Benjamin's early commercial experience was gained in the service of that firm. This was long before the era of "Saturday afternoon" and "Bank" Holidays, and I learned when conversing with him about bygone days that he had had to "bear the yoke in his youth."

Early in life he learned to know God, or rather was "known of Him," through the faithful ministry of Rev. J. Spencer Pearsall, of Lodge Street Congregational Chapel; and his first confession of Christ was made, when he united himself with that assembly. This was in 1858. The following year he was convinced of the Scriptural teaching of believers' baptism, and having become engaged to Miss Elizabeth Willey, the daughter of a respected member of the "Bethesda" fellowship, he was baptised by Mr. Müller, and joined that body, which continued to be his spiritual home for the remainder of his life. The deeply-instructive ministry of Mr. Henry Craik and the long and intimate friendship with Mr. George Müller exercised, undoubtedly, a powerful influence in moulding Mr. Perry's spiritual character. The special testimony that Mr. Müller was raised up to bear to the great truth that the God of Elijah still lives, that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ still, in the present day, delights to listen to and answer the prayer of faith, commended itself to Mr. Perry, as the undoubted teaching of God's Word; and he watched, with the keenest and most practically sympathetic interest, the growth of that Institution, which, sixty-eight years ago, had its birth through the simple application of this truth of God. Not only did our brother approve the truth and admire its results in the life and work of another, but he embraced it in his heart, and applied it to his own life and conduct.

Many of his fellow-citizens greatly appreciated Mr. Perry's energy, sagacity, patience under difficulties, and his general ultimate success. It was this which led some of them to fix upon him as the fittest person to represent their ward in the Town Council of their city, and actually to place him in that position, without the slightest effort on his part to secure it by canvassing the electors or soliciting a single vote. But all who thus respected the man may not have been aware of the secret of his power, which was just this, that "in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, he made known his requests" to his Heavenly Father; that, childlike, he trusted implicitly in the infinite wisdom, power, and love of God, and on this account was never allowed to be ashamed, much less confounded. In the family, in the counting-house, in the church, and before the world, he, in a goodly degree, honoured the unseen God as the living and true God, who consequently honoured his trusting servant with the seal of Divine approval.

Again, Mr. Müller's high conception of earthly business as a sphere in which the believer in Christ may abundantly glorify God, if only he accepts the inspired Word as really and truly the all-sufficient directory and guide in all commercial transactions, found prepared soil in young Perry's heart. He recognised the dignity and privilege of a business calling when God is viewed as One who condescends to become the Heavenly Partner therein; and he heartily accepted the inevitable conclusion to which such a view must lead, viz., that in the use made of the profits accruing from such a business, the Heavenly Partner must have the predominant voice, and the earthly one must become simply a steward employed in disbursing them.

THE LATE MR. BENJAMIN PERRY.
From Photograph by Mr. Abel Lewis, Clifton, Bristol.

Consequently, Benjamin Perry was "ready to distribute," not from irregular impulse, but from a steady operative principle: and "this man was blessed in his deed." To him that had (i.e. used), God gave more. His capacity as a steward of God's bounty increased, and his own peace and joy developed in proportion.

But while God abundantly verified in the experience of His servant His great and undeviating principle: "Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over, shall men give into your bosom," He also illustrated in Mr. Perry's career another notable principle of His dealings with His children, viz., that "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." Twice our beloved friend sustained the trial of seeing one of his large warehouses and offices burned to the ground; and more than once he had to face the closing of certain avenues of business. On these and similar occasions, his faith and patience were naturally sorely tried, but the same love that smote sustained, and in the crises specially referred to, the Lord so endowed him with fertility of resource that he was enabled to strike out fresh paths of success.

Nor was it only in business life that the hand of the Lord was manifestly with him. His domestic life was one of exceptional happiness. Blessed with an energetic and devoted wife, he found in her one of like spirit with himself, who entered heartily and sympathetically into all his plans, aiding him with sound counsel, and sharing in a marked degree his spiritual ideals. Thus he enjoyed forty-three years of wedded happiness, and his last hours were gladdened by the presence at his bed-side of her he had loved so well, together with their two sons and three daughters.

The same energy and resourcefulness that manifested themselves in his business undertakings were sanctified to more important ends in connection with the life and work of the church at Bethesda. Here his sound judgment and business tact were always at the disposal of his fellow-labourers and deacons, and many were the valuable services he rendered in this capacity.

Though never seeking prominence as a preacher or teacher in the church, he delighted in opportunities of telling out the "Old, old story;" and well and gratefully do I remember the not unfrequent occasions in later years, when beloved Mr. Müller was suddenly disabled by weakness from fulfilling a preaching appointment, how he would notify his "dear Brother Perry"—who, at an hour or two's notice, would lovingly step in to fill the gap.

His habit of secret prayer, and his reverence for the "Living Oracles"—the Scriptures of truth—kept him, by the grace of God, holding fast "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." The ancient truth of God, never to him became antique. Not a "new Evangel," but daily renewed reception of, and delight in, the old, was that which his soul longed for, and, in a special measure, enjoyed. Hence it came to pass that when his incessantly active life was exchanged for the narrowed area and compulsory inaction of a sick room, there was no petulant repining, but a lovely submission (which it did the hearts of those who visited him good to behold) to the good pleasure of his Lord.

The commencement of his last illness came upon him with a sudden shock. Having returned from a visit to Devonshire for the benefit of his health, some two years ago, he called upon the family doctor, only to be met with the startling announcement that, in the doctor's opinion, he was the subject of an aneurism of the heart!

But even this was not "above what he was able" to bear. Soon the peace of God resumed its sway in his heart, and how completely his inmost soul bowed to the Father's will was evident in some striking words that fell from his lips a few months ago, viz.:—

"I cannot, when I look at my loved wife and children, ask to be taken; and when I think of what may be involved in prolonged life, I cannot ask, without reserve, to be raised up; so I put the matter back into my loving Father's hands, and say, "Thou knowest what is best; Thy will be done."

I never had a more constant friend, and never shall I forget the uncontrollable manifestation of his tender affection, when, on March 10, 1898, he came up to the Orphan Home, No. 3, a few hours after Mr. Müller had breathed his last; and, meeting me alone, threw his arms around me and pressed me to his heart, as if words were too weak to express his deep sympathy. Now we part; but (blessed be God)— not for ever

Joyful hopes our bosoms swell.
They who love the Saviour never Know a long, a last farewell:
Blissful unions
Lie beyond this parting vale!

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

REV. DR. HENRY AT NEWPORT, MON.

ON Wednesday and Thursday, September 10 and 11, meetings were addressed at the Temperance Hall, Newport, Mon., by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry. Preparations had been made months ago to ensure success, and the Newport and Monmouth Total Abstinence Society and Band of Hope Union, under whose auspices the meetings were held, had secured the active co-operation of the B.W.T.A., not only in the work of pledge taking, but in arousing interest in the meetings.

The Churches were in hearty sympathy, and through their medium much was done to focus attention upon the effort. In two respects only was there disappointment—the weather conditions prevailing, which militated against the attendance, and the brevity of the visit.

On the first afternoon, an open conference was held, the subject being "Co-operation with God in the Destruction of the Drink Curse," and the attendance was exceedingly good. Alderman E. Grove, J.P., D.L., presided, and publicly welcomed Dr. Henry, who introduced the subject of Temperance in an impassioned address. He was ably supported in his contentions by several ministers and others, Mrs. Harse, the local B.W.T.A. leader, being specially apt in her remarks.

In the evening there was a capital attendance. Mr. J. G. Ellis, President of the Society, was chairman, and in the course of a short but pithy address gave a hearty and enthusiastic welcome to the distinguished visitor.

Dr. Henry chose as his subject, "The Irrepressible Conflict between the Church and the Public-house," which he handled in a masterly fashion. His arguments were unassailable, and the spiritual impression profound.

On Thursday afternoon the chair was again filled by Mr. Ellis, and Dr. Henry preached a striking sermon, taking as the basis of his discourse, Gal. vi. 9 and 10. His burning eloquence and spiritual impressiveness will not be readily forgotten by anyone present.

In the evening the attendance was exceedingly good, notwithstanding inclement weather. Councillor W. A. Baker, J.P., presided, and in the course of his remarks said that the great need of the Temperance cause is the quickening of the Church of God. Dr. Henry selected the story of Deborah's triumph as the theme of a "white heat" appeal to the Churches to throw their full weight and sympathy into the present day problem of Temperance reform, and thus accelerate the deliverance of the nation from the common enemy.

At all the meetings solos were sung by Mr. T. Armon Jones, who has lately been rendering assistance to Dr. Henry by the ministry of song. Mr. Jones added to the interest by his powerful and impressive rendering of several well-known hymns.

We shall not soon forget the visit of these consecrated missioners, and deeply appreciate the excellent services they have rendered to the cause at Newport.

Fifty pledges were taken, but what we believe to be greater work still has been accomplished in the quickening of Christian people to a perception of their responsibility in the work of Temperance reform.

TAUNTON.

Dr. Henry's visit to Taunton aroused much interest, the meetings being marked by large attendances and increasing power and interest. At a meeting for children Dr. Henry urged upon his youthful listeners the great importance of starting on the serious business of life with firm, unwavering teetotal resolutions. One of the most striking utterances was that on "The Economic Aspect of the Drink Problem." Dr. Henry enlarged upon the importance of abstinence in industrial effort, and contended that the 189 million pounds sterling spent in the United Kingdom every year on intoxicating drink is a serious hindrance to the competition of this country with more temperate nations. Mr. Armon Jones rendered valuable service by his admirable singing of Gospel solos. On Lord's Day afternoon Dr. Henry spoke on the "Impregnable Foundations of Temperance Reform." He referred, with much force, to the teaching of the Bible, the example of Christ, and the purpose of the Church. In the evening the address was based on "Personal Accountability for the Curse of Drink," when deep spiritual power was experienced, and numerous requests made for prayer.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Sept. 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 1, Alloa; Oct. 2, Alva; 3, Dollar; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Waterford; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 27-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn; 31-Feb. 6, Newton Abbot; 7-13, Neath; 14-20, Reading; 21-27, Sunderland; 28-Mar. 6, Middlesbrough; 7-13, Dundee; 14-20, Stirling; 21-April 3, Falkirk.

Perth Christian Conference.

THE fortieth gathering of Christians in conference at Perth took place during three days of last week. There were fewer friends from a distance than in the early years when Perth stood with Mildmay as the two rallying centres in Great Britain. Now there are such annual meetings of Christians everywhere. Surely this one fact ought to meet the objections of pessimists, and overcome the fears of God's children who say that we are not now such a religious people as in former days.

Looking over the large audiences in the City Hall, Perth, one was struck with the intense earnestness and eager desire to hear all that was said. It was refreshing and grateful to listen to the lay chairmen reading a portion of Scripture bearing upon the subject of Conference with such emphasis and true appreciation of its meaning. Lord Kinnaird, Sir Archibald S. L. Campbell, Bart., Sir Robert Pullar, F. A. Brown Douglas, Esq., were the chairmen, and among the speakers were Rev. J. B. Figgis, Rev. Dr. Todd, Rev. Dr. George Wilson, Rev. J. Stuart Holden, Rev. Dr. John Smith, Sir Andrew Wingate, Mr. Andrew Stewart, Dr. Soga, and Rev. R. Stevenson.

The subject of Conference was "The Grace of God in Christ: What it is, what it does, and what it leads to." The forenoon addresses were merely expository of the subject with practical exhortation; the afternoons were occupied with evidences of the grace of God, one afternoon being given over to missionaries (of whom there were many present), while the evenings were mainly evangelistic in character.

On the last day of Conference the Lord's Supper was observed.

The women's meetings were full of interest, and were well attended. Mrs. Oatts and Mrs. Stott (China) gave very helpful addresses. The afternoon tea meetings were most informal and social.

A ministers' meeting was also held, while a new feature was introduced, viz., a meeting for boys and girls.

The early morning meetings, when reports of workers over the whole field were briefly given, though not very largely attended, were very interesting.

The Bishop of Durham, Mr. W. E. Malcolm (Burnfoot), Mr. David McLaren (London), and Dr. Ferguson—the three last among the oldest members of committee—were very much missed. All these expressed their regret, and best wishes for the success of the Conference.

Bible Study Notes.—II.

By Rev. W. HOOPER, D.D., Mussoorie, India.

NEGLECT OF THE SCRIPTURAL USE OF WORDS.

1. Psa. xc. 16: "Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants, and Thy glory upon their children." This text is constantly quoted, and referred to, as if "Thy work" meant the work which God had given His servants to do; and then the inference is drawn that, if we are faithful in doing the work appointed for us, without looking for results, then our children shall see those blessed results—the manifestation of God's glory. But, really, there is no contrast at all between the two clauses of the verse. Moses prays for the same thing, only in different words—for himself with his contemporaries, and for their children. The fact is, that the phrase "God's work," which we are so accustomed to use in the sense of work done for God, and which is used in several passages of the New Testament in that sense, occurs nowhere in the Old Testament with that meaning, but everywhere in that of God's own working, His activity or the result of it. And that is the same as His glory, looked at from another point of view.

2. The words "testimony," "testify," "witness," and in the Authorized Version, "record" (according to an old use of the word, specially in 1 John v. 7-11) are all very commonly used, and indeed in very many instances exclusively used, of Christians telling out their personal experiences, especially their inner experiences. Now I am not here concerned with the advantages or otherwise of this practice, or whether it is Scriptural or not. Certainly it has the authority of Ps. lxvi. 16, Mark v. 19, and probably other passages. And that, within certain limits and on certain obvious conditions, it is a practice conducive to much good, would be, I suppose, denied by but few Christians. But the only thing I am at present urging is the facts that the words in question are never employed in Scripture in this sense. Testimony, in God's Word, is always the name of a solemn authoritative utterance of objective truth. Hence, God Himself is throughout Scripture the great Testifier; and in the Old Testament, while God's testimony is mentioned (to say the least) hundreds of times, that of others is (by this name) very sparingly indeed mentioned. And in the New Testament, each several Person of the Holy Trinity is the great Testifier. The Father testifies to His Son; the Son testifies to the Father; the Spirit testifies to both. John the Baptist, too, testified to Christ; and from the Apostles onwards, all Christians are meant to testify to Him, and to all that Truth of God which is centred in Him, and revealed by His Spirit. But, while their testimony is of truth which they have themselves experienced, not mere hearsay, it is objective truth, in itself independent of them, which they have to testify. If any one will be at the trouble to look down the pages of a Concordance under the words in question, he will find ample confirmation of what I am now writing. And this entirely accords with what we know as testimony in human affairs. What would be thought of a witness who, instead of telling objective facts as far as he has experienced them, was to begin to narrate his own inner feelings and impressions? The Hebrew verb commonly rendered "to testify," is in many places translated "to protest," according to the original meaning of this word, viz., to stand forth and solemnly declare what one knows to be true. The word "Protestant," which so many sneer at as if it expressed a mere negation, originally meant no bare protest against error, but a bold proclamation of the Truth of God.

3. Prayer "in the Name of" Christ is generally taken to mean only prayer offered through the mediation of our Heavenly Advocate. But really it means much more than this. As "the Name" of God is, in the Bible, God Himself as revealed, so the Name of Christ is Christ Himself as known, not by imagination, but by revelation. To do anything, therefore, in the Name of Christ is to do it in Christ, i.e., the Christ of revelation. As a faithful ambassador aims at representing his Sovereign in everything, so Christians, "whatsoever they do, in word or deed, must do all in the Name of the Lord Jesus," i.e., as representing Him, as belonging to Him, and for His cause and interests exclusively. And as with all other acts, so, but very specially, with prayer. To pray in the Name of Christ is to pray as representing Him, to pray in the firm belief that we are praying for what He wants, and not what we ourselves want apart from Him; in a word, to pray in Him. And this is really the same thing as praying "in the Spirit" (Jude 20), and "asking according to His will" (1 John v. 14). If any proof be still demanded that this is the real meaning of praying in Christ's Name, I think John xiv. 14 (read according to the best authorities) will suffice. To ask Christ Himself anything in His Name cannot possibly mean to ask through His mediation. But we may add John xvi. 23, where the Father's giving, in answer to prayer, is said to be in the Name of Christ; which can only mean as representing Him.

Evangelists in Conference.

"WILT Thou not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice in Thee?" The heart cry of the psalmist was doubtless fresh in the minds of many who gathered at the Conference of Evangelists, held at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on the 10th inst., "for prayer, fellowship, and consideration of the best methods of prosecuting the work of evangelization."

Similar conferences in past years have been rich with revival blessing, and it was, therefore, with keen anticipation that a large number of workers, who bear the burden and heat of the day, came apart awhile to draw nigh unto God, to ponder causes of failure, to seek a larger, compassionate love for souls, and to yield themselves afresh to be fully possessed by their Lord.

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

The morning session, at which Mr. R. C. MORGAN presided, was devoted to prayer for revival. At the outset, the Chairman reminded his hearers that looking to sanctification as an end in itself, rather than a means to an end, is error. We are saved and sanctified that we may be used to win souls, to destroy the works of the devil, and to glorify God. "Father, glorify Thy name," is the most comprehensive of all prayer.

Several brethren had liberty in prayer: there was the expression of the quiet restfulness of waiting in God's presence, the note of praise for harmony in intercession, and the word of solemn realization of responsibility towards dying souls. The holy flame of prayer burned brightly indeed as this hallowed season of spiritual refreshing proceeded.

CHRIST'S HUNGER FOR SOULS.

The usual noon meeting was in marked continuity of thought. Pastor R. WRIGHT HAY read (using the Revised Version) three brief passages, John xx. 19-21, Matt. xxviii. 16-20, and Acts i. 6-8, illustrative, respectively, of the peace of God, the presence of Christ, and the power of the Holy Ghost. The Lord Jesus Christ places these great facts in close relation to evangelistic work: (1) When He bestowed His peace upon that little group of believers He added, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you"—to sin-stricken souls. (2) When He said, "Lo, I am with you alway," it was to give the assurance of His presence with them in labouring to bring others to His feet, a presence that should be as real when they could not see Him as when, on this occasion, it awed them into worship. (3) And when He told the disciples, "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you." He added, "And"—inevitably—"ye shall be My witnesses." "Oh," said Rutherford in memorable words written in a prison which he found to be "Christ's palace"—"Oh, that every hair of my head and bone in my body were a man to bear a fair witness for the Lord Jesus Christ." The speaker touched, too, on a few of the temptations of the evangelist. "May we not become so familiar with certain phrases and with addresses that have been used of God in the past that we are apt to go forth forgetting that we need His empowering to be humble, to lose sight of successes, always to reach forward to something deeper for the glory of God"? Mr. Wright Hay recalled an experience during his missionary labours in the Cameroons. A native pleaded, "Come also to our town; the people are 'hungry.'" The missionary got ready for the journey, but Satan whispered, "They may not be very keen to take the Bread of Life after all." Then came the thought, "Whether or not, they hunger for the Lord Jesus Christ, He hungers for them." So the journey was undertaken, "not to see the Bread of Life accepted, but to minister to the heart hunger of my Lord."

Time was all too short for the testimonies to spiritual awakenings which were given when Mr. A. GARSTIN, who presided, called for words of witness, but many of the mighty workings of God in church, mission hall, Sunday-school and the home, were told forth with earnestness. Miss ADA ROSE, and, at another stage, Mrs. TETLEY, sang with tender feeling and much acceptance.

THE FALL AND THE REDEMPTION.

For the concluding session, presided over by Mr. M. H. HODDER, the subject was "The Fall of Man in its Bearing upon Evangelistic Work To-day." Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH, the chief speaker, dwelt primarily upon the importance of the evangelist to the churches, and the need that he should be a man of the Bible. The word "evangelist" occurs but three times in New Testament, and in each case it is assumed that the evangelist is "well up" in the Word of God. Philip, we are told, was full of wisdom, not of the schools, but of God. Timothy is charged, by all considerations possible, to "preach the Word . . . . do the work of an evangelist," and in Eph. iv. 11, the evangelist is to upbuild and edify, and so lead on to the perfecting of the church.

Viewing the question of the Fall, we first consider where man is. "Where art thou?" was the first question asked of Adam (Gen. iii. 9). Where are our unconverted fellow men to-day? In the horrible pit of sin. The fall of man is not a sentiment but an historical fact recorded in an historical book. If we are to change "fall" for "ascent," we have to change our evangel and depart from the Gospel. The Holy Scriptures not only give the Fall historically, but show again and again what it means—the corruption of human nature. The ruin and depravity of man is an essential part of Holy Ghost teaching. "God looked down from heaven upon the children of men . . . . there is none that doeth good, no, not one." As a result of the Fall man is in one aspect dead, in another dying, until the Holy Spirit breathes upon him.

The evangelist has to deal with men without God or hope in the world. The Fall makes him hopeless apart from the Gospel. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin?" Nor can any man be justified before God until the Divine hand of everlasting love rescues him.

THE SPIRIT OF DIVINE COMPASSION.

How does God stand in relation to man as a fallen creature? He brings Adam to the place of confession; there is no hiding the curse, but the remedy is made as clear as the guilt. The temptation to-day is to modify the curse, as though God's love suffers if we set forth the retribution of sin; but the clearer you see the sin of the man the more rightly you conceive of that love which comes to lift him up.

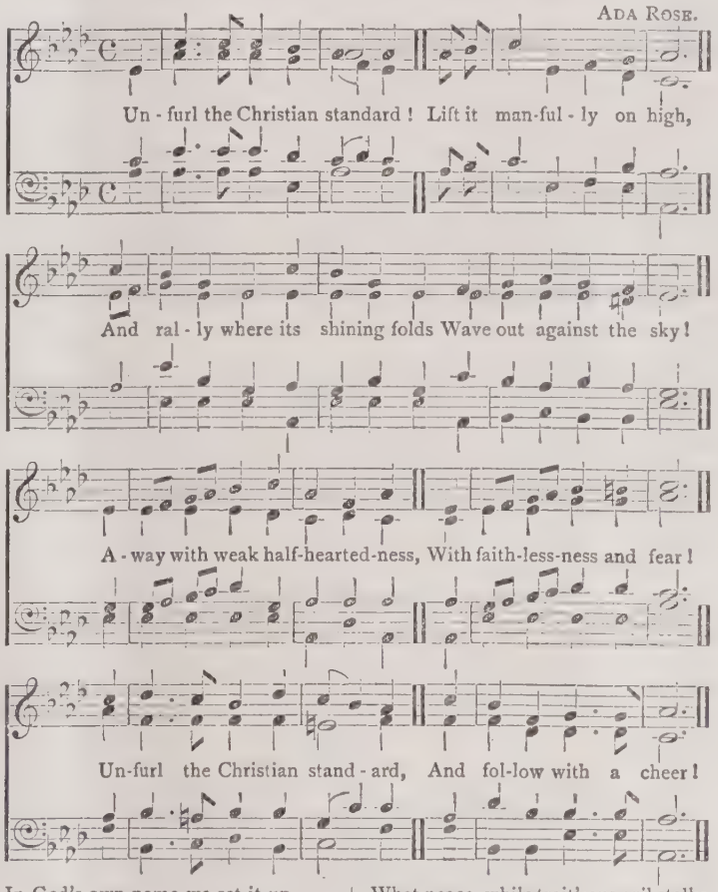
Again, we have to do with men in the spirit of Divine compassion. Adam and Eve "hid themselves" (Gen. iii. 8). They did not seek God, but He sought them. So must we act. Wherever you have got a sinner, you have got something to tell him—that his iniquity is put away and his sin is covered. "Let us go forward in faith, remembering that our prayer must ever be, 'Come, from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live,' for, unless the wind of God breathes upon the dry bones, we shall labour in vain."

The interesting conversation which followed covered many points, arising from Mr. Fuller Gooch's address or otherwise bearing upon the work of an evangelist; and Mr. J. E. TAYLOR, of Aylesbury, added a helpful word on Zechariah, who (2 Chron. xxvi. 5) "had understanding of the visions of God."

So concluded a day which will be long and gratefully remembered by many for its instruction and inspiration to those who "do the work of an evangelist."

Unfurl the Christian standard!

ADA ROSE.



Un - furl the Christian standard! Lift it man-ful - ly on high,
And ral - ly where its shining folds Wave out against the sky!
A - way with weak half-hearted-ness, With faith-less-ness and fear!
Un-furl the Christian stand - ard, And fol-low with a cheer!

In God's own name we set it up,
This banner brave and bright,
Uplifted for the cause of Christ,
The cause of Truth and Right;
The cause that none can overthrow,
The cause that must prevail,
Because the promise of the Lord
Can never, never fail!

Now, who is on the Lord's side, who?
Come, throng His battle-field;
Be strong, and show that ye are men!
Come forth with sword and shield!

What peace, while trait'rous evil stalks
In false array of light?
What peace, while enemies of Christ
Are gathering for the fight?

The Lord of Hosts, in whom alone
Our weakness can be strong,
Shall lead us on to conquest
With a mighty battle-song;
And soon the warfare shall be past,
The glorious triumph won,
The kingdoms of this world shall be
The kingdoms of His Son!

"In His Steps."—Since our way is troublesome and obscure, Christ commands us to mark His footsteps, tread where His feet stood. He not only invites us forward by the argument of His example, but He hath trodden down much of the difficulty, and made the way easier for our feet.—Jeremy Taylor.

Ministers in Conference.

IT was a happy thought which induced Rev. J. Hilton Stowell, M.A., of Aylesbury, to invite ministers of all denominations to meet together for mutual help and conference at Oxford during past week. There were no great speakers announced, and yet some 210 good men and true came together to wait upon God, and to learn the truths of higher Christian living and more helpful service for their common Lord and Master. The eight morning and evening sessions of the Conference, presided over by Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A., were begun and closed with prolonged seasons of prayer. With faces bowed in deep humility and self-abasement, one after another poured out his heart in fervent confession, supplication, and thanksgiving. A high tone of spirituality ran through all the addresses; but the high water mark of power was in all probability reached when some member of the Society of Friends felt a "concern to give a message."

PERSONAL RELIGION.

"The Need for a Revival of Personal Religion," was the subject Rev. E. H. Titchmarsh and others dealt with at the opening session on Monday evening. Without taking an unreasonably gloomy view of the religious life of to-day, the speakers were all agreed as to the deep need for a revival of personal religion in the churches. They were driven to that conclusion not because of the unreached masses; it was not so much the irreligious crowd outside, but rather the poverty of the religious life within their churches, which they deplored. They could never forget that there were people in their churches who were interested in the church and its work as a social institution; yet when they came close to the lives of these people, they were bound to confess that they did not discern in them any real personal religion. When they spoke of a revival, however, they certainly needed to realise that it was not what were technically called revivals. They did not disparage such efforts as the Simultaneous Mission or the work of prominent evangelists, but it was not by any great effort prepared for, and announced, and advertised, that the revival they wanted would come. It must come by the general levelling up of the religious life, and in the way of definite convictions as to the truth of the Gospel.

DEVOTIONAL USE OF SCRIPTURE.

"The Devotional Use of Scripture" was the first topic for consideration on Tuesday, and certainly the best and most helpful address was given by Principal Forbes Jackson, of Harley College, Bow. He maintained that the devotional use of Scripture is one of the supreme factors in reviving and sustaining the spiritual life of the minister. The godly man, both in the Old and New Testaments, was always associated with love for and delight in the Scriptures. Ministry might have many tributaries, but it could only have one source. They should go to their people on Sunday as from another world, for a visible minister all the week means an invisible Christ on Sunday, while an invisible minister during the week—invisible because in prayerful study—often means a visible Christ on the Sabbath. In some way or another, more time must be found for the cultivation of the minister's own heart. He must find more time for the devotional reading of the Bible. The Bible is like a shy friend, it does not give its best to the hurried and superficial man; it gives its best to the devout and lingering heart.

CONVERSION AND HOLINESS.

In the evening the subject before the Conference was the all-important topic of "Preaching to Produce Conversion and Holiness." Dr. Newton Marshall, New Barnet, remarked that regeneration, of which conversion and holiness are the two main aspects, is the great religious fact. Through all the changes of theologies and philosophies during twenty centuries, the fact of regeneration was the one immutability; and whatever might be the modifications which our view of the world and God had undergone, during the recent discussions occasioned by scientific discoveries, on this one point the ancient faith had shown itself impregnable—conversion was still real and holiness an experience.

One of the choicest utterances of the whole conference was an address by Prof. Walter Hackney, M.A., of the Pastors' College, on "The Cross in Our Experience." No brief survey could do it justice, and no words could describe the blessing it brought. Many felt like Mr. Campbell, who said it marked a crisis in his life.

Already the revival has begun. The 210 ministers are going back to village and town, north and south, east and west, to carry the living water and teach their people to pray, "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

The Regulation of Vice.

THREE years ago abolitionists and regulationists met together to discuss face to face the great problem of licensed vice on the Continent of Europe, and in other parts of the world. A great Congress was then held at Brussels, at which representatives of most of the great powers were present. Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, the leading English specialist, gave a speech of half-an-hour in favour of abolition; while Prof. Fournier, head of the French regulation system, made many startling admissions as to its failure from a scientific point of view.

A second congress of a similar character has just been held in the same city, with still more remarkable results in the direction of what abolitionists believe to be the cause of national righteousness. The following countries were represented:—England, France, Germany, Italy, Russia, Austria, Hungary, Spain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Greece, Servia, Bulgaria, Roumania, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Japan, China, Persia, the United States, Brazil, Mexico, Chili, and the Congo Free State. Three years ago at the first Congress two brave ladies were present. Their number was increased to fifteen on this occasion, some of them winning much applause from the audience by their oratory and clear reasoning.

ADVANCE ABOLITION!

The Congress has gone extraordinarily in favour of abolition. On the first day the head of the French delegation, who as such was given the place of honour in the Congress, Dr. Gailleton, the medical professor of the University of Lyons, took the place of the great Professor Fournier—absent through illness. He definitely ranged himself on the side of the abolitionists, and said several times that the system was "illusory," and worth "nothing," "absolutely nothing." The young Dr. Gaucher, the greatest of the rising generation of French medical men on this subject, also came out strongly on the abolitionist side, and signed and energetically supported a resolution proposed by Professor Landouzy, another eminent French specialist, proposing the abandonment of regulation. The extreme importance of this will be seen when it is stated that Dr. Gaucher has just been appointed chief of the Hôpital St. Louis in place of Prof. Fournier—retired on account of the age limit. The young doctor is thus in what has hitherto been considered the highest professorial chair in Europe on this subject. The editor of L'Independance Belge states that Dr. Gaucher's attitude may be considered as a characteristic index of the anti-regulationist revolution which is taking place in the French medical profession.

The Brussels paper Le Petit Bleu stated that throughout the Congress the two camps of the regulationists and the abolitionists vied with each other in declaring that regulation as it exists is "insufficient, and even bad." The most that the regulationist party could do to oppose the abolitionist resolution of Landouzy and Gaucher was, in the person of Dr. Le Pileur, to propose that the regulation system required not to be abolished but to be profoundly modified. Neither resolution was carried, the rules requiring that a resolution of the Congress should be unanimous, the time for which has hardly come yet.

TESTIMONY FROM MANY LANDS.

Three years ago Professor Stuart said that the dawn of abolitionist principles had touched the tops of the mountains of the regulationists. We can surely now say that it is halfway down their sides. A thoughtful Brussels lawyer, accustomed carefully to weigh his words, said that he considered that regulation would probably disappear in France and Italy within the next five years, and in Germany and Russia a few years afterwards. Another eminent adherent to the abolitionist cause is Professor Santoliquido, the Inspector-General of Public Health in Italy, who has re-organised the service, and who read a brilliantly-written discourse at the Congress, in which he emphatically declared himself against regulation. Dr. Sturmer, Councillor of State of St. Petersburg, and delegate of the Russian Government, although still a regulationist, said that abolition was bound to come with the progress of moral enlightenment.

A number of doctors who three years ago were cynically regulationist, now say that their minds are on the balance on the subject. Several of the most eminent doctors who in times past have utterly ignored the masculine factor in the social evil, have on this occasion spoken in the strongest manner of the importance of effective measures against seducers and souteneurs, and of the importance of the education of young men in right principles. A resolution was unanimously carried on these lines, drafted by Prof. Neisser, a leading regulationist, and proposed by M. Minod, the secretary of the International Abolitionist Federation, that "it is necessary above everything to teach young men that not only are chastity and continence not injurious, but also that these virtues are most desirable from the medical point of view."

LETTERS FROM MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

I have the great privilege of sending day by day an account of the Congress to Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, and receiving in return letters from her. Before the Congress Mrs. Butler wrote:—"There are waiting souls both in England and abroad who have agreed to meet daily in spirit before the Throne about this event, and the answer is sure, in what form or when we know not." Later Mrs. Butler writes:—"It is strengthening to faith to see the slowly rising harvest from seed sown long ago, and to note the hand of God in all and the power of His Spirit."

A pamphlet circulated at the Congress sneered at abolition as having been brought about in England by "Quakers, several kinds of Methodists, and the Salvation Army, who, together with some Church of England dignitaries, met under the leadership of Mrs. Butler at a great prayer meeting in Exeter Hall." Other regulationists said that abolitionists had nothing to do with the change in public opinion, but that it is the advance of scientific knowledge that is destroying regulation.

Other extracts may be given from Mrs. Butler's letters as follows:—"It is a grand thing that the old wicked system is judged and condemned by its former advocates, and even if for a time there are movements in favour of compromise, still we have immense encouragement, and can look forward to any fresh error withering up, as the confidence in the old Police des Mœurs has withered up."

A MARVELLOUS RESULT.

Mrs. Butler humorously says that the letters have made her "feel like the Duke of Wellington's old war horse, who, confined in a peaceful paddock in his old age, felt his old soul fired anew as he heard a military band in the distance, and endeavoured to leap the gate of his field." Again, "The result of the Congress is really marvellous, and should greatly increase our faith, for 'the Spirit of God moves (and is now moving) on the face of the waters'—the dark and muddy waters—and slowly but surely we are coming to the day when the command will go forth, 'Let there be light.'"

Y.M.C.A. Forward Movement.

Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN at Exeter Hall.

IT has been a cause of joy to many friends of former years to come into contact with Rev. G. Campbell Morgan during his present visit to this country. His addresses in various parts of London have attracted much notice, and have been appreciated by Christian workers. At the Exeter Hall centre of the Y.M.C.A. the burden of the untouched mass of young men in the West-End has been weighing more heavily than ever on many hearts. With a view to a forward movement in the direction of an ingathering, advantage has been taken of Mr. Campbell Morgan's presence to set out on this by a special rally of the Christian young men. With this object in view, the first of a series of four addresses was given on Monday evening. The audience, composed of men only, evidently full of power for active service, fulfilled the most sanguine expectations in point of numbers; and the gathering was marked by every sign of determination to dare and do something more than ever before in the service of the Lord. The responsiveness of the hearers proved that the message took hold.

REST IN THE REVEALED FATHER.

Reading Matthew xi. 25-30, the speaker explained that while he quite understood that he was speaking to those who had heard the Gospel call and had been obedient thereto, he wished them to come back and consider it closely, believing that in the full understanding there would come a larger sense of what the lives of Christian men ought to be. The Lord addresses his Father in verses 25 and 26, and turns to His hearers in verse 27. What is the rest spoken of in verse 28? The rest of the revealed Father, which man never knows until he finds God. Christ is the way to the Father, the revealer of the Father.

It was shown from the text (1) that Jesus bases His invitation upon a great philosophy of human life, upon a fact from which there never can be and never is any escape; (2) that while He bases it upon a common fact, He yet divides humanity into two separate and opposing camps; and (3) that then He calls men out of the false camp into the true.

The burden which every man bears is his responsibility—the aim, the motive, the reason of his life. Every man wears a yoke under which he attempts to fulfil that aim. Beneath all he is self-governed, unless he is God-governed. What is the burden of Christ, which is "light"? "I do always the things that please Him." The key-note of the music is, "I delight to do Thy will"; not, "I acquiesce."

SIMPLICITY INSTEAD OF COMPLEXITY.

The one motive of Christ's life was to do the will of God. What was the reason of His tarrying so long in Nazareth? That was God's will for Him. Why did He go into the wilderness to be tempted? It was God's will. It was His Father's will that He should gather the children round Him. Always that, and only that. The life of Jesus was not complex. It was simple. He had one reason for everything.

How does He give this rest? By so revealing the Father that you will begin to serve Him. Why is it that men do not serve God? I am not talking of the outside crowd. Oh! how many Christian men are living a self-centred life. The very last expression of it is the attempt to worship self in serving God. They want to be known as soul-winners. Why is it men are trying to carry that heavy burden, instead of the light and easy one of doing God's will? It is because they do not know Him. They know something of Him, but if they knew Him as He is, they would quit every occupation in life but that of pleasing God; and they would express that in every detail of their lives.

It is a hard thing to be a Christian and to keep carrying the burden of self—not to be out and out for Christ. The easy thing is to live the life based upon simplicity. When a man comes there his life will drift out into the calm, strong, peaceful river of the will of God, and that will bring him into the sea of infinite rest—the very bosom of the Father.

Baptist Students' Fraternal.

THE annual conference of the Baptist Students' Fraternal Union took place at Manchester College last week. The proceedings opened on Thursday evening with a reception at Union Chapel (Dr. McLaren's), when Revs. J. E. Roberts, Principal Marshall, Samuel Pearson, and Walter Wynn welcomed the delegates, numbering nearly forty, and representing seven Baptist Colleges.

Among the items of business dealt with on Friday morning was a proposal for a Baptist Students' "Settlement" in London. The matter was eventually referred to the executive for further consideration, the hope being that ere long a settlement may be established, either in London, or some other large city, where the students can go into residence, and, while helping in home mission work, give such practical experience of Christian effort as will be of incalculable benefit to them in their subsequent ministry.

On the Friday evening "The Needs and Claims of South Africa" were brought forward by the hon. sec. of the Baptist South African, Colonial, and Missionary Aid Society. Some of the facts were very striking; in the Orange River Colony, a territory nearly as large as England, there is only one Baptist Church. It was pointed out that the establishment of Colonial churches means also the promotion of missionary work among the natives, nearly every congregation becoming a centre of such activity.

On Saturday morning a deeply interesting report was given on the "Village Preaching Campaign." During the long vacation sixty-five students, representing nine Baptist colleges, took part in this effort. In apostolic fashion, they went forth two and two; some students fulfilled second engagements. Altogether thirty-four missions were held in England, two in Scotland, and one in Wales. Much prayer attended the effort, the mission being preceded in some places by a week of prayer. Tract distribution, systematic visitation, and other means were employed to awaken interest. The reports were full of encouragement and promise as to results. In one mission forty cases of conversion were recorded. In another, five young people who were brought to Christ on the first night of the mission were among the most earnest helpers in bringing their companions to the meetings on succeeding days. In making their reports, the students testified to the benefit they had themselves received from the work.

It was decided to plan a similar campaign next year, when it is expected that a much larger number of places will be visited.

The conference was brought to a close by the observance of the Lord's Supper, when the Principal of Manchester College presided, and an address was given by Rev. C. H. Watkins, of Coupland Street Baptist Church.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

A NUMBER of suggestive points have been submitted to the secretaries in India for discussion, with a view to drafting a programme of endeavour which shall result in a fuller attainment of the purpose and aim of the Association. It is hoped that a system of distribution of Christian literature will eventually be organized for reaching the thousands of young men whose occupations prevent them from attending the ministrations of the Gospel on Sundays. Hundreds of these young men are from the home country, and being out of the reach of pastors and missionaries, their only companion the coolie labourer, no wonder that their moral standard is often lowered.

The South-Eastern District of associations, at their last conference, suggested that the branches should arrange a series of inter-visitations, and the first of these took place on September 10, when Eastbourne visited Tunbridge Wells. The Tunbridge Wells friends were strengthened by the presence of some Tonbridge friends. Mr. Walter Langton, J.P., presided, and explained the object of the gathering, which was addressed by the secretary and several members of the Eastbourne Association on "What the Y.M.C.A. has done for me" and "How can I benefit the Y.M.C.A." A profitable evening was spent.

Mr. Meyer's Itinerary.

Llandrindod Wells.

AT this place on Saturday I began that special mission in which I believe I have been called to labour during the next few months.

Throughout last week the affairs at Christ Church engrossed a good deal of thought, that all might be ready for the work of my beloved friend, Dr. Pierson. He is undertaking the public services of Sunday and Thursday, but I am still responsible for the direction and maintenance of the great network of our Christian agencies.

On Saturday, with a feeling of lonesomeness, I travelled to Llandrindod, hardly liking to leave behind my noble church, with its glorious mission, and wondering what was awaiting me among the Welsh hills. But as I stepped over the boat side I heard that Voice, which one cannot mistake, saying, "Come."

The results have been better than I dared to ask or think. Again and again, for four memorable meetings—Saturday, 8 p.m.; Sunday, 3 and 8 p.m.; and Monday, 10 a.m.—the great Albert Hall has been filled with people, including many ministers, from all parts of England and Wales. I have no doubt that the Master has spoken by me, and that perhaps hundreds of lives will be helped and blessed for all coming time; and if this is (as I believe it will prove to be) but the first droppings of the showers of blessing, my cup will indeed run over, and I shall be more than compensated for what is a considerable giving up.

I have been invited by the Editor to give in this way some leaves out of my diary, that I may keep touch with many friends in all parts, who pray for me. It is my earnest desire to obtrude myself as little as possible, and that I may only be a sweet savour of Christ.

After conducting two quiet days this week at Harrogate, and speaking at Nottingham, I start for Copenhagen, September 18, &c.; Christiania, September 24; Sweden, September 29.

F. B. Meyer.

Irish Notes.

AN American gentleman, Mr. Hay, of Philadelphia, has shown his love for the parish in which he was born by making, at a cost of several thousand pounds, various additions and improvements in the church at Carrigart, co. Donegal, of which Rev. Martin Vanee is rector. It is not often that Irishmen who have become prosperous abroad remember their own country in the munificent manner in which Mr. Hay has acted.

A Methodist new church, costing £6,000, has been built in Abbey Street, Dublin, on the site of a former Methodist church, which witnessed many revivals, and has been opened for public worship by Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of the Leeds Methodist Mission.

The British Association met in Belfast last week for the third time in all its history, and was largely attended by scientific people from almost all parts of the world. On Sunday, in connection with the Association, religious services were held in several churches in the city, and were largely attended.

An English friend has offered £1,000 to the Committee of the Central Mission, Belfast, of which Rev. R. M. Ker is the superintendent, in order to liquidate the building debt of £3,000 still hanging over Grosvenor Hall, the headquarters of the Mission, provided that the Committee undertake to clear off the balance, and this the Committee are resolved to do.

It is to be regretted that in many parts of Ireland at present Roman Catholics are showing a very intolerant spirit. For example, in Sligo the Board of Guardians have decided to place the workhouse under the control and supervision of the nuns; and in Kilkenny, when a clerk was needed a week or so ago, the Board of Guardians resolved not to elect anyone who was not a member of the United Irish League. Further, at the recent half-yearly meeting of the Great Southern and Western Railway, a Roman Catholic shareholder complained that only two of the most lucrative positions in the company's service were held by Roman Catholics, as if religious profession was to be the chief test on which such positions should be assigned. Moreover, the pet names for Protestants in some Roman Catholic publications is "bigots" and "sourfaces." Thus straws show how the wind blows.

About Harvest.

WHAT can a townsman say about harvest? If he cannot say much that country folk would regard as particularly to the point, he can at least tell what he has seen and heard, and say what he thinks! Certain it is that harvest is not simply and solely a matter of rural interest. It is, in fact, an ordinance of God, fraught with blessing for all people, in all lands, and for all time. Far away in the early history of our race the promise was given, "While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest . . . shall not cease" (Gen. viii. 22). This great word was spoken to Noah, and, like other promises of Jehovah, it "standeth for ever." What a glorious assurance have we here! Harvest, then, concerns us all, and even those who see nothing of what goes on when the corn is gathered in year by year, benefit by the goodness and bounty of God, who "giveth food to all flesh; for His mercy endureth for ever" (Psa. xxxvi. 25).

Well, though a townsman, I have often witnessed harvest operations, and had that pleasure again this year. I saw the reaping machines taken to the fields, and watched while, with steady action, the corn was cut, and then thrown back to the ground tied up in small bundles. Afterwards I saw the bundles piled up into sheaves; and in due course the entire produce of the field was stacked with a view to threshing on some future day. All this was done by quite a few workmen, and in a much more "humdrum" way than was the case in years gone by, before the employment of reaping and other machines that are now so common.

Though we may never see the old times back again, we cannot but recall with pleasure the happy days when men, women, and children, in many cases the entire populations of villages, turned into the fields to gather what God had given by dew and rain, light and heat, and the other forces of the earth. There was nothing dull about harvest in those days; and many were the old English customs associated with the season. You may have read of the practice of decorating with flowers and ribbons the last sheaves taken from the fields; you may have wished you could have been present to join in the glad processions that followed the "hock-cart," around which the labourers and their wives and children ran carrying green boughs, bundles of corn, handkerchiefs and flags. There was laughter and song all the time, and the musical talent of the village was brought out as the merry party sang:—

Harvest home, harvest home!
We have ploughed, we have sowed,
We have reaped, we have mowed,
We have brought home every load,
Hip, hip, hip—harvest home!

I must not say any more about "the good old days." The days in which we live are also good, and in some respects better than those of old. If what I saw in the fields this year did not specially remind me of the ancient "joy of harvest," yet it afforded visible proof of the greatness and goodness of God as shown in the wonderful provision which He unfailingly makes for the maintenance of life:—"Thou visitest the earth and waterest it. . . . Thou preparest them corn when Thou hast so provided for it. . . . Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness" (Psa. lxv. 9-11).

I noticed many thistles and other worthless things among the corn as it lay in bundles on the field. These grew with the corn, and were cut down at the same time. When, in due course, the farmer deals with the crop he will reject all that is worthless. The parable which our Lord told regarding the tares is founded on this universal practice: "Let both grow together until the harvest; and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn" (Matt. xiii. 30).

In some cases I noticed that the harvest work was delayed because the farmer had not got enough labourers around him. The men of past years had died or gone away, and their children had left the village to find work in towns or other distant places. Machinery had been brought in to do, by the help of a few men, work that could have found employment for many; but yet operations were delayed. Here was an illustration of our Lord's appeal for workers in the great Gospel field: "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest" (Luke x. 2).

Yet another truth was suggested: When men are too few, farmers can bring in machinery. In Christ's harvest field this cannot be done. Missionaries must be living flesh and blood—men and women filled with the Holy Spirit — not wooden or iron instruments.

We are already hearing of Harvest Thanksgiving services. Let them be joyous; "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good!" The Joy of Harvest (Isa. ix. 3) in Old Testament times was a praiseful thing:—

The God of harvest praise;
Hands, hearts, and voices raise,
With one accord.
From field to garner throng,
Bearing your sheaves along;
And in your harvest song
Praise ye the Lord.

Again, let Harvest Home remind us of the very solemn truth: "The harvest is the end of the age, and the reapers are the angels (Matt. xiii.).

I have spoken of the Assurance of Harvest (Gen. viii. 22), and mentioned the Harvest Call, as expressed in the words of Christ—"The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few" (Luke x. 2). I hope boys and girls who "pray the Lord of the harvest" will ponder very seriously the words of the Call. If we earnestly ask God to "send forth labourers," we are likely to hear his voice if, speaking in our hearts, it should say "Go"! God grant that some Bible Searchers may become Searchers for Souls in the great harvest field! J. W. T.

A Flourishing Band of Hope.—The Band of Hope connected with Hamond Square Sunday School, Hoxton, continues to show signs of increasing vigour. In its twenty-first year the society has the exceptionally large membership of 944, and to these may be added the seventy-six members of the adult temperance society. It is gratifying to learn that many who were associated with this work in its early days, and whose business or circumstances have compelled them to leave the district, are labouring in the same cause elsewhere. Needful alterations are being effected in the schoolroom, involving an expenditure of about £40, which workers are unable to meet without the additional assistance. The superintendent is Mr. J H. Adcock, 7, Shacklewell Lane, Kingsland, N.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, September 21, 1902.

"Unto all the Fulness of God"
(Eph. iii. 14-21).

"UNTO" might be rendered "into," as though our nature might be dipped into the mighty ocean of God's being and become filled to overbrimming. You cannot put an ocean into a cup, but you can put a cup deep into an ocean. You cannot put the furnace, at white heat, into an iron bar, but you can plunge an iron bar into a furnace, until it is saturated with the glowing heat. A Christian was once asked whether his God were a great or a little God, and he replied, "My God is so great that he can fill space, but so little that he will condescend to fill my heart." Will you let the tiny bucket of your nature into the fulness of His all-sufficiency?

This is the best answer to all the appeals of the world. They may prevail well enough with worldlings, whose natures are an aching emptiness and void. These would fain fill themselves with the husks on which the swine feed. Anything—anything to satisfy the gnawing hunger, which is eating out their inwards. But Solomon sums up the verdict of all the children of this world in the dreary moan of Ecclesiastes, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." "Come children," says Thackeray at the end of his great story, "let us shut up the box, and put back the puppets, the show is played out; all is vanity."

I love that story of the old peasant woman, who saw the sea for the first time, when she had attained to a very considerable age. "Thank God," was her exclamation, "I have at last seen something of which there is enough." So we may say, as we contemplate God's mighty nature, like an ocean in its expanse, fulness, and depth. Let us seek to be dipped into it, let it fill us up to our full measure, and we shall thirst no more, neither hunger any more; the world's fascination will be lost on us, we shall be too full to desire anything beside.

We should consider this clause in relation to what precedes and to what follows.

What Precedes.—The Father, who as much loves to fill His children with good things as earthly fathers do; next the wealth of His glory, which was manifested when He raised Christ from the dead; next the strong heart, strong to suffer, to wait, to do, made strong by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; next the indwelling of Christ. This is the goal which we should make for, since it is the heart of all religion. The religion of most people is outside of them, and a matter of strife and effort. They resemble the woman who was ever coming to the well and letting her pitcher down into its cool depths, lifting it up, and carrying it home on her head. But our Lord came to reveal in us a fountain of life, joy, aspiration, which should rise up naturally and powerfully towards God. Have you learnt that secret, young sisters and brothers? Have you acquired that art of the second breath, which inhales to the bottom of the lungs? Does your religion arise from the constant indwelling and uprising within you of the Comforter, who reveals not Himself, but Christ Jesus, the Lord?

When Christ indwells by the Spirit the heart is filled with love. It begins to live (1 Cor. xiii.). The King of Love is enthroned within, and His glorious court fills the inner palace, and passes out from the gateways of the soul. And when we are filled with love we are quick to perceive and understand love. We climb with it in its height towards God. We descend with it in its depth towards man. We expand with it in its breadth to take in people whom we should have excluded from its scope. We travel with it in its mighty journeyings of patient long-suffering. Then we know the love that fills Christ's heart, and there is no barrier then to the fulness of God.

As to what follows.—When the Spirit works in us, we can ask much, but think more. But God is able to do more than our furthest, abundantly more, exceeding abundantly more. And, therefore, He is able to plunge us into His depths, and keep us submerged, and fill us again and again. Trust Him—reckon on Him—for this. F. B. M.

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, September 28, 1902.

Review Lesson. Golden Text (Deut. viii. 18).

PLACES and time. From Egypt to Canaan, forty years; Red Sea to Sinai, three months; Sinai nearly a year; to Kadesh Barnea, eleven days (within three days' journey of Canaan); Kadesh, "many days;" wilderness of Zin, thirty-eight years; plains of Moab by Jordan (Num. xxxiii. 1-48).

Why not guided northward? (Ex. xiii. 17, 18).

Why to Sinai? (Ex. xix. 17; Deut. v. 2; Ex. xxiv. 7-12).

Why turned back to Zin? (Heb. iii. 18, 19; 1 Cor. x. 5-11).

People.

Israel came out from Egypt a vast company of rescued slaves, born and reared in bondage, unorganized, untrained, and mostly untaught. The wilderness was to be the training ground wherein this great multitude (over 2,000,000) were to be transformed into a nation to serve God (Ex. xix. 6). To this end they had—

1. Jehovah for God, Guide, Defender (Ex. vi. 7; Deut. i. 30).
2. Moses. Prophet, leader, lawgiver.
3. Aaron and his sons. Priests and spiritual teachers.
4. Tabernacle for worship of God (Ex. xxv. 22).
5. Laws to regulate religious, social, and domestic duties.

What was lacking? Faith in God and love.

The people had all sheltered under the blood of the Passover lamb (Ex. xii. 23); entered into covenant with Jehovah (Ex. xix. 5, 8, xxiv. 8; Deut. iv. 10); but of Joshua and Caleb alone was it said, "they followed the Lord wholly" to the end.

Circumstances.

Promised freedom from disease (on condition Ex. xv. 26); strength and clothes preserved (Deut. viii. 4); bread and water sure, and sustaining; enemy under "the mighty waters" (Ex. xv. 10). Land of promise within easy distance; God in the midst of them (Num. v. 3); what delayed and what barred their entrance into Canaan? Unbelief (Psa. cvi. 24) and stiffneckedness (self-will) (Deut. ix. 6, 7, 13). Had they yielded themselves to the Lord in the obedience of love, as in Deut. xxx. 19, 20, He would have moulded their future according to His glorious plans for them (Ex. xix. 5, 6), with the blessings of Deut. xxviii. 1-14.

Christ in the Lessons.

"The law was given by Moses; grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." "Beginning at Moses . . . Jesus expounded unto them in all the Scripture the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv. 27).

1. Manna, a type of Christ. He that eateth (John vi. 38) of this bread shall live for ever.

2. and 3. The Law. His righteousness in the remission of sins—The justifier of him who believeth in Jesus (Rom. iii. 20-28).

4. Man's proneness to sin and need of an intercessor. If any man sin we have an Advocate (1 John ii. 1).

5. The Tabernacle in every particular a type of Christ.

6. Only through the blood of Christ's atonement dare we approach God (John xiv. 6).

7. The ark and the cloud, types of Christ. Guide (1 Thess. iii. 11); light (John viii. 12; xiv. 1).

8. Many are shut out from the full blessing in Christ to-day by unbelief (Heb. iii. 12; iv. 3).

9. Sin, death. There is life for a look at the crucified One (John iii. 16).

10. The Lord Jesus anointed (Luke iii. 22). To reveal the Father (Matt. xi. 27).

11. Believe with thy heart, confess with thy mouth (Rom. x. 7-11).

12. "Jesus, my Shepherd, Brother, Friend,
My Prophet, Priest and King;
My Lord, my Life, my Way, my End,
Accept the praise I bring."

"Remember the Lord thy God."

1. Remember we depend on God for food, health, life, and all spiritual and eternal blessings.

2. Remember that God alone has the right to receive our whole-hearted love and worship and obedience.

3. Remember Jesus said, "thy neigbour as thyself."

4. Remember "our heart is deceitful above all things."

5. Remember God is nigh to us, and has taught how we may draw nigh to Him through Jesus.

6. Remember we dare not enter the Presence of God by our own works; only by the merits of Christ.

7. Remember to call on God in the morning and at evening for His guidance and protection.

8. Remember to try and see the Lord above all the dangers and difficulties of life, and go where He directs in faith.

9. Remember it is only Jesus who can save us from our sins (Isa. liii. 5).

10. Remember to trust the Lord for all the future, and rest in His faithfulness and His promises.

11. Remember we have no excuse for neglecting salvation because we have an open Bible and God hears prayer.

12. Remember to be ready for the call of God whenever it comes. Those who remember Him in all their way are sure He will remember to be with them in Death (Psa. xxiii. 4).

Remember to pray that your whole spirit, soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Thess. v. 23).

Lessons.

To guard against pampering the appetite, it often leads to great sin, murmuring, covetousness, greed, dishonesty, disease, drunkenness, and vice.

Seek to win others into the narrow way which leads to life. God's promises are, "Yea and amen in Christ Jesus," for your friend also.

Seek the guidance of the Lord in early life and He will never fail you, nor forsake you in age (Moses 120—Isa. xlvi. 4; Joshua 110—Deut. xxxi. 8).

The power of prayer (Ex. xvii. 11, xvi. 25, xxii. 27, xxxii. 32; Num. xxi. 7; Deut. ix. 18, 19, 26, x. 10), "Lord, teach us to pray," "Increase our faith."

Our Intercessor "ever liveth" (Heb. vii. 25).

"The Lord will provide" (Rom. viii. 32, with Matt. vi. 30, 32) "these things" (33 and 19). "Man shall not live by bread alone" (Luke iv. 3).

The Holy Spirit will shed abroad in our hearts the love of God (Rom. v. 5) if we seek Him, and obedience in life will be possible then for (Rom. xiii. 10) "fulfilling of the law."

Illustrations of S.S. Lesson.

Manna from above (July 6).

On poultry farms, where birds are raised for show purposes, it is usual to place the food for the fowls in trays high above their heads. By this means the birds are taught to keep their heads well erect, and they are compelled to look upward when they desire to feed. The manna which God sent in the wilderness, coming from above, should have caused the Israelites to look to heaven from whence came their help; and the blessings we are to-day receiving at the hand of the Lord should have the effect of keeping our thoughts centred on our Heavenly Father, the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

The House of the Lord (August 3).

After the serious illness of our present King, in 1871, Queen Alexandra, then Princess of Wales, expressed her thankfulness to God for the Prince's recovery, by placing a lectern in the church at which they worshipped. An inscription was added, and ran as follows: "To the glory of God. A thankoffering for His mercy, 14th December, 1871.—Alexandra. When I was in trouble, I called upon the Lord, and He heard me." A thanksgiving sermon was also preached from the words, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the House of the Lord." When the Tabernacle was erected it was the place wherein prince and peasant might call in their trouble to Jehovah, and to-day, in all our sorrows and our joys, we may still enter the courts of the Lord, and there, through the mediation of Christ Jesus, have free access to the throne of God's mercy.

Fearing to go forward (August 24).

When Sir Colin Campbell entered the Army he was very fearful of the first engagement. A captain, seeing his trepidation, took young Campbell by the hand and led him up and down the ranks in a very exposed position. This restored his confidence, and many years afterwards Sir Colin said that it had been a great kindness to take him by the hand and teach him to face danger. When the spies of Israel differed in their reports it was because in one case God's hand inspired confidence, while the men who feared to go forward were those who relied merely on the arm of Israel and failed to realize that the almighty arm of Jehovah was leading them.

The Lord is thy Life (Sept. 14).

In Trinidad there are small oysters to be found that grow upon trees, or rather cluster round the roots of trees, in the river mouths. The little bivalves are so firmly attached that it is usual to saw down the trees in order to obtain the oysters, and such an attachment is typical of the ideal life of a Christian. He should, as the lesson indicates, love the Lord his God, and obey His voice, that he may cleave unto Him. God, who is the source of all life, will indeed be his life and the light of his days. As the strength of the tree is placed at the disposal of the oyster, so is the omnipotence of God offered to all who will trust Him.

Evangelists at Work.

The Australian Revival.

PRAYER precedes revival. For some thirteen years past the incessant prayer of God's people in Australia has been, "Lord, send a big revival." A band of praying folk, first brought together eleven years since, have met weekly ever since, offering the same petition. Gradually the longing desire became intensified until the "prayer chains" were organized, which had so much to do with the glorious "big revival" which is now being experienced. This familiar but fascinating story was retold by Mrs. Warren on Monday last at the Noon Meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. Mrs. Warren reminded her hearers that the daily meetings for prayer in Melbourne began in thirty homes, and that, for seven weeks before the Simultaneous Mission started in that city, they had extended to 2,000 homes, and were attended by no fewer than 40,000 people, the burden of whose cry was still "Lord, send a big revival." A holy hunger for the things of God became manifest on every hand, and even before the Mission began souls were won. The effect of the Mission upon many districts was remarkable. Theatres were neglected, and actresses sought the Way of Life. The police said, "There is nothing for us to do." At fifty centres the Word was preached with power, and the tents and buildings proved all too small to accommodate the crowds seeking admission. Mrs. Warren concluded by urging the formation of "prayer chains" in England.

Hobart, Tasmania.

The departure from Hobart of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander for Melbourne, en route for Ballarat, was followed the same evening by a large and enthusiastic gathering of Christian workers and converts in Melville Street Church. The city and suburban ministers, who had identified themselves with and so greatly helped forward the mission, together with lay representatives of the churches which had taken part, were present in force. A spirit of Christian unity and concord characterized the whole of the proceedings. Rev. H. Worrall, chairman of the Executive Committee, in an animated address, recapitulated the events and the results, as far as known, of the revival. A large number of converts gave brief, bright, and emphatic personal testimony to the blessing they had received in the mission. It was decided to hold at least a quarterly gathering of Christian people of all churches, to maintain the spirit of fellowship recently so largely and happily developed, and to take into consideration matters affecting their common interests as members of the household of faith.

Ballarat.

The meetings at Ballarat attracted vast audiences. One day, the Southern Cross says, "was observed as a day of special prayer and fasting. A special service, lasting for two hours, was held at ten a.m., in the Dana Street Lecture Hall, some 600 people being present. Rev. Dr. Torrey, assisted by a number of ministers and Christian workers, presided, and the proceedings consisted alternately of prayer and testimony. The midday meeting at the theatre was the largest of the noon gatherings. Dr. Torrey gave an address on "Why I Believe the Bible."

One of the most striking gatherings at Ballarat was a service for children. Dr. Torrey announced as his subject, "What a child can do," basing his remarks on the story of the little captive maiden who waited on Naaman's wife. At the close of a stirring appeal the missioner asked all between sixteen and twenty-one years who were willing to declare for Christ to come forward, but none responded. Then he asked those between twelve and sixteen, fully 200 at once eagerly accepting his invitation. After a pause a further number, including several older girls, came out. The inquiry-rooms were opened, and a steady stream of young people pressed into them, and were dealt with by ministers and Christian workers. The number of those who publicly declared themselves henceforth on the Lord's side was estimated, after careful thought, at over 1,000.

Evening meetings were held in the Alfred Hall and the theatre. On the concluding night, at the former building, Dr. Torrey spoke with power. He invited those still out of Christ to accept Him, and several rose in response. Dr. Torrey had then to leave for the theatre, Mr. Alexander remaining in charge at the Hall. "During some pathetic singing, several came forward, and this continued until there were over 100 in the front seats. The fervour of the gathering increased. 'When we all get to heaven' was sung with great energy, accompanied with the waving of handkerchiefs. Several hymns were then asked for from the body of the hall, and sung with much energy. Probably such a gathering has no parallel in the annals of the Golden City."

Meantime, Dr. Torrey, on arriving at the theatre, found it packed with a dense and enthusiastic crowd. The doors had been opened at 6.15, and a steady stream of humanity poured in, until at ten minutes to eight the place was so packed that the doors had to be closed. Dr. Torrey's farewell address was on the theme, "What it Costs Not to be a Christian." A number stood up to signify their acceptance of the Saviour. An after-meeting was held, at which Dr. Torrey gave a telling address to converts. "So ends the record of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander in Ballarat, as far as chronicling the mission meetings is concerned; but who shall set forth their far-reaching results?"

Sydney.

A fourteen days' mission was commenced in the Town Hall, Sydney, on August 5, by Dr. Torrey, again accompanied by Mr. Alexander. At the initial service, the immense building was filled with an audience of at least 3,000 persons.

The meeting was marked by earnest attention, and Dr. Torrey spoke with power on "God is Love," dwelling, in the course of his address, on "God's gifts." "God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in His Son. He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life. Eternal life! Think of it! What a gift! One of our rich men's daughters over in America was married some time ago, and her father, wanting to show his love to her, gave her dollars equivalent to £2,000,000. What a bridal gift! But that is nothing to God's gift of eternal life. Two million pounds would not buy a single moment of life. Cornelius Vanderbilt, the wealthy millionaire, lay dying. He would have given every dollar he had for eternal life; but his money was of no use. But, friends, think of the gift of eternal life that God offers to every man and woman in this building who will take Christ to-night."

The mission proceeded amid many tokens of Divine blessing.

Honor Oak Baptist Church, S.E.

A six days' mission has been held at Honor Oak Baptist Church, Forest Hill, S.E., by Mr. W. Olney and Mr. F. Spencer Johnson. It has been a very gracious season, in which much blessing has rested, on the young more especially. By special invitation many working men assembled on the last evening, and it is evident that the Spirit of God touched many hearts. The graciousness and intense earnestness of the missioners has been a great stimulus to the church itself.

Morison Cumming.

Rotherhithe Free Church, S.E.

For the past four Sundays Mr. R. S. Bradbrook has conducted the services at Rotherhithe Free Church, S.E. (Pastor Thos. Richardson's). The visit was much blessed to God's people as well as to the unsaved. The "Men's Own" was addressed each Sunday afternoon by Mr. Bradbrook; although many of the men are away on their holidays, some 700 to 800 gathered in the Rotherhithe Town Hall to listen to the earnest Gospel preaching and singing. Several trophies have been won, and it is believed that the good seed will speedily yield a harvest of souls. At the request of the Gospel Temperance Society Mr. Bradbrook also gave a powerful lecture on "The Curse of Rotherhithe."

Tent Mission at Dunlop, N.B.

A Tent Mission has been conducted at Dunlop, Ayrshire, by Mr. Pittendrigh, of the Evangelization Society. Mr. James Wilson, hon. sec. Y.M.C.A., writes:—"The Gospel was faithfully declared. One of the meetings was addressed by a helper in the work. Souls have been led to believe the Truth, and the Lord's people to a fuller surrender to God. The unity that has its source and sustenance from God has had itself clearly stamped on the mission. The evangelist had the privilege of preaching in the pulpits of both churches, and at the closing social meeting both ministers and the president of the Y.M.C.A. bore testimony to the faithfulness of the service rendered to God."

The Weaver Brothers at Wingate, Durham.

The Brothers Weaver have paid a second visit to Wingate to conduct a united mission of the churches under the auspices of the Free Church Council. It was at Wingate that Mr. Bewley Weaver was taken so seriously ill, and where he lay in such a critical condition for so long. Their return visit had been looked forward to with great interest. The meetings were held in the Primitive Methodist Church, and on Sundays the crowds were so great that the schoolroom, seating 500 people, was filled as well.

The meetings have exceeded the most sanguine anticipations; all classes of the community have been touched. There has been from the first meeting a spirit of enquiry, and scores of souls have been pointed to the Saviour. No undue pressure was placed upon the seekers, and it was highly encouraging to see men and women rise boldly from their seats and walk quietly into the enquiry rooms. It is too early to tabulate definite results, but the churches will no doubt be greatly strengthened as a result of the mission.

Mission to the Blind.

It having been decided to hold another Special Mission to the blind of the Metropolis, the prayer of Christian people are asked on behalf of the undertaking. The meetings will take place in October and November, and will embrace eleven centres, viz.:—Stratford, Mile End, Shoreditch, Clerkenwell, Holloway, Marlebone, Chelsea, Westminster, Lambeth, Bermondsey, and Deptford. The preachers will include Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Revs. Edwin H. Ellis, Marcus Rainsford, and others. The mission is being organized by Mr. W. Mead, superintendent of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, at the request of Miss Emery, who bears the entire expense. Nearly four thousand blind and guides were reached by a similar mission held last year, and probably a larger number will be reached this year. A free tea will be given at each centre, and some assistance afforded to needy blind persons, subject to recommendation on the part of the Society's missionaries. The names and addresses of blind persons residing in the metropolis not already known to the missionaries will be thankfully received at the office of the Society, 8, Red Lion Square, W.C., or by Mr. Mead, 95, Gurney Road, Leytonstone Road, E.

Farwig Mission, Bromley, Kent.

The Farwig Wesleyan Mission has now been carried on for just upon twenty-one years. Those responsible, feeling the importance of trying to reach the people during the summer, procured a large tent capable of accommodating over 1,500 persons.

During the last three months special services have been held. Among the speakers have been Revs. J. Tolefree Parr, John McNeill, Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, Messrs. George Clarke, Henry Thorne, W. Monro Collings, and many others. The Gospel has been sung by Madame Annie Ryall, Miss Ada Rose (Mrs. W. J. Gibbs), Mrs. Hamilton Tetley, and Mr. Armon Jones. Large crowds have assembled each week.

During the last ten days a mission has been conducted by Mr. James B. Wookey, from Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Most impressive services have been held, attended by very large congregations. The Word has been faithfully preached, and there has been much blessing. On Friday last, during the open-air procession, some excitement was caused by a man under the influence of drink being dragged along by two policemen; the same man attended the service in the tent on Sunday evening, and was among the seekers.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell in Aberdeen

The first week of the mission conducted by the American evangelists, Messrs. Williams and Maxwell, under the auspices of the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. was, in many ways, a most remarkable one. Mr. Maxwell, with his singing, won the hearts of the people right away, while Mr. Williams' earnest addresses have made a deep impression. The first meeting of the mission proper was held in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. Although this will accommodate about 1,000 people, it was quite inadequate for the great crowd that assembled, and many hundreds had to be turned away.

During the week the attendance was very large, varying from 700 to 900, and the interest so early manifested steadily grew. Bible readings were held on four afternoons, and from 200 to 300 persons were present on each occasion, and all seemed to appreciate the very practical words spoken and sung. The second Sabbath was a day of great things. At 9.30 in the morning 300 Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers gathered in the Y.M.C.A.

In the afternoon 800 men assembled to hear the Gospel in song and story. The meeting was a very impressive one, many being visibly moved, and not a few openly signifying their desire to begin a new life in Christ. The crowning event was the evangelistic meeting in the music-hall at night. Before the advertised time the spacious building was packed with an audience of 3,000 persons, and the Y.M.C.A. hall had to be requisitioned for an overflow.

Several hundreds remained to an after-meeting, late though the hour was, and many inquirers were dealt with, numbers of them professing faith in Christ. At the overflow meeting Rev. Dr. Howie, Moderator of the U.F. Church, who happened to be in the city that day, took charge, and delivered a stirring and eloquent Gospel address to the 600 or 700 people assembled, while Mr. Maxwell came from the larger meeting and sang one of his thrilling songs. A prominent feature has been the splendid support given by ministers of the various denominations. J. M.

Children's Special Service Mission.

An esteemed correspondent writes:—On returning, towards the end of August, from the Open-Air Mission Campaign in Yarmouth, where our gracious God vouchsafed many signs of blessing, I was delighted to find that Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Claxton, assisted by Mr. Dungworth, of the C.M.S., were holding C.S.S. Mission meetings on the North Shore in Ramsey, Isle of Man, besides impromptu meetings in different places, at other times in the Market-Place or in neighbouring villages or places of resort. They never seemed to weary of the delightful work, and tokens of blessing amongst the young were not wanting on every side. Many were the tender farewells of the boy and girl visitors who had to leave for school, and very tender and real were the requests made to Mr. Claxton, by the children whose hearts had been won through the meetings, to be remembered in prayer.

The testimonies of parents who accompanied their children to the meetings were worth having, for they invariably witnessed to the blessing received by the little ones, and doubtless by many a big "child" also, who heard the "sweet story of old" whilst apparently watching over their young charges. Mr. Dungworth's coloured illustrations were helpful and much appreciated by all.

The Awakening of India.

A circular letter has been recently issued by missionaries in South India, containing an earnest plea for united prayer for revival in that country:—

"The present revival in Australia, with its thousands of converts began with a persistent praying band smaller than this, and owes all its power to its securing a widening circle of united prayer. We rejoice to know that many besides this small circle are praying for definite blessing in India. At the recent Tamil convention in Palamcottah, conducted entirely by the native Christians themselves, more than a score agreed to spend an hour daily in prayer for an awakening in their own mission and in South India.

"At the recent convention in Coimbatore they spent a half night in prayer for a revival in South India, and many will be praying daily through the year. At another hill station there has been daily prayer for the same object. In one of the larger cities there has been a weekly prayer meeting for some months for such an awakening. Thus, independently of one another, and without human origin or plan, God Himself is calling us to pray. And the prayer He prompts He will answer."

Those desiring to receive a circular letter regularly in reference to this call to united prayer are requested to send their requests for prayer to G. S. Eddy, care of the Y.M.C.A., Madras.

On Doncaster Racecourse.

The evangelists of the Open-Air Mission, sixteen in number, who confronted the great enemy on Doncaster Racecourse from September 7 to 12, will assuredly never forget the time of blessing which they experienced. To the praise of God, be it related, that not a single service was without distinct and definite signs of God's presence and power, whether on the course, in the market place, or in the street.

On Sunday, September 7, besides occupying several pulpits, the company of evangelists, reinforced by many ardent local workers, held three large services at the entrance to the Racecourse. At the first of these services a burglar was arrested by the power of the Word, turned from his evil purposes, and constrained to return home to Sheffield, without accomplishing them.

The afternoon service was much larger, hundreds listening, and many anxious ones being hopefully dealt with at the close, one of whom has come boldly out on the Lord's side. The evening meeting was said by our friend Dr. Christy Wilson to be the largest open-air gathering he had ever seen in Doncaster during race week, and was continued for two hours amid deepening signs of interest.

Monday morning's service in the market place, among shows and stands, was, indeed, remarkable. Many anxious ones came forward instantly, and took "converts' cards" and marked portions of Holy Scripture.

Each forenoon a service was held in the Market Place among tipsters and gamblers, and after this the evangelist proceeded to the racecourse, where every day a service was held. One man, a backer of horses, and the son of a clergyman, having at that moment £1,200 in his pocket, was arrested by the power of God's Spirit; he accepted a Gospel, sought conversation, and gave his name and address for correspondence. He was under deep concern. A fine-looking Canadian soldier, in khaki, who had that morning come to Doncaster from a soldiers' home in London, was cut to the heart by the message of salvation, hung on the Word with deep earnestness, and at once responded before all the meeting when the anxious were invited to come forward.

Nearly 60,000 booklets were given away on the racecourse; they were in most cases willingly and even thankfully received. The evening meetings in St. Sepulchre Gate were solemn and searching times. God's Spirit was mightily at work in many hearts. Praise is surely due to Him who has heard and answered prayer during this memorable campaign.

Missions in Glasgow.

On Sabbath, September 7, Mr. Jack Cooke, the boy preacher, commenced a three weeks' mission in Glasgow, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Large posters put up beforehand having announced his coming, expectation was kindled, and on the opening day large audiences assembled to see and hear him. In the forenoon, at eleven, he preached in St. Vincent Street U.F. Church; at two p.m., in the Christian Institute, in Bothwell Street, to men only; at 3.30, in St. Andrew's large hall, and again in the same place in the evening at seven. The huge building was crammed to its utmost capacity long before the hour of opening. Again on Monday night, one of the most difficult nights of the week, as a rule, for Gospel meetings, the City Hall was packed to its fullest limits with an audience that must have numbered 3,000 people, as hundreds could only find standing room.

The results have been striking, and seem, in their largeness, to be out of all proportion to the strength of the addresses. On the Monday night, when, at the close of his address, he asked all who were "solidly converted" to stand, at least nineteen-twentieths of the audience stood, showing that if the test were reliable, the proportion of unconverted present was very small. Yet in the second meeting, to which several hundreds of people waited, about thirty, after indicating their desire to be saved by raising their hands, walked out at Master Cooke's request into a side room, where, with the help of a number of workers, they were personally dealt with about salvation. A minister of the Gospel, himself a graduate and in thorough sympathy with evangelistic work, remarked to us that he could only think of the result as showing afresh the truth of Paul's statement that God uses the weak things to confound the mighty.

Near Bridgeton Cross, about three-quarters of a mile from the City Hall, where "Jack Cooke" preaches on week nights, Rev. John McNeill is holding forth the Word of Life, and winning men for Christ. His mission also commenced on Sabbath, September 7, and is to be continued for several weeks at least. A large canvas tent had been erected for his meetings, said to be capable of holding 3,000 people, but on the Wednesday prior to the date fixed for opening the mission, the tent was blown down and temporarily wrecked. This necessitated his preaching elsewhere until the tent should be repaired and re-erected.

On the 7th he preached in Trinity U. F. Church, Charlotte Street, at 11, in Dalmarnock Road Congregational Church at 2, and in Greenhead Public Hall, near Bridgeton Cross, at night. The hall, which seats about 1,500 people, was crowded out, and hundreds had to turn away for want of room. On the two week-nights following he had large gatherings in the same place, but on the Wednesday night the tent was opened with encouraging signs, the great tent being nearly full. Besides his evening meetings, he is preaching in the public works at meal hours, and in this way in the aggregate reaching thousands of men. Sometimes he has two meetings a day; one at 1.30 and another at 2.30. On the opening night of his mission, seventeen or eighteen left their names as having received the gift of God; and as the nights have gone on many professions of faith in Christ have been made. The Spirit of God, through the preaching of the Gospel and the enthusiasm of the saints, is creating an interest in spiritual things in many a hitherto graceless soul.

In the tent in Clarendon Street, off New City Road, a work of grace is going on. Mr. Richard Hill, evangelist, is preaching nightly, and is heartily supported by the workers of St. George's Cross Tabernacle. On the Sabbath evenings the tent is crowded out, and on week nights full. Mr. Hill is preaching with much acceptance the grand old Gospel, and the Lord is setting His seal on his ministry.

Other missions are also in progress, among these being one that Mr. J. W. Moodie is conducting in the Mizpah Hall, Pitt Street, and one that Mr. William Thomson, jun., is carrying on in the Wynd U.F. Church, not to speak of others, so that it looks as if at this present moment the workers in the evangelistic field were determined by combined effort to make Glasgow flourish by the preaching of the Word.

J. C.

In connection with East Nottingham Baptist Mission Church, Herbert Street, a very fruitful fifteen days' mission has been conducted by Mr. F. Holmes, of the Evangelization Society, by which a revival has been started in the church. Many have been brought into the Saviour's kingdom.

Mr. Josiah Nix reports that in his mission work last year he conducted 318 meetings and services, had the joy of seeing 3,052 persons pass into the inquiry rooms seeking salvation, and took 4,737 temperance pledges. He commenced his mission work for the present season at Redruth on Sept. 14.

There concluded on Sunday, the 7th inst., a most interesting eight days' mission in H.M. Prison, Stafford, conducted by Captain Hanson, of the Church Army. A correspondent writes: "These annual missions in our prisons are calculated under God to be the means of solving moral and social problems in the lives of many a lawless man and woman. The missioner has full scope among the Protestant populations, and is afforded every facility in having private talks with the prisoners."

Evangelists' Engagements.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing at a convention, to be held (D.V.) at St. Ives, Hunts., Wednesday, Sept. 24.

On behalf of Gospel work during the present week at Ayr Races, conducted by members of the Open-Air Mission.

For a special mission in Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W., by Mr. Charles Lazenby, October 5-19.

For blessing on a tent mission at Bugsworth, Derbyshire, September 20-29, conducted by Mr. W. H. Holt, of the Navvy Mission Society.

For blessing on mission services to be held by Miss Rose Moore in Herefordshire during September and October amongst hop-pickers and gipsies.

For a united mission in which many East London churches are joining, to be conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness in the East London Tabernacle from September 20 to October 1.

Personalia.

British friends of Mr. Ira D. Sankey will hear with regret that he is now suffering from nervous overstrain, brought on through his recent arduous work of speaking and singing at crowded meetings in the States. His medical adviser is hopeful of an early recovery.

Rev. Malcolm MacGregor, D.D., of Canada and the United States, is open for evangelistic engagements. He possesses wide experience, and has excellent references. Address: Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney Road, London, E., where Dr. MacGregor is supplying the place of Pastor Wm. Cuff until October 20.

Mr. William Noble, founder of the Blue Ribbon Army, is removing from London to Milverton, Leamington Spa. This change, which will not hinder his association with London activities, is rendered necessary on account of the continued delicate state of Mrs. Noble's health. Mrs. Noble's indisposition was occasioned by her labours in the earlier stages of the Blue Ribbon Temperance Revival, from which she has never fully recovered.

Obituary.

MRS. SINCLAIR, MONKSTOWN.

THE Monkstown Parish Magazine announces the death, at the age of eighty-seven, of Mrs. Sinclair, widow of the late Colonel James Sinclair, and daughter of the late Mr. James Sinclair, of Holyhill, Strabane. The magazine, in recording the death, says—"For the many years during which Mrs. Sinclair resided in Monkstown parish, she has been identified with many of the religious and philanthropic enterprises which find support amongst us. Her influence and sympathy were always for what was good and true and pure, and the temperance cause, and work among soldiers, and missionary efforts, found in her an enthusiastic, liberal, and steadfast friend. Her own faith was firmly grounded on the Rock of Ages, and she desired that others should share a knowledge which, throughout a long life, had been her comfort and stay."

REV. WILLIAM GRANT.

By the death of Rev. William Grant, on September 13, the Baptist denomination in Scotland has lost its senior minister, a man much revered and beloved by a wide circle, not only for his work in his own church, but for his practical interest during many years in benevolent and missionary effort. Twenty-five years of his ministry were spent in Grantown-on-Spey, and the remaining thirty-two at Bristo Place Church, Edinburgh. He was a son of the poet-preacher Peter Grant, whose spiritual songs in Gaelic are still familiar to Highlanders at home and in the Colonies.

Born in 1823 near Grantown, and educated at Edinburgh University and the Free Church College, Mr. Grant began preaching in 1845, and was active in much of the evangelistic work in the north of Scotiand during the following quarter of a century, throwing himself into it with heartiness during Mr. D. L. Moody's visits to this country. The Bristo Place congregation grew rapidly under his ministry, until it became the largest, numerically, of the denomination in Scotland. He was a director of the Edinburgh Medical Mission, the Carrubber's Close Mission, the Royal Dispensary, and the Scottish Reformation Society.

His brethren elected him president of the Scottish Baptist Union in 1880, and in the denominational agencies of that church he was a prominent and interested figure till the burden of increasing years warned him to husband his strength. Mr. Grant returned at the end of August from a holiday in Perthshire, feeling not so strong as usual. A slight attack of pleurisy was the more serious on account of a weakness of the heart, and he died suddenly last Saturday evening. He is survived by a widow, three sons, and a daughter.

MR. SAMUEL CHASE.

We deeply regret to record the death of our dear friend and brother Mr. Samuel Chase, of Birmingham. He was the eldest son of our former partner, Mr. Samuel Chase, and was in his fiftieth year. The circumstances of death were very sad. Overstrain in Christian work brought on insomnia; suicidal melancholia supervened, and the sufferer was found drowned.

The Christian physician who attended Mr. Chase during many years writes:—"Whenever opportunity offered, this servant of God was eager and quick to find out if those he met had their faces Zion-ward, and if not, an invitation to 'turn to righteousness' was given with an earnestness that was calculated to win for Christ. For many years (fifteen at least) I have protested that the constant strain of his activities in the ministry amongst the saints, and preaching to the unconverted, was sadly too great for his physical powers. From time to time he listened, and tried to obey medical instructions, but he heard the cry of souls that were needy, and his heart yearned to help. Hence I soon found him back to work in mission hall, Gospel-tent, street, and anywhere he felt a call."

Mr. Chase's life, from his conversion in early manhood, following upon impressions received at his father's grave, was a beautiful one of constant daily Christian testimony, extending over thirty years. He was unsparing of himself and his substance, and we are assured that the harvest will show that he had remarkable success in winning souls. In Birmingham and neighbourhood he was ever foremost in mission services. Our deepest sympathy, and that of our readers, is bespoken for his widow and true helpmate, whose co-operation with him was only limited by weak health.

Mr. Chase's death suggests two lessons: (1) There is urgent work waiting for those who are doing nothing; and the unflagging devotion of the departed should inspire such to diligence. (2) Those who are actively engaged in Gospel work should limit their exertions according to the measure of their physical and mental powers, especially where there is liability to exhaustion or overstrain.

About Books.

IN The Life of St. Luke Dr. Edward Clapton, late physician to St. Thomas' Hospital, tells us all that is known of the physician Evangelist. He also studies his character and experiences in the light of his times and the writings he left. (1s. 6d. net. J. & A. Churchill.)

To tell Christians how to make the most of the Holy Scriptures is to do them a great service. Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas aims at this in his little book—Methods of Bible Study. (1s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) The pages are replete with general truths and large facts; they deal with books rather than passages. Though an unpretending publication, this is a singularly useful one.

In a series of short crisp chapters, Rev. Dr. Len. G. Broughton has gathered together in The Second Coming of Christ (50 cents. Pepper Publishing Co., Philadelphia, U.S.A.) the most direct of the Scripture references on the subject. The subject is treated with true spiritual insight, and with a clearness which will be helpful to young people and others who have not already given close attention to the matter.

Readers who were interested in the sketch which we published last year will find the story of the life of General F. T. Haig fully told in loving fashion by his wife. (3s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Much interesting light is thrown on the working of the irrigation schemes carried out in India under the care of Sir Arthur Cotton. Valuable information is also given on the beginnings and conditions of mission work in Arabia.

Church and Reform: Being Essays relating to Reform in the Government of the Church of England. (2s. 6d. Bemrose.) The contributors to this volume include the Bishop of Hereford, the Dean of Norwich, Canons Hay Aitken and Denton Thompson, Chancellor P. V. Smith, Principal Grey, and Mr. Eugene Stock. The questions considered are practical and pressing, and the Bishop of Liverpool writes a sympathetic introduction.

Africa's Wastes Reclaimed: Illustrated in the Story of the Lovedale Mission. By Robert Young. (4s. 6d. J. M. Dent & Co.) An admirable book, from the pen of one who has already made useful contributions to missionary literature. Not only is the deeply interesting story of Lovedale outlined, but it is impressed upon the imagination by means of a number of highly-finished illustrations, including portraits of Drs. John Love and James Stewart.

A book at once instructive and entertaining is—Mosaics from India: Talks about India, its Peoples, Religions, and Customs. By Margaret B. Denning. (6s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) The author of this work knows her subject, and she is at home in graphic description. The chapters on Caste, Education, Child-Widows, and Missions are useful outline introductions to the study of large and important subjects. There are many illustrations.

Doubly in Crown Service: The Life Story of Colin Watson, Introducer of Steam in the River Mersey. Chiefly compiled from his own diary, by K. Y. Watson. (5s. Elliot Stock.) The subject of this biographical sketch was a servant of Christ as well as a commissioned officer of King George III. When he died, in 1830, he was but thirty-three years of age, but his life had been eventful and exemplary in a high degree. There are many illustrations, exceptionally well finished.

Among books on Christian Evidences we accord a foremost place to The Truth of Christianity: Being an Examination of the More Important Arguments For and Against Believing in that Religion. Compiled from various sources by Major W. H. Turton, Royal Engineers. We welcome a new edition of the book, carefully revised, and repeat what we said when noticing an earlier issue: "Thoughtful inquirers regarding the claims of the Gospel may safely be recommended to read these pages." (3s. 6d. Jarrolds.)

A Mighty Means of Usefulness: A Plea for Intercessory Prayer. By Rev. James G. K. McClure. (2s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) In an introductory note the author says, "I believe that sustained intercessory prayer will hasten the day of Christ's glory,—that such intercessory prayer is one of the largest needs of our time." In eight thoughtful chapters the subject is considered from various points of view; and we trust that many will read and then give themselves anew to prayer for Christ's work and those that are engaged therein.

THE SELF AND SEX SERIES. This series of books, dealing with subjects of great importance, now includes volumes for the instruction of boys and girls and men and women. The most recent work in the series is—What a Woman of 45 Ought to Know. By Mrs. Emma F. Angell Drake, M.D., formerly physician and principal of Mr. Moody's School at Northfield, Mass. (4s. Vir Publishing Co., 7, Imperial Arcade, E.C.) The pages abound with counsels which will prove helpful to women that are nearing or passing through middle life.

The writings of the mystics are not for all readers. Some, however, have derived much help from works of this class, notably from the teachings of Madame Guyon. Hence, in certain directions, a cordial welcome will be given to A Method of Prayer by that remarkable woman, in a revised translation, with notes, edited by Dugald Macfadyen, M.A. (3s. James Clarke & Co.) The pages will have a message for all prayerful readers; and as often as they are perused they will yield help to such as apply their hearts to wisdom, and aim at an experimental realisation of the life of God.

Those who are responsible for directing united devotions in the home will find some useful suggestions in Dr. Harford's Daily: A Help to Family Prayers. The subjects for intercession are arranged for a month. On the left side of each opening is given a general topic, and on the right hand page a missionary subject. The latter is practically a reproduction of the cycle of prayer issued by the S.V.M.U. The general cycle embraces subjects connected with home life, and the needs of all sorts and conditions of men. Space is reserved on both the home and foreign sections for the insertion of names of friends or missionaries, or for any new subject or sub-divisions of the main heads which may suggest themselves. (2s. Marshall Bros.)

The literary activity of the Society of Friends is noteworthy; and biographies occupy an important place in the works they issue. In not a few cases the powerful ministry of Quaker worthies has been continued by the voluminous and valuable memoirs that perpetuate their names. We gladly call attention to a third edition, abridged, of the Memoirs of Joseph John Gurney, with selections from his journal and correspondence, edited by Joseph Bevan Braithwaite. (3s. 6d. net. Headley Brothers.) The pages give us a portrait of one who was an influential man of business, and a diligent, devoted, and strictly consistent minister of the Gospel in the Society of Friends. The book affords many glimpses of life in the first half of the last century, and takes account of great movements and events.

Scottish Notes.

THE Glasgow Sabbath Protection Association had under consideration last week the Sunday Trading (Scotland) Bill, and agreed that steps should be taken without delay to have it reintroduced to Parliament next Session. It was reported that this season an additional pleasure steamer has been sailing on Sundays on the river Clyde. The November municipal elections were under consideration, and arrangements are to be made to aid in securing suitable candidates to fill the vacancies that may take place.

Arrangements have been made by the National Bible Society of Scotland for the presentation of an annotated Gospel to each student taking part in the great examinations to be held this month in four of the provincial capitals of China—Wuchang, Changsha, Nanchang, and Chentu—it being possible in no other way to reach at one stroke the most influential men in every town and city of these provinces.

Progress is being made by the Christian Social Union with a new property to be supervised by the Helensburgh branch. At Greenock a day nursery is about to be opened. A circular anent Sunday trading has been sent to clerks of Presbyteries and representatives of other public bodies, and has been satisfactorily received; and it is intended to approach the Glasgow School Board for the use of certain schools for Social Institute purposes.

A strong feeling of indignation at Professor Cooper's utterances, when unveiling a memorial to the martyr Blackader at Troqueer, has found expression in a lecture delivered in Dumfries by Rev. Dr. Kerr, Glasgow. The subject was, "The Scottish Martyrs Misrepresented, with special reference to the Dedication of the Memorial to Blackader at Troqueer." After showing the extent to which the real history of Scotland is ignored by those who disparage the Covenanters, the lecturer described the service conducted by Professor Cooper as a tragic mockery, and concluded with an appeal for strenuous resistance of the Ritualistic and Romeward currents of the times.

The report presented at Glasgow last week of the South Morocco Mission was encouraging in every respect except finance. Mr. John Anderson submitted the annual statement, which showed that last year closed with a deficit balance of £361. During the twelve months £997 had been received, and the expenditure for the same period amounted approximately to £1,450, leaving a deficit at date of £453. In connection with the Macarthur Memorial Hospital Fund, there was on hand £513. The allocation of missionaries was:—Marrakesh—Mr. and Mrs. Nairn, Mr. Muir, Misses Macarthur and Hancock, Mr. and Mrs. Lennox and Miss Learmond, who have been on furlough, and return on 11th inst., and Miss Trainer. Mogador—Mr. and Mrs. Richmond, and Misses Macnab and Ritchie. Mazagan—Mr. and Mrs. Geddes. Saffi—Mr. and Mrs. Badger. Azimoor—Mr. and Mrs. Clark. Mr. and Mrs. Lennox, Miss Learmond, and Miss Trainer (who is going out for the first time) were speakers.

The eleventh session of the Bible Training Institute was opened at Glasgow last week. Lord Overtoun, who presided, recalled how keenly the need was felt some years ago for some provision in Scotland for Bible teaching, in addition to colleges and theological schools. They had, he said, learned a good deal from Mr. Moody as to the immense importance of Christian workers, in addition to ministers of the Gospel, being properly trained. These required now more than ever all the equipment and scholarship and knowledge that they could possibly get; but because they were fully equipped and trained, that was even an additional reason why those who were not in the ministry should be trained in the knowledge and use of the Word of God. The principal, Mr. John Anderson, stated that at the close of last session thirty-one students received diplomas. All of these had already found suitable engagements except two, who would not have long to wait. As in previous years, the students had been distributed over a wide area. About half were engaged at home, and the remainder had gone to appointments in China, India, Africa, Australia, and Canada. For the present session twenty-two men and nine women had returned to complete their course, and fifty-two new students had been enrolled—thirty-nine men and thirteen women. Rev. J. T. Forbes and Professor Orr also gave addresses.

Bayswater Convention.—This annual gathering for the deepening of spiritual life, is to be held in the Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's Road, Bayswater, October 27-31. The speakers include Revs. Preb. Webb-Peploe, Dr. A. T. Pierson, Evan H. Hopkins, S. A. M'Cracken, E. W. Moore, F. S. Webster, Mrs. Penn Lewis, &c. Captain Tottenham has promised to preside, and there will be four meetings daily. The Convention secretary is Mr. Walter Wild, 172, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W.

Church of England.

It is stated by the registrar of the diocese of Melbourne, who is now in England as one of a deputation sent to secure a successor to Dr. F. F. Goe, that the Bishopric of Melbourne has been accepted by Canon Lowther Clarke, vicar of Huddersfield.

Owing to the decline of the church income Rev. Henry E. B. Arnold has resigned the vicarage of St. Matthew's, Oakley Square, N.W. Mr. Arnold has held the benefice for nearly fifteen years. It is stated that he has accepted the curacy of Bramber, Sussex.

The need for a mission church in the parish of St. James', Ashton-under-Lyne, has long been felt, and the erection of a building to accommodate 300 worshippers has been commenced. The cost of the building will be defrayed by subscriptions from the congregation.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas', Bristol, who is widely known in connection with the Christian Endeavour movement in the Church of England, has been asked to visit the United States and Canada with a view to strengthening the Christian Endeavour work in the American Episcopal Church. He will probably go next summer, when he would at the same time attend the annual American C.E. Convention at Denver, Colorado.

A commendable instance of inter-denominational courtesy is reported from Hampshire. In Soberton the United Methodist Chapel fell into a most dilapidated condition, and when this came to the knowledge of Rev. Melville Churchill, of Bishop's Waltham, he sent a builder to examine the premises, and afterwards offered £100 towards the new chapel. This generous and unexpected gift was gladly accepted, and among the memorial-stones laid was one by Rev. S. Longmore (Congregational), of Bishop's Waltham, on behalf of Mr. Churchill.

Rev. C. Musgrave Brown, vicar of St. Clement's, Liverpool, writes to a local paper:—"I am constrained to enter my very emphatic protest against what appeared to me to be a painful miscarriage of justice in the alternative sentence of three months' imprisonment passed upon Mr. J. A. Kensit. As one who was present in court throughout the trial, I could not fail but recognize what appeared to me to be a distinct bias on the part of the bench from the very outset of the case against the defendant. Mr. Kensit and his fellow-preachers are loyal adherents of our National Protestant Church, and in preaching the simple Gospel as opposed to the Ritualistic conspiracy within the Established Church, are rendering the greatest possible service to Church and nation. Further, why should Mr. J. A. Kensit receive three months' imprisonment and the two men who were convicted in the same court of disturbing the meeting at St. George's Hall yesterday and assaulting the police, be let off with only fourteen days' imprisonment?

Congregational.

Statues of Baxter and Watts, which have just been placed in position on the façade of Bridge Street Church, Walsall, were unveiled on Saturday by Dr. Guinness Rogers. In addition to the erection of the statues, the chapel has been renovated.

Rev. Edwin J. Dukes, formerly of Bridgewater, having accepted the unanimous invitation to the pastorate of St. Paul's Church, Hawley Road, Kentish Town, so well known in connection with the late Rev. Edward White, commenced his ministry on Sunday last.

In connection with Junction Road Church, N., during the pastorate of Rev. Archibald Parsons, such progress has been made that the effort to liquidate the long-standing church debt of £550, and to renovate the church premises, resulted in the net sum of £673. This amount entirely clears the debt, and partly meets the newly-incurred liability of £600 for renovation and repairs.

Baptist.

Rev. Dr. Clifford and his church at Westbourne Park are now engaged upon a rebuilding scheme for the mission operations in Kensal Green, which will cost £3,000. Of this nearly a third is promised, but the work cannot be commenced till the sum of £2,000 is obtained.

The eighth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. A. H. Tolhurst at Carey Hall, Leicester, was observed on Sunday last, in conjunction with the Harvest Thanksgiving. Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., preached in the morning, and the pastor in the evening. Mr. Tolhurst received a cordial welcome home after a holiday.

The church at Hornsey Park, N., has now secured a splendid site for a permanent church in Westbury Avenue, Green Lanes, N. An iron building is already on the land, and will be opened for worship on Sunday next. An interesting feature of the case is that the Congregational body had already made an offer for the same site, but have very magnanimously stood aside in favour of Rev. F. Horace Newton and his church.

The 132nd quarterly conference of the Baptist Churches in the Leeds district was held recently at Leeds, under the presidency of Rev. F. W. Turner, of Pudsey. The topic of the president's address was "Toleration." The subject was considered in its relation to "opinions" and "convictions." The question of "Home Missions" was discussed, and the Association secretary, Rev. J. G. Williams, put in a strong plea for the "Prayer Meeting" as an essential factor in successful aggressive work. Rev. H. J. Charter, B.A., spoke on the importance and possibility of a continuous and vigorous spiritual life.

Methodist.

Rev. W. Welford, of Blackpool, is to be superintendent of Caledonian Road Primitive Methodist Circuit, London, N., in succession to Rev. T. Meakin, who is removing to Kentish Town, N.W.

The coming Wesleyan district Conventions for the deepening of the missionary spirit are to be of a purely spiritual character, each gathering being preceded by a week's meetings, in all the circuits of the district, for intercession. Eight of the Conventions will be held before Christmas.

Rev. Thomas Cook, who has charge of the Wesleyan Gospel Car work, states that it is decided to build several smaller vans, which it is proposed to place at the disposal of large circuits, where ministers are few, for nine months of each year. The evangelist in charge will visit all the places in the circuit in turn, conducting services for at least ten days in each place.

A very encouraging series of Sunday evening mission services has been held in Birmingham by the head of the Wesleyan Mission, Rev. F. L. Wiseman. By permission of the Lord Mayor, the gatherings took place fortnightly in the Town Hall, the capacious building, with a seating capacity of 2,300, having been filled to overflowing. At the last two services hundreds were turned away.

In the assembly address to the Free Methodist Churches, reference is made to the unmistakable signs of progress on the foreign mission field. "In China, after the disturbances which in recent years excited so much anxiety, the progress is by leaps and bounds. It is even said that given a continuance of the present rate of growth for a few years there will be more Free Methodists in China than in this country."

New buildings are to be erected in connection with the Wesleyan mission at York. The site purchased covers an area of about 650 square yards. The proposal of the trustees is to built a handsome and well-appointed central hall, capable of seating upwards of a thousand people, a smaller hall accommodating about two hundred, a recreation room, reading, class, and club rooms, and refreshment café. The whole, when finished, will form an attractive central block of buildings, and should prove a great advantage in promoting the cause of social, philanthropic, and religious enterprise.

Presbyterian.

Rev. P. Carmichael, B.D., Highbury, will resign his pastorate at the October meeting of the Presbytery of London North. Mr. Carmichael went to Highbury seventeen years ago as colleague and successor to the late Dr. Edmond, and since the death of the latter has been in sole charge.

Reopening services have been held at St. James' Church, Bristol. The electric light has been installed, a new heating apparatus has been put in and the ventilation attended to, while several much-needed structural alterations have been effected. The cost is about £800. The church was crowded in the morning, and many hundreds of people failed to gain admission in the evening. Rev. Silas K. Hocking preached on both occasions. A united gathering of four of the city Sunday-schools took place in the afternoon, when Mr. J. Storrs Fry, and other friends, addressed the assembly. These services have greatly helped the congregation.

Rev. D. C. Macgregor writes in The Presbyterian:—"The increase of Christian activity on every hand is one of the most thankworthy signs of our time. Special agencies designed for special classes are all of them doing noble work, in which every Christian heart must rejoice. But is it not a grave loss to us that those who are reached by these means remain in very many cases apart from our organized Church life, forming in effect little separate communities of their own? Work outside Church organizations, so far as it honours the Saviour and wins souls, is always to be encouraged; often these beloved brethren are doing what we have failed to do. But let us show them how they themselves would gain by a closer and more manifest unity, claiming their place in the fellowship of the body of Christ."

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Thomas Bailey, of Cuttack, the oldest missionary of the Baptist Missionary Society in the field, with the exception of Dr. Rouse. He was principal of the Native Training Institution, and superintendent of the Boys' Boarding School. Mr. Bailey was a distinguished linguist, and had been engaged for several years on the revision of the Old Testament in Oruja. Rev. Canon Patteson, of Norwich. He was addressing a Bible class in the garden of his residence when he suddenly passed away. Throughout the whole of his ministerial career Canon Patteson was a staunch and consistent Evangelical and firm exponent of Gospel truth.—Mr. John Clapham, a well-known Congregational layman in North London. He was an active member of a large number of religious and philanthropic societies, to all of which he gave generously. For many years he was associated with the City Road Congregational Church, and was himself virtually responsible for the maintenance of the ministry there until the church was closed a few years ago.—At Youghal, Rev. Canon Harley, M.A., Rector of Christ Church, Cork, an earnest and evangelical minister and pastor.—At Essenford, near Enniskeen, Rev. Dr. Hobart, Rector of Killany, and author of "The Medical Language of St. Luke," and other works.—The death of Mr. E. D. Daly, who for the past ten years had been the chief clerk in the Northern Police-court, Dublin, has deprived the community of an ardent and faithful worker in the cause of social service. Brought into contact, as he necessarily was, from day to day with the evil, he both by tongue and pen endeavoured to arouse public interest in the waifs and strays of society, and to alleviate their sad lot. He believed that intemperance was largely at the root of all poverty and crime. He was a member of Christ Church, Kingstown.

Miss Annie Macpherson.

THE useful work of transplanting children from the squalor of East London slums to brighter and happier surroundings across the seas still makes good progress in connection with Miss Macpherson's well-known Home of Industry at Bethnal Green.

A lady of the staff, who has just returned from a tour of inspection in Canada, reports:—"Oh, the many happy homes I have been privileged to see. The dear children are all so happy. May they be bright and shining lights for the Master!"

Miss Macpherson herself writes to us:—"Well do I remember the helping hand you gave to the work at the time when I was a novice in London. The objects are still kept before us, the small parties and their individual conversion. They are a strangely gathered family, and, though I am now in the sere leaf, I am glad to be able to recognise the Master still caring and saying, 'Bring them to Me.' He is raising up hearty fellow-workers, with hearts burning with love to the perishing little ones. Our eightieth party is now (September 15) on the ocean."

Bible Class Federation.—The annual meeting of the Bible Class Federation, to be held in Exeter Hall on Saturday next, promises to be the largest ever held in connection with the movement. The contingent from Huddersfield will number 1,800, and smaller parties are expected from Derby, Bristol, Sheffield, Swindon, and other centres. The speakers include Revs. W. J. Dawson and Alfred A. Savage, and Mr. F. F. Belsey.

A Fruitful Missionary Tour.—Miss Emily Schröder has returned to London after visiting various missionary stations throughout India and Ceylon, also making a stay of over two years in the West—Canada, United States, and Mexico—speaking at different centres on the spiritual needs of the women and children in the zenanas of India. Her visit has aroused so deep an interest that the support of another missionary, three Biblewomen, and several orphans has been undertaken by friends in America.

Tipperary Soldiers' Home.—The new Soldiers' Home at Tipperary was opened August 30. The day preceding friends gathered together for prayer, to ask and claim God's blessing, with some helpful words from Rev. George Grubb, Major Wingfield, R.F.A., and others. On Saturday night the home was opened to the troops, and about 150 sat down to the "Welcome Tea." It is cheering to see how thoroughly they appreciate their new home, as well as to hear one and another tell how they have been watching the building and longing for the time when it should be opened. We still need £400.—E. H. THOMPSON (Miss), Willmount, Sandycove, Dublin.

House Brothers Wanted.—Rev. J. L. Brooks, Director of the Lingfield Colony, Surrey, writes to us:—"In connection with the Labour Colonies and Homes for Epileptic Children belonging to the Christian Union for Social Service, at Lingfield, in Surrey, and at Starnthwaite, in Westmorland, there is an opening for Christian men, not afraid of work, to act as House Brothers. We feel sure that there are many men in our churches willing to give themselves to this work, if once the need is made known to them. Earnest Christian men with some gift of management, and accustomed to work with their hands, would be particularly welcomed. Full information may be had of The Secretary, Training Colony, Lingfield, on application."

Appeal.—Spanish books on Evangelical and historical subjects, and those dealing with practical arts and crafts, are asked for the formation of a mission library by C. F. Secord, care of J. G. Cassel, Apartado 74, Guatemala City, Guatemala, Central America.

Notes & Comments

Open-Air Preaching. There is nothing new in official hostility to Gospel preaching in the open air. It is strange that the authorities that regulate public vices rarely take an active interest in endeavours to deal with them radically on the "root and branch" principle of Christian teaching and practice. In some cases, doubtless, the hostility is more apparent than real, arising from imprudence on the part of preachers, or official difficulties in dealing with local populations. In other cases, however, all that enmity can suggest and unreasonable bye-laws allow, is done to silence Gospel messengers. It is important that Christian people should open their eyes to the dangers that attend efforts to curtail public liberties and thus to endanger the elementary rights of citizens.

Mr. J. A. Kensit's Case. The case of young Mr. Kensit has rightly aroused widespread attention. On page 18 we give the terms of a memorial to the Home Secretary praying for his release from prison, to which he has been committed for three months, in default of entering into sureties not to preach in the streets of Liverpool for the period of one year. Altogether 100,000 persons have signed petitions for the young man's release, but the Home Secretary has refused to interfere. The subject is one of vast importance in its various issues, and we trust that the action of legislators and municipal authorities will be carefully watched as it affects the whole question of free speech.

The Education Bill. There can be no mistake as to the strength of the opposition in the country towards the Education Bill. At Leeds a mass meeting, said to number 100,000 persons, expressed its unmistakable verdict last week, and other towns will follow. The Free Church Councils are unanimous in their hostility to it, and "passive resistance" is advocated by the majority of them should the Bill become law. Low Churchmen are equally opposed to it, and it is also evident that many of the High Anglicans are seriously dissatisfied, for they perceive that at certain points such a law would hurt them, as in other points it would help them. Only the confirmed Sacerdotalists, who are blindly bent upon capturing the villages, are urging the Bill forward. Mr. Balfour will probably be driven either to withdraw the Bill, or to appeal to the country upon it. If he does the latter, we can safely predict the result; it would give the electors an opportunity of exposing the pretensions of those who boast that their "Catholicism" represents the country, and it would also facilitate the return of statesmen who would address themselves to home reforms which at present remain untouched.

The Day of Rest. In an interview published in Tuesday's Daily News, Mr. John Burns, M.P., emphasized points regarding Sabbath observance which are too commonly overlooked. The law of God has in view the highest good of the whole man. Those who think only of irksome restriction in connection with the Lord's Day will find themselves opposing one of the most beneficent provisions for the preservation of physical health. Scorn and derision are heaped on Christians who propose any action to make the Lord's Day Acts operative; but here we have the member for Battersea arguing in favour, not merely of legal compulsion of a rest-day in seven, but of a special day common to all businesses. This—with certain reservations regarding police, railwaymen, and others—is so like insistence on the principle of the Fourth Commandment, that those who have simply obeyed what they believed to be the will of God have a new illustration afforded of the profitableness of godliness in all things.

False Christs. Is it not possible to introduce legislation, or to amend existing laws, to deal with the perpetration of such blasphemies as those at Clapton, to which the daily Press has latterly been giving undue prominence? It seems like straining at the gnat and swallowing the camel, to have an Act against profane swearing, and to be powerless in the face of utterances similar to those credited to Mr. Pigott. If there is something due to individual liberty, surely that liberty should not be permitted to degenerate into licence, and to become offensive to the religious instincts and dearest faiths of all right-minded people.

Faith and Superstition. Certain of the evening papers have made capital out of the case of a woman in London who has just returned from Lourdes, and who professes to have been cured of cancer there through "the action of the Virgin Mary." The case, however, turns out to have been not one of cancer at all, but a maladie imaginaire. The pathological explanation of these cures is very simple and quite complete. For one who returns from Lourdes cured, half-a-dozen return as ill as they went, but the latter cases are never advertised. The truth is that cures of the Lourdes order can only be effected upon persons of a certain temperament, who possess an imagination sufficiently vivid. Upon such persons the effect would be the same if a stick were set up in place of a shrine. It is not even remotely related to faith, in the Christian sense. And to place in one category intelligent faith in Christ, and superstition that simulates faith, is as unjust as it is ridiculous.

Living on the Past. Two London ministers who have recently resigned their pastorates complain bitterly that they have been compelled to abandon promising fields of usefulness, because the few influential and moneyed people in their congregations stedfastly resist any attempt at aggressive work. These are trying to live upon the memory of a splendid past, when "carriage folk" attended the church; while they close their eyes to changed conditions, and refuse any attempt at adapting themselves to them. This is a foolish, if not a criminal policy—yet it is by no means rare. Many of the churches which formerly were attended by wealthy persons are now nearly abandoned in poor neighbourhoods. What is the use of dreaming of the past, in view of the altered conditions of the present? Methodists have realized this, and their "missions" are, without exception, a conspicuous success in chapels, which, under the old régime, were nearly empty. Other churches must follow to meet the requirements of the times.

Protecting the Children. We are glad to see that practical steps are being taken to deal with the growing evil of child hawkers, who, often barefooted and bareheaded, are allowed to hawk newspapers, matches, flowers, &c., in the streets. In London alone nearly 15,000 children are so employed, while in the country as a whole there are more than 100,000. Chief Constables are agreed that this life is most hurtful for the children, most of whom grow up to be thieves or loafers, living by their wits, and disdaining all settled work. Of course their education is neglected—that goes without saying. But the worst thing is that so many of these little ones are compelled to support drunken and idle parents. The children are simply regarded as money-gainers, and nothing more. A conference is to assemble shortly to deal with this matter, and we hope that steps will be taken to ensure protection and training for every boy and girl belonging to the large army of street workers.

Drink and Death. The recent report by Dr. Davies, Medical Officer of Health for Woolwich, contains some startling facts, to which Mr. Pinhorn, of the London Temperance Council, has given some further prominence. It appears that the deaths in the district during the year from scarlet fever, diphtheria, enteric fever, erysipelas, and small-pox were fewer than those attributed directly to alcoholism and its consequent liver disease; and taking London as a whole, Mr. Pinhorn states that drink was the direct cause, at the very lowest estimate, of 42,000 deaths during 1901. It is pitiable to think that the growing revenue we hear so much about was, in a measure, built up by these physical and moral suicides.

The Critic and the Play. The discussion which has followed Sir E. R. Russell's outspoken and able utterance as to the duty of the critic in regard to immoral plays, has afforded another opportunity for a promulgation of misleading ideas as to "art for art's sake." Unhappily, dramatic critics, seasoned by long experience of the modern drama, are not inclined to be over fastidious, and when one so eminent as Sir Edward Russell feels impelled to speak out, it may be assumed that the action was called for. The contention was a simple one, that when the moral feeling was contravened by callous enjoyment of coarseness in a play, and there was in it "no suggestion of any feeling for the right side in life and conduct," the critic should condemn the work. That so obvious a point should be disputed, shows not only how far the stage remains below its boasted ideal, but also how blunted have become the moral instincts of a large number of those writers who are supposed to guide the public taste in such matters. Certainly, so far as the theatre is concerned, a very low level in taste is freely catered for, but there can be no change in the broad and eternal principles of morality.

The Best Resistant. Sir William Collins urged at the Sanitary Congress, that the best resistant to all disease, is healthy blood. A simple thing to say, no doubt, but it is one of those commonplaces lying at the foundation of life, and that needs to be uttered again and again. If people really believed it, they would take care of their bodies, and, avoiding all excesses of eating and drinking, live a simple and natural life, and so minimize the risks of contracting disease. So is it also in the higher life of the soul. The moral, as well as the physical, atmosphere is charged with deadly germs, which create havoc wherever they find hospitality. Persons with a low spiritual vitality soon become victims of these hostile forces. To go through the world without contracting spiritual injury or disease, we must keep the soul in perfect health. And this can only be done as the entire life is surrendered to the vital force of the indwelling Lord.

Justice for the Jews. The Government of the United States has adopted an unusual but commendable course, in addressing to those European powers that were parties to the Berlin Treaty of 1878, a firm protest against the manner in which Jews are treated in Roumania. America has the right to say something, since persecuted Jews by thousands are driven to find asylum in that country. Mr. Hay, however, while claiming this right to protest, urges the higher plea of humanity; and this, we hope, will receive attention. Roumania, which owes its independence to the Berlin Treaty, is ignoring its obligations under the Treaty, to deal fairly with all classes. It is dealing with the Jews as the unspeakable Sultan treated the Armenians. They are so oppressed that emigration is the only way of escape from their degradation; and perpetual emigration is not fair to other countries. Roumania is such an insignificant country, and is so dependent upon foreign powers, that the latter ought at once to insist upon the Treaty obligations being carried out. Persecutions such as are current in Roumania ought to be impossible at this time of day.

The Horrors of Siberia. We have read with something like horror the account given by Mr. Harry De Windt of his journey through Siberia. In the convict settlements he found a state of things so dreadful that, unless the reality of them was vouched for by so competent an observer as the intrepid traveller, it would be difficult to believe that they could exist in civilization. One half of the convicts go mad. The punishments to which the prisoners are subjected beggar description. Mr. De Windt has forwarded to the Russian Government a report of his observations. Surely the peaceful Tsar cannot know what goes on in his dominions! If Russian officials are permitted to treat prisoners in this brutal manner for political offences, it is not surprising that ferment is continually present in that Empire. Many of those who are condemned to exile, and who are treated so barbarously, have only committed the offence of seeking for their country freedom from official tyranny. But at present there is neither political nor religious freedom in Russia.

Political Irritations. We must not attach undue importance to the unwise utterance of the French Minister of Marine at Bizerta last week. He spoke as a private individual, and his foolish flaunt to Italy must be regarded in that light. His colleagues in the French Chamber are quite as much annoyed as the persons whom he has needlessly irritated. But it is much to be regretted that individual statesmen should go out of their way to foster ill-feeling between the nations. The war of 1870-1871 might have been averted if the injudicious men who fanned the spark into a flame had been summarily stopped. The strain in Europe is already too great, and international ill-feeling already too bitter to permit of such irritating speeches. Every wise statesman should throw all his influence upon the side of peace and international goodwill.

Christian Business Men Abroad. A correspondent at Colombo begs us to urge in this country the sending forth of godly business men to heathen lands. He says:—

> Every converted and active English Christian layman in a city like this is a tower of strength to the missionary. Every godless one is (whether he desires to be or no) a source of weakness to him. As a result of a Y.M.C.A. meeting a year ago in the Eastern counties of England, a bright young man set sail for a business house in this city. He is here now, and is a blessing in many directions. He is chairman of our religious work sub-committee, a Sunday-school teacher, leader of an open-air service every Sunday night, and a burning light for Christ among many sons of darkness.
> Now mark the difference! Had an unconverted man filled his place, he would certainly have been a centre of evil influence. Sabbath-breaking would have been the least of his ill-deeds. He would have been one more added to the appalling list of men bearing the Christian name but exhibiting, among the heathen, the sinful character.

We very heartily and seriously commend our correspondent's plea to young Christian business men as a matter of urgent importance.

Pastors and Evangelists.

A Plea for a Better Understanding.

By Mr. MONRO COLLINGS.

DURING the time devoted to a much-needed rest it was my great privilege to attend two conferences—the one, in London, for evangelists; and the other, at Oxford, for all who were included in the more comprehensive term, ministers of the Gospel. At the former gathering, Mr. M. H. Hodder, one of the kind hosts for the day, made the remark to me personally that the more pastors and evangelists meet together, the better it will be for evangelistic work and the cause of Christ. And I, as an evangelist, hold that he was right; and further, that most of the accredited evangelists attending that conference would have gained much useful information and great help for their own spiritual life, had they been able to attend the conference at Oxford, the spiritual tone of which will be a refreshing memory and a source of inspiration for many days.

But there were some things said concerning evangelists and their work which we shall do well to remember and consider. Kindly and honest criticism is always wholesome, and must in the end do good; and I for one would welcome the free and full discussion of the whole subject of present-day evangelism. The truth is, that they fear their influence, and regard their work with a degree of suspicion. To make this discovery, it is only necessary to attend a conference or fraternal, where the subject of missions and missioners is under discussion.

Now, in my judgment, this should not be, and it ought not to be possible. For the New Testament has taught us that pastors and evangelists are made for each other, and that the combination is irresistible when both working along the line of the revealed and holy will of God are endowed with power from on high. The preaching of the evangelist arouses, gathers material, prepares the way; the teaching of the pastor follows on to build up, construct, preserve, and materialize into life and character. Thus the one is the necessary complement of the other.

But looking at the matter from the inside, what are the main causes for this apparent hostility, and what can we suggest which may conduce to future good relations between pastors and evangelists?

Now, in such a delicate and important matter, it is obvious that I cannot do more than indicate in the barest outline some ideas which I have gleaned from association with eminent as well as less prominent preachers, during a somewhat long and considerable experience of evangelistic work.

ALLEGED DEFICIENCIES.

(1) Complaint is made of our intellectual thinness. They say that (I wish to insert here the word "some") evangelists do not read, and that they are easily irritated by originality of thought and mode of speech; that, too often, that which is considered orthodox in them is, in reality, but the expression of an indolent mind.

(2) On the other hand, it is said that evangelists are deficient in heart, and that they need to be baptized into the Divine love, that they may come more into sympathy with honoured workers who possess gifts and experiences different from their own. Possessing a certain body of divinity, a system of religion, they fondly imagine that no one can be a true servant of God who does not absolutely accept their creed and conform to their ideas.

(3) It is said, further, that evangelists do not show sufficient kindly consideration to the pastors with whom they work, that they are frequently not in active sympathy with them, and that it has not been an unknown thing for the working of the church to be made more difficult by the missioner's visit.

ARE THESE THINGS TRUE?

Unfortunately it is not impossible to collect evidence to substantiate every one of them. In some instances unwise and irresponsible men have rushed in where angels would fear to tread, and in one short week have done untold injury to the work of God and to the whole company of mission preachers. We must admit this.

Yet, surely there are evangelists and evangelists. They cannot all be fairly placed in the same category, and labelled with all the misdeeds of an undisciplined enthusiasm which has manifested itself from time to time. And surely those of us who have made mistakes, have gained something by the experience of past failure, and day by day seek more and more to come into line with the best thought of our time, and with the modern presentation of "the old, old story of Jesus and His love."

Let me plead, then, for a larger charity, and on both sides between pastor and evangelist. Let us seek to understand each other better, look out for one another's good qualities, bear with one another's imperfections, and so fulfil the law of holy love.

We are all imperfect; how much we all need the forbearance and forgiveness of our brethren! For the man has yet to be found who is living up to his own highest ideal of a Christian missioner or minister; though we can all do more to win the goodwill and approval of the servants of God who have borne the burden and heat of the day, and who make our work possible by preparing a people ready to our hand.

"The Missionary Association Letter."—The first monthly issue of The Missionary Association Letter (1d. Morgan & Scott) gives much promise of fulfilling the useful purpose for which it is intended. The foundation principles of this union of missionaries and the friends of missions are (1) "The Communion of the Holy Spirit," and (2) "The Communion of Saints." There can be no doubt that the circulation of such letters will do much to cheer many a lonely heart, and to bring into prominence the mutual interest and helpfulness of the members of the body of Christ. A weekly prayer meeting is held on Wednesdays at four o'clock, at the Police Institute, Adam Street, Strand, W.C., and the two days' convention is being arranged for October 15 and 16 at the same place.

Practical Papers.

ON "MAKING A NAME."

(Gen. xi. 4).

"LET us make us a name!" cried the Babel-builders, and the spirit of the cry has vibrated down the ages ever since.

Little children in the schoolroom or the playground are moved by an impulse to do something by which they shall rise above their fellows. True, the wish is not always backed up by proportionate effort to attain its end, but there it is within them, none the less.

Young men and women, standing on the threshold of active life, turn their eyes aloft, to scan the inscriptions on the monuments of great careers now still in death, and feel the throbbings of desire to make themselves a name.

Older persons, past the bloom of youth, who have not yet grasped the elusive prize, still hurry on in feeble hope that some day, somehow, it may fall into their hand.

This is ambition; and, after all, what would life be without it? Alas, for the lad or maid, the man or woman, whom it has never inspired! Rightly directed it is noble, and contains within itself all the elements of greatness. Sorely the world needs it, provided it be hallowed to its highest use.

"Let us build us a city and a tower . . . let us make us a name!" How often have our hearts breathed the same desire! In fancy we have seen our plans and projects grow, our little towers raise their heads. 'Castles in the air,' we called them in our childhood, and there most of them have ever since remained. Some few of us may have aspired higher still, and dreamed of a tower 'whose top shall reach unto heaven," as it were, far exceeding the highest ambition that man has yet achieved, such as Barnum would have paid a fortune to possess.

But most of our schemes have fallen flat, generally from lack of force or means to carry out our aims. How telling are our Lord's words: "Which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish; lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish, all that behold begin to mock him, saying, 'This man began to build, and was not able to finish!'" (Luke xiv. 28-30). How they strike home, as we mournfully survey our failures, and stand amid the wreckage strewn along the shore of life!

And such must be the fate, in time or in eternity, of every plan whose ideal is merely to make a human name. "That My name may be glorified" is one of God's conditions of a successful career—successful, that is, in the purpose for which He created it. "Seek ye first—not your own name, but—the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these—the needful things of life—shall be added unto you." Ah the pain, the heart-burning, the disappointment we had saved, had we "sat down first and counted the cost"! To GLORIFY GOD is the first essential to success.

The second is OBEDIENCE TO HIS WILL. His design was that men should scatter abroad and replenish the earth. No, said the leaders of their "modern thought," we will not scatter abroad; we will congregate together; we will "build us a city and a tower, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of all the earth." Thus God and man were at issue, and the angels watched to see which should win. The doctrines of Noah were as unpopular after the Flood as they had been before it. "Not up-to-date," the wiseacres declared. But God had His way, and the foolishness of unsanctified wisdom stood revealed.

"The Lord came down to see the tower that the children of men builded." My reader, that is what you have to face. Have you counted its cost? You have begun to build; are you able to finish, with that inevitable condition in view? If not, I pray you "sit down first," and think it out. "The Lord came down to see . . . the Lord scattered . . . they left off to build"! What comedy and tragedy are here! See the Lilliputian forces; hear their puny shouts of defiance; and with the breath of His mouth the Almighty blew them to the winds.

Yet were they altogether wrong? Had they no redeeming points? Let us do them justice, for they can teach as well as warn us.

For one thing, they were willing to work. "Go to, let us make brick . . . let us build." That is something in these days! I once heard a beggar say, in answer to a question as to what work he did: "I should be sorry to take a day's work out of another man's hands!" How can such a man be really helped? Towers mean work; ambition demands industry, or it will collapse for lack of foundation and support.

They were thorough in their work. "Let us make brick and burn them throughly." Here, again, they put many of us to shame in these scamping, jerry-building days. We are all so apt to build for show and to neglect stability, forgetful of the great inspection when "the Lord comes down to see."

Once more, they were ingenious in their work. "They had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar." Lacking the best materials, they made the best of what they had. It were well if we thought more and grumbled less, bent on devising means to stop the gaps and fill the deficiencies of our lot. Yet remember that with brick and slime we can build nothing better than Satan's Babylon. God's Jerusalem is built of living stones, with the Living Stone from heaven as its Foundation and its Corner-Stone.

And think how much might be said on grounds of expediency. Again, the wiseacres stood to the fore. By all means carry out the scheme. Set the men to work, or they will roam the country, and degenerate into rogues or vagabonds or thieves. How often do we argue thus! The plain, straightforward ways of God lack attractiveness and colour; there is so much to be said for our own. Yet God is more far-sighted than we. He sees the end from the beginning, and discerns results that are hidden from our eyes. Better take His counsel; it is safer than the best that man can give.

Men are still actuated by the Babel spirit of herding together in great cities, instead of scattering abroad to replenish the earth. With what result? That their path is beset with the brambles and pitfalls of moral problems and social evils that otherwise they had not known.

The pitiful story is all summed up in three words—Conception, Construction, Collapse. The conception was bad; therefore, however good the construction, collapse was the inevitable consequence; and so it must be with all plans of life that are built with such shoddy corner-stones as SELF-GLORY OR DISOBEDIENCE. No amount of specious reasoning, no excellence of construction, no fortuitous blending of circumstances, can give stability or permanence to schemes devised with the rotten foundations of self-will. If we persist, it is at our eternal risk. Whether it be the choice of a business or a profession, a husband or a wife, a future for our children, or a form of religious belief, unless the root conception be in accordance with the mind of God, and in obedience to His will as revealed in His Word, it must in this world or the next be brought to nought. In glad contrast to Babel and its failure, "the Name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it and is safe." God help you, my reader, to find your shelter there.

Bible Study Notes.—III.

By Rev. W. HOOPER, D.D., Mussoorie, India.

MISTAKES REMOVED BY THE REVISED VERSION.

1. Psa. cxix. 130.—The A.V. has "The entrance of Thy words giveth light"; the R.V., "The opening of Thy words giveth light." This text is constantly quoted, or alluded to, in the sense that when God's word enters into a man's heart, it brings light into that heart and into his life. A precious truth indeed! but not contained or implied in the text before us; no, nor intended by King James' translators, though the word they used will bear that meaning. The Hebrew word here is péthach, which comes from a root which means "to open," and itself means "opening." King James' translators confused this with pethach (with a short e), which means a doorway, as being an opening in a wall. The translators in rendering it "entrance," meant the entrance TO God's word, as the old version by Tate and Brady has it, "The very entrance to Thy word Celestial light imparts." However, they mistook the word, as I have said; and the real meaning of the text must be, that God's Word is in itself like a bud which has not begun to show any of the colour of the flower; to the view of the world there is no difference between it and any man's word; but when the Holy Spirit opens and unfolds the Word, as He did by St. Paul at Thessalonica (Acts xvii. 3), then light begins to stream out of it, and illuminates the believing mind.

2. How constantly one still hears and reads of God's "making up His jewels," as if there was anything about jewels, really, in Mal. iii. 17! Why the A.V. has given that rendering, I have never been able to make out. Certain it is, that the Hebrew word is the same as is in Ex. xix. 5 and elsewhere (if alone) translated "peculiar treasure," both in A.V. and in R.V., and when joined with "people" is rendered in both "peculiar people." The equivalent Greek word is in the New Testament rendered "a people for God's (or "His") own possession." In every instance where these words occur in the Bible, the literal meaning is (as we may see plainly in 1 Chron. xxix. 3, where R.V. renders it "a treasure of mine own") THE PRIVATE PROPERTY OF A KING. If a sovereign were deposed, he could justly claim his private property, which would be his if he were not king. This illustration is with infinite condescension employed by God to assure His people of their absolute safety. As He says in Ex. xix. 5, the whole world is His as supreme and universal Sovereign; but if one could imagine Him deposed from the throne of the universe, even then His people would be safe with Him, for they are His "private property." This is the gracious assurance which He gives in Mal. iii. 17 to them who "speak one with another" of Him.

3. Matt. xxviii. 18. "All authority hath been given unto Me in heaven and on earth." Such is the Revised Version; and yet one still continually hears the text quoted with "power" instead of "authority"; though those responsible for the Authorized Version must have meant by "power" nothing but "authority." It would not matter if those who quoted it now meant the same; but they quote it as if the Lord meant by these words to imply a promise to those who obey the following command, that they should be enabled with His might in the prosecution of the enterprise. A blessed truth, indeed! Yet what the Lord must have meant when He said these words is, that in the fulness of authority which He has received, He sends forth His disciples, to make disciples of all nations. Compare John xvii. 2.

4. To the perversion of the tenor of Scriptural truth, we still hear of "God's holy child Jesus," not with reference to His infancy on earth, but to His present condition in heaven. And yet the only authority for this is the A.V. of Acts iv. 27, 30, where the R.V. has "servant," in accordance with Matt. xii. 18, where the A.V., as well as the R.V., has "servant." Compare Acts iii. 13, 26. The Greek word, which originally means "boy," and HENCE came to mean "servant," can scarcely be rendered "child." Anyhow, there can be no doubt that in all these passages the allusion is to the "Servant of Jehovah," who is so much to the fore in the latter part of Isaiah.

5. I hope not many take "this life" in Acts v. 20 to mean the present life; but as a bishop once made this mistake (he is since deceased) in a public address, it may be well to call attention to the fact that the R.V. has happily obviated it by printing "life" with a capital L.

An Old Song Book.

EVEN those who have no hope to add Welsh to their accomplishments, and to whom the roll and rhythm of the ll and ch afford a puzzle more intricate than the pronunciation of "shibboleth" could have been, one fancies, to the Ephraimite warriors of old,—even to those there is something very beautiful and pathetic—one might almost say artistic, too—about the mystic tongue.

English visitors to Llandrindod Wells, Radnor, for instance, will remember the effect produced by the singing of the old Welsh hymns at the morning prayer meeting so well known in connection with that invigorating little health resort, which has, during late years, leapt to sudden prominence. You may not understand a word, but the heart must be hard which does not feel the pathos of the melodies, and not a few have found it the best part of the service. The unbidden tears will rise as one sweet Name is recognised, for it needs no interpreter to tell us the meaning of Jesu Grist ei Fab ef.

It is a little book of Translations of Welsh Hymns which lies before me which has suggested this line of thought; a thin, limp volume, published half a century ago, and no longer obtainable. There are a few English originals interspersed; and glancing through the whole there is felt to be something here which, however much "out of print," should not be allowed altogether to pass from us. The translations are the work of a singularly sympathetic pen. "I have endeavoured," says Rev. Joseph Morris, "to give not only the exact sense, but also the manner, the spirit, and (generally) the numbers of the original;" and it will be obvious, even to the non-Welshman, that this ambition has been realized to so large an extent that the hope that "they may not be altogether powerless in renovating and sustaining impressions produced by the originals" is a reasonable and modest one.

Turning at once to the hymns themselves, our attention is attracted by

THE SEARCH.

I had sought throughout creation,
Searched its vast, amazing whole,
For an object to delight in,
Adequate to fill the soul.
After turning Nature's pages
Forward, backward, o'er and o'er,
I attained not satisfaction,
But my longings grew the more.

Then amid angelic orders
Asked I if there were not one
Willing to extend his friendship
To a wretched soul undone.
Soon a lofty spirit answered,
"No; there is not one of us
Can hold friendship with a spirit
Fallen, guilty, wandering thus."

Shame and grief now overwhelmed me,
My sad heart was nigh to break,
All my frame with terror trembled
And my tongue no more could speak;
Then gushed forth a briny torrent,
Down unto the crystal floor,
Nothing through unending ages
Can from memory blot that hour.

Then a glance in helpless sorrow
Turned I to the central throne;
There I saw the Mediator,
Who for my life gave His own.
"There is He," I faintly whispered;
"Read I not upon His face
That His heart is full of pity,
Full, to sinful worms, of grace?"

Then I drew unto His footstool,
Prostrate fell before His seat;
And I pleaded for His favour,
Pointing to His hands and feet;
"I will pour," I said, "my sorrow
And my need into His ear,
All my grief I will unbosom;
It is Jesus, need I fear!"

Then while I a bosom opened,
Full of darkness, want, and sin,
He a bosom full of mercy
Opened to receive me in;
Those kind hands, which once were pierced,
Reached He forth to raise my head;
From that all-transporting moment
All my hopeless longings fled.

It is a quaint way of re-stating the central fact of an old-fashioned theology, but our modern minds have not improved upon that theology, and one can but thank God that it cleaves so closely to our best old hymns. Perhaps there is no one part of our Christian literature which more faithfully and fully enshrines the fundamental truths of our most holy faith than do our hymns. "Rock of Ages" alone is a body of divinity. Search from cover to cover of this little collection, you will find no vein of "advanced thought" therein. It is "Jesus only" throughout. And that is why the note of certainty and of triumph is so often struck—as, e.g., in a scrap entitled "Dawn":—

It shall not long remain,
This dark, tempestuous night;
Not long doth Christ ordain
To bear the cross, and fight;
Behold the herald dawn appear,
Auspicious morn is drawing near.

There is the genuine ring, too, about such lines as the following:—

In His reproach is honour,
In His rude cross a crown,
And in His love a treasure,
Surpassing all renown.

These, too, are in a similar vein:—

Than the floods Thy word is stronger,
Stronger than the 'whelming wave;
All my hope I calmly venture
On Thy promise, Lord, to save.

Just a snatch from "Far Better" has sung itself into many a sore heart, I trow, and will again do so, please God:—

How much better,
There to sing than sigh with us!

One more specimen must suffice from this Garden of Song. Mr. Morris appropriately put it last in his dainty collection, and we cannot do better than let it stand as the "close" of this brief paper:—

If there be holy contest
For right to sing the loudest
On plains of heaven;
Who most to Christ indebted,
Who loftiest exalted,
Being most forgiven.
A plea there will appear for me;
For of the many,
Whom Sovereign Mercy
With arm almighty
May raise that state to see,
Not one more undeserving
Of joy so great can be.
One song shall echo through the throng:
"To Him who loved us:
To Him who washed us:
To Him who saved us
From deep and miry clay!"
The thrilling anthem doubling,
Unending night and day.

Mercy's Hour.*

"They shall look upon Me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn. . . . In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin" (Zechariah xii. 10; xiii. 1.)

We wait for gracious blessing
Promised in days of old,
A Pentecost for Israel
In fulness as foretold.

Descend, Thou Blessed Spirit,
Give to the blinded sight;
Lead now the house of David
Forth into Gospel light!

Inhabitant of Zion,
Behold the pierced One!
It is Jehovah-Jesus,
God's Well-Beloved Son.

His hands and heart thou piercedst
On the accursed tree;
But look! His mercy triumphed,
His blood was shed for thee.

Let there be bitter mourning,
Let each one mourn apart;
Let this be thy confession—
I pierced the Saviour's heart.

Day of most bitter anguish,
'Tis thy Lord's day of power;
The cleansing fount is opened,
Behold! 'tis mercy's hour.

"Follow Thou Me."*

By the Late Mrs. PENNEFATHER.

"Jesus saith unto him, If I will he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me" (John xxi. 22).

Jesus, we heard Thee say it,
That deep, unfathomed word,
And we told Thee we were willing To call Thee Master and Lord.
We gave Thee our allegiance,
With true and loyal mind,
We essayed to follow after,
But no footsteps could we find.

The desert dust is shifting,
The storms are wild and rude,
Where men once saw Thee walking,
The sand-drifts may be strewed,
Or is it that life's surgings
Have worn those prints away?
Or are these eyes too misty
To trace them day by day?

. . . . .

My disciples, my servants, my friends!
Ye who listened and heard that word;
Oh, where, in what foreign country,
Have ye thought to find your Lord?
The footprints are marked as ever,
The steps of the Son of God,
No lapse of years can erase them,
Deep set in tears and blood.

But the road was too rough and rugged,
And some coward hearts drew back;
Ye found one more smooth and sunny,
But ye lost the Master's track.
Ye have been amid wealth and pleasure,
But no traces could ye see;
Ye have walked in earth's proudest dwellings—
They had no room for Me.

The world, with its choicest pictures,
Its jewels rich and rare,
Has found you a place and a portion,
But I was a stranger there.
Ye sleep on its downy pillows,
Its couches of sloth and ease,
But I was a homeless pilgrim—
I had nothing to do with these.

Ye bask in its smiles of welcome
It had only a frown for Me—
A rejected Man of sorrows,
I was nailed to the cursed tree!
Ah! surely 'twere hard to follow
Where the Master was never seen;
'Twere hard to trace the way-marks
Where His feet have never been!

. . . . .

Have ye looked for sheep in the desert,
For those who have missed their way?
Have ye been in the wild, waste places,
Where the lost and the wandering stray?
Have ye trodden the lonely highway,
The foul and darksome street?
It may be ye'd see in the gloaming
The prints of my wounded feet.

Have ye folded home to your bosom
The trembling, neglected lamb?
And taught to the little lost one
The sound of the Shepherd's name?
Have ye searched for the poor and needy,
With no clothing, no home, no bread?
The Son of Man was among them,
He had nowhere to lay his head!

Have ye carried the living water
To the parched and thirsty soul?
Have ye said to the sick and wounded,
"Christ Jesus makes thee whole?"
Have ye told my fainting children
Of the strength of the Father's hand?
Have ye guided the tottering footsteps
To the shores of the "Golden Land?"

Have ye stood by the sad and weary
To smooth the pillow of death,
To comfort the sorrow-stricken,
And strengthen the feeble faith?
And have ye felt when the glory
Has streamed through the open door,
And flitted across the shadows
That I had been there before?

Have ye wept with the broken hearted
In their agony of woe?
Ye might hear Me whispering beside you,
'Tis a pathway I often go.
My disciples, My brethren, My friends,
Can ye dare to follow Me?
Then, wherever the Master dwelling,
There shall the servant be.

* These stirring lines, which first saw the light in 1868, have a message for workers of our day, so we gladly reproduce them from the pages of The Revival.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, September 28. 1 Samuel x.

WHAT a moment was that, when, as the breath of dawn stirred the leaves of the sleeping woods, Samuel poured the anointing oil on that strong young head. God gave him another, though not a new heart. There was no such radical change as comes over the soul at the hour of new birth, but he had new aims, new conceptions of the importance and significance of life, new determinations and resolves.

A number of corroborating circumstances ensued. When we are on God's path, we may always count on these. The two men who assured Saul that the asses were found, indicated that he was to be relieved of the care of farm and field, to give himself to higher work. The door must close behind us as well as open before us. The three men who were carrying votive-offerings, of which they gave Saul a part, indicated that God would compel respect for him, and that there should be no lack of supplies. When we seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness all other things shall be added. Finally, in contact with the sons of the prophets, Saul was empowered by the Spirit of God, and equipped for the duties of his high estate. God never calls one of His servants to work especially for Him without equipping him in a very especial manner. Learn to scrutinize circumstances with the eye of a detective for minute points of suggestion; so will God's will for thee be indicated, and always God requires us to use our sanctified commonsense, i.e., to act as occasion serves (v. 7).

Saul's modesty was very commendable. He did not seek office, but it was thrust upon him. When detractors and critics challenged his appointment, in the expressive Hebrew phrase, "he was as though he had been deaf" (v. 27, R.V. marg.). Let us be deaf to a good deal that is said; it will save a world of trouble.

MONDAY, September 29. 1 Samuel xi.

A hundred years before, the Ammonites had been defeated by Jephthah; they were now beleaguering Jabesh-Gilead. This city was allied to Benjamin, because in the days of the Judges it had given 400 of its daughters in marriage to Benjamites. But it seemed impossible for Gibeah to help. At this juncture we are told that the Spirit of God came mightily on Saul. By a species of Fiery Cross he aroused the land. A message of hope was sent to the agonised city; and as morning broke over the quiet hills and valleys of Gilead the army of deliverance was hurled from three different sides. The rout was complete.

Was there not a connection between the self-mastery of the previous chapter and the victory of this? Must it not be always so? Every one must fight his lonely combat against habit, and environment, and heredity; against the power of the flesh within, and the power of the devil without. The measure of our success here will be the measure of our success yonder. The mountain of temptation with its lonely struggle must precede our wrestling with the principalities and powers of darkness.

To Gilgal the whole nation came in that hour of victory. There, amid the great memorials and memories of the past, the people gathered to crown Saul as king. He had been designated at Mizpah, but was to be crowned at Gilgal. He had deserved well of them, for his exploits had led to a magnificent victory. What a pity that such a dawn became so soon overcast. Let us beware. Let us see to it that our life is a regular progression—upward and onward.

TUESDAY, September 30. 1 Samuel xii.

The hour had come for Samuel to hand in his resignation. "Before his long sleep, Samuel made protestation of his innocence before God and the people." Yes, the long sleep will come to all, and happy are they who, before it comes, can extend their hands, saying, "These are clean," calling God and man to witness.

The old prophet then set himself to designate his people's sin. They were resolved, with proud insistence, on having a king, instead of waiting for God to appoint a deliverer.

The same temptation comes to us all. We rely on horses and chariots; we forget that behind the thin veil of sense is standing the eternally crowned Christ, waiting to succour us with outstretched hand. To be right with Him is to be safe and blessed, though we stand alone. It is all-important, therefore, to put from us all that grieves Him, and limits His interpositions.

When he had handed over his office to Saul, who henceforth was to be the shepherd and leader of the people, the prophet assured the people, with great sweetness, "The Lord will not forsake His people, for His great Name's sake." Oh, take these words to your heart, and let them ring as a refrain of music through your soul. Not for your worthiness or desert, but because of His unchangeable heart of love, He will not, and cannot forsake (Is. xlviii. 9, 11).

Though he was sure of this, Samuel promised still to pray. It is because God has pledged His word that we are to turn that word back again in supplication. From boyhood he had been famous for his intercessions (Psa. xcix. 6; Jer. xv. 1; 1 Sam. vii. 8, viii. 6). Those who pray most fervently will be most eager to show the good and the right way (v. 23).

WEDNESDAY, October 1. 1 Samuel xiii.

This chapter is the story of a great tragedy. It narrates how Saul proved himself unfit to be the founder of a line of kings. Here was the overcasting of a bright morning, the spoiling of a beautiful promise.

To what straits were the Hebrews reduced! Driven to hide themselves in caves and pits (6), deprived of their smiths (19), driven beyond their own frontiers (7), a handful of soldiers only following the king. Saul was subjected to a tremendous test. Samuel had bidden him wait till he came, probably to discover whether or not he was prepared to act as God's vicegerent. After weary waiting, the appointed time had nearly elapsed, and Saul prematurely took the matter into his own hands. The offering preparatory to battle was concluded just as the well-known figure of the prophet was seen slowly coming up the pass.

Saul said, "I forced myself." We are all too prone to speak in the same tone. When the rash word has been spoken, and the impulsive deed performed, when the false step has been taken, and the red-handed fire is climbing up to consume the house of our life, we say, "Circumstances compelled me; I had to do it; my hand was forced." No, child of God, thou art greater than circumstances, greater than things, greater than the crowd of evil counsellors. Art thou not God's enthroned king? Thy soul should wait for God. Fret not thyself in any wise to do evil. In quietness and confidence shall be thy strength, in returning and rest thou shalt be saved.

Sternly and sorrowfully Samuel pronounced the sentence of Saul's deposition. It was as though from that moment the King was cast aside from serving the Divine purpose—as we may be if we, too, are self-willed and impatient of waiting for God. "Let your moderation be known unto all men; the Lord is at hand!"

THURSDAY, October 2. 1 Samuel xiv.

Jonathan had entered into the spirit of the Divine Covenant. He could not believe that God had forgotten or forsaken. Was there no validity in that glorious promise, "One shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight"? Happy are they who will rise above the depression of misfortune into living fellowship with the faithful God, allying their weakness with His might, their ignorance with His wisdom. "It may be," said the young prince to his armour-bearer, "that the Lord will work for us, for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." He offered himself, therefore, to be the modest instrument through which God's saving help might operate. God is ever needing such men, who will act in fellowship with Himself; and He found a willing answer in that noble and chivalrous soul. Whoever you are, I pray you to yield yourself to God, that it may be said of you, at the end of your life, as it was said of Jonathan, "He hath wrought with God this day." And the soul that reckons on God cannot be ashamed. "The Lord saved Israel that day." Jonathan's works were "wrought in God" (John iii. 21).

How nearly did Saul wreck all the victory and joy of that wonderful day! He was out of sympathy with his son's noble spirit and with his people. Already his moody and jealous temperament was beginning to reveal itself. Could it have been otherwise? The man who is alienated from God is out of unity with man; just as he who is out of accord with his fellow-man cannot be in accord with God. O Spirit of God, adjust us with God, and baptize us with love!

FRIDAY, October 3. 1 Samuel xv.

Several years intervene between the previous chapter and this. The kingdom had become strong and prosperous. It almost seemed as if Samuel's sentence of deposition had been forgotten. But the speck of corruption had spread deeper into Saul's heart. At last came this charge about Amalek, which revealed the king to himself and all observers.

Amalek's existence was a standing menace to the peace and prosperity of surrounding nations; hence the edict for his destruction (Ex. xvii. 16). Even in this world God judges the nations, and condemns such of them as have ceased to fulfil His purpose. In spite of God's distinct command, Saul allowed the choicest and best of the spoils to be reserved, and this brought about his final deposition. It is remarkable, also, that an Amalekite claimed to have despatched him on the field of Gilboa (2 Sam. i. 1-10). If we spare ourselves, forbearing to cut off the right hand or foot which may be causing us to offend, we shall certainly perish by that with which we refused to part. Our cherished indulgences will bring about our undoing.

What noble anguish was experienced by Samuel at the news of Saul's failure! His soul was deeply moved, and he cried unto the Lord all night. He travelled some fifteen miles to find Saul, following him from Carmel in Judah to Gilgal. He did not hesitate to confront him with his sin, as afterwards John the Baptist before Herod; and when the argument between them was over he smote Agag to death. His true heart was revealed in his tears and intercession, which continued till the hour of his death. If we are called to rebuke sinners, let us not forget to weep and pray over them.

SATURDAY, October 4. 1 Samuel xvi.

The anointing of the young shepherd, with his blue eyes and ruddy cheeks, is a beautiful episode, and it was followed by his special reception of the Holy Spirit (13). The Lord does not choose according to the outward appearance, but by the inward temper and disposition. And is it not clear that these qualities cannot of themselves secure the highest and most permanent results unless they are accompanied by a special spiritual endowment?

Almost in the next sentence we learn that "the Spirit of the Lord had departed from Saul." This does not necessarily mean that all his religious life had become extinct, but that the special faculty and power by which he had been prepared for his kingly office were withdrawn. An evil spirit "from the Lord" troubled him. There was nothing for it but to leave him to the working of his own evil heart; and there was nothing to prevent Satan from entering into him. God gave him up to a reprobate mind (Rom. i. 24, 26, 28).

The attacks of Saul's depression and despondency required an antidote, which was presently found in music—Philip V. of Spain was treated in a similar fashion—and the minstrel was none other than the young shepherd, so recently anointed as God's designated king. There is a directing Providence behind all our lives. That one of the young men of the court had seen David in some country contest, was only a link in the chain of Providence (v. 18). There is no such thing as chance. God has a plan for each of us, which is being fulfilled by all things being made to work together.

Other Lands.

Glimpses of Indian Zenanas.

EVERY missionary admits that two chief hindrances to mission work among the Hindus are, on the one hand, the slavery of the caste system, and on the other the lack of moral stamina in the individual. One and the other are the natural outgrowth of a social order which from remote ages submerged the individual in the community, leaving no room for personal convictions, and so making impossible the development of moral courage. What seems cowardice to the Western mind has nothing humiliating to the Hindu.

MASS MOVEMENTS.

This partly explains the mass movements towards Christianity. Stronger minds, on taking hold of the truth, have led the way, and others have followed, either animated by the same conviction, or by the example of their leaders, or led by baser motives or no motives at all, simply swimming with the stream as in an irresistible tide. We who consciously or unconsciously obey the stream of fashion, even in religious life, ought to be slow in judging those less favoured by circumstances and education. A missionary to whom doubt was expressed as to the conversion of some of his people, replied, "Is any of your ministers sure that all his church members are born of the Spirit?"

Great ingatherings, like that of the Telugus, naturally demand a great deal of sifting. Raw heathen before the grace of God touched them, they are but spiritual babes, needing tender care and nursing. They cannot be judged by our moral standard, but according to the light they have received; hence the great need of teachers to diffuse the light of the Gospel among them.

BONDAGE OF THE CASTE SYSTEM.

Caste keeps the higher classes bound and fettered, and nowhere is this so apparent as in the villages. In the great cities, where British ascendency and Eastern civilization go hand in hand with mission efforts, these have for several decades exercised their influence over the natives. The effect, though slow, can be seen even in their homes.

Missionary ladies took me to Zenanas, where the greeting given to the stranger was most hearty. Betel nuts or limes were generally offered in token of friendship. As soon as the missionary entered, the nude little ones would disappear and return nicely dressed. The ladies of the higher castes are for the most part very pretty, and there is a gracefulness even in the low-caste women for which we seek in vain among our uncultured classes.

On one occasion, forgetting myself, I stretched out my hand to a native lady who had been showing me some beautifully-embroidered wedding garments for her ten-year-old son, and her own jewellery, all solid gold, for her caste would not allow her to wear any alloy. She shook hands with me, and, when I apologized, asking, "Will you have to take a bath after I leave, because of my touching you?" She replied, with a lovely smile, "I will not, for we know that all men are alike." This may have been simply a pretty speech without any sincere meaning, like those current in our polite society, yet it told me of the missionary's influence, and perhaps that of the husband, a Government servant, in that secluded home.

INATTENTIVE LISTENERS.

In a Zenana in another city a mat was put on the floor for us to sit down. We tried our best not to look awkward in our position. Our companion, for we were three visitors, lost no time in delivering her message. Attention seemed to be absorbing, while several pairs of dark eyes furtively scrutinized our faces. All of a sudden a bright woman interrupted the speaker by asking whether we were married. "Only one," was the answer. That one found the attention of all centred upon her person. "Has she any children?" "No." "And she does not look sad?" Questions and answers were rapidly exchanged.

"Here is my sister-in-law," said the same lady, who, with visible pride, nursed a fine boy on her knees, and she pointed to a sweet-looking young woman with a face as sober and grave as if she had never smiled in her life. The cause of her grief was that she was sixteen years of age and was not yet a mother.

A missionary tried to restore attention, and to lead their thoughts to the Saviour. While she spoke all around her nodded, including an elderly widow in white garments, who kept in the background. Our spokeswoman whispered something to another, and a little while after a picture was produced with such a beaming look as to say clearly, "You see, we, too, are honouring your God." Oh, the hideousness of that picture! My heart ached to see, in bad print, this Roman Catholic conception of our Lord crucified, such as my eyes used to look upon when quite young. It is because the method of the Roman Catholic teaching is so akin to Hinduism that the Church of Rome makes so much progress in some parts of India—you may imagine that we did not leave that home until the missionary had explained the true way of worshipping God.

A CONSIDERATE BROTHER.

In a city of South India I saw a pretty widow who had refused to have her hair shorn and to part with her jewels, and as her elder brother, who was the head of the family, would not force it upon her, she was free to do as she pleased. This brother was an educated man, and in Government employ. In another home was a little eleven-year-old widow, grave and composed. Her family lamented over her and their cruel fate. People were saying that the husband was taken away because his wife had been allowed to be taught by Christians.

In another home my companions and I were received with marks of great outward courtesy. Perfume was sprinkled over us, our handkerchiefs were laden with sandal ointment; and we were presented with flower-necklaces, fruit, and sweets, like distinguished guests. The gentleman, who had lost his wife, would talk most amiably, professing love for his child, a little girl of twelve; but when asked why he would not let her be taught by the missionary, he replied: "No, my eldest daughter is twenty-five years old, and she has no husband yet. She was taught by Christians. I do not wish my younger daughter to remain unmarried, and therefore I do not want her to be taught."

THE C.M.S. AT DOHNAVUR.

Now one instance of country experience. It was at Dohnavur, twenty-four miles from Palamcottah. We had travelled during the night by bullock cart. Notwithstanding its jolting we went to sleep, and on waking found ourselves in front of a bungalow. It was early in the morning, fresh and cool, and a sweet sense of peace and rest seemed to pervade this pretty spot. This restful something remained with us all the time of our stay.

Rev. and Mrs. T. Walker and Miss Wilson Carmichael have a blessed work here, but they are reticent about its prosperous side, for fear that human touch might spoil the spiritual bloom of some newly-born soul. Vanity is inherent in mankind, and converts will treasure printed bits of paper because they tell of them. There is no doubt that in many cases it would be kinder and better for the converts if less fuss were made with them.

Dohnavur, from whence the missionaries undertake extensive itinerating tours, is a pretty spot, in a thickly-populated part. One evening we went to a neighbouring village, accompanied by Miss Carmichael, who drew our attention to a lovely Brahmin woman carrying a child on her hips. She let us approach her to a certain distance, then with every step we made forward she drew one step back. On being asked to let us see the child, she put the little one down, who naturally would cling to her mother and cry. Her husband, a Brahmin priest, came out and measured us with a haughty look. We asked for permission to come nearer, but "No, you can stay where you are" was the reply. I explained by interpretation that we had come from England, and that we had been in cities where the Hindu ladies would receive us kindly, &c. But no amount of persuasion would induce him to let us come near him or his wife. "If we were to try to touch that man or woman," said our companion, "we would have all the inhabitants rise against us." This was not a hostile village by any means, only indifferent; but is there anything more discouraging than passive resistance, dull ears that pretend to hear and do not?

Caste still rules with iron hand in the country, and as the villagers form the bulk of the entire population, we must not be blinded by its apparent decadence in some cities. Millions of women sit in utter darkness, needing the Gospel, but not at all as anxious to have it as may sometimes appear from optimistic appeals. We have this last information from God's people who have been for years in the thick of the fight. It is good for Christians at a distance not to underrate the difficulties.

WILMA MORGAN.

Light and Shade in China.

TESTIMONIES multiply regarding the change in the attitude of the Chinese people towards the Gospel. Mr. W. E. Entwistle (China Inland Mission, Luh-an-Chou, via Wuhu) writes:—

"Formerly, as we were resting in our inns, or taking a meal, some would secretly offer to sell us premises, often in the last stage of decay, for which an exorbitant price was asked. Now the deputations offer to rent, purchase, or build halls and maintain them afterwards if we will only go and preach the Gospel in their towns, &c. I have had two requests from places 120 miles distant, and another fifty miles in another direction, during the past three weeks. Each place is reported to have one or more hundreds desiring to embrace the Protestant religion.

"With the care of the Church here, two out-stations forty-five miles south-east, another thirty miles south, and two families of Christians to be visited thirty miles west, it will be impossible for me (the only male European at this centre), to respond to one-tenth of the calls for service. I fear many whom we could (humanly speaking) lead into the fold now will become disheartened by our apparent lack of care for their souls. My nearest neighbours are east sixty miles, north sixty miles, south-east 120 miles, and west about 200 miles."

A CALL TO PRAYER.

THE recent cables from China indicate a most critical situation in the extreme western province of Si-chuen. Several local outbreaks of the Boxers have resulted in attacks on mission stations. An attack has even been made upon the capital, Chen-tu; but we are thankful to record that there the officials have maintained their control, though not without fighting in the streets. The Chinese Government has issued orders commanding the Si-chuen officials, in the strongest terms, to suppress the rebellion. If the central authorities are sincerely firm, they will probably maintain order, but the possibilities of serious trouble are such as to constitute a most urgent call to prayer. Mr. Conger regards the present trouble as similar to the rising of 1900. Tsen, the recent governor of Shan-si, who has done so much for the native Christians, is on his way to Si-chuen as the new Viceroy. The difficulties of the position are greatly accentuated by the fact that the province has suffered from scarcity and famine for three years, and is at present greatly in need of rain. The following missionary societies are represented in the disturbed area:—

American Bible Society,
American Methodist Episcopal Church,
American Baptist Missionary Society,
British and Foreign Bible Society,
China Inland Mission,
Church Missionary Society,
Canadian Methodist Missionary Society,
Friends' Missionary Society,
London Missionary Society,
National Bible Society of Scotland.

Gaining Ground in Morocco.

WE have often been greeted with the question, "Now, what progress are you making in Morocco?" The stones and curses that greeted us as we passed along the streets ten years ago have given place to smiles, salutations, and blessings. Hatred, prejudice, and mistrust have given place to love, respect, and confidence. The consistent lives of the missionaries, their kindness, forbearance, and truth have won the hearts of the people. The preaching of the Cross is a stumbling-block to many and foolishness to some; yet the fact of an "unbeliever" knowing God, walking in His ways, and seeking the eternal good of others, has an influence, especially on the poorer class, that is beyond our power to measure. The attitude of the Government officials has been favourably changed through my having got into terms of close intimacy with his Shereefian Majesty the Sultan by giving him some elementary lessons in photography.

HOW RICH AND POOR ARE REACHED.

At the out-door dispensary in the morning all sorts and conditions of men and women gather, and from all parts of the country. We have the town Moor, the Arab from the country, the mountaineer, the Drawee and Negro from beyond the Atlas. The men are put into one room and the women into another, and for half-an-hour we preach the Gospel to them in as simple a way as we can.

Surgery is just as far behind as medicine. Amputations are performed by one blow from a meat-chopper, the patient calmly looking on.

One old man had a dagger broken in his shoulder, and fourteen years after he was carried into the dispensary nearly dead. We extracted four and a half inches of the point of a steel dagger from the lower part of his abdomen. He made a very good recovery; and when we visited his place in the country last year he gave us a royal welcome. We had great freedom in preaching the Gospel at his place; in fact, we invariably find that patients not only tell of all the kindness they receive from the missionaries, but a great deal of the message, so that in a sense they become pioneer missionaries.

The people who are too rich or too ill to come to the dispensary send for us to visit them in their houses. It was in this way I met the Sultan's brother, who is now Khalifa in Marrakesh. He was suffering from very severe toothache, and said he wished me to put some medicine into the teeth so as to cause them to fall out without giving him any pain. I successfully stopped them for him, greatly to his relief and gratitude. He is a very intelligent and open-minded man, and we had long discussions on the Gospel.

THE FAME SPREADING ABROAD.

We go into out-of-the-way districts where no Europeans have been, but wherever we go we meet with people who have been to the dispensary or in the hospital. The home-coming of a hospital patient is quite an interesting event. The women of the village march out to meet him with flying colours, their silk handkerchiefs tied on long canes.

When the shades of evening have fallen, by the uncertain light from the fires in front of the tents, the men emerge and approach the returned patient, who now sits in state on his little piece of matting. After salutations they squat down in front of him. In a little the tea-tray is produced; and, as they slowly sip the sweet syrupy liquid, he relates in a most graphic manner his adventures — how he reached the house of the "unbeliever" almost dead, how he was given a bath, a clean suit, and a fine soft bed.

He tells of all the miracles performed by the 'unbeliever's" knife, and the wonders done by his chloroform; but he has more to say. He tells them how the unbeliever told them that the secret of all their sins was that the prophet is dead, and can't intercede for them; that their only hope is in Jesus. "Did he really say that?" they exclaim in surprise. "Yes, truly beloved, he said that, and read to us from the Word of God. Ah, beloved, these people know the truth and walk in it." So they remain in wonder and awe.

The sad thing is that when the dawn in this dark land is nearing, and the Sultan so favourably disposed to Europeans, and anxious to reform his country, our Southern Morocco Mission should be so crippled and handicapped through lack of funds, and consequently through lack of workers. All information may be had from Mr. John Anderson, 64, Bothwell Street, Glasgow.

ALAN LENNOX.

Young Women in Hungary.

THE chief feature of the work among young women in Hungary is that we do more to equip them intellectually than to educate them for Christian work. There are nearly 3,000 Protestant elementary schools, also higher schools for girls in several important centres. We have one Protestant training college for lady teachers. There are also a great number of State schools (both elementary and higher) to which Protestants have admittance (as teachers or as pupils). Protestant girls frequenting State schools enjoy a Protestant religious instruction. There is also a State school (like a German gymnasium) to prepare girls for the University. To the preparatory school and in the university, Protestants are admitted; and there are now nearly 200 girl students, some of them Protestants.

With regard to Association work, we must refer to the work of the so-called Lorántffy Zsuzsanna Association. Susanne Lorántffy lived in the seventeenth century, and was the wife of the famous Prince Georg Rakoczy, who fought with great success for our political and religious liberties. His wife took care of the schools and of the poor. She also wrote a book against Romanist errors, and held fast the Evangelical truths with great tenacity. The Association which bears her name was founded ten years ago, and carries on a very good work among women. Some of the members make articles of clothing for the poor. Others have Sunday-schools with about 1,000 children. One of the members, Miss Desewffy, visits the prison house, and has a Bible class there; probably her work will result in the founding of a house for discharged female prisoners. From its beginning the Association has taken care of the young women. Some of them have been won for the Lord, and a choir has been formed; young servants have been invited to meetings. A few years ago a small, modest local room was hired, where one of the secretaries taught needlework on week-days, and explained the Holy Scriptures on Sundays. Two years ago one of our active members, Miss Rau, was sent to Breslau (in Germany), where she spent two months in a Martha institute, and coming back, took charge of a laundry in connection with our home. There are now fourteen young girls under her care. Already some who have been educated in the home have become servants, others enter a deaconess house. The missionary of the Association and the superintendent, Mrs. Szilassy, explain the Holy Scriptures, and those who have not enjoyed a thorough religious education have special lessons.

Besides the work of the Home, there are five branches of Young Women's work in Budapest. Three of them are connected with the Lorántffy Association, two of them with the Scotch Mission. There are also in provincial towns branches connected with the Lutheran Church. The Swiss Home carries on also a very good work. One of the branches in Budapest has been organized according to the principles of the Christian Endeavour Society. One of the active members has been sent for training to the Bible-house in Freienwalde, and she will be appointed in a few months as a worker among young women. We shall have some difficulty in raising the necessary means, but we hope that God will move hearts in Hungary, as other lands, to share our burden.

Europeans in India.

BY AN INDIAN OFFICER.

QUITE recently a brother officer lent me THE CHRISTIAN, and I have found it very helpful. I find much in it which encourages me to persevere in spreading Evangelical truth and opposing Ritualism.

I fancy many people think of India solely from the missionary point of view, and do not know that there are many big cities and towns in the country in which large numbers of European officers, military and civil, and soldiers, and also a large number of English and Eurasian subordinate officials, and workers in firms and shops, are living. These represent to the natives Christianity in its outward form.

The spread of the Gospel among the natives of this country is very much affected by the way in which these large numbers of Europeans and Eurasians recommend, or otherwise, by their lives and examples, the practical effect of the Christian religion which they profess to follow. I regret to say that, as far as Europeans are concerned, and more especially those holding the higher military and civil appointments, also the majority of the officers and the army, there is not much open profession of Christ and His Gospel; as for a real ardent interest in Christian missions, with a few exceptions here and there, there is none.

I have been living for some years in a southern province, and have had ample opportunities for observing the trend of affairs; and I feel quite confident that my views would be endorsed by the majority of earnest Christians, both European and native, in this country. I believe the trouble mainly lies in the teaching given in our English churches, that is to say, in those churches belonging to the Government, and held by the chaplains on the Indian Establishment. With few exceptions, chaplains of the Indian Establishment are decidedly Ritualistic in their tendencies and teaching, and the result is a lack of spiritual life in the congregations, which, of course, brings its own fruit in an increasing tendency to Sabbath breaking, a dwindling congregation at the voluntary service (there are parade services at which troops must attend), and an increasing amount of time, money, and attention given to race-meetings, gambling, dances, and worldly pleasures generally.

My object in writing to you is to try and enlist the sympathies of Christians in England who are anxious for the spread of the Gospel in India, who know of the evil influences of Ritualism, and who may be anxious to know of anything which in any way helps to retard the spread of the Gospel in India. I also wish to make an attempt on my own behalf, as well as on behalf of other Christian officers and private soldiers of the army in India, to do something towards getting decided Evangelical chaplains on the Indian Establishment, and stopping the steadily increasing flow of Ritualistic chaplains.

I believe the danger is a serious one, and it is increasing because so few Europeans in India look upon their religion in its true light, or realize their grave responsibilities. Indeed, I feel I am not putting the matter too strongly when I say that the majority of the English officers and officials in this country are growing daily more indifferent in religious matters, and consider that a single attendance at church on Sunday is quite sufficient acknowledgment of the claims of Almighty God. Speaking personally, I can testify to having learned the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, outside the Church of England, through humble and earnest workers for the Master who know no other ritual, forms, or ceremonies, than the sacrifice of a humble and contrite heart, and the desire to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

I must apologise for writing at such length, but I feel that I cannot do better than bring these very important matters to you, and try and enlist your sympathy and that of your readers in the religious welfare of many English exiles—men, women, and children—who have to spend the best part of their lives in this country, and whose spiritual needs are very great and pressing.

The Opium Evil in Ceylon.

SOME recently-published statistics concerning the consumption of opium among the Sinhalese in Ceylon, serve to indicate the enormous increase of this evil annually recorded. A minister replying for Mr. Chamberlain last month, said that the consumption of opium in Ceylon was being carefully watched, and he was not inclined to think that the increase had been material.

Commenting on this statement, the Ceylon Observer says: "We wonder what Mr. Chamberlain means, or whence he drew his information. There are some facts which are not to be got over: (1) the licence revenue of three years—1897, R1,700; 1898, R3,100; and 1899, R5,640; and (2) the imports of the five years 1897-1901—18,286lb., 17,260lb., 16,144lb., 23,755lb. and 21,005lb. The annual import 1845 to 1851 was about 1,000lb. From 1894 to 1897 the average was 14,700lb.; while the average since 1897 is as much as 19,541lb. exactly. That is to say, the past four years show an increase of over 30 per cent. on the previous four—and yet in Mr. Chamberlain's view this is not large enough to be 'material!'"

The attitude of the Ceylon Government to the evil, in permitting the open indiscriminate sale of the drug among a people so effeminate as the Sinhalese, is giving rise to serious questionings in those who have at heart the welfare of the population of our Colonies. The people of Burmah have a far greater analogy to those of Ceylon than have the Bengalis. The Burmese and Sinhalese are Buddhists, and consequently have never allowed the poppy plant to be cultivated, much less the drug to be manufactured and used within their territories. On the other hand, the people of Bengal have had fields of poppy and enormous quantities of opium produced in their midst from time immemorial. As might be expected, the action of the Government, based on the majority report of 1898, so far from checking, positively encouraged an increase of the consumption of opium among the Sinhalese; because, simultaneously, the opening of opium shops in villages which had never known such before, was sanctioned by several of the Government agents or revenue officers. For 1901 the import was 21,005lb., still an enormous increase on ten years earlier, and one-sixth more than the maximum dealt with by the Select Committee.

Happily for Ceylon there has never been any production of the plant or manufacture of the drug within its borders, and in this respect the case differs from the situation in India and China. It is no wonder that in the United Kingdom, United States of America, and most of the British Colonies, the sale of opium is placed under medical restrictions; and it is to be fervently hoped that similar laws may be brought into operation in Ceylon, and the Government show that they are no longer insensible to the spread of a habit which degrades and demoralizes as no other does.

The Needs of Chili.

THE work of the Lord continues to prosper in Chili in spite of the unabated opposition of the priests of Rome. A small church has lately been built in Talca, due to the self-sacrificing efforts of the missionary and the native converts, and since its opening there has been an increased interest in the Gospel.

The work in Rancagua has been much blessed. This city had no Gospel work until last November, and is the centre of a district with a population of many thousands entirely without the Gospel. The difficulty of having no suitable building as a centre of work, is much felt, and it is hoped to raise sufficient funds to erect such a hall, about £300 being required. While in England Mr. P. Rose, 4, Buckingham Road, Brighton, is anxious to enlist sympathy on behalf of South America from a religious standpoint.

C.M.S. Day of Intercession.—In connection with this special season of waiting upon God, a meeting for prayer will be held at the C.M.S. House, Salisbury Square, E.C., on Tuesday, 30th inst., 3 to 5 p.m.

Sunday-Schools in Germany.

By Pastor FRITZ KAISER.

THE story of Sunday-school work in Germany goes back some fifty or sixty years, and all along it has been attended with many and peculiar difficulties. But, in spite of obstacles, the cause has progressed, and is to-day full of promise. The work was first taken up by the Free Churches; it has since found favour with some who formerly discouraged it. It has had to contend with Roman Catholicism, Rationalism, and Indifferentism. In a large degree, the latter has been experienced among Protestants, who, though they "have a name to live," are, in fact, dead to all spiritual purposes and concerns.

A really good work has been done by means of the Sunday-school in Königsberg, Barmen-Elberfeld, Essen, Hamburg, and Berlin. During a visit to the first-named place it was my privilege, on behalf of the Continental Mission of the Sunday-school Union, to address in the various schools an aggregate of some two thousand scholars; many of these love the Lord Jesus from the heart, and are desirous of devoting their lives to His service. Last winter I held several meetings in East Prussia, Hesse, and other districts, and such was the interest excited that the audiences were larger than the sitting accommodation of the buildings. I regret to say that the cause is much oppressed in Pomerania, Saxony, the state of Reuss, and some places in East Prussia. A large number of our State Church pastors look upon Free Church bodies, such as Baptists and Methodists, as sectaries, and do all in their power to hinder their operations. In some places the day-school teachers, at the instigation of the State Church pastors, have brought pressure (with punishment) to bear upon children to keep them away from the Sunday-school. In Saxony the civil authorities have issued an order forbidding the Free Churches either to invite or admit to their meetings children brought up in the Evangelical Lutheran Church. To transgress this rule is to incur a penalty of fifty marks!

In many large towns of Germany, the Sunday-school work is on a very small scale. In Dresden, Leipzig, Magdeburg, Münich, Dortmund, Münster, &c., a dead Protestantism closes the door, and thus helps Romanism and infidelity. We pray for power from on high that the good work may be pushed forward in spite of obstacles and difficulties. It is a pleasure to be able to report that there are now some 500,000 scholars in State Church schools, and 300,000 in those connected with the scattered Free Churches.

In many places we are in great need of qualified teachers. For the most part, our helpers belong to the working-classes, men and women whose daily occupations so tax their energies and time as to prevent them from making the needful preparation of the lesson. In the rural districts another problem has to be faced: we have no suitable buildings or adequate rooms in which to gather the children. However, our eyes are towards Him who gives blessing upon work undertaken in His name, and our prayer is that He will give guidance in our exertions for the extension of His Kingdom.

Mission Work in Tembuland.

FRIENDS who have followed with prayerful interest the work of the United Free Church of Scotland Mission at Main, Tembuland, will learn with considerable gratification of the progress which is being made at this station in South Africa. Although the mission district was divided in 1899, and a new parish formed, namely, the Kidston Mission, with over 300 communicants, under an ordained native missionary, another subdivision is likely to be needed.

The annual report, recently issued, states that during the twenty years the Mission has been in existence no fewer than 1,000 converts have been admitted into Church fellowship. Of the sum of £3,410 raised locally £870 was sent to the Synod treasurer for carrying on the Lord's work in other parts of the country. At Main itself there were no members when work was commenced; now there is a communion roll of ninety-one natives, many of whom are Tembus.

An instance of the attitude of the natives is the case of a Kaffir witch doctor who, in passing, had called to have the Word of God read to him. When urged to accept Christ, he replied: "Do not be in a hurry; we are coming. We could not pass your house until we had heard the Word again. We are coming. These seats and this house (the church) will be full of us yet." Many indeed have come, and among them the doctor himself.

The missionary (Rev. D. Doig Young) pleads that ministers at home should make every effort possible to deepen interest in this part of the mission field, that the workers may be enabled to take advantage of the unique opportunities which are opening up before them. Mr. Young's address is Mission House, Main, Tembuland, South Africa.

Palermo, Buenos Aires.

UNDER the auspices of the South American Missionary Society the evangelistic and educational work at Palermo, Buenos Aires, continues to give evidence of increasing vitality. The movement is in charge of Rev. W. C. Morris (who has spent most of his life in the Argentine Republic), and it is gratifying to know that the work is rapidly developing both in the matter of evangelization and the maintenance of English and Spanish schools. The first free day-school for boys was opened in June, 1898, with eighteen boys. Now there are no fewer than 2,000 children of the poorest class in the schools.

The South American Missionary Society has issued, as the first of a series called "Records of To-day," a full account of the discussion in the Argentine National Congress with reference to the proposed Government grant to the Evangelical schools under the direction of Mr. Morris. The Congress two years ago approved a national subsidy of 200 dols. to the schools, and the debates which appear in this pamphlet deal with the proposal that the schools should receive an augmented subvention of 500 dols. This was bitterly opposed by Bishop Romero; but the conduct of the schools was warmly defended by several deputies, and the grant was subsequently approved. The result is a distinct gain for the cause of Protestantism.

Protecting Children in India.—In view of the unspeakable deeds practised upon little girls, native, Eurasian, and European, in our great Eastern dependency, it is earnestly to be hoped that the Society for the Protection of Children in India will receive increased sympathy. A leaflet recently issued by the secretary, Rev. A. E. Summers, of Calcutta, gives a few painful cases, but it will be readily understood that worse remains behind, which it would be impossible to put into print. Rev. J. P. Ashton, 40, De Vere Gardens, Ilford, Essex, is the English correspondent of the Society.

Miss Mason and her Work.

IT was during a time of cholera visitation, when the fell scourge was claiming victims on every hand, that Miss Charlotte Mason was driven to ponder on the great hereafter. A fear, not so much of death itself as of meeting God unpreparedly, took possession of her soul.

One night, sitting by the fire after the rest of the family had retired, she took up a book of religious verses. While turning over the leaves her eyes rested on a text at the top of one of the pages: "All things are possible to him that believeth" (Mark ix. 23). The Scripture came with a flash of spiritual illumination to her already awakened heart. She realized at once the simplicity of the Gospel plan, and the joys of belief and acceptance in the Lord Jesus Christ.

At this time Miss Mason's way in life was beset with trials and difficulties, but these only led the young Christian into closer communion with her Lord. During the first years of her experience she was much helped by the revival of spiritual life which came from the earlier Conventions and the reiterated preaching of "sanctification by faith."

"God works for those who wait for Him." The looked-for door of usefulness was opened, and Miss Mason was gradually led into her gracious ministry to tired workers needing rest and refreshment by the way. Coming into contact with the late Rev. William and Mrs. Pennefather, of Mildmay, Miss Mason undertook a visiting tour in connection with the Association of Women Workers, which Mrs. Pennefather was then organizing. During her journeyings, which occupied the greater part of a year, she was deeply impressed by the lack of provision made for workers in Mission or Home, incapacitated for a time through sickness. While still engaged in her investigations for Mrs. Pennefather, her own health failed, and it was during convalescence that the idea was thought out of providing a place of quiet rest for wearied toilers in the Master's service.

WELLINGTON AND LONDON.

A commencement was made at Wellington, the pretty Shropshire town under the brow of the Wrekin, in 1866, where a cottage was taken, capable of accommodating five inmates. Miss Mason entered into proud possession, taking with her one maid-of-all work. It was in 1870 that, as progress was made, a large house was rented in Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W. Still the work increased, so that it became necessary to annex adjoining premises. For twenty years "Cambridge Gardens" was a grateful name to Christian people in many parts of the world, who were blessed while resting there. The crowning touch was given to Miss Mason's plans in 1890, when the fine freehold mansion, 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W., was secured at a cost of £4,500. The Kilburn premises were accordingly disposed of, and the work transferred. A valuable development, too, had been the opening of a seaside branch at Eastbourne. There, too, the work grew apace, and Miss Mason was enabled to purchase, at a cost of over £3,000, the handsome building which forms so admirable an adjunct to the London institution.

The modest ambitions with which the founder of these homes commenced her life work have thus been more than fulfilled. The Houses of Rest live as a vivid and inspiring memory in the minds of many.

"A DELIGHTFUL HOME."

It has been no light task to prepare and provide for the 900 tired people received annually during recent years, but the responsibility has been bravely borne. Solicitude for the welfare of those privileged to enjoy these seasons of rest, has called forth hearty expressions of thankfulness. A few extracts, taken indiscriminately from a large pile of letters written by missionaries from the foreign field, and Christian workers engaged in a great variety of work connected with missions in the United Kingdom, will suffice to show both the consecrated spirit of the management and the appreciativeness of those ministered to. The first reads:—

I shall ever cherish the warmest regard to you all, and look back with pleasure and gratitude to my sojourn in your Home as one of the happiest incidents in my life. What a privilege it is to many to find rest, where the comforts of life are so liberally bestowed to recruit the weary; where their faith is quickened and strengthened by an atmosphere of love; where the name of our Heavenly Father is held in reverence, and the name of our blessed Lord honoured and obeyed. I most sincerely thank you also for your expositions of Scripture, which I enjoyed exceedingly, and for your prayers.

MISS CHARLOTTE MASON.
From Photograph by Mr. Thos. Fall, F.R.P.S., 8, Grand Parade, Finchley Road, N.W.

A lady missionary returning to her work in the foreign field writes:—

My week's stay in the Home of Rest is over, and is now a very pleasant memory. I am so thankful I had the privilege of being an inmate of what is a real Home of Rest, and am most grateful for all the loving kindness shown. I may be able to spend my last night in England beneath your roof, and, if I can do so, it will be a comfort to me to be amongst so many who make God's cause theirs.

A visitor to the Eastbourne institution, dwelling on the seasons of spiritual refreshment, says:—

I feel that I cannot express the gratitude I find in my heart for all the blessings of the past two weeks. Spirit, soul, and body have been refreshed and strengthened, and one is drawn out in earnest longing and determination to be and to do, by the Grace of God, all that He asks of His child. I think the Home simply delightful. It has been so helpful to meet with such a large number of earnest workers, and perhaps yet more precious to be able to go to one's room for quiet communion with God. And then there were the prayer meetings and the many messages. As I count my blessings and name them one by one—these Eastbourne blessings—I am filled with praise for all my Lord has done.

A GLIMPSE OF THE INTERIOR.

The Houses of Rest are, of course, far from being merely boarding-houses. No pecuniary advantage is obtained; on the contrary, the small payments that are received do not by any means meet the expense. Capacious and comfortable, grateful to the eye both externally and internally, the institutions are models of good taste and management. The rules are few and simple; prominent features are the banning of alcohol and tobacco, while equally outstanding are the Pillar Room meetings, open to the public, in which many well-known ministers and other friends take part from time to time, and in which zeal in the Missionary cause has been stimulated. Miss Mason is able to keep in easy touch with her friends by means of her bright magazine Rest and Reaping.*

PROVISION FOR THE AGED.

A natural outcome of provision for wearied workers has been a home for aged ones. In suitable premises adjoining, but quite distinct from the House of Rest at Finchley Road, twelve inmates find welcome shelter. Each has her own bed-sitting room, and has to find no rent, firing, or renewals of furniture or household requisites. Indeed all supplies are provided except food and clothing, while kindly thought is quick to find ways of satisfying need in those matters also, as occasion requires.

As the years pass and the Homes secure wider appreciation, the cares and responsibilities of direction increase, but Miss Mason bears her burdens with cheery steadfastness. A notable day in her recent experience was July 8, 1900, when, on becoming a septuagenarian, a birthday fund was raised as a mark of esteem, on the initiative of Miss Weston, the "Sailors' Friend." The amount raised reached over £620, and the whole was devoted by the recipient to the maintenance of the institution. The Houses continue to flourish on the now familiar lines, creature comforts being by no means overlooked, but the highest importance being attached to spiritual blessing, and the encouragement of workers still to labour for the Master with steadfast and wholehearted service.

"The Hour of Prayer."

Alone on the mountain tops,
Alone in the chilly air,
As the queen of night in stillness paints
All things surrounding fair.

Oh! soft is the sward I tread,
So still, and so silent all.
What a season for quiet, loving prayer,
Before the Lord to fall.

As the dew around descends,
Sweet comfort falls on me,
As the Spirit's power in prayer I feel,
And plea follows loving plea.

Ah, 'tis good to be alone,
From the madding crowd away;
'Tis there that the Saviour, in days of old,
Would oft retire to pray.

Yet not all the night, as He,
From solitude I must go,
For the night steals on, and my loved ones wait
In the rural cot below.

But, say—is it not divine,
An hour to spend in prayer,
Where the moonbeams fall on the mountain top,
Alone, in the chilly air?

O ye, who would seek to shine,
And in strength divine to grow,
Seek often the silent hour of prayer,
With the Spirit's freshening glow.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Newport, I.W.

Dundee Christian Conference

THIS annual gathering of Christians took place last week, and, as on many previous occasions, was marked by much power on the part of the speakers, and corresponding blessing to the hearers. In view of recent attacks on Holy Scripture, it was thought fitting that attention should this year be drawn specially to the Master Himself. This choice was amply justified by the results, as many new and blessed aspects of our Lord's person and work were most profitably considered.

CHRISTS' INCARNATION.

Lord Kinnaird occupied the chair on Tuesday, and introduced Rev. D. M. McIntyre (Glasgow), who spoke on "The Incarnation of Jesus." This doctrine he characterized as the burden and glory of the Christian faith. It was the prelude to the Cross. He laid aside for a time the splendour and prerogatives of Deity, that he might reveal God to man.

The second address was given by Rev. J. McLean (Glasgow), who dealt with the theme of CHRIST'S HOLY LIFE.

This life has for us a negative and then a positive aspect. Negatively, He "knew no sin"; positively, He "went about doing good."

In the evening, Pastor Marsh (Sunderland) gave a closely reasoned address on the "Deity of Jesus." He is, indeed, the Son of God. His personality avowed it, His miracles attested it, His transfiguration acknowledged it, and His resurrection acclaimed it.

THE ATONEMENT AND RESURRECTION.

On Wednesday Mr. D. Keith Murray (Ochtertyre) presided. The first address was given by Rev. P. Wilson (Leith), on "The Atoning Death and Resurrection of Jesus." This theme, he said, has occasioned much controversy. Theories have been advanced and schools of thought formed by seemingly antagonistic views of it. Many a last word has been uttered on it; but the arrow is still beyond. The death of Jesus means the reconciliation of man to God. It provides salvation through an all-sufficient Saviour. The New Testament throbs with this teaching, and it is echoed in our best hymns. Why is this great truth not universally accepted? Because it is dimly understood by some, and misrepresented by others.

The resurrection of Jesus is linked to His death by a golden chain. It is a central, stupendous, and supernatural fact. It has an all-important bearing on God's plan for the Church and the world. God's universe is built on Resurrection lines. The Resurrection alters our view of death and the great hereafter, and it points forward to the coronation day of humanity.

CHRIST'S INTERCESSION.

Rev. J. McLean followed on "Christ's Intercession." We need an intercessor that we may obtain pardon, resist temptation, become holy, and persevere in grace. As our Advocate, Jesus is of unimpeachable character, is divinely appointed, is wise and skilful, and never lost a case.

In the evening Rev. P. Wilson continued the subject with an address on "Christ's Unsearchable Riches." These he spoke of as being found in His deity, His life, His death, and His grace.

SAVING AND KEEPING POWER.

On Wednesday, Dr. Ferguson (Kinmundy) presided, and Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie) gathered up the lessons of the previous address by speaking on "Christ's Saving and Keeping Power." The person and work of Jesus lead up to this. Theologians used to distinguish between Creation and Providence, but Providence is simply Creation work going on. So Christ's keeping is His saving work being completed. In social matters the cry for fixity of tenure is louder to-day than ever. There is something analogous to this in the spiritual life. We need something for the storm as well as the sunshine. Jesus keeps us not as machines, but as moral and spiritual beings, not as money in the safe, but as flowers in the garden. This is not restraint, but protection.

CHRIST'S COMING KINGDOM.

Rev. Dr. Robson (Perth) then spoke on "Christ's Coming Again." This great fact is not to be regarded as a mere item in the programme of future events, but as the most momentous epoch in the process of redemption. It terminates the opportunity of earthly service, and it marks the entrance of the saints into their complete reward. It is thus no licence to idle inaction, but a strong incentive to earnest work for Jesus.

Dr. Robson continued his subject in the evening, when, treating of "Christ's Kingdom," he showed that the missionary progress of to-day points to the rapid spread of the Gospel, and calls for an advance all along the line of Christian activity, that the Church may occupy the wide fields now open to the heralds of the cross as never before. Our God is marching on.

Bible League Conference.

A CONFERENCE in connection with the Bible League was held at Cardiff on Tuesday and Wednesday last week, taking the place of the usual quarterly meetings, which have been held for the past three years, for "The Deepening of the Spiritual Life."

Each day's conference was preceded by an early morning prayer meeting, when a goodly number gathered. The speakers were Pastor W. Fuller Gooch (hon. secretary of the Bible League), Rev. C. H. Waller, D.D. (late principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury); Rev. J. J. Cooper, Northampton; and Rev. H. B. Macartney, London.

Dr. Waller's address at the early morning prayer meeting on the first day, based upon the journey to Emmaus, was most helpful. In the afternoon, Rev. J. J. Cooper spoke upon "The Way-marks of Revelation in the Life of Abraham." In the evening the subjects were "The Bible under the Microscope," by Rev. H. B. Macartney; and "The Authority of the Holy Scriptures," by Pastor Fuller Gooch.

On the morning of the second day a Bible reading by Pastor Fuller Gooch on "The Word of God in its Relation to Spiritual Life;" in the afternoon Dr. Waller spoke on "The Testimony of the Bible to its Own Authorship," and in the evening his subject was "The Absolute Reliability of Holy Scripture on all Matters of which it Speaks." Rev. J. J. Cooper spoke on "The Seal of Inspiration in the Book of Isaiah," and Rev. H. B. Macartney closed the conference by an address on "The Bible Settled in Heaven."

An invitation was sent to every clergyman and minister in Cardiff and its vicinity, and many of them were present. Great was the expression of thankfulness that such a conference had been held, and the assurance given that the present condition of the churches, the worldly spirit and open avowal of disbelief on the part of professing Christians, fully show the importance of the work the Bible League has undertaken. It would be invidious to single out any one address as specially helpful to meet the objections of the honest doubter if one was competent for such. All were excellent and full of point and argument. The gratitude of Christendom is due to the good men who have banded themselves together to expose unfair criticism of the Word of God, thereby shaking the faith of unstable souls. R. S.

Martyrs Memorial for Bury St. Edmund's.—A movement is now on foot to erect a monument to the memory of the martyrs who laid down their lives at Bury St. Edmund's. About the middle of the 16th century there were no fewer than fifteen or sixteen confessors burned or hanged in the town. A representative committee has been formed, with the Mayor (Mr. Thomas Shillitoe) as president. The secretary is Mr. A. Hallam, Oakdene, Queen's Road.

Mr. J. A. Kensit's Sentence.

THE following Memorial to the Home Secretary has been adopted by the Church Association:—

To the Right Hon. Aretas Akers-Douglas, M.P.,
His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department.

The Memorial of the Council of the Church Association sheweth:—

That the imprisonment of Mr. J. A. Kensit for three months, for refusing to discontinue the holding of public meetings in the open-air, with a view to call public attention to the prevalence of Romanism and the continued growth of illegal practices among the clergy of the Established Church, is a very grave scandal, discrediting the magistracy of Liverpool, and constituting a serious menace to the liberty of free speech in this country.

That Mr. Kensit and the friends who act with him have addressed similar meetings again and again without any breach of the peace, and have obeyed the directions of the police or other authorities in every particular, short of altogether abandoning his constitutional right to hold such meetings.

That Professor Dicey, a recognised authority on constitutional law, has laid it down that the right of public meeting, where no breach of the peace is committed by those who hold it, is not taken away by the misconduct of others who seek, by clamour and violence, to break up and disturb such meetings; and that this right is one of the main safeguards of liberty in any free country.

That the police at Liverpool have never experienced any difficulty in preserving order at the meetings hitherto held, nor even at this very meeting, though an organized attack had evidently been pre-arranged by those who desired to stifle discussion on a subject of national importance.

That the public ventilation of this question of clerical lawlessness in the Established Church is the more needful, because the authorities in Church and State have not only neglected to use their undoubted power to check it, but have even refused access to the courts of justice when private individuals were willing to bear the expense of testing the legality of the practices complained of.

That the sentences inflicted on the persons who planned and executed the riot at Liverpool were trivial and merely nominal, while the demand that Mr. Kensit should be silent altogether for twelve months was unreasonably tyrannical, and indicative of the magistrate's personal animus in regard to Ritualism, rather than suited to the alleged offence.

That Mr. Stewart, though an officer of the law, has been previously complained of in the public press, for habitually frequenting a church in which the law of the Church and the rulings of the King's courts are notoriously and systematically violated.

That under these circumstances, it is submitted, it is the duty of the Executive to forthwith redress the wrong which has been done by so cruelly disproportionate and apparently vindictive a sentence as has been inflicted in this case.

Alex. W. Cobham.
Chairman of the Church Association.

Dear Sir,—The spread of Ritualism and Romanism amongst the class from which our magistrates are chiefly recruited is a danger to the Protestantism of our country. Civil and religious liberty cannot exist where sacerdotalism rules, and this enlightened Roman Catholics, like Mr. Michael J. F. Macarthy, keenly feel, and "Priests and People in Ireland" illustrates. Unless Protestants now exert themselves to bring pressure to bear on the Government to quash the iniquitous sentence on Mr. J. A. Kensit, we may expect little freedom to hold Protestant meetings or evangelistic services in many places.—Yours very truly, Charles S. King, Bt.
Corrard, Ulster.

Scripture Texts in Tram and 'Bus.—In spite of various difficulties, the quiet, useful work of the London Tramcar and Omnibus Scripture Text Mission continues to be carried on with gratifying results. Much headway is being made; but the 510 texts exhibited represent only one-sixth of the number of vehicles running. In order to attain the object of the Mission, and secure a place in every vehicle for well-chosen passages of God's Word, the committee are making an effort to raise the annual income of the society to £500. Providing this can be done, a friend has promised an annual subscription of £50. The blessing of God has attended these silent witnesses to His truth, which in many cases have had a permanent effect in checking a sinful purpose, inspiring hope, or giving spiritual comfort to travellers. The secretary is Miss G. L. Baily, 27, Charterhouse Square, E.C.

The Oxford Conference.

GLEANINGS BY REV. J. HILTON STOWELL.

PERSONAL RELIGION.

REV. E. H. TITCHMARSH, of Newbury: There is great poverty of religious life in our churches, much business and machinery, but little religion, little realisation that—

I'm the sinner
Whom Jesus came to save.

We are satisfied to have the Kingdom, and yet forget the King. Our service comes at an impulse of duty rather than of joy. We take up the cause of Christ, instead of recognising that Christ has captured us; we reach the level of "O Jesus, I have promised," but not Paul's experience as the bondslave of Christ. We want revival in a general uplift of the churches; in definite conviction as to the truth of Gospel; in restatement of doctrine if need be, so that men may be mastered by illumination, and not by intimidation—yet all must begin in the deepening of our own devotion.

What is needed is a revival of what Lecky describes, in his "Days of Christian Enthusiasm," as the early Christian's "intense, whole-hearted, deep-seated loyalty to the person of Christ."

DEVOTIONAL USE OF SCRIPTURE.

Principal FORBES JACKSON, M.A.: Sermons may destroy our own souls while we help the souls of others, if we ourselves be not ministered to as we handle the Word by the Spirit of God. Critical knowledge of the Bible must not be allowed to extinguish our love for the spirit of the Bible. May not a doctor know every bone and muscle and function in the anatomy of his own child, and still love the child? Less time may profitably be spent on the form of the sermon, if more is given to the soul of the preacher.

Rev. GEO. H. LEONARD, of Clifton Down: There is danger in deep study of the Bible in a wrong way, even in studying it as a mere quarry to dig from for sermons. Oliver Goldsmith wrote two volumes on Animated Nature, as "entertaining as a Persian tale," but really knew nothing himself of natural history; and so men may get the Bible up, and preach it "as entertaining as a Persian tale," and yet lose their own souls. The inspiration of the written Word is not of any avail unless there be inspiration in the heart of the reader:—

The Spirit which first gave thee forth
Thy message must reveal.

George Fox's "agreeing witness of the Spirit" comes to those who truly seek it. Then the old words suddenly yield more to us than ever we had seen before, the commonest words blaze with new meaning. "What was a speck becomes a star."

PREACHING TO PRODUCE CONVERSION AND HOLINESS.

Dr. NEWTON H. MARSHALL, of New Barnet: The preacher needs definite conviction as to his own conversion, if he is to produce conversion in others. Yet we are to preach not ourselves, but Christ. And the awfulness of sin must be given its full place. The preacher must persuade by all means, even by appeal to prejudice and fear and self-love, if higher motives fail. It is useless to appeal to feelings that don't exist; we must appeal to those that do, and the higher motives often come only as a result of the change.

Rev. J. D. CARNEGIE, of Leicester: In our unsurrendered, or partially surrendered, will lies the chief obstacle.

Rev. W. GRIFFITHS, of Upwey: It is as difficult to raise a Christian to the higher level of holiness, as it is to make a convert at all.

REV. J. LEACH, of Oxford, said he became a minister in order to convert men to God, and when he ceased to convert he would give up. There is a wicked sentence going about the world, doing no end of mischief, hindering conversion: "God's good time." God's good time is always now. It is possible to be too fastidious about methods. You may stand ankle deep in mud to watch a leather hunt, but if you are to bring sinners to God the spectators are full of anxiety that you shall do it nicely.

THE PASTOR'S LIFE: ITS SOURCE OF POWER.

Rev. H. J. TAYLOR, of Liverpool: Two words from New Testament show this—not I but Christ, and I press toward the mark. This age needs the sense of certainty about Jesus Christ. Only conviction convicts; certain knowledge is certain power.

Rev. G. H. LEONARD, of Clifton Down: The pastor is to be a man sympathetic towards every human interest of his flock, asking not only where they are to spend eternity, but where they are to spend Monday evening, and Tuesday, and Wednesday. In visiting, to be faithful he must find openings to talk straight. It was good advice once given, "Remember that people can read the Bible for themselves, and your time is precious, so don't in every case read, but pray. And especially with invalids remember to add the Lord's Prayer, in which they often desire to join with you, however feebly."

Rev. J. SCRUTON, of Scunthorpe, was converted at fourteen, and never forgot the lesson of those first wayside words: "Dost thou ever pray, ma lad? There's nowt like a bit o' prayer."

THE HOLY SPIRIT IN OUR EXPERIENCE.

Rev. ARTHUR DANN, of St. Ives: If we are to speak with authority, we must be under authority.

Rev. WILL REASON, M.A., of New Southgate: It is sometimes difficult to distinguish what is of self from what is of the Spirit, and we are apt to think the Holy Spirit absent unless some extraordinary influence comes. Yet the Divine is manifested in the commonest, and the sign of the Holy Spirit is not marvel, but character and quality and witness-bearing.

INTERCESSORY AND PREVAILING PRAYER.

Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL, M.A., of Brighton, in the presidential sermon on John xiv. 14: "If ye ask Me anything in My name, I Myself will do it." To speak in a person's name is to speak as that person would speak. At one time it was no plagiarism to write a book in another person's name; it was a compliment to the person in whose name it was written. A fellowship is begotten in us with Christ in His work; and, as ministers, intercession is our duty as stewards of the mysteries of God. So for others the duty lies as heads of families, and masters in business. The slums cry out against the stewards of house property. Do not souls cry out against us as stewards of the mysteries of God? There is no true prayer without its answer, and an immediate answer it is, to faith, as well as in some cases a deferred answer. There is a change in the one who prays, if not in his circumstances. It is the voice of the mother soothing the cry of the child before even hearing the story of its trouble. The answer will be bigger than the prayer.

THE CROSS AS THE PRINCIPLE OF REDEMPTION.

Rev. J. BELL JOHNSTON, of Plymouth: Redemption must be carried out in love, and all love implies pain, sorrow, and sacrifice. The cross stands for the last revelation of God's nature—a life, a death, a risen life. Christ's life was a walk to the cross, the centre; then from that cross light streamed and new life. Remorse does not sorrow for sin, but for self. The cross turns remorse into repentance.

Rev. T. DAY THOMPSON, of Aintree: Keep to the old phrases, and to the new as well, to suit the diversities of those we address. Negroes because of their slavery are filled with ideas of deliverance from bondage; colliers know the bottomless pit; coke-burners understand the burning fire; men who have been possessed of devils understand devils.

Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL: The concern of this doctrine is not so much with use of old phrases or new, but in dealing with one's own experience, and taking to men the supernal fact as one knows it. The variety of the application of this truth is great. Some who come to Christ have not been in that far country, and we must not invent evils for them. The redemptive work of Christ is applicable on their plane of life without that.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

LLANELLY.

THE visit of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY to Llanelly, though only of two days' duration, has left a deep impression upon the minds of those who were privileged to hear him, while the deep earnestness which characterized his addresses, together with his fervid eloquence, will not easily be forgotten by them. Our only regret is that we could not retain him for a week or more, for it is certain that in such a time he would create enthusiasm in the lives of those abstainers who are now standing idly looking on at the fight, and would win a large number of converts for total abstinence. We feel confident that another visit of this renowned temperance divine would be a boon to our town, and we anxiously look forward to arrangements being made for a second visit.

Dr. Henry's magnificent address at the closing meeting on Tuesday night at Zion Chapel, to a gathering of about 1,100 persons, was worthy of the intense warmth with which it was received, the meeting culminating in an after assembly of abstaining Free Church ministers, who have decided upon organizing the temperance work in the town.

The mission has resulted in sixty-eight pledges, but this is not the measure by which it should be judged, for the success is far greater than can be computed by figures.

BENJ. WILLIAMS.

DUNFERMLINE.

A series of meetings at Dunfermline was begun by Dr. Henry on Thursday last, when, in the afternoon, school children were assembled in St. Margaret's Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Burt, the Chairman of the School Board. Dr. Henry graphically told "The Story of a Wolf Hunt," and expressed his strong desire to see a determined attack by old and young upon that which is so destructive to the best interests of human beings. In the evening, to an attentive and sympathetic audience in the United Free Abbey Church, Dr. Henry pleaded for active Temperance effort on the part of the Christian churches. The chair was taken by Rev. James Foote. On Friday, Rev. Alex. Maclennan presiding, Dr. Henry gave an address on "The Unification of Christian Sentiment;" contending that the public sentiment of Dunfermline should be moulded and built up by the local Christian church; and concluded with an earnest appeal to sign the pledge. Mr. T. Armon Jones sang very effectively, at the evening meetings.

EDINBURGH.

Dr. Henry was the principal speaker on Saturday last, at the weekly Gospel temperance meeting connected with the Carrubbers Close Mission. Mr. G. A. Barclay presided.

On the Sabbath, Dr. Henry preached in the forenoon and evening to crowded congregations in United Free St. George's Church, (which has for its joint pastors Rev. Alex. Whyte, D.D., and Rev. Hugh Black, M.A.). In the forenoon he took as his subject the "Redemption of the City." He held that the awful demoralization now existing in our great cities, and so manifestly exhibited during the past week in Edinburgh, through the habit and traffic in strong drink, would have to be faced and overcome if our modern cities were to be saved from the judgment which had fallen on great centres of population in bygone days. In the evening his theme was "Enthusiasm for God," a call to the Church to get back to fundamental truths, faith in the inspiration of the Bible, an abounding personal love to Christ, and a realization of the priceless value of the human soul.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Sept. 26-Oct. 1, Alloa; Oct. 2, Alva: 3, Dollar; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Waterford; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 27-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn; 31-Feb. 6, Newton Abbot; 7-13, Neath; 14-20, Reading; 21-27, Sunderland; 28-Mar. 6, Middlesbrough; 7-13, Dundee; 14-20, Stirling; 21-April 3, Falkirk.

Work in Spitalfields.

ONE of the best known veterans in ragged-school enterprise is Mr. Charles Montague, the hon. superintendent of the King Edward Institute and Mission, Spitalfields. The two large stations of his many-sided mission represent a very remarkable development of work, which was commenced in the very humblest manner, first in the small room of a cottage, and next in a disused stable which was opened by Lord Ashley in the forties. On September 4, four hundred of the poor people celebrated the King's Coronation in a befitting way, and sent a telegram to His Majesty congratulating him on his recovery.

The general work continues to go forward with success all round, the results being in all respects encouraging. The new report shows that the Sunday-schools have an average of 1,500 children and young people; and several of the senior scholars have become communicants. The Bible-classes show a record quite as encouraging, for many who have been instructed in them learn themselves to engage in Christian work. There is a Christian Band for mutual instruction, strengthening, and edification. A Bible Reading Association has between four and five hundred members, and, though this is chiefly made up of young people, parents have in some instances also joined in the daily reading with their families. In addition to the regular Sunday services for adults, there are separate services for children; while teachers and senior scholars have their own prayer-meetings. The children's services are specially encouraging. The industrial classes, by means of which girls become sufficiently accomplished to cut out material and make up their own dresses, confer a great boon, not only on the girls themselves, but on the families to which they belong. The same may be said of the cookery lessons, these being conducted by a County Council teacher, who shows how the most may be made of even the slender provision of the poor by careful management. Boys also have the privilege of attending classes at which various handicrafts are taught. It is a many-sided work, but the Gospel is ever to the front. The Gospel alone seems to have wonderful power in the way of improving the temporal condition of the poor.

Christmas Letter Mission.

THE numerous helpful publications of the Christmas Letter Mission are as valuable as ever. The work, which originated with the printing of a few letters, to be placed on the pillows of the sick in hospitals, has now extended to a varied annual issue of illustrated letters suitable for all classes.

Last Christmas some London tram-car men said, "It is the only bit of Christmas we see," and many begin speaking of the letters in June. One London City missionary who visits in public houses distributed several hundred letters, and found one pinned up on the wall as a reminder of better things, while a duplicate was asked for that it might be sent to Australia.

The work of the C.L.M. must be done by many workers. Just now every county secretary is looking anxiously around for a friend willing to supply the inmates of some workhouse, hospital, or other institution with letters. Others may help by purchasing letters to distribute personally to their Bible-classes or to the sick. Postmen, policemen, and cabmen will all be glad to receive them, and the message of salvation contained in each may be the means of bringing joy and peace to some sinful, sorrowing heart.

Offers of co-operation will be thankfully received by Miss E. Thornton, Eastfield House, Broxbourne, Herts, hon. organizing secretary. Sample packets may be had for three stamps from Messrs. Hazell, Watson, and Viney, Limited, 52, Long Acre, W.C.

For the Winter Evenings.—Secretaries of societies which have for their object the education and recreation of the people are often at a loss to provide a continuous programme of entertainments and lectures. To meet this need, Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode (Great New Street, London, E.C.) come forward, as usual, with a scheme of new high-class lantern lectures, provided at a nominal cost, particulars of which they will forward on receipt of stamped envelope.

For Merchant Seamen.

THE Queen Victoria Seamen's Rest at Poplar, so called by consent of His Majesty the King, is now almost completed. The Princess Louise and the Duke of Argyll have consented to open the building early in November. The Institute has been erected to meet the growing demands of the work of the Seamen's Mission, established in 1843, with the object of promoting the social, moral, and spiritual welfare of men in the merchant service, of all nationalities and denominations, who frequent the port of London.

The Institute occupies an ideal site, being immediately opposite the sailors' entrance to the Board of Trade offices in East India Dock Road, where ships' crews are engaged and paid off. Accommodation is provided for men of various ranks, with sleeping apartments, reading, recreation, and refreshment rooms, and every comfort required by sailors when ashore. The buildings include a block of model dwellings, to be let at a moderate rental, for the use primarily of sailors' families. Seamen will have the satisfaction of leaving their families to some extent in the care of the mission workers. There is also a settlement for young men, provision having been made for the residence of those willing to render voluntary service to this Mission in their spare time. This will prove a source of moral strength and support, and a great boon to young men who desire a good home with the opportunity to engage in Christian work.

The total cost of this great undertaking will be at least £14,000, towards which £6,000 is still required to complete it free of debt. Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, has kindly provided the cost of the Large Assembly Hall; and Rev. T. E. Marsh, of South Africa, has provided a suite of rooms in the model dwellings. Further particulars of the undertaking may be had from the superintendent and secretary, Rev. David Roe, 18, Stainsby Road, Poplar, E.

Hadleigh Colony.

THE ratepayers of London owe General Booth no small debt. The wastrels who are being metamorphosed into real citizens would otherwise be living, many of them, at the expense of those who already bear a heavy burden of taxation.

At Hadleigh the Salvationists are reclaiming both the colonists and the colony; the men and the land are to-day evidences of the sagacity of the officers, who looked to the wilds of Essex as the "promised land" of outcast London. The colony is well and flourishing, and doing a work every whit as important as that of any over-sea dependency.

While, in common with other farmers, the Army has suffered this year with its corn and fruit, a very good all-round result has been secured. The orchards bore well earlier in the season, and the poultry farm has to-day no fewer than 3,000 to 4,000 birds in the runs. Prize-winners there are not a few, and the officer in command of the fowls exhibits a justifiable pride in the excellent condition of the department. The market gardens and nurseries are able to furnish all Southend with vegetables and flowers; while as for pigs, cattle, and sheep, the colony can now make a brave show.

A glance round Hadleigh reveals a wonderful system of procedure, and the place is, in one respect, Utopian, seeing that money is unknown. Tokens are given in exchange for labour, and these in their turn will secure either food or raiment, as may be desired.

With 250 colonists to provide for, the officer at the dining hall has a lion's share of work to perform. It is no uncommon occurrence to find him at duty for sixteen hours on end, and the food, though necessarily plain, is invariably good and wholesome.

Many a man has to thank the colony for a re-start in life, and, in a number of cases, for the blessings of a newly-learned trade. This has enabled him to take his place on the social ladder many rungs higher than the "casual" level on which he had hitherto been compelled to stand, amid a swarm of hungry competitors.

Mount Hermon Orphanage.

YOU will remember that in February last I wrote to inform you of the very sudden home-call of my beloved mother, Mrs. Mary Ann Parry, who for some twenty-five years had, with much love and devotion, cared for the orphan children at 55, Cambridge Avenue, Kilburn, N.W.; and also to ask for the prayers of God's people that someone might be raised up to carry on the work on the same lines of faith, and prayer, and spiritual desire. Mrs. and Miss Thomson have been approved by our trustees, and are now resident honorary superintendents; while I retain my connection with the homes for another year as honorary director.

I hope to hand over the entire management to Mrs. and Miss Thomson in October, and also to be able to do this with a balance on the right side of the accounts. Funds have been coming in very slowly during the summer. This may be partly accounted for by the delay in issuing the yearly report, which we delayed till definite information could be given as to the future management. (Mrs.) Mary P. Harris.

From Our Readers.

Books for Continental Hotels.

SIR,—I have returned to England after a summer holiday spent in France and Switzerland, with one fact deeply impressed upon my mind, viz., the need of good, wholesome Christian literature in hotels. One hotel at which I stayed possessed a few novels, but in the others there was absolutely no literature whatever except guide books.

I feel sure that a great work might be done in this direction, if a society were formed to supply every hotel on the Continent, at the commencement of the season, with a parcel of attractive Christian literature for the use of tourists—marked "not to be taken away." I am certain it would be much appreciated, for tourists seldom carry books with them, and would, on wet days and Sundays, eagerly welcome "something to read." It would be a means of influencing many who are not in the habit of subscribing to or reading religious magazines and papers.

I would suggest that each parcel should contain a French, German, Italian, and English Bible, for the Bible is conspicuous by its absence in hotel salons abroad. Surely it would not be difficult to start a society for this purpose, and many of your readers would be willing to help in supporting it. There is time to have the work well organized before the next summer season comes round.—Yours faithfully,

An Irishwoman.

"Heart Searchings of the Home."

DEAR SIR,—On this subject allow me to relate an incident:—

"A lady sat by the fireside toasting her little slippers. The flickering flame showed a pleasant smile on her face. 'What are your thoughts?' asked her companion. 'I am recollecting a pleasant experience.' 'May I know it?' 'Certainly! It may be of benefit to others. I went to call on a friend yesterday whom I have not seen since her wedding day, though she has been married for now about twelve years. Her husband was in business, and her children at school, so we had a long chat. On being asked to stay to dinner, I accepted.

"'When the children came home, my friend and they disappeared. Some preparations seemed to be going on. Did they expect company? I felt rather annoyed at this thought, for I wished to see my friend in her family circle. Presently the children reappeared in smart frocks, hair and everything daintily arranged. The front door opened and they ran out of the room. There was a bustle in the vestibule owing, as I supposed, to the arrival of some guests. On entering the dining-room, however, I found the family by themselves. My friend looked charming in her dainty gown and pleasant ways. The signs of weariness in her husband's face soon disappeared, as she related to him some amusing incidents of the day. The children joined in. It was an animated conversation, and the happiest meal I have had for many years.

"'I could not help congratulating my friend on the happy evening. She seemed astonished, 'Why, we are always like that. We do not lay out any more amiability for others than we do for ourselves. Everyone tries to do his best to please others.'

"May this not be the secret of how to make home the most attractive place to a tired man, in fact, to any man?"—Yours, &c., Another Thinker.

Grace and Its Fruit.*

By Rev. WILLIAM TODD, Inverness.

GRACE is one of the great words of the New Testament. It would be well if it were more on the lips of God's people; and if, in their ordinary familiar greetings of each other, it were more heard. With this word begin several of the Epistles, and with this word the Book of Revelation ends. We are so accustomed to it that its meaning loses its freshness in our eyes, as the coin which is frequently handled gets its inscription partly rubbed off, and becomes somewhat illegible. Oh, that we could feel the force of the word as they did who first received it from Christ, and were put in the way of using it! The importance of the subject appears from the fact that the word occurs 155 times in the New Testament.

THE AROMA OF THE GOSPEL.

I. Consider what grace is. It is something in God that that gives joy to God and man. The Greek word is etymologically connected with that for "joy," and with the conception of "beauty." There is a profound significance in these three thoughts being associated together. The three graces were three types of beauty. In this word God enshrines the aroma and crystallizes the essence of the Gospel. The religion of which this is the keynote must be a religion of joy. It ought to give a man a winsomeness and charm, and fill his life with joy. When Rabbi Duncan was in one of his melancholy moods, he fell to crooning a lullaby of Greek Scripture texts, all of which contained the word grace (charis), when in a moment it struck him, "Why the word means 'joy'" (chara). He felt it was God's way of rebuking him for his want of joy, and at once his soul rose on the wing, saying, "Shall I deny God His joy, in refusing the joy He gives me?" Grace is not quite the same as love. It is love travelling beyond its ordinary bounds, stooping to those who do not deserve it. It is love spontaneous, bountiful, unearned, doing its work in Jesus Christ for the salvation of sinners, pouring itself out in a great flood of passion, and finding infinite delight and full reward in seeing the joy of the saved.

WORDS NOT OFTEN MENTIONED.

II. We need this grace. It is not one of the common wants about which men naturally speak. We do not hear it mentioned in ordinary society. It is not brought before our attention in the world. And why? Because sin is not mentioned. Crimes and miseries are noticed, but not sin. Sin and grace alike share this neglect on the part of men. It is where sin is felt and spoken about, that grace is magnified. Where sin abounds, there (in a slightly different sense from that which the Apostle intended) grace much more abounds. The tendency of the world is to minimize and extenuate sin. How can any reader of Scripture allow himself to do this, when he remembers the strong terms by which Scripture describes man's condition as a sinner? Sin dwells in him. This implies that he has opened the door of his heart, and allowed sin to become an inmate. Also sin reigns in him. It is not only a guest in the house, but it is his master, and a cruel tyrant withal. Further, he is dead in sin, and has become a mere implement in the hand of the devil for evil. This is God's arraignment of man, and the true nature of sin. Even the saved sinner needs grace day by day. There must be a continuous reception, a constantly felt need of it. But you must remember that a self-righteous spirit will tend to keep back the river of grace from flowing into your heart. For it always comes in the line of least resistance, visiting the humble, the broken in heart, the bankrupt in character. You will not get grace according to the riches of it, unless you come with feelings in accordance with your poverty.

THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS.

III. Some measure of graciousness ought to be seen and felt in every Christian. Winsomeness, beauty of soul, a gracious walk, a gracious charm in the character — this is necessarily accompanied by real practical goodness. The Christian must be zealous of good works. Objectors said in Paul's day that grace so freely given would lead to careless living. This he boldly denies, appealing to the experience of all believers, in whom grace powerfully restrains all sinful tendencies, and to the facts of actual history, for most of the good in the world is done by Christians. The accredited exponents of religion in Christ's day professed to give peace to those who observed certain rites. Jesus spoke of grace freely given, and powerfully working towards holiness without ritualistic efforts of ours. Some counsel you by saying, "Amend your ways. Leave your idols." Others say, "You are lost and beaten, but we will show you how to get help from God." But what God in the Gospel says to you is, "Come to Me in your forlornness. It is more than help that you need. I will pardon you and renew you, and qualify you for holy living and active usefulness." The world will never forget that memorable night when the little Methodist Society met in Aldersgate Street, London, and a passage in the Epistle to the Romans was expounded, and John Wesley "at a quarter to nine o'clock felt his heart warmed" on hearing that faith alone would do all he needed for salvation. From that small source flowed the great river of Methodism. How much we need a revival of interest in that great subject and that great word, Grace!

Gideon's Fleece.*

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

THE fleece was drenched when all around was dry, and dry when all around was drenched—a picture of what Christian workers should be. Drenched with that of which the world knows nothing, and dry to that with which the world is drenched. On the one hand we are to be open to spiritual impressions to which others are strangers, and on the other hand to be dead to worldly influences which others feel. Be sublimely alive to God and dead to the world.

This principle was applied (1) to the Scriptures. How dry to others, yet we may read and meditate upon them until our fleece is saturated with celestial dew. If we go through the Interpreter's house with the Interpreter, how much we shall have revealed to us. Only thus do we learn truth for the heart and the life. Not truth alone, but truth with God in it, is the power. Truth alone saves no man. We must preach truth with power.

(2) To our supplications—that is, the prayer that prepares for prayer. Much of our praying is valueless, because we rush into the presence of God too thoughtlessly. A quiet season of waiting until our fleece is saturated is needful for true praying. In Matt. vi. 6 is our Lord's direction for secret prayer. In that verse alone does the second personal pronoun occur seven times. This is the more remarkable, as our Lord evidently quotes from Isaiah, "Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers." Meet God alone. The presence of another destroys closet prayer. Absolute candour is possible only when we are alone with Him. Take time to realize the Divine presence until the soul is quieted.

(3) To our ministry. Ours is a sacred calling; and every man called to the ministry should be an explorer in the Divine Word. He may discover for himself what no one else has seen. The thought and even the expression of it may be from God. Some utterances are like inspired messages, as when Geo. Müller said, "Where faith begins, anxiety ends; and where anxiety begins, faith ends." What could be truer or more forcibly expressed than the statement, "When we stop bleeding, we stop blessing." If you succeed and do not suffer, it is because someone else has suffered before you; if you suffer and do not succeed, it is in order that someone may succeed after you. Watch against anything that destroys fellowship, and seek in fellowship that passion for souls which is the great lack of to-day. Spread the fleece until it is saturated.

* Notes of an address before the Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union.

(4) To the heart. Divine affections must first be bestowed before they can be cultivated. A flower has form, colour, and fragrance. Men can make the first and impart the second, but fragrance is God's gift. Love is the fragrance of the soul, and is God's gift. Being given, then, it can be cultivated.

The Late Mr. E. C. Newbery.

THE home-call came on September 18 to Mr. E. C. Newbery, of Nice, so well known for many years in connection with evangelistic work among the Italian population of the Riviera. He was born at Siena, Italy, his mother being Italian and his father English. In 1856 the family removed to Nova Scotia, and it was in St. John, New Brunswick, that Mr. Newbery realised his acceptance with God through the atonement of Christ. In a brief autobiographical tract, Mr. Newbery wrote: "The first Christian paper I ever read was The Christian, and the first number I saw had an account of Miss Carruthers' work at Pisa, Italy. The Spirit at once created a desire in my heart to go to my own land, and the words, shortly after, 'Return to thine house, and tell what great things God hath done for thee,' were rivetted to my heart by the Holy Spirit."

Mr. Newbery was subsequently attached to Rev. W. C. Van Meter's work in Rome, where he gave himself largely to itinerant evangelization and to distributing Gospel literature. For the first eight years of his career in Italy he helped various denominations, labouring principally at Venice, Naples, and other important centres. He then settled down on the Riviera, where he took halls and opened missions, both in France and Italy. Plentiful distributions of Gospels and tracts, from Genoa to Cannes, were the means of opening up the way for meetings in private houses, cafés, and restaurants; much prayer was made, and souls were won. Very many copies of the New Testament and of Scripture portions were distributed by Mr. Newbery, who attached the highest value to the dissemination of the printed Word. "The entrance of Thy Word giveth light." An esteemed friend writes:—"He had been suffering for more than two years from an incurable internal disease; but in spite of much pain and weakness had, almost to the last, continued preaching, and doing the work to which he felt specially called of God, viz., 'the sowing of the eternal seed,' in all directions, but particularly among Italians, whom he was peculiarly fitted to reach. Mr. Newbery leaves a wife, who has worked bravely with her husband for the last twelve years, and three children."

North London Convention.

THE North London Convention opened with promise of rich blessing on Sunday morning last, when Rev. J. Stuart Holden gave a powerful message on the different names given to the followers of Christ, in the Acts of the Apostles. "All that believed"—it is a blessed thing to be a believer, but let us take heed what we believe. Brethren and disciples came next, and lastly saints. At the evening service, which was crowded, he spoke on the "Restoration of the Backslider" (Hos. xiv.).

The Monday afternoon gathering was opened by an address by Rev. E. W. Moore, on "Building for God," and in the evening Mr. Holden spoke on "Thou has left Thy first love." The power of God has been very manifest already, and many are looking for a week of rich blessing. Prayer is asked for these gatherings, which close on Friday evening.

To Promote Study of the Reformation.—The Sunday at Home announces the formation of a Protestant Study Circle, with a view to promoting the study of the history and principles of the Reformation. Prizes of the value of £30 will be given. The text books recommended are "Beckett's Reformation in England," and Dr. C. H. H. Wright's "Primer of Roman Catholicism." Particulars of the Circle and competition are given in the September number.

Heathen Burning their Idols.

THE population of the diocese of Western Equatorial Africa, over which Bishop Tugwell presides, is thirty-five millions. The known languages spoken are sixteen. The inhabitants are either heathen or Mohammedan, the Hausas being among the most interesting of the peoples. Already two devoted Englishmen have laid down their lives in the attempt to carry the Gospel into their country.

The people themselves express desire for Christian teachers. They are possessed of a remarkable literature, many of their songs breathing a lofty spirit of self-renunciation, but, like all Moslem writings, they fail to point out any source of power by means of which the precept may become practice, and the people themselves are sunk in degradation and sin of every kind. Yet among the Hausas, as among the heathen, the power of the Gospel is being felt. Like Dagon the idols are falling, as step by step the Gospel penetrates into the Dark Continent.

A native clergyman was visiting a certain heathen village named Ugbolo, near Asaba, on the Niger, where an African convert had daily for about a year gathered the people together, and taught them the Gospel story. They listened to the visitor with marked attention, and as the address drew to a close he saw that the impression made was very great. "His words," they said, as he ended, "were very good—would he build them a church and send a teacher?"

He pointed to the idol houses all around. "Who," he asked, "has built these?" "Our young men," was the answer.

"I cannot build you a church," the teacher replied; "you have built these for your idols and you must build the house for the true God." They saw the force of this method of reasoning. "But," the teacher continued, "that is not enough. Our God is a jealous God. He must have the whole worship, the whole heart—the idols must be destroyed." Then they shook their heads. "Christian teacher," they said, "your words are too strong"; they went sadly away.

One man, however, remained behind, and when all had left he came up to the teacher and said, "Come with me to my house and burn my idols." The heart of the Christian rejoiced. "But," he said, "are you willing to give up your idols and to have them burned publicly?" The man replied in the affirmative.

"Then, in the evening, when all have returned from the farm, I will come and we will burn them." In the evening the whole village assembled. The teacher entered the man's house, and then reappeared carrying the idols. A large fire had been lighted and after a few earnest words the idols were consigned to the flames. There was an awe-stricken silence. Then a man approached the teacher and said, "Come to my house and burn my idols also." Another came up with the same words, until fifteen of the villagers had invited him to destroy their gods.

You can well imagine how grateful and glad the faithful missionary was to see such an encouraging response to his message. Does it not remind us of God's promise that "His word shall not return unto Him void"? But it was a great test of the people's sincerity, and I hope you are as sincere in your Christian profession. Remember that anything that you love better than God, and are unwilling to give up for His sake, is your idol, even though you live in this happy Christian land. Uncle Tom.

Disappointments.

NO doubt each one of you knows what it is to be disappointed. You dislike disappointments very much. I have never forgotten one I had when I was about twelve years of age. I was to go and stay for my holidays with my grandmother, and to travel in the train by myself; we had to drive all across London to get to the railway station, and my father went with me to see me safely off. Owing to being hindered by the carts, &c., in the City, when we arrived at the station the train had started. Oh, what a sad heart I had during that hour's ride back home, even though father said, "Never mind, you shall go to-morrow!"

We have all had lately a great national disappointment in the illness of our King and the postponement of the Coronation. God teaches His children lessons by the disappointments He sends; He thus reminds us that He is the King of Kings, and nothing can go on without His Sovereign Will. We need to trust all our plans more to Him, and say, "If the Lord will we shall both live, and do this or that" (James iv. 15).

But I want you to think most of all about the disappointments God gets, and that He does not like to be disappointed any more than you and I do. The good God made this beautiful world, and placed man in it, hoping to get glory to His great name; but the people became so wicked that in Gen. vi. 6, 7 we read that God was sorry that He had made men at all, and He had to destroy all but one family by a flood. Was not that a disappointment?

Then, later on, after the Lord Jehovah had chosen one nation to keep the knowledge and love of Him in the world, and they rebelled against Him, how bitterly He was disappointed is shown by a beautiful little story which you can read in Isaiah v. 1-7. You hear it in His sad tones as He says, "What more could I have done . . . . that I have not done?"

Then again in Matt. xxi. 33-42, we have one of the Lord Jesus' parables, telling us how God even sent His Son to try and save the poor sinning world; but, alas! even that did not do, and the heart of God was more grieved and disappointed than ever before.

Now, dear young friends, will you ask yourselves the question, "Am I disappointing God?" We often disappoint our fathers and mothers and friends, but how much worse is it to grieve and disappoint our loving Heavenly Father! He has given His well-beloved Son to be our Saviour, but do we love Him as we ought? He has given us His blessed Spirit to help us, but do we let Him take full possession of our hearts? He has given us work to do for Him in this world, but are we doing our best for Him, to show to others what a great and glorious God He is? Oh, it is a blessed thing never to disappoint our God.

Perhaps you would like to know that the word "disappoint" only comes three times in our Bibles, and in the three middle books, Job, Psalms, and Proverbs. In Job v. 12 we are told that "God disappoints the devices of the crafty," so that though they plan to do great things, their hands can do nothing worth anything. So if we are God's children we need not fear what wicked men will do. Psa. xvii. 13 is David's cry to God when he was surrounded by enemies who wanted to kill him.

And Prov. xv. 22 is just what so many of us need to remember, when we think we can do great things by ourselves without asking advice from those who know better than we do. "Our purposes are disappointed." Shall we determine that we will listen to God's voice and take His counsel, so that our lives may not be a disappointment and a failure?

Missionary Heroism. Acts xvi. 19-34.

THE story of this outburst of popular hatred against Paul and Barnabas might have been written in China during the late persecutions, though perhaps the mobs there were even more lawless, and were not content with bringing the missionaries of the cross before the magistrates, but in many cases took the matter into their own hands.

The gaoler seems to have been brutalized and coarsened by long contact with the worst of men, and by the cruel methods of Oriental punishment. He had no difficulty whatever in sleeping soundly, though he had done nothing to wash the bleeding backs of the two Jews who had been suddenly handed to his safe keeping. He cast them into the inner prison, which probably enough had no aperture to the open air, was reeking with filth, and on the bare ground of which, amid odious creeping things, the two men were obliged to lie.

It was a dolorous position indeed. To get into an Oriental prison to-day is to run the risk of never getting out again; to have received many stripes from the rods of Roman lectors would leave the skin of the back torn to ribbons. To be in the inner prison was to be in contact with the foulest and most repellent circumstances, and to have the feet stretched wide in the stocks would entail sore suffering from a posture that strained the muscles unmercifully. Yet, notwithstanding all, the two prisoners were singing. Notice that the tense which describes their songs is the imperfect. It was not a single burst of song, but a continuous melody, only broken by earnest prayer. "They were praying and singing hymns unto God, and the prisoners were listening" (v. 25, R.V.).

What were they singing? Probably such Psalms as ii., cvii., cxxx. Caged birds can sing; hands and feet may be fast, but the tongue can yet yield itself to sweet strains of joy. There was no weakness in these earliest missionaries, but heroism, steadfastness of courage, buoyancy of heart. As Paul taught his converts to do, they sang and made melody in their hearts unto the Lord, giving thanks always for all things (Eph. v. 19, 20).

It is a good thing to cultivate joy as one of the rarest and choicest fruits of the Spirit. Dr. Dale noted against himself that he had been too moody and gloomy in his home-life. Let us all see to it that we make the happiest we can of life. There is so much anxiety and pain around us that we should endeavour to lighten it at all costs to ourselves. Nothing so absolutely astonishes the man of the world, or so strongly authenticates our religion, as the presence of joy when our circumstances are difficult and depressing. Joy often wells up like fountains of fresh water amid the salt brine of the ocean, and when it does so it arrests attention and compels admiration.

It was this joy that arrested the gaoler, probably equally with the earthquake. He felt that God must be near to produce such results. This is the kind of stuff that makes the best missionaries—men and women who rejoice in tribulation, and who fulfil the marvellous description of 2 Cor. iv. 7-15. Oh, that some who read these words may become missionaries of that type. The Church and the world know such when they offer themselves; and one may almost say that everything is at a standstill till the Church can pour forth floods of such consecrated, joyous, holy souls for the evangelization of mankind.

It was a daunting experience that Europe's first greeting to the Apostle should be of such a nature. The man of Macedonia, who invited the Apostle in his dreams, said nothing about this experience of the gaol. But it was all part of the plan by which God would test the quality of the first missionaries, and would give a speaking example of the way in which His Gospel would succeed. The corn of wheat must fall into the ground and die if it were not to abide alone. Through prisons, chains, and shameful scourging the Gospel was to win its noblest trophies.

See the effect of it on the gaoler. What a change God's Spirit wrought on his character. Instead of the brutality which had characterized him, he became gentle and humble. Faith in the Lord Jesus not only led to the confession of baptism, but to works meet for repentance.

Joshua Encouraged (Joshua i. 1-11.)

Golden Text (Joshua i. 9).

OSHEA, the son of Nun, was of the tribe of Ephraim (Num. xiii. 8). According to Eastern custom, following Gen. xvii. 5-15, his name was changed when he took special public office (Num. xiv. 16)—Jehoshua, "Saviour," "God's salvation," significant of the service he was to render for the people, and which typified those of our Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. iv. 8, with v. 8, 9, name used for Joshua in Acts vii. 45; Heb. iv. 8). Joshua was brought into prominence—

1st—As spy, true, faithful, brave, rewarded (Num. xiv. 30).

2nd—As official attendant on the great leader (Ex. xxiv. 13).

3rd—As consecrated suecessor to Moses (Num. xxvii. 18-23).

4th—As commissioned leader (Deut. xxxi. 7, 8).

5th—As commanded of the Lord to lead Israel (Josh. i. 2).

6th—As divider, with Eleazar, of the Land of Promise. An interesting fact is shown in 1 Chron. vii. 28—that by a distinct curve in the boundary line Nazareth was included in Joshua's possessions.

Joshua's Training.

(1) Born a slave, reared in bondage, forty-four years.

(2) Forty years' experience in the wilderness teaching, but as the most part of that period was spent in close attendance on the prophet, Joshua had better opportunity than any other man of seeing the inner workings of Jehovah's plans for His people.

(3) At eighty-four, specially endued with power and wisdom for his life work, and minutely instructed by his chief (Deut. xxxiv. 9).

Joshua's Qualifications.

(1) The teaching of the Spirit (Num. xxvii. 18).
(2) The strong faith of a man of God.
(3) The faithful heart of a loyal servant.
(4) The soul of a dauntless soldier.
(5) The constancy of a friend and comrade (Joshua xiv. 6).
(6) The courage of a man. Would stand up for the right by his comrade's side when all else were opposed and death threatened (Num. xiv. 6).
(7) The hopefulness of faith, which believes in God's power above and behind all difficulties (Num. xiv. 9).

The task was most difficult (2 Cor. ii. 16).

(1) To take up the work of so great a leader.
(2) To govern and command in battle a perverse, fickle, discontented people, unused to war.
(3) To conquer and drive out powerful tribes.
(4) To cross a rapid torrent with 60,000 men.
(5) To attack and take a walled city.
(6) To press on till all the land was conquered.
(7) To divide the land among the tribes of Israel.

Equipment.

(1) The command of Jehovah, and "His commands are enablings."

(2) Courage, fearlessness, and conscious power, which the presence of God alone can inspire.

(3) Memory, heart, and lips, fully charged with the law of God.

(4) Linked to Eleazar for divine counsel in all emergencies (Num. xxvii. 21).

(5) The promises of God to strengthen his heart.

Action.

Joshua had been called, by command of Jehovah, and solemnly consecrated by the laying on of hands (Num. xxvii. 18), had received "a charge" before all Israel (Deut. xxxi. 7), but took nothing upon himself until the Lord called him to office (Josh. i. 2).

Lessons.

(1) When the Lord commands us into a certain work, we may be quite sure that He will be with us in it. "The path of duty is the path of safety." "Now, then, whatsoever God saith unto thee DO" (Gen. xxxi. 16).

(2) God's work goes on. If one workman falls, another must take his place. Who will fill the gaps in the mission field? Read Isaiah vi. 8.

(3) Many have been as fully conscious of the Divine call as Joshua, but failed to give his loyal response.

(4) The Lord is above and behind all the difficulties of our life.

(5) It takes courage nowadays to obey God in face of opposition (2 Tim. iii. 12).

(6) Joshua was a busy man, but he found time to study the Word of God.

(7) If we store our memories with God's Word, we shall not be at a loss for the word of guidance.

(8) The way of life is still narrow and strait, but the enemy tries to tempt us into by-paths (note Isa. xxxv. 8).

(9) The land was all given, but they came into possession as they claimed by faith in action (Gen. xviii. 23-33; Mark ix. 22-23).

Questions.

On what condition did the Lord promise Joshua success and prosperity? (vv. 7 and 8; 1 Kings ii. 3.) The written law must be his guide (Isa. viii. 20; Psa. cxix. 105; 2 Tim. iii. 16).

Is Jesus my Captain? Am I enlisted under His command? Am I properly armed for the fight against evil? (Eph. vi. 10-18.) Have I my sword well in hand? (Heb. iv. 12.) Do I count the enemies of God my enemies also? (Matt. vi. 24.)

Illustrations of S.S. Lesson.

ENCOMPASSED BY GOD'S PROMISES.

Many years ago, when the coal industry of Vancouver Island was in its infancy, a miner, while wandering in the woods, was attracted by a peculiar leaf upon the ground. In stooping to pick it up his hand swept clean a small portion of earth, and revealed a seam of coal that proved to be extensive. Eventually the miner became possessor of the whole district, which was rich in excellent coal, and the present Premier of British Columbia, the Hon. James Dunsmuir, the son of that fortunate miner, is a man of wealth because of the discovery made by his father. The Lord assured Joshua that every place that the sole of his foot should tread upon that had He given unto him, as was said unto Moses (v. 3), and God has to-day given unto us exceeding great and precious promises to be fulfilled, both in the life that now is, and in that which is to come.

I WILL NOT FAIL THEE.

On one occasion when the King, then the Prince of Wales, was visiting Coburg, he saw a crippled lady who was being wheeled along in a bath-chair. The Prince, recognising in her the daughter of one of his tutors, approached and asked why he had not seen her at the Schloss. "Because," replied the lady, "I am not sufficiently worthy of Court notice." After that the Prince on several mornings insisted on pushing the lady's bath chair up and down the parade, and would not hear of leaving her alone. Our greater Prince of Peace is ever willing to be at our side to support us, however unworthy of notice the world may deem us. The Lord, speaking to Joshua, said, "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee nor forsake thee" (v. 5).

COURAGE WITH STRENGTH.

Quite recently, at one of our seaside resorts, the visitors on the pier heard cries for help coming from the water, and discovered that a man was being carried away by the tide. Though there were a number of onlookers and they were not lacking in courage, not one of them was sufficiently strong as a swimmer to effect a rescue, and though a life-line was thrown into the sea, the poor fellow was drowned. Strength and courage must go together if we would save perishing souls around us. Courage in itself is not sufficient; it must be backed by strength, and that the strength of God. "Stand fast in faith, quit you like men," said the Apostle Paul. "Be strong," was God's command to Joshua. "Be strong and of a good courage" (v. 6).

TURN NOT.

Many explanations have been offered of the various Alpine accidents which have happened during the past summer. An experienced mountaineer declares that very often the calamities are brought about by the tendency of climbers to turn from the proper trodden paths in quest of quick ways down the slopes. "One climbs," he says, "without a guide, and gets to the top without difficulty. From the top there seems to be a feasible way down the face, and one may be rash enough to try to follow it. But there is no way down. All the slopes get steeper and steeper, and end in precipices. Every year there are some who fail to realize it in time; they go on, and slip and perish." The path of life is quite as dangerous, and the Lord's word to Joshua, "Turn not from it to the right hand unto the left" (v. 7), is as appropriate to-day as ever it was.

Union Tabernacle, S.W.—Describing his work at Union Tabernacle, Pastor D. M. Cameron writes: "We have made an extension in our buildings, and have erected a small hall in the rear of the Tabernacle for the better carrying on of the work among the young. We have great need for continued Gospel efforts here in the Wandsworth Road district, which is so densely populated, chiefly by the artizan and labouring classes employed in the railway and gas works, and factories which abound in the neighbourhood. We have continued signs of blessing. There is, however, a debt of £50 on our small hall." Mr. Cameron, 32, Larkhall Rise, Clapham, S.W., is open to undertake evangelistic missions in any part of the country.

Evangelists at Work.

American Tent Mission.

THE tent-meetings inaugurated by the Evangelization Union in St. Louis, U.S.A., are still in progress, and thus far have proven very fruitful. Three meetings have been held at Trinity, Baden, and Carondelet. Fully 400 persons have been brought to the Lord. About 150 have already united with the Methodist body, and many have found homes in other Churches.

Mr. J. J. Sims in Ireland.

The Canadian evangelist, Mr. J. J. Sims, has been making an extended evangelistic tour through the Emerald Isle. Cork, Bandon, Limerick, Skibbereen, Baltimore have been visited, and in each centre hundreds have heard the Gospel by aid of lantern services. In Cork and Limerick the halls were found to be too small to accommodate the crowds who attended the meetings, and Mr. Sims moved to the theatres in both cities. The evangelist has been now for some weeks conducting missions around Dublin in tents and halls, including a visit to Rathmines Y.M.C.A.

Children's Special Service Mission.

An encouraging series of services in connection with the C.S.S.M. has been conducted by Mr. K. Swaine Bourne at Langland Bay, Mumbles. The meetings were well attended, the interest of the children being sustained throughout. Special features of the mission were the Bible readings, which proved most helpful. Two were addressed by Miss Bessie Porter. One cannot estimate the results of the good which has been done; but God has allowed us to see some cases of blessing amongst the children. All feel grateful for this opportunity of sowing the good seed. E. F. S.

Tent Mission at Whitehaven.

A fruitful three-weeks' mission has just been completed at Whitehaven by Mr. Towers, of the Evangelization Society. The tent was filled on the first evening, and from 500 to 600 people assembled nightly. A meeting was also held for young men.

On the Sundays, owing to the tent proving too small, the services were held in the Wesleyan Church (kindly placed at Mr. Towers' disposal), and at the evening meetings the sanctuary was crowded. The mission was full of blessing, and the evangelist was instrumental in pointing many to Christ.

George Huddleston.

Two Tent Missions.

A month's mission has been held in a tent at Gorse Hill, Swindon, conducted by Mr. J. G. Stanger, of the Evangelization Society. Many flocked to hear the story of God's redeeming love, which was faithfully preached. On six evenings Mr. Stanger took up the subject of our Lord's second coming, and the addresses proved a blessing to God's people. Many of the unconverted were led to decision for Christ during the mission. Subsequently the tent was removed to Lechlade for a fortnight, and there, too, the preaching of the Word was abundantly owned. Many non-church goers attended, and several sought the Way of Life.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell.

The concluding meetings in the mission of Messrs. Williams and Maxwell at Aberdeen were marked by many tokens of Divine blessing. On Friday last the two meetings for young people had an aggregate attendance of 2,500, and many decided for Christ. On the concluding Sabbath three meetings were held. At the afternoon service for men only, Mr. Maxwell sang, with much feeling, "My Mother's Bible," and Mr. Williams spoke on "Excuses Common to Men," and again there were large numbers of seekers. At night a great audience crowded the vast Music Hall, while an overflow meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. Rev. J. S. Stuart, of Rutherford U.F. Church, took part, and Rev. Dr. Stark (Congregational) added cordial words of appreciation on behalf of the ministers of the city.

Dr. Harry Guinness at Bow.

It will rejoice the hearts of the dear friends who are praying for the United Mission which is now being conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness in the East London Tabernacle to know that there are already very evident tokens of blessing. At the first meeting held on Saturday night, for men only, some 2,500 were present, and several hundreds made their way to the inquiry meeting, where some fifty or sixty men professed to having received Christ as their Saviour.

On Lord's Day evening the Tabernacle was crowded to hear the Gospel, and there was a marked spirit of hearing. Many went into the inquiry-room, and there were some definite cases of blessing. The mission will be continued until October 1.

One of the Workers.

Hyde Park and Hyde Park Hall.

On Sunday evening last I found the usual crowds at the north entrance of Hyde Park listening to the advocacy of the Gospel of God by Evangelical preachers from the Y.M.C.A., the Christian Evidence Society, and other agencies; also of humanitarian Deism, Scepticism, Atheism, &c. Further on a crowd surrounded the stand where Mr. Charles Cook has held his services for thirty years. There is an advantage in getting away from the disputing crowds to a location where speaker and audience are free from interruption. A good number adjourned to Hyde Park Hall, where the way of salvation was explained, not without good result.

On the first Sunday in October Mr. Cook hopes to resume evangelistic meetings in the Metropolitan Theatre, Edgware Road. The prayers of Christians are earnestly requested for great blessing on these services. R. C. M.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Blackpool.

The Y.M.C.A. Alhambra Theatre services were again well attended on Sunday week, when Mr. Henry Thorne was the speaker. Mr. Thorne came in contact not only with theatricals who knew and had known members of his family in the theatrical profession, but also with friends and converts from all parts of the kingdom. This has been a special feature of the work in Blackpool during the season, where so many gather year by year. Each speaker has been encouraged by the reverent attitude of the congregations, and Mr. Thorne's words were closely followed morning, afternoon, and evening as he opened up the Scriptures and spoke of "redeeming grace and dying love." There were decisions for Christ at the close of the day, as on the Sunday previous, when Mr. Leonard Weaver was the speaker. On Monday a Bible reading was given by Mr. Thorne, and his lecture, "From the Stage to the Cross," in the Congregational Church, Victoria Street, kindly lent for the occasion. L. J.

The Racecourse Mission.

At the race-meetings at Doncaster and Totnes much encouragement was met with. At Doncaster the morning meeting for prayer and Bible-reading is an important feature of the work, and has been greatly used of God to the edification of believers. On the course, there is, of course, personal dealing by the workers, who go among the throngs of people distributing the Word of God, and exhorting, reproving, and warning. What a mixture of classes one finds on the course! Among the gamblers and drunkards are found young men and women who are drifting away from our Bible classes and churches, so that there are abundant opportunities for personal dealing. A note of praise must be sounded for the clear tokens of Divine blessing that were manifested. At the meetings on the racecourse and in the marketplace at night the ministry of the Gospel was blessed to graceless souls. The crowds were vast and the area wide, and in spite of all that was done there is room for much more effort.

O. L. Heatley, Hon. Secretary.

Mr. W. D. Dunn in Aberdeen.

Mr. W. D. Dunn has carried on an interesting and fruitful mission in the Gallowgate district of Aberdeen under the auspices of the United Free Church congregation. That part of the city contains a large population difficult to reach with the Word of life, but within recent weeks there have been cheering tokens of the Divine presence and blessing. Previous to the arrival of the evangelist a series of open-air meetings were conducted, and other preparatory services were held. From the outset of Mr. Dunn's visit the attendances continued to grow. Best of all it was evident that the power of God rested on the messages of His devoted servant. Night after night enquirers were dealt with, and not a few professed decision for Christ. Many believers were greatly stirred up. The song of praise often ascended to God from joyful hearts for His abundant goodness. Mr. Dunn, with much reluctance, had to leave in order to fulfil an engagement in Glasgow. Fortunately, arrangements have been made with Rev. John Muirhead, of Falkirk, to carry on the good work for another week. It is fondly hoped that more fruit will be gathered in to the praise of our Redeemer. John Livingstone, Minister.

Rev. Dr. Powers has just concluded a three months' evangelistic tour in Scotland. The visit has been one of continual blessing, many souls have been led to Christ, and God's people greatly blessed.

The Weaver Brothers at Elgin.

Much blessing has resulted through the visit of the Weaver Brothers to Elgin. Their coming was preceded by a season of earnest prayer, and from the first meeting the working and power of the Holy Spirit was evident. The Sunday services were held mainly in the Town Hall, which seats over 1,400 people. At the evening meetings it was completely filled in every part. Notable amongst the gatherings was a united children's service, attended by upwards of 1,000 young folks, and special meetings for men and for women, which were likewise largely attended.

On week nights the meetings were held in the Evangelistic Hall, and its accommodation was fully occupied each evening. Many have signified their acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. The committee have the names of upwards of seventy who came into the enquiry room seeking light on Divine truth, but the workers are daily hearing of others who have accepted Christ while listening to the clear and earnest proclamation of the Gospel by Mr. Bewley Weaver. Mr. Frank Weaver is an able exponent of the Gospel in song, and his solos, along with the new hymns from the "Evangelistic Hymn Book" (½d. Morgan & Scott), sung by the choir under his leadership, have done much to create interest in the mission. Tent Work in Gloucestershire.

After twenty-nine summers of Gospel tent services I am happy to witness that the Gospel of Christ is still the power of God unto salvation.

In the month of June our "No. 1" village tent was pitched at Whitchurch. Previously I visited this neighbourhood, calling on the rector and others, who were lamenting the spiritual indifference of the people. The leaders of the chapel and the mission band in the village voluntarily closed their buildings and threw their interest into the tent during the three weeks of happy saint-reviving and soul-winning work. We closed with an enthusiastic praise and testimony meeting.

The "No. 2" large tent was erected on August 15 in a populous neighbourhood, including Warmly, North Common, and Oldland Common. This proved a fruitful centre for evangelizing, as several boot factories, stay factories, and coal mines were in the vicinity. From the first the tent was well filled, and the power of God was manifestly present to awaken, convict, and convert precious souls. Over sixty Gospel services were held under the canvas roof. Each evening we had a meeting for the young at 6.30, and for adults at 7.30. The tent was brilliantly illuminated by acetylene gas, but, better still, the entrance of God's Word by the Spirit gave Divine light to many dark minds, and joy to sorrowing hearts.

Meetings for Bible readings and for praise and prayer have since been held in various cottages for the spiritual benefit of the young believers, and Salem Chapel, reopened after renovation, will be the centre for the continuation of the work. Jas. A. Vicary.

Opportunities at Southend.

Referring to a recent visit at Southend, Mr. T. Swanston Smith says:—

What pen can describe the surging crowds of daily and week-end excursionists, not to speak of visitors for a more prolonged stay? Oh, the Sundays at Southend—the shooting galleries, the places of entertainment and amusement, the public-houses and their victims, the sights and sounds! I have seen once and again a continental Sunday, but Southend beats the record. I have been here for six weeks representing the Ragged School Union. It was the Saturday preceding the Bank Holiday (August 2) when I arrived. Can I ever forget the Sunday and Monday, and some other days which followed? It was pandemonium indeed.

Fairs and racecourses may attract a few heroic souls, but here, within an hour's ride of London, with fifty to sixty thousand and more souls easily apprehended and interested with the Gospel narrative, not one organised band of preachers have I found all these six weeks, other than a small representation of the Church Army and an occasional demonstration of the Salvation Army. I trust, if the Lord tarry, another season may prove more prolific in earnest, organised, God-sent open-air preachers to Southend.

It has been a joy more than I can express to acknowledge the hand of the Lord as He gathered around Himself and His servant, from time to time, a band of Christian helpers, chiefly visitors, and unfurling the Gospel banner every day. We were able in speech and song clearly and unmistakably to declare the Gospel of the blessed God.

The R.S.U. have a beautiful holiday home here in Southend for crippled children. It has been my privilege to welcome down from London four distinct parties during my six weeks' sojourn, and at our services on the sands. The position apportioned to us by the Corporation of Southend has been rendered most attractive once a day through the presence of the children, while their solo and united hymn singing has proved a means of grace to the large numbers of people who have formed our audience, affording us a unique opportunity. The evening of each day, when weather permitted, was devoted to direct Gospel preaching and singing, and each service was charged with the presence and power of God, the testimony to His grace and mercy being very numerous in quickened believers, restored backsliders, and brands plucked from the fire.

Missions in Glasgow.

Glasgow's population numbers fully three-quarters of a million souls, and four or five thousand of that number form a very small part of the whole. But in this age of religious apathy, to see such an audience crowded into a large hall for a religious service an hour before the time announced for commencing shows a force at work not quite common. This sight was to be seen in St. Andrew's Hall on Sabbath evening, 14th inst., when a huge assemblage crowded all the seats and every available foot of standing space in the large building, eager with expectancy to see and hear Mr. Jack Cooke, the boy preacher. In the City Hall, on week nights, the same eager desire is evidenced, as crowds are assembling nightly; and, on its being announced in the newspapers that an address to Christians would be given by him in St. Vincent Street U.F. Church on the afternoon of Wednesday, 17th inst., so great was the rush that the spacious building was crowded, many having to be content with standing room after the pulpit steps had been occupied and the aisles lined with seats carried in. The gathering had in it a large representation of earnest workers in the evangelistic field; and a very large number of ministers were present. At the afternoon service, Mr. Maxwell, the American singer, sang two sacred songs, which were much appreciated. He was on his way from Aberdeen to a mission at Londonderry.

At Bridgeton, in the east end of the city, Rev. John McNeill is preaching with great power and acceptance to large crowds of working people. The great tent in which his mission is being conducted, and which will hold over two thousand people, was crowded out and running over long before the time for beginning the service, on Sabbath evening, 14th inst. Then on week-nights the tent is sometimes crowded to the door. Many leading workers are taking an active interest in his mission. Mr. W. M. Oatts (formerly secretary of the Y.M.C.A.), Mr. Robert Logan (of the Tent Hall), Mr. T. P. McRostie, (of the Bethany Hall), and others are daily rendering help; and on one evening Mr. McNeill had on the platform beside him Lord Overtoun, Mr. Gordon Oswald, of Beauly, and Mr. R. B. Stewart, from Larbert. Mr. McNeill preached one of his helpful Gospel sermons, and an attentive hearing was given by the great company assembled.

Day after day he is busy preaching among the working men in engineering shops and founderies, and occasionally among the women in a jam factory. Two meetings a day at times helps to increase the interest that centres in the tent services at night, and conversion work is going on.

Other evangelists are at work in the city, such as Mr. W. D. Dunn, Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., and Mr. Harry Young, all telling out the glorious tidings of redeeming grace. J. C.

Mr. W. Bilton has conducted a mission in connection with Park Place Baptist Mission, Luton. The services were largely attended, and much blessing resulted. At the concluding meeting the secretary, Mr. B. Souster, said that sixty-eight persons had been dealt with in the inquiry-room. Nearly all the churches in the town have been benefited by the mission.

Mr. T. Goudie, of the Evangelization Society, has just completed his summer's work in a Gospel tent. Grand meetings have been held at Woodford and Loughton. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, large numbers have been drawn to hear the "Old, Old Story," and not a few have testified to receiving blessing. God's children have also been cheered and strengthened in the faith. J. P. C.

The three Methodist churches of Shiney Row, Fence Houses, co. Durham, recently held a united mission. A correspondent writes: "The neighbourhood was moved by the power of the Holy Ghost, many coming to the services who had not attended a place of worship for years. A good number decided for Christ, and the Lord's people were encouraged and strengthened. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison were the evangelists."

Mr. Musa Bhai has concluded a six weeks' mission at Govan. The tent was crowded on Sundays, and the week-night meetings were large. Many professed faith in the Saviour, and Christians were revived. The hearty co-operation of mission and church workers was a striking feature of the gatherings, which concluded with a Conference, at which there was timely and helpful ministry. Several well-known brethren from Glasgow took part.

Irish Notes.

The Irish Presbyterian Mission is carrying on some fruitful work. During the past year its agents sold nearly 10,000 Bibles or portions of the Bible, and conducted lantern services in thirty-four different localities, while through its instrumentality over 19,000 Scripture texts were placed in Irish homes.

At a meeting of the Irish Methodist Twentieth Century Fund held in Dublin last week, it was reported that the total amount received by the treasurers up to date was £48,372, and that over £5,000 remains still to be paid. The fund is to be wound up at the close of the present year, and it is hoped that most of this outstanding sum will be contributed before then.

Welsh Notes.

The autumnal meetings of the Cardiff and Swansea Wesleyan Synod were held at Cardiff on September 16, under the chairmanship of Rev. C. H. Ffloyd. During the meetings it was reported that the district promises to the Twentieth Century Fund amounted to £18,550 7s.

One of the most important of the recent publications of the Welsh Press is a commentary on Mark's Gospel, by Rev. O. Jones, of Liverpool. Although prepared under the auspices of the Welsh Wesleyan Assembly, as a hand-book for use in the Sunday-schools of the denomination during the approaching year, the commentary is likely to find a wider circulation than the limits of any one religious body.

The annual meetings of the Executive Committee of the Welsh Congregational Union were held this year at Llandrindod. The most important part of the committee's work was the drafting of the programme of the meetings of the Union next year. These are to be held in Dowlais on July 6, 7, 8, 9. One or two innovations are to be introduced. The most important of these is the arrangement to have four Union sermons instead of two as heretofore.

Rev. Dr. Pugh, general superintendent of the Welsh Forward Movement, has issued an earnest appeal on behalf of the centre at Barry Island. The present temporary building is inadequate, and a hall to seat 300 is to be erected. The population of Barry Island at the last census had increased during the decade at the rate of 103 per cent. In the whole of Barry district the increase, during the same period, was from 765 to 27,030. The movement is also erecting a fine new hall in Barry.

On September 9 and 10 the St. David's Diocesan Conference was held at Aberystwyth. The opening address of the Bishop dealt with some of the subjects set down for discussion. Papers were read on "The Observance of the Lord's Day" by Colonel Davies-Evans, Lord Lieutenant of Cardiganshire, and by Rev. E. L. Bevan, Vicar of Brecon. Two more papers dealt with the place of Griffith Jones, Llandowror, in the religious history of Wales. On Wednesday, Archdeacon Evans spoke on the "Present Position of the Education Question." One of the most powerful of the addresses delivered was by the Dean of St. David's on "Religion in the Home."

The annual meetings of the North Wales Temperance Association were held this year at Amlwch. Several important conferences and public meetings were held. In connection with the report submitted by the secretary giving the number of "old total abstainers" in North Wales as 27,687, it was declared that the estimate was far too low, and that fully half that number is to be found in Flintshire alone. In the course of the President's address, he gave it as his experience that those who were prominent in temperance work were also foremost in every movement designed for the moral and religious welfare of the people. A strong resolution was passed in favour of lessening the number of licensed houses in North Wales. In an interesting address by Rev. E. B. Jones, of Holyhead, on "The Condition of the Temperance Cause in Anglesea," the encouraging fact was stated that for the last fifteen years not one new licence has been granted in Anglesea. During the same period fifteen old licences have been suspended.

Lodging House Work at Cardiff.—The second anniversary of the weekly Evangelical services was held at the Jews Home, Moira Terrace, on Friday evening. A good company of the men lodgers, and of the women from the Cristian Homes adjoining, assembled. Earnest addresses were delivered by Miss Merrick, hon. superintendent of the Y.W.C.A., and Mr. Gwilym James, travelling secretary of the North and South Wales Y.M.C.A.'s. The Home was established by Messrs. John and Richard Cory, in the first instance, for poor Jews, passing through Cardiff. Eventually the Home was opened to sailors and others out of employment. During the past two years the meetings have been well sustained—ministers and laymen of the town, co-operating.

Church of England.

Through the London Poor Clergy Holiday Fund, health trips have been provided this year for over 100 of the poorer clergy of the "slum" parishes of the diocese, whose names and needs had been submitted to the archdeacons by the rural deans.

During the past twelve months, Rev. R. Catterall, vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, has held a service for men only, on the first Sunday in each month. The attendances have gradually increased until several hundreds of men are regularly present. The service commences at 3.45 p.m., and lasts about an hour.

The Church Army is being appealed to by a large number of reservists, and has so far been successful in finding work for the majority. It is hoped to raise sufficient money to found a home for discharged soldiers, where trades may be taught, and situations found. Towards this scheme £300 has already been given.

Since Rev. C. S. Quainton became vicar of Pellon, Halifax, it has been found necessary to double the seating accommodation of the church. The work of enlargement has been commenced. A feature of the undertaking is the hearty support given by the parishioners. Some six months ago a penny fund was started, and since then about 500 working-class folk have been giving one penny per week.

The object of the annual "Missionary Day" at Holy Trinity Church, Tewkesbury, is to bring to a culminating point the missionary efforts which have extended over the preceding year. The third anniversary occurred recently, when missionary addresses were given at the hours of 8, 10.30, 12, 2.30, 4, 6.30, and The societies represented were—Irish Church Missions, Church Missionary Society, London Jews Society, Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, Religious Tract Society, Colonial and Continental Church Society, and Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society. The attendances were encouraging throughout the day, and decidedly good in the afternoon and evening. The addresses were throughout excellent and full of interest, and free-will gifts were made on each occasion.

Congregational.

A Reuter telegram from New York says that, according to intelligence from San Francisco, the London Missionary Society's schooner Southern Cross has been wrecked off Tahiti.

A new church was opened on Tuesday last at West Hartlepool by Mr. Albert Spicer. Rev. Dr. Fairbairn was the preacher. The cost of the building, including site and furnishing, is estimated at £20,000.

Wednesday, September 17, was a red-letter day in the annals of Providence Church, Uxbridge, when the foundation and memorial stones of new Sunday-schools and lecture halls were laid. Sir Horace Marshall, Mr. J. Carvell Williams, and Mrs. James Spicer took part. The total outlay will reach £3,500, of which sum £1,924 has been contributed or promised.

The appeal for funds for equipping Claremont Church, Pentonville, N., as the first of the London Union's mission centres, has resulted in contributions of over £2,000, which, with Mr. W. H. Brown's promise of £4,000, brings the fund to within £2,000 of the £8,000 which is being expended on the building. It is hoped that the outstanding £2,000 will have been promised before the opening of the mission on October 2.

On Thursday last Dr. Horton opened a large new church at Cricklewood, N.W., for the congregation of which Rev. Cuthbert McEvoy is the pastor. The church is a branch from Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, which has contributed £3,000 towards the building fund. A sum of £5,000 is still needed. The new church provides accommodation for about 850 worshippers. The opening proceedings included a largely attended dedication service at seven o'clock in the morning, at which Dr. Horton preached; a service in the afternoon, at which Rev. C. Silvester Horne was the preacher, and a public meeting in the evening, presided over by Dr. Horton.

Baptist.

New church buildings have been opened at Streatham, S.W., where Rev. J. Ewen is pastor. For many a year the Streatham friends have prayed and laboured for a building, and they are to be cordially congratulated on the attainment of their object.

Pastor J. Edward Johnson, of Bedfont, has accepted an invitation to Rayleigh Tabernacle, Essex. Mr. Johnson will also have the oversight of the Bedfont Church till the end of the year, when he will celebrate the twenty-third anniversary of his ministry.

The work in the open air which has been carried on through the summer months in connection with Grosvenor Street Church, Manchester, has now terminated, and the workers are giving their attention to the winter's work, a feature of which is to be a twelve days' mission in the Co-operative Hall, Downing Street, conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. Tallentire.

On Friday and Sabbath last, Rev. George C. Grubb conducted services at Dunoon. On Friday afternoon he addressed the assembled body of students of Dunoon College. On Sabbath morning he conducted services in the Baptist Church (Rev. Principal Macgregor's), and in the evening in the large Town Hall, a magnificent assembly "turned out" to hear the glad and glorious Gospel.

For twenty years Manchester Baptist students have conducted a mission at Longsight—first at the Mechanics' Institute, and latterly in South Street. The need of more convenient premises has long been urgent, and on Saturday afternoon the memorial stones were laid of a new building in Stockport Road. A public meeting was held in the evening, under the chairmanship of Principal Marshall.

Recognit on services in connection with the settlement of Rev. E. W. Stenlake as pastor of the church at West Drayton were held on September 4. In the afternoon an appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate Road, and in the evening a public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Thomas Wild, of Sipson, when encouraging addresses were given by Mr. Stephens, and by Revs. F. B. Monti, P. J. Smart, W. J. Fox, and Mr. W. Carvell to an audience that filled the chapel.

Methodist.

Services in the Albert Hall, the headquarters of the Wesleyan Mission at Sheffield, have been resumed. The hall is now beautifully clean and bright. Rev. J. Sadler Reece has made a most promising start. There were eleven seekers at the first Sunday evening service, and there is every promise of great spiritual blessing.

The statistical report of Primitive Methodist Sunday-schools has been issued, and shows that there are now 4,031 schools, being an increase of ten for the year. The teachers number 53,308, an increase of 739; and the total number of scholars is 445,054, an increase of 6,016. With regard to church membership, 63 208 scholars are members of society, an increase of 5,784 for the year.

On Saturday afternoon a new Primitive Methodist church, erected in memory of the late Rev. J. Macpherson, who was a Methodist preacher for over fifty years, was opened at Chorlton-cum-Hardy. The total cost, including the schoolroom, is £3,200, of which £1,600 has been raised. A public meeting was held in the evening, at which an address was delivered by Rev. T. Mitchell, president of Conference.

The total sum paid in to the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund is £901,798. Over a quarter of a million sterling has been sent in during the last twelve months, reducing the balance yet required from the circuits to £39,000. As many as five hundred circuits have fulfilled their promises and closed their accounts, leaving three hundred and thirty still unfinished. An effort will be made at the forthcoming Financial Synods to close the accounts in all the circuits at an early date.

Presbyterian.

The ordination of Mr. A. S. M. Anderson, late assistant at Marylebone, as missionary to China, will take place at Stratford on October 6, on the occasion of the missionary valedictory.

A deputation to Durham Presbytery having asked aid in their effort to raise £500, the expense incurred in acquiring property to provide a schoolroom at Tow Law, the Presbytery cordially commended the scheme to the liberality of the whole church. The Moderator, Rev. J. Vaughan, referred to the open-air services conducted by himself on Roker Sands, Sunderland, on Sunday afternoons, attended by some hundreds of non-churchgoers.

Society of Friends.

On the 13th inst. Brighouse monthly meeting, held at Rawdon, proved a most interesting occasion. The old meeting-house, where the light of Quakerism has been kept burning since 1697, was far too small to accommodate such a large number, so Friends met in the Baptist Assembly Rooms. The meeting for worship began at 3 o'clock, and was felt to be a solemn time. The presence of the children from the school added to the responsibility of the meeting, and the messages delivered were mostly for them.

The third anniversary of the Gospel Protestant Mission, Ecclesall Road, Sheffield, was celebrated on Lord's Day, the 14th inst., when sermons were preached by Mr. George Fowler, Mr. E. T. Hodgson (honorary minister), and Rev. J. W. Woodcock. On the following Wednesday a public meeting was held, when Mr. Hodgson gave an account of the work and progress of the mission.

Fallen Asleep.

The Congregational Church at Staplehurst has sustained a severe loss by the sudden death of its senior deacon and its most generous supporter, Mr. JOHN JULL.—Rev. JOHN BRYSON, LL.D., the oldest minister in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, died on Monday evening at his residence in Newry after a brief illness. He retired from the ministry about fifteen years ago, but still retained his connection with the General Assembly. Aged eighty-three, Rev. T. W. HERBERT, vicar of Southend.—At Aberdeen, in his ninety-fourth year, Rev. Dr. JAMES MACKINTOSH, who was for nearly half a century the minister of Deskford, Banffshire.—At Te Puke, New Zealand, Rev. JAMES KER, formerly minister of Erskine United Free Church, Chirnside, and subsequently stationed at Leicester. In 1890 he sailed for New Zealand, most of his family having preceded him some years before. As preacher and pastor he was highly esteemed.—At Belfast, Rev. GEORGE BARNES, Methodist minister, in his seventy-first year, and forth-sixth of his ministry. Deceased was an earnest, faithful man, and in not a few of his appointments was instrumental in the conversion of souls.—Rev. JOSIAH FOSTER, the esteemed minister of the Congregational Church at Leigh, Essex, and formerly of Union Church, Victoria Docks, E.

Personalia.

Rev. EGERTON R. YOUNG hopes to reach England next month for another visit. Communications may be addressed to care of Mr. T. E. Tydeman, 37, 38, Gutter Lane, E.C.

Mr. G. SOLTAU, who recently spent three months in the United States, is returning to New York. He is about to join Dr. W. W. White in his Bible Training Institute for the forthcoming three terms, ending in June, 1903, and expects to be fully occupied with popular Bible studies in the evenings in and around the city, in addition to the institute work. The prayers of God's people are asked on his behalf and on behalf of Dr. White that the coming sessions of study may be abundantly blessed. The address of the Bible Training Institute will be Coronet Building, 1,036, Sixth Avenue, New York.

Forthcoming Conferences.—Wakefield, Sept. 29-Oct. 2; Preston, Sept. 29-Oct. 2; St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, Sept. 27-29; Half-yearly Meetings for Christians, City Hall and Grand National Hall, Glasgow, Sept. 27-30; Portsmouth Annual Convention (Victoria Hall, Commercial Road), Sept. 29-Oct. 1; Whitstable Convention, Oct. 6-9; Clifton Conference (Victoria Rooms), Oct. 7, 8; International Vigilance Conference for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic, Frankfort-on-Main, Oct. 7-10; Autumnal Police Conference, Gloucester, Oct. 8-10; Church Congress, Northampton, Oct. 6-10.

The King's Recovery. It has been officially announced that the King will drive through London on Saturday, October 25, following the same route that he would have taken had he been able to do so on June 27, the day after the projected Coronation. The day following, the King will attend St. Paul's Cathedral, and there join in a service of thanksgiving for mercies vouchsafed to him. An esteemed correspondent writes suggesting a national thanksgiving for the King's marvellous recovery. He writes:—

> Why in St. Paul's only? Why not in every place of worship in London and throughout the Kingdom, by order of the King in Council? One thing more—why thanksgiving without thank-offerings? And why not these in aid of the Queen Victoria Memorial in London, and for Victorian memorials throughout the country?

Return of Dr. Parker. The publication last week of The Life of Rev. Dr. Parker (6s. Cassell & Co.) was opportune, as occurring simultaneously with his return to his pulpit after long illness. All classes of the community combined to extend to him a hearty personal welcome; and we feel sure that a greeting as cordial will be accorded throughout the country to the biography. Rev. Dr. William Adamson has not only given to the world the facts of a great and useful life, but has lifted the veil time after time so that the reader also may enter into intimate personal relations with his beloved friend. Dr. Parker has been in the forefront of many movements in his time; and it must be a cause of profound satisfaction to many to read such personal testimony to the goodness of the Lord as we give on page 19.

The Resort of the Coward. The dastardly attack upon Mr. Kensit at Birkenhead on Thursday last carries its own lesson. Such an event is a partial lifting of the veil which reveals the intensity of the malevolence and hatred entertained even in England to the proclamation of the Evangel. Truth courts the sunlight, and courteously listens to its opponents, for it is sure of the justice of its cause. Error, on the contrary, fears exposure, and it has to support itself by the methods of the savage. It will be well if the mass of Protestants can be aroused from their false security, to face the real nature of the trouble with which we are confronted. Much may be done by agitation and in the polling booth; but, above all, let us remember that "this kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer."

A Painful Object-Lesson. A week or two ago there appeared in these columns a letter, entitled "Children and Ritualism," calling attention to various ways in which the young are influenced in the direction of sacramentarian teaching. A few days later, the daily press published the sad news of the suicide of a youth after reading one of Marie Corelli's books. The painful details need not be recalled here, but we have received from the bereaved mother a letter which was found addressed to us by the lad, as a reply to the one above referred to. It has further transpired that, unknown to his parents, he had been led into Ritualistic doctrines and practices by a neighbouring clergyman, who had also lent him the book, with the result that, being a highly sensitive lad, his mind had become unhinged. The whole story is too sadly pathetic to write about, but it indicates the methods adopted by some advanced Ritualists to spread their tenets. We hope that the protest which the mother has addressed to the Bishop of the diocese (Bath and Wells) will receive the attention it deserves. It is for calling attention to such malpractices that Mr. Kensit, senior, is made the victim of a brutal assault, and his son committed to jail. Things are, indeed, coming to a pretty pass.

The "No Popery" Fear. Certain educationalists who, while ecclesiastically associated with the extreme High Church movement are decidedly opposed to the new Education Bill, have written to various daily papers protesting against the introduction of religious controversy in the present campaign. They object to the cry of "No Popery" as irrelevant. We can quite understand why the protest is being made—it is a case of divided sympathies—but, in the light of facts, it is an illogical position to assume. Many of those who most strenuously and conscientiously object to the Bill do so, on the ground chiefly that it is a strenuous attempt to put power into the hands of the priests, and, for liberty-loving people, this aspect of the case cannot be suppressed. Popery and the converse of liberty go together. We also should much prefer the religious question to be omitted, but as the case stands it is impossible to do this, and they who are compelled to take this view should not be reproached with engaging in a controversy they have not sought.

A Common Object. Consentaneous with the promulgation of the objects and aims of the new (Roman) Catholic Democratic League in these islands and in America, in regard to the King's Declaration and the religion of the successors to the Throne, the Church Times makes a strong attack upon the Declaration, and urges its abolition. Following the example of Lord Halifax, it deplores the utterance of anything likely to wound the delicate susceptibilities of "the leading Christian Bishop." But, repudiating the theological statements of the Declaration in reference to the sacramental teaching, it demands, therefore, that "when the question is again discussed its settlement must not be made a matter of agreement between Downing Street and the Oratory," yet the "elements mortifying to High Churchmen" must be eliminated. Yet the writer expresses the opinion that many Romanists would prefer to retain the "stigma on their religion," because it is "a valuable grievance," and because it "stamps the Church of England as a Protestant sect." It is noteworthy, also, that the Church Review enters a strong protest against the use of any word but Mass "for the offering of the Sacrament of the Lord's Body and Blood." Such utterances clear the ground, and show us what we may really expect from High Anglicans, who are verily the "foes in our own household."

Ireland's Burden. As the peasantry of Ireland have decreased in numbers, the priests have increased. In the Province of Munster in 1901, there were no fewer than 4,578 priests, monks, nuns, and ecclesiastical students, an increase of 2,356 since 1871, although the population of that district has decreased by 318,410! The fact speaks for itself, and might be useful to those of our writers upon social economics who deprecate the influence of the "non-productive classes."

The Priest in China. Although the Romanist missionaries in China had the start by centuries, it cannot be said that the Chinese adherents of Rome are equal in number to the Protestant converts. Of late years the influence of the priests has manifestly declined, and for political reasons they are disliked or actually hated, owing to their having assumed magisterial duties, and having abused their position. The actual condition of things was recently stated to the Pope by the titular Bishop of Cardica and Kiam-si in a special audience. He said that a general uprising against the missionaries is being prepared. A Roman correspondent states that the Pope was much affected, "but, as the visible Head of the Church Militant, he will never order the soldiers of the Cross to abandon the field of danger and of glory."

The Government of the Transvaal. It is becoming very clear that the greatest care and delicacy are needed in dealing with the Transvaal, now that the war is over. There are some very touchy elements in the South African situation, which might easily develop into hatred, if consummate tact be not used. Our task with a conquered people is to remove, with the utmost rapidity, as far as may be, all causes of legitimate complaint; and to weld together all the diverse elements into an unity for the common good. England has the genius to do this, and our administrators must be true to the spirit of the nation. The ultimate justification of the war will be a colony in which justice and amity prevail.

The National Incubus. Alarmed by the legal action of the magistrates, in refusing to renew licences in districts where there is a glut of drink-shops, the General Council of the Licensed Victuallers' National Defence League have resolved to introduce into Parliament next Session a Bill > to prevent the confiscation of licensed premises, to secure the rights of property, and to obtain recognition of the just claims of owners of licences to legal protection, until an equitable scheme of compensation has received the sanction of the Legislature.

Unhappily our administrators are not unfavourable to an unjust recognition, at the cost of the taxpayer, of the alleged ownership in an annual licence; and a glance at the Licensed Victuallers' list of "friendly" M.P.'s is far from reassuring. There is never a day free from the necessity of constant vigilance against the encroachments of those whose aim it is to keep the country groaning under the incubus of the drink traffic.

The Harvest of Crime. The report just issued by the Commissioners of Prisons is painful reading. During the twelve months referred to, the daily average of prisoners in Great Britain, 16,267, was the highest for the last sixteen years, although there was not the usual percentage of unemployed persons, a proportion of whom might reasonably be regarded as specially open to temptation. The increase in the number of criminals appears, unhappily, to apply to all parts of the country alike. No doubt gambling and intemperance have much to do with the sad growth, as also the tendency to live up to or beyond the income. The saddest feature, however, is that the Commissioners cannot venture to anticipate or hope that the average will fall to the level of the last few years; and the question therefore arises, Is sufficient being done to stop the sources of crime? The confirmed criminal is dangerous, not merely as an offender, but as an example and as a practical teacher of the young. Could not a more efficacious and beneficial course be taken with him? Meanwhile, it is only too evident that secular education in itself cannot destroy the disposition to crime.

The Penrhyn Dispute. It is little short of a scandal that the dispute between Lord Penrhyn and his quarrymen has run on to a period of nearly eighteen months, and a poor comment upon the spirit of fraternity about which men are ever boasting. An acute crisis has now been reached, and some of the workmen have to face starvation. And this happens in the heart of civilization! It seems to us that in cases of this kind, where stubbornness appears to be the ruling factor, arbitration should be made compulsory. If master and man cannot agree, the women and children ought not to suffer; and in their interests, to go no further, a termination of the lock-out ought now to be forced.

Clogging the Wheels. Such speeches as that which Mr. Lowther made last week at the Carlisle Diocesan Conference upon the betting evil, will not help to check it. It is begging the entire question to reduce it to a matter of what a man can afford. The illustration of what Mr. Carnegie might do with a £1,000 bet is beside the mark. Mr. Lowther thinks Mr. Carnegie might bet with another millionaire and be no worse for it. They could both afford to lose the money. It is a vicious illustration, and it will do no good to the young men who accept it as sound. The betting evil at bottom is no question of the passing of money from man to man, but a moral question involving the gravest issues. We regret these superficial speeches on such grave matters as those which imperil our nation at present. There are always plenty of men ready to clutch at the least thing which favours their vices. Weak and flippant half apologies for national vices may have no value in themselves, but their effect is to clog the wheels of progress and postpone the day of a purer national life.

Healing the Wound Slightly. It is a very noticeable feature in the exhortations of the Hebrew prophets, that they laid such stress upon the necessity of doing thorough work. The false prophets were chided by the true for their superficial work. They "healed the wound of the daughter of My people slightly." There was a mere surface amendment; but the sore burned below the skin. Is this warning out of date? We think not. Too many of the schemes proposed for the curing of the ills of our time savour of quack doctorism. They pay no heed to what is beneath the surface. The social ills from which we suffer need attacking at their foundation, and not upon their surface only. It is never superfluous either, to remind ourselves that in specifically spiritual work the danger of a half-cure threatens us. In all that concerns the human soul there must be thoroughness if the life is to be what it should be. The half-cure is the more speedy and showy, but it is infinitely more dangerous.

The Law of Moses. In a remarkable paper in the Homiletic Review, Rev. Dr. Ludlow, dealing with the subject of Moses as a statesman, shows what a large proportion of the best of our modern legislation, which is generally attributed to modern experience and ability, is traceable to the inspired law-giver. This line of thought might with advantage be followed by those students who carefully refuse to admit the leading part which the Old Testament Scriptures and the teachings of Christ have had in moulding the moral framework of civilized life. Take, for instance, the laws as to the corroboration of testimony (Deut. xix. 15), the limitation of ownership, the treatment of animals and birds (culminating in that wonderful passage in regard to the young in the nest, Deut. xxii. 6), the treatment of the debtor, the payment of wages, the education of the young, sanitary measures, &c., and it will be found, as Dr. Ludlow says:—

> To do justice to the Mosaic system, as that of enlightened leadership of humanity, would require volumes. . . Our age is looking forward to the realization of great things, political and social, which we imagine to be the evolution of the modern mind and heart. It is well to be reminded that we are only filling in the outline of progress already sketched for us.

The Mystery of Life. There is a growing tendency on the part of scientists, to admit the existence of the barriers which God apparently has placed before the hidden secrets of His working, and which are just as unscalable to the learned professor as to the schoolboy. Gradually the boundaries of human knowledge are being extended, but man to-day is no nearer than his predecessor of a thousand years ago to the discovery of the mystery of LIFE, and there is no really scientific ground upon which to base a reasonable belief that he ever will be. Meanwhile, it is invigorating to turn from ignorant conjecture, from verbose hypothesis and groundless assumption as to natural selection, evolution, and environment, to the distinct statements in the Book of Genesis as to the Divine creation of the universe, and of man "in the image of God."

The Dust of Worlds. One of the greatest living scientific authorities, Lord Kelvin, once stated that the destruction of our globe is by no means so far-off an event as most people imagine. He supported his opinion by facts and figures to prove that—all things being equal—> the stores of fuel in the earth, and of oxygen in the air, will fail us by the end of four or five centuries, and the entire human race must then die of cold or suffocation.

Even a hundred years earlier, the air would, by the failure of oxygen, become unfitted to sustain life. These may be only the theories of a philosopher; but such modern suggestions are at any rate in keeping with the statements as to "the end of the world" which are found here and there in the inspired Book, where we are told that "the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner" (Isa. li. 6), and "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night" (2 Peter ii. 10). And how pertinent, therefore, is St. Peter's question: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?"

Intelligent Dogmatism. One of our leading scientists has just gone out of his way to counsel Christian teachers to be less dogmatic in their utterances. He would have them speak more tentatively of their faith. We should hardly have thought that scientists had good reason for rebuking dogmatism in others, in the light of the excessive dogmatism which has characterized so much scientific teaching during the last few years. Let that pass, however. If objection is made to dogmatism upon certain questions which are not vital, and concerning which the very best of men hold diverse views, we quite agree with the advice offered. Certain kinds of dogmatism are both unnecessary and offensive. But upon the main matters, which lie at the very root of Christian faith and life, there is no option for a really honest teacher but to be dogmatic. Dogmatism upon these things is intelligent, for it is nothing more than the precise expression and application of indisputable facts. To be anything but intelligently dogmatic upon such fundamentals as the Incarnation, the Atonement, and the Resurrection of our Lord, is to be false to the great facts which have revolutionized the world. But we must mind that our dogmatism is intelligent.

To Every Man his Work. It is significant that the final parables and addresses of our Lord to his disciples, bore direct reference to service. Earlier He had laid the foundation of character in proclaiming the necessity of the new birth, but His last words to those who had been converted were words referring to their work in His kingdom. And lest any should be tempted to believe that among His disciples there is an aristocracy to whom alone service is committed, all others being exempted, our Lord spoke one all-inclusive sentence, "To every man his work." This word needs echoing again and again in the Church, for it is evident that many have not yet given heed to it. Two things have lessened its force in the estimation of men: the prevalence of priestcraft, which "farms" the religious life of its deluded victims; and the prevalence of a half-conversion, the effect of which is to detain the soul in the lowlands of a selfish life. What would be the effect, if every professed disciple of Christ, fully converted, abandoned himself to the work of the kingdom of God as the ruling passion in life? It does not need a prophet to see that the first effect would be a revival of religion on an unprecedented scale. The world could not resist the impact of such a force.

Practical Papers.

ON "PERSONALITY."

"A MAN said to his neighbour"—so runs the A.V. marginal reading (Gen. xi. 3), as to the origin of the proposal to build the Tower of Babel.* Although not in the R.V., the phrase has useful suggestion in it.

The greatest material blessings that have come to human life and progress have found their seed in some one master mind. We can readily enumerate instances of this—e.g., Stephenson, Edison, and perhaps Marconi. Equally true is it that some of the most potent evil forces can similarly be traced to the strong personality of individual genius.

If we think we have an inspiration, let us test it well by the Word of God, ere we communicate it to another. Let none "say to his neighbour" that which shall mislead, or unsettle, or defile. "Let your conversation be always seasoned with salt, that it may minister grace unto the hearer" (Col. iv. 6).

It is surprising how little systematic heed we give to our relations with other people, in so far as our personality is concerned. Yet, as we look back, we can quite easily recall occasions on which the trend of our thought and conduct has been moulded by individuals, for either good or ill. The bare mention of the names of certain of our schoolfellows summons up recollections by which we class them on one side or the other, and the companionships of later days tell the same tale of blessing or the reverse. As they made their impression on our minds, so did we create impressions on theirs; and with these earlier warnings in view, it behoves us to control our personality, lest it lead others astray! The confidential word, the whispered thought, the secret act—for what great issues are they responsible! Great rivers flow from very tiny rills.

Personal influence must lead either up or down, toward God or away from Him. There is no middle course of any account. Yet how lightly we accept the companionship of others, or offer our own to them, all too careless as to the outcome in after days.

In modern houses we are familiar with the system by which our hot and cold water is supplied. It is a frequent experience, that when we turn on the tap denominated "Hot," we have to wait some time before any water issues that is worthy of that description. Why is this? Probably because that which flows at first is so far removed from the source of heat as to be practically unaffected by it. It may also be because the hot-water pipes are laid in too close juxtaposition to the cold, and suffer from their chilling effect. Is it not thus in Christian life? Many there are who by their profession are labelled "hot," but we have to let them run, so to speak, for a time, ere we can distinguish them from the worldling at their side. They have left their first love, and have removed far from the Divine source of spiritual heat; or their proximity to worldly associations has cast over them a deathly chill, and produced that lukewarmness which the Lord regards with loathing and disgust.

"A man said to his neighbour!" Study the painful story of the disobedient prophet in 1 Kings xiii. Here are THREE TYPES OF CONDUCT. First, the wilful sin of a strong man, personified in Jeroboam, who has been characterized through succeeding ages by the oft-repeated phrase: "who did sin, and who made Israel to sin." Second, the easy-going sin of a weak man, as seen in the old prophet of Bethel, a dangerous backslider whose sense of duty had been undermined by the idolatrous practices of the King. Third, the pitiful sin of an unstable man, in the younger prophet, who suffered his own convictions to be over-ridden by one who had signally failed to discharge a prophet's rôle. The first sinned in what he did; the second, in what he did not; the third, in swerving from the path in which God had bidden him to go.

Ponder the insidious method of the tempter—"I am a prophet also as thou art"—a truth, yet how untrue! Full many a young Christian has been turned aside by such an argument. "Why do you claim a higher level, or raise a higher standard of faith or conduct, than your fellow church-members? We are as good as you." Yet is not the very assertion a proof of its mendacity, as we detect its evident plea for something lower than the highest?

Note, too, the gradation by which the prophet fell. First, in the strength that God supplieth, he had said, "I will not go;" but this declined to the half-hearted protest, "I may not go"—he might have added, "but I should like to." He had been faithful and brave, even to resisting the King himself; he had denounced idolatry and refused a bribe; yet he succumbed to the plausible representations of Satan clad as an angel of light. Strong as Jeroboam in some things, he was weak as the prophet of Bethel in others; obedient in that which was greater, he disobeyed in that which was less. His was the common sin of the average man—the sin which many of us are committing every day.

The secret of his fall lay in his doubt of God. His temptation was to regard Him as capricious, inconsistent, or self-contradictory; as if, at one time, He would bid him not to tarry; and at another, for a mere whim, would bid him remain to eat bread.

We may boldly face the blatant arguments of the unbeliever avowing himself to be such, while the insidious casuistry of unfaithful professors may compass our downfall. What is the remedy? Belief in the unerring and absolute changelessness of God. The still small voice we heard in our country home is like to be drowned in the louder tones of city life. Yet God remains the same. "He cannot deny Himself" (2 Tim. ii. 13). You board a steamer that plies between the English coast and France; gradually the white cliffs of Dover become less clearly seen, until they are lost to view. Yet are they diminished? You have only to return again, to find their altitude and permanence unchanged. So, you may get away from God, and hear men speak of faith and duty in strange and unaccustomed tongues; but the precepts of God stand ever where they did, unaltered in the breadth of their demands, undiminished in the grandeur of their promises.

"A man said to his neighbour!" Ah, the spiritual wreckage cast up by this treacherous sea! Are you one of the strong ones, alert in thought, prompt in action, exerting an influence born of a dominant personality? See that in your strength you lead not weaker ones astray, nor beguile a young believer from the assurance of his faith. With no idle threat the Master said: "Whoso shall cause one of these little ones to stumble, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea." "Woe unto him by whom the Son of Man is betrayed; it were good for that man if he had not been born" (Matt. xviii. 6; xxvi. 24). And when the ruin is complete, the most that the tempter can offer by way of redress is the futile and pitiful lament of the old prophet—"Alas, my brother!"

Are you one of the weaker brethren, swayed by stronger minds claiming to be your equal or superior in spiritual insight and reasoning power, or by the subtleties of men who boast impressively of "a newer revelation?" Seek the shelter of the heights of God, resplendent in their unsullied whiteness; rest beneath the shade of His unchanging Word.

When on a visit to Switzerland, I sat upon the Görner-grat and gazed across the valley to the snowy peaks beyond. Above them a cloud drifted along the sky, and with the background of azure blue it seemed of spotless white. Frequently it changed its form, now fantastic, now grotesque, but ever of interesting shape. But as it passed across a slope on which the snow lay deep, it assumed a grey and almost sombre hue. So it is with the theories of men. True, they clothe themselves in curious guise, and modify their form from time to time; but they excite our interest, and, judged by the standards of human thought, they appear to be worthy of our acceptation. But brought to the certain test of the Divine Word, we find them to be imperfect and at fault, and their grey tint contrasts but sadly with the perfect purity of the eternal God. They may be good, until contrasted with the best. Therefore trust not the arguments of men. There is but one sure guide—"Lord, to whom shall we go? THOU hast the words of eternal life" (John vi. 68). Faith Unto Salvation.

BY THE LATE GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

Simon saw a sinner in the woman,
Jesus saw a woman in the sinner.

THE WOMAN. She was nameless. She is not to be identified with Mary, the sister of Lazarus. Mary is of Bethany; this woman from "the city" of Nain (Matt. xxvi. 6). This woman anointed him early in his ministry. Mary did the same two days before the Passover. Both hosts were named Simon; one was "Simon the Leper," the other, "Simon the Pharisee." This woman had one thing to recommend her; she felt her sin as a debt, and desired to bring something to the Lord (37). He, recognizing her sin as her warrant for coming, welcomed her (Hos. xiv. 1, 2).

2. She heard about Jesus. How, we do not know; but someone was the blessed channel of knowledge to her. This ministry of making Jesus known constitutes the chief business of a believer. We are glad we are not told by whom or how she became informed. The mission leaves wide room for consecrated activity to operate. When once a soul is convinced they must make Jesus known; they will easily find ways and spheres for so doing (Rom. x. 14).

3. She came to Jesus. Her sins drove her. His love drew her. This the paradox of salvation. No man cometh unto Jesus, except the Father draw him (John vi. 44). Yet the sole responsibility of coming or withholding is cast upon ourselves. "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life (John v. 40).

4. Misery weeps at the feet of Mercy. She "washed"—grateful service; she "kissed"—grateful love; she "anointed"—grateful worship. And while the woman is nameless, her grateful expressions are emphasized. Pardoned sinners are expected to love. This is taught in the Lord's question. He does not ask Simon "Which will love?" but "Which will love most?"

5. What the woman received. I.—Forgiveness. II.—Peace. III.—The gift of faith.

6. What this faith did for her. It saved her. Notice: Thy Faith—personal. Thy faith—not thy feelings or works. Thy faith hath—present salvation. Thy faith hath saved—not reformed. Thy faith hath saved thee—though disqualified by all the past from respectable fellowships, she could now say with the holiest of saints, "We know that we have passed from death unto life (1 John iii. 14).

A Pastor's Letter

TO A BEREAVED CHRISTIAN.

DEAR FRIEND,—Your son, whom you have been called to resign at God's call, was a manly, chivalrous fellow. He had temptations that were peculiar to his temperament—in fact, incident to his attractions; for the very qualities that made him attractive also exposed him to snares and made him susceptible to worldly influences. And furthermore, the circumstances in which he had been brought up, the atmosphere of refinement and culture, high social rank and position, material surroundings of wealth, elegance, and taste—all these do not of themselves conduce, of course, to a life of self-denial, sacrifice, and separation unto God, but rather incline one to self-indulgent ease and enjoyment. It implies no harsh judgment as to the inherent right or wrong of such home-life, to admit its drawbacks.

You will remember how, years ago, when you unburdened your heart about your son, and his spiritual state, and asked counsel about him, we had united prayer concerning him. At that time I felt compelled to say that God would undoubtedly give you your heart's great yearning concerning him, but that such answer to prayer might come only in connection with the total surrender of him to God, as Isaac was yielded up to death on the altar, in the mind of Abraham. In several like cases such has been the manner of Divine dealing, answers to deep heart prayers coming only at the point where parental or conjugal love yielded its precious object to God unreservedly, to be saved and sanctified in His own way, withdrawing all personal will and preference in the matter, in the sublime readiness to say "Thy will be done."

There was, at the time, a distinct impression that in your dear son's case this might be the condition of perfect reception of the blessing implored of God. Often, without claiming any mystic power of forecast, one is compelled to a certain conclusion as an induction from no small number of individual instances which have come under observation. So strong has been my impression of this manner of God's dealing, that in my own personal and family history I have been wont to feel confidence that I have got to the true level where prayer is assured of its answer, only when I have been ready for myself, my wife, my children, and the wider circle of those toward whom my prayer is specially drawn out, to say and mean it—

Grant this, my prayer, whatever be
The channel of Thy will;
Whatever be the chosen means
My yearning to fulfil,
If Thou seem silent, or refuse,
Grant I may trust Thee still.

If only through hot trial fires,
Thou purgest out the dross;
If life eternal comes through death,
The final gain through loss,
The royal crown of all my hopes
By way of scourge and cross—

Still, in Thine own way, Father, give
My heart its deep desire;
If need be, lead me through the flood,
Or even through the fire.
But whether through the flood or flame,
Let not my faith expire.

May I add that I have known lately cases of such burdens and reliefs. First, for ten years a wife was afflicted with insomnia and melancholia; and complete deliverance came only after her husband had twice consented before God to her being taken from him. In another case, the richest deliverance and blessing came through a great trial of five years ago, when threatened with chronic invalidism; and full recovery came only when the afflicted one had got to the point where he so fully left himself to God's disposal, as to pray that the cup might not be taken from him until God's purpose was accomplished. One parent had a child who caused much sorrow and care by an impetuous and irascible disposition. Deliverance began in this case only when the right hand of that child was maimed by a serious accident, and the digestive powers seemed to be giving way. In another case, a daughter's full baptism of the Spirit was experienced only when she turned her back on the home she loved, and surrendered herself to voluntary exile in a foreign field for Christ's sake. The true anchorage of our hope is within the veil, and outside there is much storm and tempest; but the prayer of faith will hold, even in the gale, if we confidently trust Him who lays no burden on the praying soul unless He has a purpose to lift it in His own time.

Creation: Made and Marred.

AS we pass in and out among our fellow-creatures, and see many objects of suffering, and many almost repellent forms of human nature—mis-shapen and deformed, bodily and mentally—we look at the creature, and then we think of the Creator; and we are tempted to marvel and say, "Why did He make them thus?" But does not this question arise from a misapprehension of Creation—When did He make them? and did He make them thus?

We have but to turn to Gen. i. for our answer:—During "six days," Creation was going on, and at the end of every day God pronounced what He had created as "good" (4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25); and at the very end He looks upon "everything He had made, and behold it was very good" (31). It all came perfect out of the hand of its Creator.

After the sixth day, "the heavens and the earth were finished" (ii. 1), "and the seventh day God ended His work," and "He rested from all His works which He had made" (2). Creation's work was over, it was completed.

NOTHING FURTHER WAS EVER CREATED

in this world. In six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, in proof that all was done.

When Man was created, God said, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness." "So God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him." Could anything be more perfect than this? This was on the sixth day. After this no further creation in regard to man is ever recorded. We each look back to this period for our creation, body and soul—when "God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." This breath was breathed into man once and for ever.

Adam represented the whole human race—"male and female created He them" (Gen. i. 27; v. 1, 2), "and called their name Adam in the day when they were created." After this, the command to them was: "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth" (i. 28). This was their responsibility in the matter; God's work was over, and was perfect. Man came a perfect being out of the hand of his Creator. This was God's part of it—

HE NEVER CREATED IMPERFECTION.

Then comes in Satan's part in Gen. iii. He defiles the whole fair scene, bringing Sin and all its consequences into the bodies and souls of men. As man began to multiply, the effects of the Fall were more and more experienced throughout the whole human race, and have been ever since. Every disease, every deformity, every infirmity of mind or body, is not due to the way God has made us, but to the way Satan has marred us; though mercifully the image of God in which man was created has never become quite obliterated (Gen. ix. 6; James iii. 9) in the human race.

In Redemption God's part again comes in—Christ came to bruise the head of Satan (Gen. iii. 15) and to destroy the works of the Devil (1 John iii. 8). The strong man armed kept his palace until the Stronger one came to deliver. But the results of deliverance are not yet complete, nor will be till the redemption of the body takes place, and the last enemy is destroyed. But every blessing that we now enjoy is the fruit of that victory gained; and all the suffering that remains is the result of Satan's power, whom the world still chooses as its god (2 Cor. iv. 4) and its prince (John xiv. 30).

Bible Study Notes.—IV.

By Rev. W. HOOPER, D.D., Mussoorie, India.

CASES WHERE THE R.V. HAS NOT REMOVED ERROR.

1. Psa. lxxiii. 26 would be correctly rendered "My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is for ever the rock of my heart and my portion." In other words, Asaph predicates eternity of both the blessed aspects in which he looks on God as His own. But both our English versions fail to show this.

2. There is no Scriptural phrase more constantly misused than "waiting upon God." Probably, at the time when the Authorized Version was made, to "wait upon" a person had the same meaning as to "wait for" him; for it is exactly the same Hebrew word or words, which are rendered by the former phrase in (e.g.) Ps. xxv. 5, xxvii. 14; Prov. xx. 22; Is. xl. 31; Hos. xii. 6, and by the latter phrase in (e.g.) Gen. xlix. 18; Ps. cxxx. 5; Is. xxx. 18; Micah vii. 7. But the pity is, that when the meaning of the former had so much changed in the interval, the Revisers did not adopt the latter in all these places. I suppose I am not far wrong in saying that what Christians mostly mean by waiting on God is coming to Him in prayer (like "waiting upon" a ruler or other superior with a petition), laying our wants before Him, seeking His help, &c. The thought of waiting till He grants our petitions does not appear to form any important part of what is meant. Whereas the whole of what is meant by the phrase in every one of the many places where it occurs, is the patient waiting (as it is well rendered in Psa. xl. 1) for God to fulfil His promise; not, of course, an indolent waiting, but a continual looking to Him; and yet the chief thought is not this, but "tarrying the Lord's leisure," as the Prayer-book Version of Psa. xxvii. 14 so beautifully has it. We may truly say that this was one of the very cardinal virtues under the Old Covenant. God was, emphatically, "a God who worketh for him that waiteth for Him" (Isa. lxiv 4, R.V.); and the refusal to "wait for the Lord any longer" (2 Kings vi. 33) was sufficient to mark Jehoram's apostasy. And it occupies a hardly less prominent place under the New Covenant also (see Rom. viii. 25; 1 Thess. i. 10; 1 Cor. i. 7, &c.).

MISTAKES WHICH NO ENGLISH TRANSLATION COULD WELL REMOVE.

These arise chiefly from two causes, viz., (1) the fact that our English versions have adopted italics to indicate words inserted for the sake of idiom, and have thus lost the only convenient way of indicating the emphatic word in a sentence or clause; and (2) the fact that the Hebrew language indicates distinctions of gender, not only in nouns, adjectives, and pronouns, but also in verbs; and not only in pronouns of the third person, but also in those of the first and second, whereas the English has no such facilities. Of the first, a single example will suffice, viz., Deut. vi. 13, "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God; and Him shalt thou serve, and shalt swear by His name." In the original of this sentence the object is the emphatic word of each clause; the stress is not on the command to fear, to serve, or to swear, but on the Person to be feared, served, and sworn by. This fact is not brought out in A.V. at all; in R.V. it is brought out in the second clause, but not in the others, probably because it was not easy to do so in English. Yet it makes a great deal of difference to the sense.

Misunderstandings arising from the second cause are chiefly seen in those passages in which Christ and His Church are mentioned in proximity to each other. For instance, Psa. xlv. 16 is generally quoted as if it was spoken to the Bride, and the conclusion is drawn, that if the Church obeys the command in v. 10 she will be rewarded by v. 16 being fulfilled to her. And yet the three pronouns, and the verb "shalt make" in that verse are all masculine. Indeed, apart from this, it is obvious that v. 17 could be said only of Christ, and not of the Church. Again, Song ii. 1 is commonly quoted as if it were the Bridegroom's description of Himself; whereas the original makes it quite clear that the Bride is speaking of herself. And the R.V., while unable to express this fact in translation, has done its best to indicate the true meaning by dividing the Bride's and the Bridegroom's speeches into separate paragraphs. Similarly, in Song iii. 6, the "litter" is not understood to be that which the Bridegroom owns, but which he gives the bride to use. In Song viii. 5 the Bride is meant, as is clear from the gender in the original.

One other important instance of misquotation through neglect of the Revised Version is Rev. xi. 15. The Authorized Version has, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord"; and upon this the great Arnold, of Rugby, founded his strange idea that in the millennial empire of Christ there would be separate nationalities, under separate governments. Such an inference is quite dispelled by the Revised Version, where we have the singular, and the meaning that the blessed time is coming, when Jesus alone shall be the King acknowledged throughout the world.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 5. 1 Samuel xvii.

THIS old story of David and Goliath was dear to us as children, but it is dearer now, as we can see in it the working of great principles, which are as applicable to-day as ever. It is more clear to us now than it was then, that the cause of the giant's overthrow was not so much in the stone that laid him low, as in the faith that dared to trust God. David believed in the living God (36). He realised that God had delivered him from the lion and bear, and would deliver; for faith is ever going from the less to more (37). He had asked and received an answer, long before the massive form of the Philistine advanced to the fray; therefore he said, "This day will the Lord deliver thee into my hand" (46). From first to last, he fought the good fight of faith, and was more than conqueror by the same talisman as the Apostle used: "Who is he that overcometh, but he that believeth. . . This is the victory that overcometh . . even our faith."

What a contrast was Saul! When the Philistine champion threw out a challenge of battle, he was greatly afraid (11). He had no idea of power other than that which came of long usage (33), or of helmets and coats of mail (38, 39). He could not fathom David's meaning when he spoke of God's delivering the wild beasts to his hand, and thought that the successes were simply due to superior agility (37). And in his question to Abner, he seems to have thought that the best way to account for the wonderful victory was on the ground of heredity (56). But the same battle must be fought by the same weapons, only be it remembered that only those can acquire that faith and win that fight who can master their own spirit as David did, when his soft answer turned away the wrath of Eliab (29). The soul that can master its own temptations and difficulties, in the grace of Christ, need fear no Goliath.

MONDAY, October 6. 1 Samuel xviii.

Jealousy is among the most terrible of human sins, and the parent of the darkest and blackest crimes. Notice how in Saul's case it opened the door to the devil. David had suddenly become the darling of the people. At almost a single bound he had leapt into the throne of universal affection (16). Saul's servants, Michal, Saul's daughter, and Jonathan, his son, were alike loyal in their devotion to David. Besides this, the Lord was evidently with him (12, 14, 28). Notice also that recurring phrase, "He behaved himself wisely" (5, 14, 15, 30).

Under such circumstances, how wise it would have been for Saul to bind the son of Jesse to himself! Nothing could have been easier or more politic. But instead, Saul allowed his mad passion to smoulder always in his heart, sometimes breaking out into more fierce and bitter flame, and always affording an open door for Satan to enter into him. What a variety of methods jealousy will use to rid itself of its rival! Saul first threw the javelin, believing that the act would be imputed to his madness. Then he put David in positions of extreme peril. Next he incited his servants to take David's life. But all were abortive. David seemed to live a charmed life; and every effort that Saul made against him was but a stepping-stone to a stronger position. Balak may bribe Balaam to curse Israel, but how shall he curse whom God hath not cursed, or defy whom the Lord hath not defied? "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against thee shalt thou condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord" (Isa. liv. 17).

TUESDAY, October 7. 1 Samuel xix.

Jonathan stood as a mediator and intercessor before his father, and for a moment averted his jealous anger, but David's success in war aroused the smouldering embers, and the flame burst out anew in murder. Then Michal interposed. But David never forgot how the murderous bands prowled around the house, like the unclean dogs of the East (Psa. lix.).

Finally, the hunted man sought protection in Samuel's presence, and in the House of God—a cluster of woven osiers, where young men were being trained for the prophetic office. Into this sacred gathering Saul forced three bands of messengers, charged with David's arrest; and finally, in hot wrath, came himself. He was, however, stricken down, as he reached the place, in much the same way as men have been stricken down in religious meetings since. Such a phenomenon often took place at Bristol and elsewhere under the preaching of John Wesley, in the early days of his career. But the results were very different. In the case of recent revivals the outcome was a change of heart and life, and an exalted and blessed religious experience.

In Saul, the experience was as the early cloud and the morning dew that passeth away. Let us judge ourselves that we be not judged. Let us be sure that our religious life is not a mere reflection of our association with others; the influence of whose religion temporarily and superficially affects us, as the influence of the burning earnestness of these young men affected Saul. Let us see that the root of the matter is in us. But be it remembered that if our anxiety to be preserved from being wrong is made known to God — in New Testament language if we work out our salvation with fear and trembling—it is quite impossible for us to prove fruitless castaways.

WEDNESDAY, October 8. 1 Samuel xx.

Jonathan's is one of the noblest types of manhood presented in the long series of Scripture biographies. In any age, even in the most romantic age of chivalry, he would have stood easily in the foremost rank. Whether in court or war he must have shone as a star of the first magnitude. His friend, who was knit to him in the warmest love, said that he was "lovely and pleasant," "very pleasant" in his behaviour and conversation; that he could love with a love passing that of Eastern women; that he was swifter than an eagle, and stronger than a lion. Certainly the friendship between the two was an ideal one, and even reveals to us something of the length, and breadth, and depth, and height of the love of Christ, though, of course, this passeth knowledge.

Saul's jealousy broke out with volcanic violence at one of the monthly festivals, and finally vented its utmost virulence on Jonathan. The king and father abused his son with the vilest epithets an Eastern can use, who to-day vents his spleen on the mother of the object of his hate; he insisted on David's immediate execution, and ended by hurling the javelin at his noble son, who sought to mollify his wrath.

It became evident that the arrows were beyond David. It was useless for him to contend against the manifest direction given him by the force of irresistible circumstances. But the two hearts were well-nigh broken, as they parted. How little the lad realized what a tragedy was transacting beneath the calm beauty of that morning dawn. I suppose the birds were singing and flowers were unfolding as usual, but to the two friends there was a darkness on the sun and shadows on the sunny lawns. Yet God was leading David out to lay the foundations of the Kingdom of the Messiah; and the two met still in God. The Lord was between them, as the ocean is between Great Britain and the United States—not as a divider, but as a medium of communication.

Thursday, October 9. 1 Sam. xxi.

David fled to Nob, which stood to the north of the Mount of Olives. There, Ahimelech, the High Priest, presided over the relics of the ancient sanctuary. His suspicions, aroused by the fugitive's unescorted and hasty advent, were removed by an evasive explanation, which evinced a low state of religious feeling and a want of confidence in God. When we are absolutely right with God, and know ourselves to be on His way, it is not necessary to resort to deceit or subterfuge—and if we do, the results are likely to be disastrous, if not to ourselves, yet to others, even innocent people.

It was the Sabbath day, for the shewbread had just been removed from the table (Lev. xxiv. 8). For the most part such bread was reserved exclusively for the priests and their families But Ahimelech was strictly in harmony with the spirit of Mosaic legislation in subordinating the ceremonial to the urgencies of hunger and human need. Of course, when hunger clashes with obedience to the moral law—with the Decalogue for instance—the law of God must be observed at whatever cost. Our Lord taught us that in His first temptation. But where human need conflicts with a piece of ceremonial observance, the foundation of which is not in the eternal fitness of things, it is the need which takes the first place, and ceremonial the second. This is the distinct teaching of Mark ii. 25, and of our Lord's insistence on His right to heal on the Sabbath day.

It is very desirable to read Psa. xxxiv. and lvi. (see their inscriptions) along with the closing paragraph of the chapter. David's behaviour was far from dignified; yet, in his heart, he was making God his hiding-place. Let us not judge one another altogether by the exterior; ultimately this also will be influenced by the renewing of the spirit of our mind.

Friday, October 10. 1 Samuel xxii.

What a striking analogy there is between the gathering of these outlawed men to David, and the attraction of publicans and sinners, in all ages, to Christ. He also is outlawed by "the prince of this world." To find Him, it is necessary to go without the camp, where He has set up the standard of His cross. O blessed Lord, how many of those who were in distress, or in debt, and bitter of soul (2 marg.) have gathered to Thee, and Thou hast taken them in! Rejected by all the world, they have found an asylum in Thy heart of love; and with the devil's malcontents. Thou art founding a Kingdom that can never be moved, and forming an army by which to break for ever the power of evil.

Notice David's care for his parents. Our love to God should make us not less, but more, attentive and thoughtful in our attitude to those to whom we are bound by the ties of nature. I think, too, that all who live in God may count on such intimations as were given through the prophet Gad.

The Apostle James says that the tongue is "set on fire of hell." Surely it was so when Saul, encamped on the height (6 R.V. marg.) above Gibeah, scattered his unkind and unjust insinuations. He found a ready response in Doeg's evil heart, and the two perpetrated one of the most atrocious tragedies of history. Abiathar alone escaped from the scene of horror, which fulfilled 1 Sam. ii. 31, 32. He was welcomed by David in words which the Lord Jesus addresses to every fugitive soul (23).

SATURDAY, October 11. 1 Samuel xxiii.

The careful manner in which David inquired of the Lord is full of instruction. Before taking any step in life, we should ask Him to direct our way. It is of course necessary to use the judgment with which He has endowed us. It is not good to be always listening for voices to speak, or expecting angels to flash out of the blue vault for our direction. To think a difficulty out for ourselves, with an honest desire to do what is right, and then to act, trusting that, if we are wrong, God will graciously stop us, is, as far as I can see, the ordinary way in which we should act. But there are circumstances in all lives where no amount of thought can help us out; and in these we may look for direct guidance, as when the angel led Peter out of prison.

How very touching this last interview of the two friends! Jonathan had no jealousy of David's destiny. Perfect love had cast out all suspicion and selfishness. What a contrast between him and Saul! Yes, we can see that the one antidote to jealousy is to get near the persons that we dislike, to cultivate their acquaintance, and, above all, to make sacrifices for them.

Mind that you always strengthen your friends' hands in God. We sometimes weaken their good resolutions by our weak entreaties that they would spare themselves and us. No, you must help your friend to be his strongest—his best.

The Salisbury Conference.

By Mr. MONRO COLLINGS.

THIS year's meeting of the Salisbury Conference, which was held from Monday to Friday in last week, well maintained its high traditions as one of the best and yet the most unconventional of the smaller conferences. With one spiritual aim to fulfil, the controversies of the hour concerning dogma and ritual find no place in the programme of our esteemed friend, Rev. E. N. Thwaites, whose presence and personality for the past twenty-eight years have contributed so largely to the success of this annual gathering. Home and foreign mission work has a large place in Mr. Thwaites' heart, and one is sure to meet here many honoured workers from far and near, though we are beginning to miss some of the older faces who have gone on and up and into the home of God.

The Conference was commenced on Monday evening with an introductory sermon in Fisherton Church, by Rev. W. P. Buncombe, who was used so wonderfully last year in the great revival in Japan. Speaking from the words, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high" (Luke xxiv. 49), he remarked that all Christians are saved to serve; saved to be His witnesses. We speak much of cleansing from sin and of communion with God at these conferences, but we must ever remember that all these should lead up to service. It comes to this, that the life we live in this world is to be a life lived for all about us, and not for ourselves; it is to be world-centred and Christ-centred, but not self-centred. But how is this to be? There is only one answer; for everything in life, experience, and service, is by the Holy Ghost; and the great need of to-day is the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, a new and a mighty revival of the work of God.

At the prayer-meeting on Wednesday, Rev. E. N. Thwaites reminded us that the Holy Ghost was first given at a meeting for prayer. The 120 were all with one accord in one place. There was one heart, one object, and one expectation; waiting for the promise of the Father.

LOVE THE KEYNOTE OF REVIVAL.

At the opening session, Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke of Love as the keynote of the Conference. All true revival is a revival of love, and all declension is a departure from love, without which it is impossible to be holy and without blame before God. Love goes down deeper than expression. We may differ materially in definition and expression, but the love of God makes us one. Strength comes by the way of weakness, and we must be careful that we do not lose love by longing for power. When we have love we have everything, for all God is in love. "Love is of God, and God is love. He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in Him."

Rev. John Wilkinson followed on with a helpful and characteristic address. I note two points: first, the outward evidence of a Christian: "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another;" secondly, the inward evidence of a Christian; "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

In the evening, Rev. J. B. Figgis spoke of uncleanness of heart and life, and God's provision for cleansing. Said a lady from India, "I was born with a bad temper, I have lived with a bad temper, and I shall die with a bad temper." That is what man says, but God promises cleansing from all uncleannesses, whether the uncleanness is temper or anything else. Jesus is the Name above every name, and as long as He has that name, I have this hope of cleansing. But God gives plenty as well as purity. It is a grand thing to get rid of sin, but it is a grander thing to realize that the barren land has become fruitful and is bringing forth fruit unto God.

Mr. A. Forder, who has laboured in Arabia, where no other missionary has ever been, said we are apt to look upon Apollos as a very important person in the Acts of the Apostles; but are we justified in doing this? It is true he was eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures, but I do not find that, when he preached, men went down before him as they did before other preachers whose labours are recorded in the same book. And what of to-day? Ah, it is sadly possible for men to be eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures, and for the people to go away Sunday after Sunday, hungry and thirsty for the bread and water of life. What many of us need most is to be baptized into the Holy Ghost.

THE LIFE OF FAITH.

On Wednesday morning, Rev. Walter Brown, vicar of St. Silas', Birmingham, remarked that it is a comparatively easy thing to live the Christian life during these days of conference, but what we all need to do is to learn how far it is possible to live the life in the circumstances which will surround us on our return to the common duty. The life of faith is a supernatural life. When the Lord Jesus walked on the water, He walked there by His own inherent power; but when Peter walked on the waters to go to Jesus, he walked by the power of Christ, which was communicated to him. With our weak hands in the strong hand of Christ, it will be gloriously possible to cross all the troubled seas of life, and live to the praise and glory of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, gave two or three of the most earnest and effective addresses of the week. There is no word, he said, that more truly sets forth the sphere of the Christian than life. It is not creed, church, profession, knowledge—though these all mean much—but life—Divine, spiritual, eternal. Now, such a life within, demands a corresponding life without. The man who has life has to walk in the paths of life. (1) He must walk in the path of holiness. Any departure from holiness is a departure from that which is spiritual, and that which is of God. The very purpose of God in bringing us to Jesus is that we may walk unchargeable and unblameable in holiness all the days of our life. And the simplest description of the path of holiness is that which describes it as the whole life lived in companionship with Jesus. (2) The path of truth. The study of Holy Scripture lies much nearer the heart of holiness than many suppose. It is the Word of God that is the power of the Holy Ghost in the heart and life of the believer. Blessed, indeed, is the man who can say that the Bible is the rule of his life and conduct. (3) The path of service. If any man will follow Christ he must serve Christ. He must long for the world as well as delight in the Church, and this involves telling to others the redeeming love he has himself begun to enjoy.

SELF EXAMINATION.

On Thursday Rev. H. Graham Thwaites spoke some searching words from 2 Cor. xiii.: "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." Someone has said that the believer has two eyes—one wherewith to look at self, and one to look at Christ. If the eye is fixed wholly upon self, there is a terrible danger of depression; but, on the other hand, if the eye is wholly on Christ, there is equal danger of presumption. Now, to-day there is not enough of that old-fashioned and Scriptural practice of self-examination. The tendency is all the other way. But let us remember that we are worth examination. The tradesman throws the copper carelessly into the till, but he rings the gold. Finally, therefore, examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?

The missionary meeting on Thursday afternoon was a time of great power. A deeply solemn and earnest spirit pervaded all the addresses, and six young people offered themselves for work abroad, if God should graciously open the way. The final session of the conference was a praise meeting, which is always the last and great event of the feast, and the crowning point of blessing. May God give us grace to apprehend that for which we were apprehended, and a quickened response to "whatsoever things are true and lovely and of good report."

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Itinerary.

MANY prayers have been answered, beyond all that was asked or thought, during these days in Copenhagen. On reaching the terminus on Saturday night, I was met and welcomed by that true servant of God, Count Joachim von Moltke, and shortly after reaching his home, a number of devout people gathered for prayer. I spoke to them on reckoning upon God as about to do great things, and many prayers ascended.

On Sunday afternoon, the large hall was filled to the doors, and many were standing. After singing and prayer in Danish, I spoke to them of the necessity of having an ungrieved Spirit in the heart, for when that is so, all else in life and testimony is provided for. At night the hall was crowded with young men, 200 or 300 were standing or went away, and at the close of the address quite two-thirds stayed to the after-meeting. The secretary told me that he was kept busy till past midnight, speaking to those who were anxious.

On Monday and Tuesday the same blessed scenes were repeated. On Monday night I spoke to some 500 or 600 students, who listened to an address on Augustine's conversion, and some 150 remained afterwards to the second meeting. We finished with a gathering of 800 young women. The thirst for the deeper things of the inner life is most gratifying among all classes. At a notable gathering of ministers I was struck with their readiness to hear, not new things, but the old ones, perhaps in a new way.

Meetings for boys, young women, and others have kept me busy; but the beautiful clear weather has been a great assistance. I have only had three days here, but they have been, I think, memorable to many; and I have carried on a little further the work of God as begun by Rev. E. L. Hamilton, of Bath, and Mrs. Penn-Lewis. Each puts a tier on the rising structure, and goes his way.

I must close by one helpful little story. A friend told me that in the salon of a Norwegian hotel a little girl was strumming a tune on the piano with one finger. A fine musician sat down beside her, and to her poor stumbling notes played an exquisite accompaniment, improvising it. When they had finished, he led the little lady round the admiring circle, and said, "It is to her that you are indebted." We do but strum the eternal harmonies, but God accompanies our words with His mighty co-operation, so as to make them tell out all that He designs souls to know.

I start to-morrow (September 24) for Norway, from whence I will send further notes; but I still ask for prayer. F. B. Meyer.

Looking Backward.

O that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me; when His candle shined upon my head, and when by His light I walked through darkness (Job xxix. 2, 3).

THREE classes of people are frequently met with in our Gospel meetings and ordinary church services—the lukewarm Christian, the backslider, and the unconverted.

The Lukewarm Christian.—Is it not too sadly true of many that gifts and talents which were once honestly used for the glory of God are now rusting for the want of use? Having little heart in religion, there is little religion in the heart, and the service of Jesus Christ has become a toil and task-work. Look back, lukewarm soul, and call to mind that it was no lukewarm love that took your Saviour along the sorrowful road to Calvary.

The Backslider.—There was a time when you too were in a different position spiritually from that in which you are found to-day. But you have allowed the earthly to crowd out the heavenly, and with astonishing ingratitude have turned traitor. You know full well the steps that led to your present state. You may be what you once were, a happy trustful soul. O blessed and comforting thought, that all your sins and backslidings cannot quench His love, nor dim the light that once shone upon your path.

The Unconverted.—Has the text no message for you, unsaved friend? If these words express the inmost longings of your soul, then wail them out into the ear of Omnipotence. Venture on Christ now, and you shall find, as did Job, that the former sad and bitter wail shall be turned into a joyful psalm of praise and thanksgiving. R. S. Braddbrook.

Friends in Constantinople.

SITUATED near the scene of the massacre of some hundreds of natives, the Friends' Armenian Mission in Constantinople occupies a unique position, and maintains a strong and far-reaching work. The various branches of the mission are in a healthy and growing condition. The gatherings for worship on Sundays are appreciated as seasons of spiritual communion with the Risen Lord. The mission meetings are well attended, and the faithful preaching of Christ and Him crucified has led to the salvation of many.

The Sunday-schools and mission meetings are conducted by native Armenian and Greek teacher and helpers, and upon work and workers there has rested abundant blessing, both spiritual and temporal. At the time of the massacres, the lady workers effected the rescue of some hundreds, getting them to places of safety, and caring for the orphans and women who lost their breadwinners. With a small sum raised as relief funds the Mission inaugurated industrial work, which is proving a boon to more than 200 women and destitute girls, as a means of honest livelihood. The sales average £50 per week, and the work, which is self-supporting, has proved a help to the spiritual side of the Mission.

In reviewing the efforts of the past few months, Miss A. M. Burgess writes: "The workers have been more Marthas than Marys, often being uncomfortably pressed, with no time or chance for accepting the invitation—'Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile.' But though we may not have been able to sit at the feet of Jesus in the quiet, we have not been forsaken by our Heavenly Father. The lessons that Jesus gave, and the words that He spoke when on earth, have often been given to us by our Divine Comforter while in the midst of business, and the preparation for the various duties has in some degree been realized; our strength has been renewed and thoughts refreshed, and spiritual warmth and longings to bless others with the Word of Life have not been withheld. Whether in the workshop or meeting room, we have realized the heavenly gift of blessing, which has not been upon us only, but also with those who gather with us."

In the Alpes Maritimes.

WE have been much encouraged in our work in the villages around Grasse, in spite of numerous difficulties. Many have received with joy the good seed sown. Here are a few details of our two last open-air meetings:—

On arrival at L.B. we find a small travelling theatre on the village green; its proprietor politely places it at our disposal, and we accept his offer. The sergent de ville announces the meeting, and we soon have around us a group of 200 persons, who listen attentively to the Word of God, and manifest their sympathy in subsequent conversations.

In another village, V——, at a distance of eight miles from Grasse, we had an audience of 350 persons, who followed attentively the parable of the sower. After the meeting several New Testaments were bought, and we were able to distribute all our tracts and Gospels. Some of the peasants promised to come to Grasse to hear more.

We have lately visited nineteen villages, and preached the Gospel in fifteen of them, in some for the first time. Our work is extending, and its responsibilities also. We ask for earnest prayer that the doors may remain open, and the work be blessed and extended.

Girls in Cairo.

I VENTURE to think that few subjects will arouse the sympathy of English men and women more than the welfare of our young countrywomen in Egypt. Ever since the British occupation, some twenty years ago, the numbers have annually increased of those who go out to Egypt in search of employment, as governesses, sick nurses, servants, &c., sometimes in answer to advertisements, or with a vague desire to see the world. It is often difficult for them to find remunerative work at first, and many are thus exposed to terrible temptation, through ignorance of the language and customs of an Oriental country.

A few years ago the World's Young Women's Christian Association established a home at Alexandria, which has proved so successful and valuable that we are anxious to extend our operations to Cairo, in answer to repeated appeals from thence, telling of the crying need of an institute, with reading-rooms and club, managed on British lines (while international in sympathy), not only for newcomers, but for those already living hardworking, lonely lives, where they will find a warm welcome and a kind friend in time of need.

To meet the expenses of rent, housekeeping, furniture, travelling, &c., for two years, £1,000 will be necessary, and in the name of the Association I most earnestly appeal for this modest sum. We believe that by the end of that time the British residents and travellers in Cairo will recognize the value of the work, and give their help and sympathy. The treasurer is Miss Woods, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, and I shall be very happy to give any information that may be required.

Pioneers in Central America.

A RECENT communication from Mr. A. E. Bishop, Box 74, Guatemala City, C.A., sets forth in some measure the spiritual condition of this dark and almost unknown land. After describing the social and political life of the natives, the writer says:—

On the Atlantic coast the Moravian missionaries have done good work for years among the Mosquito Indians of Nicaragua, and the Wesleyan Methodists of England have worked among the English-speaking negroes; but until the Central American Mission was formed, a little over ten years ago, scarcely anything was done to give the Gospel to the people of the interior. The mission is Evangelical and undenominational. It has now thirty missionaries divided among the five republics. The blessing of the Lord has attended this work. Several hundred souls have been converted.

Many of the converts hope to give their lives to the spread of the Gospel; already many of them are doing Bible colportage work. One of our great needs is a training-school, for preparing native converts for evangelistic and pastoral work. There are a good many believers scattered throughout numerous villages; some of them are piteously calling for pastors and help, which we cannot supply.

The local work at Guatemala City, the metropolis of all Central America, has notably enjoyed the blessing of the Lord since its opening three years ago. Meetings are held every night. Many souls have been converted, and the interest and attendance increased. New faces are constantly appearing; many are hearing the Gospel and carrying the news to remote places. For more than two years we have occupied a small, poorly-ventilated hall, altogether inadequate for our growing work, but located favourably on a main thoroughfare, where it is said that more than 10,000 country people pass in a single day. Means are greatly needed for the purpose of erecting a suitable building in this desirable location, that the work be not hindered.

Missionaries of both sexes are needed, but the special need at present is for a number of men, sound in faith, experienced workers, to go from place to place evangelizing.

Protestant Work in Victoria.

OUR latest advices show that Rev. D. M. Berry had been lecturing in various parts of Victoria on "Rome, the Enemy of National Education," and had been everywhere received with enthusiasm. He was planning a new campaign, dealing with "Reformation Heroes, or Deeds that won our Protestant Liberties"—to be illustrated by limelight views.

The Orangemen have been specially active during the past year, and have been receiving large additions to their lodges. They have warmly supported Mrs. Margaret L. Shepherd, a lecturer from the U.S. of America, who, both in New South Wales and Victoria, has been delivering lectures, giving experiences of her life as a Roman Catholic, as well as those of others in convents, both in England and elsewhere. She has been exposing the whole convent system, and also been giving extracts from books used by Romanists in the education of their children and of their priests. The result of her lectures has been marked in the increased number of subscribers to Protestant literature and periodicals.

The Protestant Union of Victoria has just been formed, aiming at the enlightening of public opinion, and the uniting of Protestants with a view to the attainment of the following objects:—

(a) To obtain for Scriptural instruction its rightful place in our State system of education.

(b) To prevent any sectional or sectarian encroachments on the religious liberties or the equal rights, civil, political, or commercial, of all persons in the community.

(c) To obtain the return to Parliament of representatives who pledge themselves to support the attainment of the above-named objects.

The first president of this Union is Right Rev. H. A. Langley, Bishop of Bendigo (recently created); the treasurer is Mr. Thomas Manly, and the secretary, pro tem., Rev. W. M. M. Alexander, who, by his vigorous efforts, has done much to the successful launching of the Union. The Executive Council are on the outlook for an active and efficient organizing secretary. L.

For Young Anglo-Indians.

FOR several years the Simla Y.M.C.A. has been quartered in a "hired house," which involved a large expenditure in rent, and was not, in many respects, a suitable arrangement, though the best that could be made under the circumstances. Central, commodious premises have now been found at "St. Mark's," on the main thoroughfare of the summer capital of India. In this house there are not only sufficient public rooms for the use of members, but also quarters for eight resident members. The property was offered for 35,000 rupees, or £2,300. This is a large sum, but a more suitable house in an equally central position could not be found in Simla at the price. After earnest prayer to God and mature deliberation, it has been resolved to purchase the property, and so provide a Christian home for the young men of Simla, which will also be a "Soldiers' Home" for the men from the neighbouring garrison of Jutogh.

But it is necessary to look for help outside of the station if the scheme is to be carried through to a successful issue. Friends of the work in England, and old friends of the Simla Association now returned to England, are asked to help. Rev. J. H. Bateson, Middlelands, Simla, is financial secretary.

Appeal.—The Superintendent of the Soldiers' Home, Ulsoor Road, Bangalore, asks for gifts of "Grace Pettman" stories, tracts, and other Christian literature, for distribution in hospital and barracks. "We should be grateful if we could count on even a small supply sent to us every month, or quarter. Just now we are almost crowded out with the regiments that have arrived from South Africa, and it is a joy to be able to welcome and minister to them."

The Outlook in Ahmednagar.

THERE are two principal crops in the year in this part of the country, known in Indian parlance as the kharif and rabi crops. Of these, seed is usually sown for the former in July, and for the latter in September. The past few years have been very hard ones for the farmers all about here.

Many who were well off a few years ago, and estimated their estates by counting their ten and sixteen head of cattle, are reduced to one pair of poor oxen, which barely suffices to work a few acres. Large and rich fields in this region are seen on every hand to lie fallow this year, overgrown with weeds, and not even fit for grazing. The situation is intensified manifold in the case of the countless farmers in ordinary circumstances, whose poverty is almost beyond belief. None of the crudest implements these cultivators ordinarily use can now be found in their possession. The situation is well put by the chief district magistrate under Government, who writes:—

"Government is prepared to lend, and does lend money for the purchase of seed for sowing, and of bullocks for ploughing, to all applicants, who are able to give reasonable security for the payment of the loan. But there are many cultivators who generally, through having no land of their own, and having no sufficient personal credit, are unable to give the requisite security, and consequently to obtain any loan from Government. To such persons charitable gifts of money are made from the funds at the disposal of the Ahmednagar District Famine Charitable Relief Fund Committee.

"But these funds are this year very limited, and for the whole district the committee has been unable to allot more than about 25,000 rupees for kharif sowing, and will not be able to distribute more than about the same sum for rabi sowing. Rev. H. G. Bissell and Rev. Mr. Tilak, of the American Marathi Mission, have informed me that much land will this season remain unsown, for want of money to buy seed; and the latter gentleman states that in twenty-eight villages in his missionary charge, he reckons as many as 600 cultivators whose fields will be fallow if funds be not forthcoming to aid them. These gentlemen, therefore, propose to apply to the charitably disposed for gifts of money to be entrusted to them for distribution to cultivators, who would otherwise be unable to obtain seed with which to sow their lands.

"The object is a most praiseworthy one, and money so given will enable sowings of rabi crops to take place in many holdings in which the actual occupant cannot, for want of security or credit, obtain a loan from Government, and cannot, for want of sufficient funds to meet all applications, receive a gift from the District Charitable Relief Fund. The money is certain to be judiciously distributed in a manner ensuring its application to the purpose for which it is given; for in the famine of 1899-1900 the members of the American Marathi Mission in this district received and distributed large sums of money for the same and other charitable purposes in thoroughly business-like manner, and it is beyond doubt they will be able this year to deal equally effectively with all funds that may be entrusted to them."

Of course, it is now too late to do anything for the first crop; but September is still ahead, and it is with hopes of securing some help for the poorer farmers in this region that this brief message is sent out. Any and all remittances will be personally acknowledged by the writer, and devoted most gratefully to the cause above referred to. To leave so much land unsown again this year will result disastrously to this section of the country, not to speak of the irreparable losses coming to these patient tillers of the soil, and the families depending on them. Not a few of these are Christian converts.

We wish it to be understood that any contributions received will be distributed without reference to caste or creed. A farmer's need will be the one controlling reason for giving him help.

Miss Jessie Mary Hewlett

OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THERE is mourning in many Indian as well as English homes on account of the death of Jessie Mary Hewlett, who was for more than fourteen years a missionary of the London Missionary Society. She passed away on August 4, at Almora, North India, after a painful illness of rather more than a year, from cancer, which she bore with great patience and resignation.

She went to Benares as a girl from school in England, where she was educated, and consecrated her bright young life to the service of God in the work among Hindu and Mohammedan girls. She entered heartily into all the work which was being carried on in Benares, and by her brightness and winning ways soon won the hearts of all with whom she came into contact. At the age of twenty-two she became a missionary of the London Missionary Society, and worked for some time very happily and earnestly in Almora, where she went to recruit her health after an attack of typhoid fever. She was then sent to Mirzapur, and there worked very earnestly in the schools and zenanas.

In the famine of 1897, she helped to feed the hungry ones and nurse the sick, and sometimes sat up at night with the sick and dying. One night she sat by a young woman who was apparently dying in peace. Suddenly she awoke to the knowledge that the end was near. "What shall I do, Miss Sahiba?" she cried, "where am I going? Oh, what shall I do?" The dark, despairing eyes closed, "and it was night." Jessie said, "I sat on, beside the body whence the spirit had flown, as the stars paled in the eastern sky and the sun rose over the mountains, and prayed to God to make me faithful to my trust, so that no woman or girl whom He has put into my charge may ever go out into the dark because I have failed to find her and bring her to Jesus."

For some years Jessie had the charge of an orphanage for girls in Mirzapur, in which she was greatly interested, and she was a real "mother" to the children. She took a deep interest in their spiritual welfare as well as in their temporal concerns, praying with them individually, and seeking to lead them to Christ. Many will rise up and call her blessed. She was very intelligent and well read, and always bright and lively, which made her a pleasant companion, and as a friend and fellow-worker she was beloved by all.

The home-call came rather suddenly. A few days before the end came, she suffered great pain, and then passed quietly away to be for ever with the Lord. It seems very mysterious that this earnest worker should have been called away when she was at her best and ripest, and seemed to be so much needed here; but we know that God makes no mistakes. He will fill the gap which He has made in the Mission.

Will those who read this pray more earnestly than ever before, that God will send out more labourers into His harvest?

Sheaves after sowing, sun after rain,
Sight after mystery, peace after pain;
Joy after sorrow, calm after blast,
Rest after weariness, sweet rest at last.

Itinerating in China.

WRITING from Hsu-ting-fu, Sz-chuen, July 14, Mr. Montagu Beauchamp speaks of God's wonderful goodness to himself and Mrs. Beauchamp in prospering their journey up the Yangtse, at a time of year when few people travel by that route, owing to the dangerous conditions for navigating. He goes on to say that when they reached Kwei-chou-fu, they realized once again what a pity it was that this important border city should not be occupied by some of the smaller societies, instead of all pressing on to the further cities, where there are missionaries already working.

He says that he "can scarcely go into any details of work in a letter of this kind, but must say this, that notwithstanding many really difficult problems, there is a wonderful work beginning, with quite unprecedented opportunities. What a contrast to my experiences in these parts ten or twelve years ago! As we reach each fresh stage, we feel more than ever that 'times have changed.' The need for experienced evangelists is very great. I do not mean those who have had experience in homelands. The danger, however, is that we should in this time of need be putting unsuitable natives in as stop-gaps. In quite a few cities and markets the heathen have subscribed money and got a house or shop-front and labelled it Fu-zin-T'ang—i.e., Gospel Hall—the regular name for Protestant mission houses.

"These may be a source of very serious trouble; indeed, they have been in some cases already. Troubles would be entirely avoided in most cases if we had the needed workers, and golden grain might in time be gathered in. At Liang Shan Hsien I found people assembled who begged me to come over and speak to them, and though footsore (not yet having got into walking trim), I hobbled over, and was much refreshed by such an attentive audience. Next evening, in a country market, I was surprised to find an audience of fully 100 men, all most attentive. Often by the road-side I met with people who spoke of places where there were Gospel halls with some scores or hundreds of adherents; but everywhere an utter lack of knowledge of the truth, only a desire to be associated with the foreigner. There is no doubt that many are seeking to join us with utterly wrong motives, and have bought Bibles, hymn, and prayer-books as their proof of belonging to us!"

Evangelical Effort in Finland.

THE spiritual needs of the Dissenting community in Finland are at present being brought before the British public by Mrs. Parker—formerly of Birmingham—who is specially trying to raise funds for the erection of a church and other buildings at Helsingfors, the capital. A suitable site cost £4,000, and towards a like sum required for building operations a sum of £2,900 has been obtained. It is hoped that ere long it will be possible to lay the foundation stone; and that this may be not only a valuable centre of usefulness in the city itself, but a source of strength to all the congregations throughout the land.

Mrs. Parker has many warm friends in this country. Rev. F. B. Meyer's testimony is, "My friend, Mrs. Parker, is a brave woman. Her aim is to secure funds to build a church and other buildings, to serve as the centre of Evangelical missionary work in Finland, which at this time is of the utmost importance for that country." Communications for Mrs. Parker may be addressed to the House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, N.W.

Rev. John Bradford,

SECRETARY, LONDON BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

THE London Baptist Association is an aggressive organization, having for its primary object the planting of Evangelical churches in the Metropolis and its suburbs. It furnishes a bond of union by which ministers and other workers are combined to advance the Kingdom of Christ, aiming, among other things, to erect or purchase at least one chapel every year in districts previously unoccupied. In all parts of London efforts have thus been made to bring the ever-growing population under Gospel influences; and year by year the Association develops strength with its steadily-growing membership.

Until now the secretarial duties have been discharged by ministers in the active pastorate, devoted men who have somehow "made time" to promote the interests of the larger work. At length, however, in view of the urgent calls for expansion, and ever-increasing demands of the work, the Association has called to the secretariat one who, at personal sacrifice, but with great readiness, undertakes to give of his best, without stint or reserve, in the service of his brethren, and the advancement of the work of evangelization in and around the Metropolis.

Mr. Bradford is a Devonshire man, having been born (in 1854) at Lapford, near Chulmleigh. With brothers and sisters he enjoyed an upbringing that was at once happy and stimulating. From being village schoolmaster, his father passed to the office of a land-agent and surveyor, as managing clerk. Thus the son became familiar in his early years with the mysteries of measuring and surveying, along with allied operations connected with building, and gained knowledge which has since been turned to excellent account as a promoter of Gospel enterprise. When the lad was ten years of age, the family removed to Barnstaple. There, after further years under a greatly-loved teacher, the school-days came to an end and business life began. From the counting-house of a manufacturer, young Mr. Bradford entered the office of a solicitor and land-agent, and the legal profession seemed to offer him a successful career. The providence of God, however, opened doors whereby one who might have made a good advocate-at-law became a greatly-blessed Gospel preacher.

While quite a lad, Mr. Bradford accompanied his father on preaching excursions into the villages around Barnstaple. It was strenuous service—often three sermons were delivered in the course of the day, with many miles (on foot) making up a "Sabbath day's journey." Though an occasional helper in the service of song, the youth was not as yet won to Christ and His cause. Conversion came in somewhat singular circumstances. Through the failure of a friend to keep an appointment, the young man dropped into a service in the Public Hall at Barnstaple. At the close of the meeting, a lady who knew his family well, pressed upon him the need for immediate decision for Christ. The service itself had made no special impression, but the personal ministry of the lady was blessed; and late that night, in his own room, the young man sought and found the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour. Leaving for Bristol, where he accepted an appointment in the West of England Bank, Mr. Bradford joined the Baptist Church under the care of Rev. J. R. Wood (now of Hollo-way), and at once began village preaching and other forms of testimony for Christ. At length he resolved upon surrendering himself entirely to the work of the ministry, and in 1876 entered the Pastors' College. In business life and Christian service he had made thorough preparation, and the training that followed offered him further opportunities of "making full proof" of the ministry which he had received of the Lord Jesus.

Subsequent experiences have well qualified Mr Bradford for the important work which he now undertakes. While yet a student, he laboured with great acceptance at South-end, and as his course neared completion he was asked to accept the pastoral charge there. Other churches also approached him. Just at that time, however, in the autumn of 1878, he preached in the newly-opened chapel at the Fillebrook, Leytonstone, and from the church which was there formed he received an unanimous invitation, which in due course he accepted. A new estate was just then being opened; the builders were at work on all hands; and a large resident population in a short space of time, was assured. There was scope for energy, and in the full vigour of manhood Mr. Bradford threw himself into the work. As the district developed so the church grew, and from a comparatively small beginning a series of operations—societies, bands, unions, &c.—for all classes and ages, were brought into being. The chapel has been enlarged from time to time; a school has been built, also a lecture hall and class-rooms; and when it is added that there are three missions, which are conducted by lay preachers of the parent congregation, it will be realized that Mr. Bradford's church has proceeded along the lines of healthful expansion as well as thorough consolidation. Home and foreign missions, and general as well as local objects, have engaged the sympathies of the people; and enlargement of heart has led to sacrifices that have shown the reality of the Christian life as unfolded in deeds of faith, hope, and love. Last year's return of membership was 536. It is noteworthy that two members have gone into the ministry; the church also gave its blessing to a lady member, Miss Bessie Renaut, on her departure to labour in China. She went forth in 1899; in less than a year she finished her course as a martyr of Jesus at Hsin-chou, Shansi. Assuredly God put honour upon the church in accepting the service of this devoted sister, whose letters and diary, recovered since her death, show that she experienced the peace of God in great fulness while awaiting the cruel end—all that men could do (Luke xii. 4).

For twenty-four years Mr. Bradford has guided the steadily-expanding work of a live church. His message has been clear, his methods unexceptionable. In the words of one of his deacons, Mr. G. Andrew Hutchison—in an appreciation in the Baptist Magazine, October, 1899—"'Christ and Him Crucified,' is essentially his theme, not set forth in any coldly formal phrasing, but in stirring, living tones and words aglow with heartfelt experience of Jesus and His love." Mr. Bradford has done a noble pastoral work, and his brethren in the ministry have not been slow to recognise his sterling administrative abilities. Hence he was made president three years ago of the very Association which he is now to serve in the responsible post of secretary. For years, moreover, the ministers of the neighbourhood, as well as others, have sought his advice in circumstances of difficulty, and his counsel has been instrumental of lasting good in many directions. He has an all-round fitness for the post he is now to fill—spiritual, mental, moral; the workers of the associated churches, some 160 in number, planted in all parts of London, will find in him a ready helper, and worthy of their confidence as "guide, philosopher, and friend."

No one doubts but London offers problems that may well engage the serious attention of all Christian organizations. These will not appeal in vain to the heart and head of the secretary of the London Baptist Association. As the Metropolis out-spreads, new centres in which to preach the Gospel must be planted, and promptly too; while the precedent of thirty years may show the way, it need not measure (and limit) the rate of progress. As the mass of the population moves outward, yet hosts of people are left behind—and so are churches, but unfortunately the two are in no way related. What can be done with the churches thus stranded, so that they may be for the good of the people that are unable, and at present unwilling, to maintain them? This raises the question of central missions and settlements; and it is no secret to say that this question is one of the many which Mr. Bradford is now studying, and the solution of which will not be beyond Godly piety and Christian sacrifice. In the course of a recent conversation, he mentioned quite a number of plans that are at present occupying his mind, but above and beyond everything he expressed a hope that his secretarial duties would bring him into helpful contact with workers in the churches.

Mr. Bradford preached his farewell sermon at Leytonstone last Sunday. The prayers of the people follow the pastor in his new labours. Nothing but the anticipation of usefulness on a larger scale would, we are assured, have induced Mr. Bradford to give up a pastorate which has been singularly happy and greatly owned of God. Certain it is, that the secretariat offers a wider oversight. May it also be attended with richer blessing! That is the prayer of all who know the subject of the present brief sketch.

The Congregational Union.

[BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.]

THE meetings of the Congregational Union this year will be memorable for two things, that they were joint meetings of the Union of England and Wales, the Union of Scotland, and the Union of Ireland, and that they were so largely occupied with the subject of the Education Bill. The Scotch brethren came to the meetings at Manchester in large numbers last year, and this year the English went in large numbers to Glasgow, where they met with a cordial welcome. There was a reception of delegates on Monday evening in the City Chambers by the Lord Provost and Corporation of the City, which afforded an excellent opportunity for the meeting of friends from widely separated parts, and for the expression of kindly fraternal sentiments on the part of the Provost, and also on the part of Dr. Mackennal and Dr. Fairbairn, who replied for the guests. It was not a formal ceremony on the part of either—the Provost being too large-hearted and too catholic-minded to allow of that.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

The session on Tuesday morning was deprived of the presence and services of the Chairman, Dr. Caleb Scott, who is only recovering from a serious illness; his place was filled by Dr. FAIRBAIRN, who devoted a long address to the subject of education. His references to the benefits Scotland has derived from her educational system were peculiarly applicable to the present crisis. The Scotch people had (he said) good reason to know what education could do for the people. It had made them, and if as a race they were revered at home and trusted abroad, it was because the school had made them. They had education in their very blood. Since crossing the Tweed he had heard that there were men who thought this pre-eminently an English question, with which they as Scotchmen had no immediate concern, or ought to have none. Was it possible that an argument of that kind could be valid? Why was Parliament called Imperial? Was it English? Who went there but representatives of the people by their votes, sealing this Education Bill upon English necks that did not want to wear it? He was profoundly grateful that the time had come when in Scotland, where men had an educational system, they should be able to reason concerning the want of education in England; that their representatives might be sent to the Imperial Parliament to demand for England what they themselves possessed, and not to force upon England what themselves would repudiate and reject.

THREE THINGS TO BE KEPT IN MIND.

In concluding, Principal Fairbairn emphasized three things. First, they asked an honest, a complete, perfectly sincere, free representative system in education. No Bill that withdrew that from the people could ever receive their sympathy or support. Second, a Bill that threatened that any proportion of Anglican schools should be supported out of public moneys must receive, and would receive, their united and coherent opposition. They were bound to do their best to prevent a Parliament which was elected for an absolutely different occasion attempting to legislate for things so vital as education and schools. Whatever they could do to resist they would do, and do it to the uttermost in their power. The third thing was that the express form final resistance was to take was a matter to be decided by two things—firstly, the Bill when it was framed, and secondly, the conscience of the man who was to oppose it. He made a clear and absolute distinction between what it became the Assembly to do, and conscientious and sincere Christian men to perform.

A long and earnest discussion followed, in which Mr. A. E. Hutton, M.P., Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell, Revs. Dr. Leach, Watt Smith, Dr. Mackennal, Silvester Horne, Dr. Goodrich, and Mr. John Leith took part, with the result that the following resolution was passed, with some dissentients:—

That this Assembly protests most strongly against the Education Bill now before Parliament, inasmuch as (1) it sacrifices educational efficiency to sectarian and priestly ends; (2) in the summary abolition of the School Boards of England and Wales, which have powerfully promoted the education of the people, whilst they have enlarged religious liberty for parents, teachers, and scholars, the Bill has seriously impaired the control of the people over, and their interest in, schools supported by public funds; (3) it has not only been introduced without mandate from the constituencies, but is being forced through Parliament in the face of direct indications that the opinion of the country is opposed to its main provisions; (4) it violates the principle of civil and religious liberty (a) by placing the entire support of denominational schools on public funds, without providing for public control in all respects of such schools, and (b) by confining the appointment of teachers in denominational schools to members of such denominations; and if the Act is forced upon the nation the Assembly is prepared to advise its members to refuse to pay the rate.

To this a rider was added, on the motion of Rev. T. Gasquoine, seconded by Rev. J. P. Gledstone:

In conclusion, the Assembly desires, in accordance with solemn declarations made in years past, to give expression to its conviction that there can be no final solution to the religious difficulty in national education until the State lays aside all claim to interfere, either by support or control, with religious education, and freely leaves to parents and Christian churches the responsibility and opportunities for the provision of the same.

HABITATIONS OF GOD.

The annual sermon of the Union, which was preached by Dr. HORTON, was one of remarkable power, searching the heart as with fire; if it had a fault, it was in the delivery, which was so subdued that the audience in the back seats of the great St. Andrew's Hall could not hear. The text was Judges vi. 34, and 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, and the burden of the sermon was in the different rendering the preacher gave to the words—"The Spirit of the Lord came upon." He said that is tame and inadequate, because the meaning of the words would rather be in these two passages, "The Spirit of the Lord put on the man;" "The Spirit found the human personality and put him on as a dress." The striking suggestion is that the infinite Spirit of God is moving through the world seeking whom He may put on, and ready to invest Himself wherever there be a human being ready to be put on. His works amongst men must be done through men. The invisible Spirit must clothe Himself in the body of a man or a woman, and must use the faculties, the brain, the heart, the will.

The Spirit of the Lord put on Gideon, and the Spirit of the Lord put on Zechariah. Let us ask whether the Spirit of God is moving in this place; whether He, the invisible amongst us, is present in us or around us, a great flowing tide of wisdom and power and life, soliciting the investiture and use of your personality and mine; and let the question be all through, Shall He come in? Shall He use my personality? Shall He find, when He comes, myself sufficiently gone for Him to come in and use the true means? Will you, my brother, be a fitting habitation, or, if you may use this wonderful illustration, a fitting garment for the Spirit of God to dwell in and to wear? The two instances which are before us are in some respects opposite. The Spirit put on Gideon to gain a victory and to effect a deliverance; the Spirit put on Zechariah to deliver a protest and to suffer a martyrdom. Both these work to one and the self-same Spirit.

THE TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

It seemed to some of the delegates a pity that another meeting was fixed to follow Dr. Horton's sermon in the same building. The solemnity of the first service was broken in upon, by the coming of a second audience and the departing of some of the first, an organ voluntary adding to the distraction. Some day, perhaps, we shall think it quite as important to preserve as to create a holy impression. When will Christians learn that the critical time is when a service is over? Then cometh Satan and catcheth away the good seed of the Kingdom. In this case the second meeting was thought by some to gain by the preceding service. Rev. GEORGE GLADSTONE, who presided, took high ground when he said:—In all that makes for morals and for the welfare of the people, the Church should lead. I am all for an appeal to our medical men to think of the exceeding evil of drink, and to prescribe a less insidious drug than alcohol. I am all for an appeal to Parliament to have done with their pitifully abortive tinkering at results, and give the people power to shut out the public-houses from their respective districts. I am all for our working-men getting to see what is the chief thing they need to fight, and that it is bootless to strike and work for more wages, only to put them as into a bag with holes—but yet more earnestly would I appeal to the Church of Christ. The State will not legislate in advance of the sentiment of the Church. When the Church awakes, and in the strength of its Divine Master and Head proclaims unrelenting hostility to all the causes and practices of intemperance, the battle will be at the gate. No alcoholic liquor on the Communion table, or in the vestry or parsonage, will be followed by its disappearance from the homes and streets and the people.

FREE CHURCH LIFE IN RURAL ENGLAND.

An interesting and useful discussion on this subject was initiated by Rev. G. P. CHAPPLE, of Melbourne, who said that in ten years the villages had lost 70,000 persons; yet there was no diminution in the number of public-houses, there being as many as one to eighty or ninety of the people. Another evil was the overlapping of religious agencies; Christians competed with each other and got into each other's way. Mr. HARRISON advocated the grouping of village churches, and the organizing of lay preachers under ministers who had the capacity of leaders and directors. Mr. MANSERGH said that in the county of Lancaster they had such a method, and that it worked well; and so said Rev. A. COWE of Guildford, of the part of Surrey where he lives. Mr. MANSERGH added that the villages supplied the lay preachers; the young men of the towns were too busy with cycling and other amusements to learn to preach. Rev. H. H. HUFFADINE, of Brewood, said that Congregationalism flourished among the rural population of South Staffordshire, and that the religious outlook was full of promise. Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE expressed the belief that all the religious appliances, and property provided in villages and small towns in more prosperous times, would be again required when the electric tram-car and motor-car brought back to them a new life. He said it was well worth the money and the trouble to keep village stations, in order to train the young people for future life and work.

THE LORD PROVOST AND SOCIAL BETTERMENT.

The condition of the people is a question which is constantly forcing itself to the front, and will do so until it is greatly altered for the better. When the meeting on University Settlements was held, the chair was taken by the LORD PROVOST, who, in opening the proceedings, said that in a great many quarters where the general principle of social betterment was approved and extolled, when they came to make a practical proposal in that direction, difficulties and objections were immediately started. One of the best, if not the very best, methods of ascertaining how this which they all so much desired was to be arrived at, was to begin and do something. That in this country, so rapidly advancing in wealth, there should be at the same time such a mass of poverty and misery, culminating so often in despair, was a thing which, if they were not habituated to it by every day's sight and hearing, would simply appal them. All the churches and evangelistic associations ought, properly directed, to secure a very considerable amount of social betterment. No social betterment would ever be of a practical and abiding character that had not at its heart Christian truth and Christian love.

MOVEMENTS FOR THE YOUNG.

One of the most useful meetings was that devoted to the young, presided over by Principal SIMON, of Bradford, who spoke wise, timely, and weighty words on the necessity of teaching young persons respect and reverence. He reminded the meeting that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and that true and abiding love must rest upon a foundation of respect and love. He deprecated the modern tendency to softness and sentimentality, and maintained that strength of character can only be secured by imparting the harder qualities that are allied to righteousness.

Most of us must have been pained by the self-centredness, selfishness, and indifference to the claims of parents, brothers, and sisters, and other relatives, and particularly to passing guests, displayed by children whose training had been one of so-called love, who, at all events, had not been compelled to show respect where respect was due. On the other hand, what a delight it is when the reverse conduct is observed. Thoughtful persons are coming to see that the over emphasis which has been laid for some time upon love at the cost of righteousness is producing disastrous consequences, and that we must return to the Divine model in which law is fulfilled and honoured by love.

INTELLECTUAL DIFFICULTIES.

After Rev. E. R. Barrett had spoken on the subject of Christian Endeavour Societies, the subject of "Difficulties in the way of Belief which Beset the Young," was introduced by Rev. W. B. Selbie, of Cambridge, who said: "What were known as doctrinal or creedal difficulties were not often met with now, and could generally be removed by wise and faithful conversation. What troubled young minds much more seriously was that in many religious circles stress was laid on doctrine rather than on life as the chief end of religion. The difficulty was sometimes increased by the assumption that those who were troubled with religious doubts must somehow be morally deficient. There was such a thing as an evil heart of unbelief, which made scepticism an excuse for sin, to which no mercy should be shown. There was also a flippant scepticism, which delighted in wounding sensitive feelings, and gloried in a fancied emancipation from ancient trammels. This, too, must be dealt with as it deserves. But these forms of unbelief must be carefully distinguished from those which sprang from an honest search after truth. The apologetic value of religious experience was gradually coming to be recognised, and it was upon the lines indicated by it that they could best deal with the religious difficulties of the young.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This organization has fully established itself in connection with the meetings of the Union, and commands a large share of sympathy and support. Besides a private breakfast given to the treasurers and secretaries of auxiliaries, and also to directors, by Mr. Albert Spicer, J.P., there was a meeting of the Watchers' Band—a band formed for prayer—and a great valedictory service to sixteen missionaries. For spiritual power and helpfulness none of the meetings excel those that are of a missionary character. The breakfast meeting concerned itself with the ways and means of increasing the income of the Society; the Watchers' Band laid emphasis upon the necessity for prayer; and at the valedictory meeting prominence was given to the duty of the Church to be a missionary Church. Dr. Horton, in the course of an impassioned address, which must have been distinctly heard in every corner of the building, insisted that no one could urge that the Gospel must be preached in Glasgow unless he was prepared to urge that the Gospel must also be preached in Tibet and the Soudan; and the view that Christianity was suited for Christendom, and other religions for the rest of the world, cannot be said to be Christian.

The Evangelical Continental Society was happy in securing the services of Dr. Orr, and the Colonial Society those of Dr. Forsyth. The latter preached a sermon full of glittering epigrams and well-balanced antitheses, which was marred by political references that either wenttoo far or not far enough. The Evangelical tone left nothing to be desired.

The address of Rev. Alfred E. Garvie on the "Relation of the Evangelical Basis of our Church Life to Social Questions" was a wise deliverance, followed by a one-sided discussion—if there can be such a thing.

Return of Dr. Parker.

THE audience which assembled at the City Temple last Thursday morning, to greet Dr. Parker on his return after an absence of twelve weeks from his pulpit, was an eloquent testimony to the high place which the veteran preacher holds in the public esteem and affection. Before the time came for opening the service, the capacious building was crowded in every part. After the reading of verses from Psalms cxx,, cxxi., and cxxii., the burden of the opening prayer was thanksgiving for the distress which causes the people of God to cry to Him.

"IF THE LORD WILL."

The text chosen was, "If the Lord will" (James iv. 15), and the sermon which followed was a heart-searching and solemn utterance on the need for the acknowledgment of God in every-day life. The Lord is always coming in. To-morrow is God's. To-morrow is as impenetrable and inscrutable as God. People want to say that God is unthinkable: so is to-morrow, so is the future. God is unknown, God is unknowable: so is to-morrow. You cannot look through the thin film of to-day and see to-morrow. You can put up scaffolding enough, but no temple.

If you say, "If the Lord will," that is where religion comes in. Religion stands here on the plane of this very day, and says, "Do not talk about to-morrow." If a man cannot talk about to-morrow, what can he talk about? He can talk partially and hesitatingly about to-day. Men build wisely and rightly for to-morrow when they say, "If the Lord will." It is round the whole life. It penetrates to the foundations. It controls the destiny. You can drive God from your books, but you cannot drive Him from your life.

THINGS CANNOT BE TAKEN FOR GRANTED.

"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself"—kill his will, let self-will be abolished, let him know himself. "Let him deny himself," in one sovereign act of obliteration. Suppose the people fall into this temper, and say on every occasion, "If the Lord will," would it not be a little pietistic? There is a way of saying it which makes it always novel, fresh, and new. You say that among Christian people it ought to be understood that "If the Lord will" is taken for granted. You cannot take the great things of the world and of life for granted. It must be always enunciated. Would it not be cant? If you said it as cant, it would be cant. Can you not take it for granted? No. We take too much for granted. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so." Hands up! The day is one of testimony. We want witness. We want to know "who is who" in a larger sense than is customary. Would it not be somewhat repetitional? Try it. There are some men who would be looked on as wonders or monsters if they were heard to say, "If the Lord will." If you were to utter the word "holy" it would be remarked upon, it would be talked about at the dinner table.

Supposing we could fall into this sweet temper, this obliteration of self, this complete dependence upon the will of God, what would be the results? Certainly three.

A WILL THAT IS NOT A WILL.

1. A Sanctified Will.—A will separated, established in God's will; a will that is not a will until it knows the will of God, and says, "Lord, let me find Thy grace in me." This is a sanctified will, taking it every morning to the fountain to be filled with the dew of heaven, associating the will every day with God's purposes.

2. An Assured Guidance.—He has guided me all my life. I have seen the hand of God. If I see it in everything but one to-day, I shall see it in that thing perhaps to-morrow.

What book shall I read to make that kind of thing clear to me? No book at all. Read yourself. You are the book, or there is none. What book is there that shows me clearly about God's providence? Your own book; and if not, an argument may be raised up to-morrow that will utterly expunge the argument you have used to-day.

THINGS WE CANNOT DO.

3. Perfect Rest.—Are you aware that such and such plans are being hatched for your overthrow? I do not keep myself, I rest in God. Do we rest in God, do we take God into our counsels? Just in proportion as we do, He will undertake for us. It is not in your power to touch a man who has put his confidence in God. You are afraid the cause will be injured. If it is a good cause, it will not be injured. If it is a bad cause, it will be like a staff that is broken in the hand that holds it, and that pierces the skin of him who trusts in it.

In these twelve weeks of absence I have often said, "If the Lord will, I shall go back to my pulpit"; and I was not alarmed. There came into my lips, because it had been in my heart, this, "I will go in the strength of the Lord God; I will make mention of Thy righteousness, even of Thine only." If you say this is not up with the times, I am glad to be behind the times. I want to be with God.

General Booth's Farewell.

PRIOR to undertaking an extended tour in the United States and Canada, General Booth took leave of some thousands of his comrades at Exeter Hall on Wednesday last week. The building was crowded, hundreds being unable to gain admission. The proceedings were enthusiastic in the extreme, and if the fervent prayers which found utterance on the General's behalf are answered, his heart is not likely to fail in the performance of the arduous task upon which he has entered.

Although in his seventy-third year, he is hopeful of being yet spared to visit many of the lands where the Salvation Army is flourishing. His present tour will cover five months, and he hopes to visit twenty-five towns in the United States and eleven in Canada, travelling 25,000 miles, and addressing 160 meetings, besides public welcomes and receptions. At six centres in the States he is to meet in conference 2,000 Salvation Army officers, and 3,000 at three centres in the Dominion, each council entailing seven sittings. The railway companies in the States and the Dominion have promised free transport to him and his party, while some idea of the reception which awaits the General may be gathered from the fact that fourteen steamers are being chartered to carry people who will welcome him in New York Harbour.

The greeting which the great audience accorded to their leader was characteristically hearty, and when he rose to say his words of farewell, the enthusiastic assembly cheered lustily and long. With his customary animation, although in a somewhat feeble voice, the General recalled the schemes which had been accomplished since the Army was instituted, and spoke of the powerful influence which it is to-day exerting in all parts of the world. One dream has not yet been realized, that of providing a World's Salvation Army Temple, but he had not abandoned it.

Touching upon his American tour and its object, the speaker trusted that it might in some measure be the means of drawing that country and ours closer together in the bonds of Christianity and humanity. His prayer was that the great American empire, to which he was going, might stand side by side with our own in representing that which is true, righteous, and glorious. Pointing out that the aim of the Salvation Army was to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, as well as to spread the love of Christ, he said that his heart was still full of his old love—the desire to transfer the people from stifling, crowded cities to the land, where they might live a strong and happy peasantry. Having given an outline of his plans in America, the General turned to his followers with the question, What were they going to do? With his wonted vigour and earnestness he pleaded for constant devotion to those principles to which the Army owes so much of its success, and urged his hearers to be true to the Bible, remembering that there is an ever-present God and a coming "great white throne."

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By CHARLES COOK.

NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM OF THE SAME NAME.

TWO shops, the same name! The businesses identical! In the same street! Not far from each other! The one (the window of which contained the above notice) somewhat old-fashioned and slow-going; the other far more up-to-date, and the stock displayed in the most modern shop-front, as only a professional "window-dresser" could have arranged it. We looked again at the bill. It was very outspoken, and the NO was very emphatic, in big type, and underlined, and one could almost read a spice of anger in the sentence. Well, these are the days of competition in trade, and what with "limited companies," "stores," "combines," and "trusts," it must be a difficult thing for the small trader to keep honest and "make both ends meet."

But we would learn a lesson from above. Unfortunately, we who are engaged in the retail business of our Great Master forget that we are in "branch shops" of the One Firm; and, instead of rejoicing when "good business" is heard of from other workers for the same Firm, we feel envious that others are favoured while we are not doing well. An overhauling of our goods, a thorough stock-taking, a cleansing of the old emporium, and a brighter and more cheery demeanour in serving our customers, are, perhaps, what we ourselves stand in need of.

Again, let us be careful to put well to the front the special article which we know is most in request. With all reverence we may say, is "salvation through the blood of Christ," without money and without price. Nothing pays like the Gospel. See that it is the Gospel, and the results that follow from its being pushed and kept to the front will bring an echo of the "joy in heaven" into the heart of the worker. This will bring fresh life and joy into the Church, that will hinder us from asking: "Shall we call down fire from heaven," to consume those who receive not our Lord, or from forbidding others to cast out devils which we have failed to exorcise.

GOD'S LEADING LINE

"How are you my brother?" said a warm-hearted Christian worker to a preacher of the same Gospel as he himself loved to declare. "None the better for seeing you," was the reply. "Well, then, you ought to be," was the cheery answer; "for you have the same Master, belong to the same family, and are going to the same Heaven."

Oh, for a larger heart! To see the loveliness of Christ in the unlovely servant. "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit"; and our common Lord prayed, "that they all may be one." Despite our denominational (or undenominational) differences, we may surely love all who "love our Lord Jesus in sincerity and in truth," wish them God's blessing on their labours, and pray for God's richest blessing on their work of winning souls.

I have heard of one tradesman who was very bitter towards another in the same line of business who lived near, and who was far more successful than himself. The successful man went out of his way more than once to recommend persons to his rival's shop, assuring them that they would find there an article possibly better suited to their needs than he could supply. He soon won the man's heart. I hear now they are fast friends. So let us seek to "be filled with the Spirit;" then shall we speak "with other tongues."

Let sects and names, and parties fall,
And Jesus' name be all in all.

Let His Church, not merely ours, have our prayers, His cause our heartiest sympathy; and our hearts will go out to all who name the Name of Jesus, remembering that "He that is not against us is for us." "That ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ" (1 John i. 3). By all means let us have "no connection" with any other firm of any other name, but seek to continue all connections with all "of the same name," for "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," but the ever glorious, peerless, precious name—

THE NAME OF JESUS.

ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Often have I seen similar notices, but never before on a church. My friend, who has for years been ministering "the Gospel of the grace of God," has been threatened more than once by some neighbours, who desire to hinder heaven's light from entering the windows of his church by building too near. In consequence, he protests against such intrusion, and claims his rights to "Ancient Lights."

What need there is to-day of our claiming that the Church of God shall not be darkened by the buildings of men. Some would have us exchange "old lamps for new;" but, as there used to be seen on all our transport ships the motto, "Heaven's light our guide," so we claim that the wisdom of God shall not be darkened by the counsels of men.

In old days men said, "Let us build us a city and a tower whose top may reach unto heaven," and the Lord came down to see what they had builded. In these days men are building up theories and doctrines subversive of God's truth, and unfortunately the builders are those who name Jehovah's name, and with a false philanthropy are posing as new lights on the Old Book.

"The Bible is not the Word of God, but the Word of God is in the Bible," say some of these modern ministers.

"God is all-merciful. We may yet hope that all men will be eventually saved, and there is hope for even Judas," declares one of the professors of this false school, who is responsible for the education of hundreds of young ministers. Alas! we need not go to Germany for rationalistic teaching now. From the chairs, the pulpits, and the platforms of Great Britain is flashed out without fear or shame such false teaching, alike dishonouring to God and damaging to His Church and work.

As well might a "will-o'-the-wisp" turn guide to the traveller, an ignis fatuus attempt to lead us, as men apart from the Spirit's teaching, however cultured and erudite they may be, and notwithstanding their sincerity and usefulness.

Let us by all means have fervent charity for all brethren who have gone astray into the by-ways of the "Higher Criticism"; but let us have a heart in fellowship with our Master, and a care for the truth, lest we lay ourselves open to the highest criticism of our God.

ANCIENT LIGHTS! Yes, the stars are ancient, the sun itself somewhat antique; but what shipwrecked sailor was ever led astray by the pole-star? or what master mariner was ever led into the banks of fogland through taking "an observation" from the sun at midday? The Sun of Righteousness says, "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness;" nor can He who is "The Ancient of Days" misguide us.

The God-breathed Scriptures were written by Him "that maketh the seven stars and Orion!" The pierced hand of our beloved Lord bringeth forth "Mazzaroth (the signs of the Zodiac) in his season," and doth "guide Arcturus with his sons" (Job. xxxviii. 32). The works of His hands do not clash with the words of His heart; both are as alike perfect as they are divine, and to seek to improve the latter is as foolish as to attempt to disturb the equipoise of the former.

"What is new is not true!" VIA CRUCIS—VIA LUCIS, or we may transpose it, and say, VIA LUCIS—VIA CRUCIS. When will the new men cease to attack the Old Testament? Every brick that Layard upturned upset their errors; and while such authorities as Rawlinson, Smith, and Petrie proved by their discoveries the Ancient Book to be literally true, it would be wiser for smaller men to be modest enough to take a back seat.

It has been noted that recently some critics have been climbing down. We do not hear of men now preaching on "Abraham's mistake in offering up Isaac"; and one who had gone far from the Evangelical teaching of the Old Puritans now says, "Never since the authority of the mediæval Church was broken, and certainly never since the period of modern criticism began, was the Bible so accredited, so confirmed, so vindicated in the eyes of scholarship and truth, as the vehicle of the revelation of God."

"Will the Old Book stand?" Yes, when its critics have had their little day, and found their proper level. Does the Old Book LIVE? Yes, in the hearts of millions, who find in it their sheet anchor in the storms of life, and their solace when they reach the shores of eternity.

Ancient lights! The men who are moving others to-day believe in the old whole Bible; the men who are winning souls believe in it; and the men who are seeking to uplift the Church to a higher life through being filled with the Spirit, are the men who appreciate, appropriate, and believe the Bible to be the INSPIRED Word of God. There is therefore an intimate connection between holiness and truth.

ANCIENT LIGHTS.

The ancient light, I claim the light of God.
And is it thine intention
To cast new shadows on earth's sin-cursed sod
By thy high-built invention?
Away with all that hinders my old right,
To claim from heaven God's free and ancient light.

Education and Priesthood.

What shall be done with the children?
The cry rolls over the land,
Stealing along in a whisper,
Yet spreading on every hand.
Soon it will sweep as a tempest,
Dark is the sky and o'ercast,
Then it will roar as a torrent,
And speak as a thunder blast.

What shall be done with the children?
Shall the Priesthood try its hand
To teach them its Popish dogmas,
Burnt in as by fiery brand—
The Priesthood, subtle and secret,
With all its arrogant claims;
The Priestcraft, which closes the Bible,
That binds the conscience in chains?

Priestcraft, which enters the cottage,
Or visits the English home;
Our great Reformers traducing,
Secretly leading to Rome.
The men who suffered so nobly,
Who every compromise spurned,
Faithful to God and the Bible,
Went to the stake and were burned.

What shall be done with the children?
The crisis is grave and great,
Our cause is the cause of Freedom,
'Tis not a matter to wait.
Let not the priests have the children,
Be steadfast and do not bend,
For God, for Truth, and for Freedom
Stand, fight, to the bitter end.

Forget not the Day of Account.
Should we ever like to own
We gave the children to Priestcraft,
When we stand before the Throne?
To God and to Truth be faithful,
Strike, strike at the crafty foe,
Speak out with a voice of thunder,
A fervent and passionate—NO.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DUNFERMLINE.

THE series of meetings begun by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry on Thursday, September 18, had a good start, but the end has exceeded anticipations. On the Monday there was a large gathering in the United Free Abbey Church, when the speaker took as his theme, "Drink as a Pickpocket, or the Economic Aspect." The address bristled with hard, undeniable facts, which made a deep impression. Rev. J. T. Hogen (Baptist) occupied the chair, and Mr. T. Armon Jones, to the delight of the audience, sang two beautiful solos.

A special meeting was held on Tuesday afternoon, September 23, when a goodly number from the country districts around were present, and the subject which was treated most effectively was "Deborah, the Woman Warrior; or, what Women can do in Temperance Reform." Rev. T. E. Miller, of the Gillespie U.F. Church, presided, and Mr. Jones sang.

In the evening the church was filled, and the audience was deeply impressed as the speaker, in the most earnest and fervent manner, discussed "The Physical Aspect of the Drink Question."

Seeing that the tide of interest was rising the committee, under whose auspices the meetings were being held, approached Dr. Henry, and asked if he could not possibly prolong his visit. He kindly consented to remain one day longer, so on the following Wednesday evening, when the church was so crowded that forms had to be put in the passages, it was announced, amid great applause, that on the following evening, instead of resting as he had intended, he would give a special address on the communion wine question. This delicate subject was so handled as to needlessly offend none, but to delight all. On every hand the deepest satisfaction has been expressed with this eloquent address. The meeting lasted two hours, and yet the people seemed to wish for more.

The singing of Mr. Jones, with his magnificent baritone voice, has been a great attraction. The hands of temperance workers have been upheld and their hearts greatly encouraged by this series of meetings, while many hundreds have been induced to sign the temperance pledge. Dunfermline has hitherto been rather a stiff field to work, but unquestionably the ploughshare of Dr. Henry's oratory has turned up the soil, and, in the facts and arguments presented, seed has been sown which is sure to bear a harvest of fruit both in the near and the more distant future. J. F.

ALLOA.

Alloa is a veritable fortress of the drink traffic. In a town of 12,000 inhabitants there are ten breweries, one huge distillery, and a Town Council which sanctioned free beer to the poor at Coronation dinners. On the day of Dr. Henry's arrival—as if in defiance of all efforts such as his—a flag was hoisted on the highest pinnacle of the town, viz., a newly-finished chimney-stack for a brewery. Dr. Henry's work began on Friday, the 26th, when Mr. A. P. Forrester Paton presided over an enthusiastic gathering in the Town Hall. Madame Antoinette Sterling and Mr. Sterling M'Kinley, her gifted son, rendered several solos tastefully and effectively.

The success of Dr. Henry's former mission was still fresh in people's memories, and much more was expected on this occasion. On Saturday night crowds thronged the Corn Exchange, and on Friday evening and Sabbath evening the magnificent New Town Hall. Dr. Henry also preached in the Baptist Church on Sabbath morning to a very large audience. Dr. Henry pleads for Total Abstinence on the highest grounds. Already over 150 persons have signed the pledge. His addresses never lose the flavour of the Gospel, and one almost regrets that the undoubted spiritual results of his earnest, eloquent words cannot be tabulated.

Dr. Henry is accompanied on his tour by Mr. T. Armon Jones, R.A.M., whose singing is receiving much well-merited attention and appreciation throughout the country. While listening, one felt that the strength and sweetness of the songs were due to a heart beating in truest sympathy with the great work. Mr. Jones has surpassed all expectations. J. D. R.

Professor White's Work.

THE third year of the Bible Teachers' Training School, of which Dr. Wilbert W. White is president, will open on Wednesday, October 15, in the chapel of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, New York City, where the lectures and recitations will be held during the coming year.

Among the lecturers and instructors announced, in addition to Dr. White, are Dr. A. F. Schauffler, Dr. Robert W. Rogers (Drew Theological Seminary), Dr. D. S. Gregory (Homiletic Review), Dr. James M. Gray (Boston), Mr. Robert E. Speer (Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions), Miss Caroline M. Holmes (Principal of the Training School for Christian Workers, New York), Miss Caroline L. Palmer (New York), and Rev. George Soltau (London).

Dr. White will conduct a teachers' training class in the Calvary Baptist Church (Dr. R. S. MacArthur, pastor), also one or two popular Bible classes. Dr. Gray, of Boston, will also conduct popular Bible classes at different centres in the city. Rev. George Soltau has become one of the faculty of the Bible Teachers' Training School, and will devote his whole time to its work.

The school offers a two-year course in the English Bible, with lectures by specialists on pedagogy, also normal classes. Students are required to do actual teaching in the dining-room Bible classes which have been organized in the city. These classes are a potent evangelistic agency, reaching, as they do, many who do not attend church services, and could not be reached in any other way.

The school is open to qualified persons of both sexes. A high school education, or its equivalent, is desirable, though not indispensable. To those who are unable to attend the school in New York, courses are taught by correspondence under the personal direction of Dr. White. Visitors are welcome to any of the exercises. Residents of New York City and vicinity are cordially invited to attend any of the classes.

Full information about classes will be sent on application. All communications should be addressed to Bible Teachers' Training School, 1,036, Sixth Avenue, New York City.

Temperance Workers in the Army.—In the annual report of the Indian Branch of the Royal Army Temperance Association reference is made to some distinctive features of the movement, and the encouraging results which have followed the efforts of those who are seeking to advance the sobriety of our troops. One of the unmistakable signs of progress is the need which has arisen for increased accommodation for the members. The general secretary writes that most of the rooms, even the largest, are crowded every night, and that extension of the work is almost impossible, simply on account of the size of the rooms. A plea is also made for additional attractions at the regimental institutes. In most Indian garrisons men have to find recreation and amusement in their own camp, and many of them make their way to the bazaar or canteen. The consequence is crime and often disease, which might be avoided if more could be done for them in barracks and larger institutes provided. Wherever there is a canteen there is also a temperance room, while in the trooping depôts, in camp, prison, and hospitals efforts are being daily made to bring good influences to bear upon the men.

The Fatherhood of God.

DEAR SIR,—The question, originally started by the Unitarians, and now supported by many clergy and ministers, as to the birth of all men into the family of God, leads me to say that the Bible throughout takes possession of natural events and puts a spiritual interpretation upon them. Hence the remarkable absence of this phrase or indication of God as a Father throughout the whole of the Old Testament. I must admit that David, in one or two of his poetical outbreathings of devotion to God, designates Him as Father. For example, 1 Chron. xxix. 10, Psa. lxxxix. 26. But these exceptions only prove the value of my statement that God, as a Father, can only be fully known as such when we are admitted into the spiritual inheritance of God's children.

If we turn to the New Testament we are almost startled by the contrast. Every page teems with the evidence of God's intimate union with His children. When the disciples, at the beginning of their career, said, "Lord, teach us to pray," Jesus said unto them, "When ye pray say, 'Our Father which art in heaven.'" So the A. B. C. of the Christian's family life is learned by the new-born child of the Kingdom kneeling at the feet of Jesus, who alone is qualified to introduce him to the Father's presence, that he may present all his manifold needs, and obtain all that a loving Father loves to bestow.

Strange, indeed, that men who have been educated at our Universities and Theological Halls should be unable or unwilling to distinguish between the manifestation of God as Creator, by creating man and animals out of pre-existing elements—"the dust of the earth"—and the further specific endowment of man as created in God's image, with "the breath of life," by which man becomes differentiated as "a living soul," and, that which is a later manifestation of God, in the recreation of man by the new birth into Jesus Christ out of elements that have had no previous existence. Jesus plainly tells Nicodemus, "We cannot tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth" (John iii. 8). For it is "a birth from above." "Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. xxi. 5).

A sculptor carves a beautiful image out of a block of white marble, and we can even picture to ourselves the cold marble receiving breath and life by Divine inspiration, but a creator does not thereby become a father.

The teaching of all the Apostles is founded upon the earliest teachings of Jesus Christ to His disciples, that we must as children of God be grafted by faith into a new sphere or relationship. "I am the vine, ye are the branches" (John xv. 1). "And the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved" (Acts ii. 47). So whatever we, as believers, understand by "the Church" may be accepted as the utricle of our spiritual birthright into the title deeds of the Kingdom of heaven, by which alone we are enabled to cry, "Abba Father," and thus become "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." The late Mr. L. C. Mamlock.

FRIENDS of Israel have reason to mourn the loss which the London Jews' Society has sustained by the death of its Paris missionary, Mr. L. C. Mamlock. Referring to his thirty-two years' connection with the Society, the Jewish Missionary Intelligence says: "His heart was thoroughly in his work, and he hoped to carry it on for many years to come, as he had enjoyed perfect health till quite lately. When he first went to Paris, in the year 1876, the mission work consisted merely in house-to-house visiting, which was very arduous and unsatisfactory. Now, after twenty-six years' labour, the mission is perfectly organized and in thorough working order, with meetings for men, Sabbath-schools and classes for children, and mothers' meetings, all regularly held in the mission hall. Mrs. Mamlock and her children have always taken their part in Mr. Mamlock's work."

Butterfly-Catching.

I SPENT my holiday this year in Devonshire, with some young people who were very keen butterfly collectors. They chased butterflies, caught butterflies, set butterflies, talked butterflies, dreamt butterflies, and seemed almost ready to eat butterflies; and I must say their enthusiasm was well rewarded, for they returned home jubilant, with store-boxes filled with red admirals, tortoise-shells, peacocks, painted ladies, brimstones, coppers, and I know not how many more.

Sometimes the weather was hot, sometimes very wet, but nothing seemed to daunt their ardour, as they brandished their nets wildly, and ran up high banks, down deep valleys, traversing the same ground again and again, and acting generally like little mad folk. But there was "method in their madness," and they allowed no obstacle to frighten them, though whether their mother was as pleased as they were when they came in with their scagged and muddy garments, I leave your own mother or nurse to guess. But they were very good, and the only time I felt there was another side to it all was when they beguiled me into chasing a "painted lady" up a steep hill in a hot sun, which, being not as young as I once was, I found to be rather a trying ordeal, and I shall not tell you whether I was successful or not.

EARNESTNESS.

1. Sometimes I wondered if my young friends were always as anxious to run long distances in breathless haste when they were wanted to take a message or run an errand. I could only hope they put the same heartiness into their duties as they did into their play, and that is a question you may like to ask yourself as well. It is very certain that without it the results of their holiday would not have been worth recording here. And I very much doubt if there would be anything worth recording in any of our lives, unless a willing earnestness is evident in all our work and play, in school or home. Those of you who have competed for prizes have found it out for yourselves, and have learnt that it is not so much at examination time as in the preceding weeks, that your earnestness in learning is required.

So it is also, in competing for the heavenly prize, which the Apostle Paul describes as "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iii. 14). Let each of us earnestly seek to win it.

THE POWER OF MOTIVE.

2. I have already compared the willingness displayed with that sometimes shown in regard to messages, errands, &c., and, shall I add, going to school. How heavy our legs seem when we do not want to go!

This is because the mind influences the body. But remember that love lightens labour. When, therefore, you are asked to do anything for your parents, let love step in to help you, and you will find that what would otherwise be irksome and hard will become pleasant and easy, because you have a right motive. Our Lord Jesus said, "If ye love Me keep My commandments." "Ye are My friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "Why call ye Me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (John xiv. 15; xv. 14; Luke vi. 46).

THE SETTING OF CHARACTER.

3. Turning now to the butterflies themselves, I found that only the most perfect specimens were kept, and that after they were taken out of the "killing-bottle," great care was shown in "setting" them, lest the wings should be damaged or any of the "down" be removed.

Dear young people, God wants your characters to be "without spot or wrinkle or any such thing," and desires that you should live "blameless, without rebuke." In whatever position the butterfly is "set," in that it will remain as long as it lasts at all, and in whatever direction you shape your character, while you are young, your life will accordingly grow. Take care, then, how you set it, and do not mix in bad company or indulge in evil thoughts and habits, which will assuredly rub off the delicate bloom of innocence, purity, and truth.

LIFE AND INFLUENCE.

4. The life of a butterfly is, as you know, a very short one; yet how it delights the eye as it flutters about in the sunshine. And even when it has been caught and placed in the collector's box, it still gives pleasure to those who look upon it. Is not that worth living for? There is a worldly motto which says, "A short life and a merry one!" and this reminds us of the Israelites when they worshipped the golden calf: "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play" (Ex. xxxii. 6) or of others in the days of Paul, who said, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die" (1 Cor. xv. 32).

But God would have us reverse it, and say: "Because to-morrow we die, let us do something more than eat and drink and enjoy ourselves"; or we may change the worldling's motto to this: "Because life is so short, let us make ours as useful as we can"; remembering the words of Paul: "Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31).

Time passes onward with returniess wing;
And actions, too, like Time, may seem to pass—
To pass and be no more; but 'tis not so,
For influence never dies; and every act,
Emotion, word, or look makes influence tell,
For good or evil, happiness or woe,
Through the long future of eternity.

"Brief life is here our portion." Therefore seek God's grace that your life may be pleasant and blessed while it lasts, so that when you are called to die you may leave behind you the memories of a good and holy influence, which those who knew you may remember with gratitude and praise.

A Spirit Level to Live By.

A LITTLE boy saw his father using a spirit level to see if his work was "true" and straight. "What's the use of being so careful, father?" he asked. "It looks very good." "Guessing won't do in carpenter work," said his father, sighting along the edge of a board, and shaving it the least bit. "You have to be exactly right. Folks guess at too many things. God doesn't like that way of living." "But there aren't any spirit levels for living by!" laughed the boy, watching him. "Yes, there are," said his father, earnestly. "You'll find them in the Bible. Try all your actions by that. Make 'em true and straight, and no guess work about 'em."

Three Little Words.

Three little words He said to me,
Who bore my sins on Calvary's tree,
That I His ransomed child might be—
"Come unto Me."

Three little words He still doth say,
Amid the conflict, day by day,
When Satan tries to bar the way—
"Come unto Me."

Three little words mine ear shall greet,
When death's cold wave shall chill my feet,
And I my risen Lord shall meet—
"Come unto Me."

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, October 5.

The Testing Question (John xxi. 15-25).

THE miraculous catch of fish, with its attendant circumstances, was, without doubt, intended to teach the Church what kind of work they were to accomplish during the coming ages. They were to catch men, but their operations could only be successful, in so far as they were in living union with the Master, standing on the shore, within speaking distance, though veiled from ordinary view. Oh, that each worker for God, in these last hours of the night, when already the day is beginning to step over the hills, would learn the blessed art of fishing in fellowship with Jesus Christ!

Peter may have wondered if he would now be permitted to have a share in this blessed work. Had he not forfeited all right? True he had been forgiven, but was he re-instated? His uneasiness betrayed itself in his plunge into the water to swim to Christ's feet, and in his rush to drag the net to shore. He wished to be restored to the position which his sin had forfeited, because nothing less would assure him that the memory of the past was absolutely blotted out.

The Lord knew his heart, and when the morning meal was over (and the Lord always provides, not necessaries only, but luxuries for those who serve His holy purpose) He singled Peter out from the rest of His disciples, thrice asked him if he loved Him, and thrice gave him the commission to feed His flock.

It was a very remarkable question. We might have expected, Dost thou believe? Wilt thou obey? or, Art thou prepared to follow Me even unto death? but not, Dost thou love? And yet are not all these inquiries contained in the one? If there be real love to Christ it shows that the work of the Holy Spirit is well founded in the heart, and that the primal qualifications are present for discipling others.

My heart used to sink when I was asked if I loved Christ, because I could not feel any. But now I see that feeling is not the true test of love, but obedience. Christ does not say, "He that loveth Me, feels," but, "If a man love Me, he will keep My Word." This is the repeated message of John xiv. It is also helpful to remember that we may love the Lord our God, not only with our heart but with our mind and strength (Deut. vi. 5; Matt. xxii. 37; Luke x. 27). One can always choose to put God first, in our thoughts, plans, and decisions. We can always serve Him with our activities.

Peter's answer was very humble. He did not boast that he excelled the rest, nor did he dare stand sponsor for his own love. He bared his heart to the Master's eye of omniscient love, and asked whether it did not detect some germs of true love. "O Thou," he seemed to say, "from whom no secret things, however minute, are hidden, canst Thou not see that I really love?" Ah, if you dare open your heart to the Master thus, and desire to love Him wholly, you may be quite sure that it will not be long before the tiny germ of love sprouts into a beautiful and spreading tree, bearing all manner of fruit.

There is a delicate shade of meaning in the Greek, which demands notice. The words translated love are not the same. Jesus asks Peter, in the first two questions, if he cherishes towards Him a love which is spiritual, holy, heavenly. Peter in his replies shrinks from professing love like that, and professes instead a more human and familiar love. In his third question our Lord takes up Peter's word, and accommodates Himself to his disciple's mood. So the Master stoops to us in our poor attempts to love Him, until He can lift us by slow stages to the heights of the Transfiguration Mount. Only be frank with Him. Do not profess to be better or worse than you are. Tell Him that you are far from being what you would be, and ask Him to impart his strength.

In his commission, for the first and last time, our Lord uses a word which means Feed. But in the second, the word implies the whole tendance and charge which rest on the Shepherd's heart and shoulders. Is it not wonderful that He can make shepherds out of fishermen, and apostles out of the sons of Jonas, which means the timid dove?

C.E. NOTES.

During Dr. Clark's recent tour on behalf of Christian Endeavour he visited Italy, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Russia, Austria, Bohemia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Macedonia, France, Spain, Portugal, Iceland, and Switzerland.

* * *

The societies in Persia have increased rapidly of late from three to twenty-four. The first Christian Endeavour Convention in the land of Xerxes was recently held at Urumia, and lasted three days. Eight meetings were held, the different phases of the work were discussed, and several inspiring addresses were delivered. The delegates were greatly helped, as to most of them the work is new.

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, October 12, 1902.

Crossing the Jordan (Jos. iii. 9—iv. 7).*

Golden Text.—Isa. xliii. 2.

I.—Joshua's Preparation for Action.

IMMEDIATELY Joshua had received the inspiring command of Jehovah (i. 5-9), he began to make preparation for obeying it.

(1) He explained to the people the revealed purpose of God concerning their future course; and gave orders about the necessary store of provisions for the appointed march (i. 11).

(2) Interviewed the princes of the two and a half tribes, whose possessions were to lie on the eastern side of Jordan, with reference to their covenant with Moses (Num. xxxii. 20-23), and received from them a renewed promise of faithfulness to the terms of that covenant, as well as expressions of loyalty to himself as their leader.

(3) Sent two men as spies into Jericho.

(4) Removed from Shittim to the Jordan, and lodged the host there three days (iii. 1).

II.—On the Banks of Jordan.

Joshua's Charge to the People.—Joshua's greatness consisted in his having Jehovah with him. (a) He recognised that fact and "magnified the Lord" before the people, therefore iv. 14, and called on the people to sanctify themselves, because the Lord was about to manifest His presence with them on the morrow (5); (b) He extolled the power of "the living God" among them, with nothing of self (Acts iii. 12, 13); (c) He spoke to the people the words the Lord had given him to utter (9), and issued the orders entrusted to him (iii. 8, and iv. 16), not on his own responsibility; (d) His own heart had been strengthened by the promises and presence of Jehovah, therefore he could speak with confidence to his people (10); (e) The path was a new one, untried, unknown, hidden (4), or winding; but "well did Joshua know his guide," and therefore could lead the march with a firm step; (f) The presence of the Ark for the miracle of Jordan was to be the pledge of victory, and the sign that the living God would be with them to drive out the enemy. There was no whine in Joshua's voice when he named deliberately all the seven hostile tribes (five had been enough to create a panic in Israel—Num. xiii. 39, xiv. 1). The sound is more like Paul's triumphant outburst in Rom. viii. 31-39, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

III.—The March in Faith.

The Ark of the Lord, seen moving towards "the swellings of Jordan," was the signal for the people to leave their tents and follow (3-14).

The first step must be taken, and "in faith."

The Levite and the layman,
The warrior and the strong man,
The gentle mother and the little child,
The prince and the servant,
The brave and the timid,

Each must follow the Ark, for there was no other way. The rushing torrent of the Jordan tumbled and rolled in front of them, until the supreme moment mentioned in v. 15; and then the presence of the Living God was manifested with power, "and all the Israelites passed over on dry ground."

The memorial stones were erected on the opposite bank (iv. 11), and "the Ark of the Lord passed over in the presence of the people."

Lessons.

(1) There are many "Jordans" to cross in life.
The first public school (Jos. i. 5, 8).
The first apprenticeship (Ex. xxxi. 3).
The first situation (Deut. xxviii. 8).
"Thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."
Poverty. "Thee and Me" (Matt. xvii. 27).
Bodily suffering (2 Cor. xii. 9).
Persecution (Matt. v. 11, 12).
Temptations (Heb. iv. 15; xi. 18).

Be sure your Saviour is in the midst of the river, and then you will pass over in safety (John iii. 8). Verses 10 to 14. The gift of the Holy Spirit is a pledge of complete victory (1 Cor. xv. 27) and full possession of our inheritance (Eph. i. 13-14). Not one perished (John xvii. 12). Perfect safety while the Ark of the Lord stood in the midst (Rom. viii. 1).

The Jordan of Death (Heb. ix. 27, or Rev. xxii. 12).
"Ye have not passed this way heretofore."
"The Lord of all the earth passeth over before you."
Golden Text: "I will be with thee" (Psa. xxiii 4).
"How wilt thou do in the swellings of Jordan?"

(2) Joshua struck the key-note of a true S.S. teacher in verse 9. He had received a message from God, and gave that message to his charge, not his own ideas (v. 1). He was early at his work, and went well prepared, for the Lord went with him (vv. 7, 11).

(3) When a new path has to be trodden, and the difficulties are great, remember God's power is almighty, and therefore greater than any difficulty (Psa. xxxiv. 19), "all" (Heb. vii. 25). Have faith in God and 1 Sam. ii. 30 is yours.

(4) The Lord Himself taught Israel to keep memorials of His mercies (Luke xvii. 17). "Where are the nine?" (1 Sam. vii. 12).

(5) When we look on the bread and wine in the Supper of our Lord, we see the memorials of His passing through the waters of death and the grave for us (1 Cor. ix. 23-26). "Till He come" (2 Cor. v. 15).

* As an aid to the study of this and following lessons, we commend to the notice of teachers Rev. F. B. Meyer's Joshua, and The Land of Promise (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). The book will be found to contain much helpful and suggestive matter on the subject.

GOD'S TIME THE RIGHT TIME.

A Nonconformist minister, who is now preaching in the south-west of London, passed his early days as a fisher-lad on one of the isles of Shetland. At the age of seven years he had a desire to be a preacher, and was accustomed to stand on a turf platform and hold forth to the rural congregations. It was his continual ambition, and though he was able to use his influence among the North Sea fishermen, it was not until years had elapsed that God opened the way for him to accept a pastorate. In the good time of the Lord a path was made, and the Shetland lad is now the pastor of a flourishing London church. God opens up our way in His own good time, and with the Israelites the waters divided and rose up upon a heap just when the feet of the priests that bare the ark were dipped in the brim of the water (iii. 15-16). God will as truly direct our paths and open up opportunities at the right moment, for "He never is before His time, and never is behind."

GO STRAIGHT AND KEEP STEADY.

While walking in the country with several relatives, a little girl came to a deep ditch which could only be crossed by a narrow plank. Though for a time she feared to cross, she suddenly looked round and exclaimed, "Grandpa, you go first, you are the heaviest, and I want to see how you do it." After watching her grandparent safely over the plank, the child said, "Oh, I can do that; you have only to go straight, and keep steady." May we not learn that if we would go the way that God has opened, we have but to follow His word, go straight, and keep our faith steady. The Lord will to-day divide the waters for his servants, even as he did for the Israelites when they passed over on dry ground, until all the people were gone clean over Jordan (iii. 17). Our difficulties may be overcome if we will but allow God to clear the way, instead of attempting to do so in our own strength.

TELLING FORTH HIS GOODNESS.

Visitors to Margate may see erected near the shore a large figure of a man in lifeboat garb, standing and looking over the sea in apparent readiness to effect a rescue. It is a fitting memorial to the brave men of the Friend of all Nations, a lifeboat that was lost a few years ago, in an attempt to reach a vessel wrecked off Margate. The lads of that seaside resort may be seen at times gazing intently at the statue, and as they look, they tell again the story of heroism which it commemorates. The stones were to be set up by the Israelites, so that when their children should ask in time to come, saying, "What mean ye by these stones?" then the fathers could tell of the deliverance at Jordan effected by the hand of Jehovah (iv. 6, 7). God often opens paths for us, and yet how slow we are to remember His goodness, and how little do we recall to those around us the mercies we have received at His hand.

MEMORIAL STONES.

At a place called the Shallows, near Broadstairs, there is to be seen an interesting stone built into a low broken wall. It has words carved upon it, to the effect that at that spot there once stood a small meeting-house, wherein the first Baptists of the Isle of Thanet were accustomed to worship, many years ago. There are at least two churches in the locality, the members of which can look to that spot as a memorial of the assembly from which their congregations have sprung, and the inscribed stone stands as a reminder of the path by which the Lord has led the Baptists of the Isle of Thanet. Joshua, we are told, set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests which bore the ark of the covenant stood (iv. 9). When the hand of God is seen in our lives in a way that is unmistakable, let us set up memorial stones to mark our gratitude to our heavenly Father.

Evangelists at Work.

The "Edinburgh Castle."

IT has been our privilege to have had the ministry of Rev. James Sprunt during the past fortnight. As a preacher of the Gospel he is beautifully clear and decidedly Scriptural. It has been most refreshing to hear the doctrines of grace so ably set forth. Fruit must follow such a faithful testimony. His messages to God's people have been equally helpful, and greatly appreciated by all.

Walter Notman, Superintendent.

Cox Green Mills, Lancs.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, concluded last Sabbath evening a fifteen-days' mission at Cox Green Mills. The mission has been fraught with much blessing to the people of Cox Green and neighbourhood. Many anxious inquirers found peace with God. Altogether the mission is considered by many experienced Christians as one of the most fruitful that has been held in the district for years. We trust that the Lord will make known further evidence of good work done in the hearts of many more than these we have yet seen. Mr. Collins also gave a Bible reading to the Mothers' Class of the Birtenshaw Wesleyans on Wednesday afternoon, and on Sunday morning he delivered an address to the Eagley Church of England Sunday-schools.

John Naughten.

Mr. Charles Inglis at King's Lynn.

After an absence of nearly six years Mr. Charles Inglis has visited this town for a ten days' mission prior to his departure for America. The mission was in connection with the P.S.A. Forward Movement, and God has signally owned His word among all classes. It is a cause of great thankfulness for the many men who have attended the meetings at the music-hall and listened to the solemn, searching addresses given by His servant. Night by night the workers have been cheered as they pointed anxious ones to Christ. In several instances husband and wife have decided together for Christ, and are now rejoicing in a knowledge of sin forgiven. The afternoon Bible readings proved a great blessing. The solos sung by Miss Inglis reached many hearts. The missioner has been greatly cheered by meeting some who were converted in the former mission, and who are now working in the Master's service.

Baptist Tabernacle, Tunbridge Wells.

A mission has been held at the Baptist Tabernacle, Calverley Road, Tunbridge Wells, by Messrs. W. Olney and F. Spencer Johnson. On the opening day the morning congregation filled the building, which seats between 650 and 700 persons, while the evening meeting crowded every available place. From the first there were manifest "signs following." Several persons confessed Christ and testified, with others since converted, that the singing of "Calvary" by Mr. Johnson had been used of God respectively to conversion, or restoration to the joy of salvation, and consecration to the Saviour. On three afternoons we were privileged to hear Bible readings from Mr. Olney. The presence of the Lord was evident, and many testified to help received. The meetings for children, each evening at half-past six, and the public meeting at 8 o'clock, were all well attended, and inquirers stayed after each meeting.

No fewer than seventy persons, among them thirty-one of our own Sunday scholars, declared themselves converted during the mission. The Sunday-school superintendent wrote the pastor a letter asking him to unite in joy and praise for the rich harvest from the school. At the closing meeting Mr. Johnson related his life story. The building was crowded to excess, and twelve persons yielded to the Saviour.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Bodmin.

A nine days' mission has been conducted at Bodmin by Mr. W. R. Lane, from September 13-22. With one day's exception the meetings were held in the Public Rooms, the attendance, large from the commencement, increasing as the time passed on. The children's address, on the afternoon of Sunday, the 14th inst., will not soon be forgotten by the young folks; whilst the straight, clear, talk to men on the 21st cannot fail to have awakened serious thoughts. The addresses night by night have been scriptural, forceful, and soul-stirring, and have tended to produce self-examination in professing Christians, and conviction in the unconverted. The lectures on "John Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress" was much appreciated, the lime-light pictures adding increased interest, whilst his last night's subject, "From the Gambling Table to the Mercy Seat" was calculated to help young men, especially, to an open confession of Christ. The ministers and members of the Free Churches took an active part in the organization of the mission, and in assisting the missioner in his work. It is very difficult to tabulate spiritual results, but it is a cause for thankfulness that several persons were led to decision, and many more were induced to think about the "great salvation," thoughts that it is hoped will end in a complete surrender to Christ.

Missions in Glasgow.

Rev. John McNeill's special campaign in the Bridgeton district is being attended with much interest and great blessing. It is a pleasure to see crowding into the tent at nights the bona-fide working man, frequently accompanied by his wife. The meetings in the public works at meal hours are appreciated, and Mr. McNeill is not confining himself to the district immediately at hand, as one day recently he was as far afield as Polmadie, about a mile distant from the tent. At the great engineering works there, he spoke to about 1,000 men and lads for about twenty minutes. He talks occasionally the dialect of the common people, which they greatly appreciate; and he has the knack otherwise of gathering about him great crowds of the hard-headed, horny-handed sons of toil. The Spirit of God is evidently at work, and many are professing to trust the Saviour.

At Govanhill, Mr. W. D. Dunn, the well-known evangelist, is conducting a mission in Victoria Place Baptist Church. He is preaching with great force and earnestness, and setting forth in excellent scriptural form the great verities of the faith. As the result some are believing unto life eternal.

In a number of the U.F. churches there are also special missions in progress, and many ministers from widely-different parts are taking their share in the work. But there are great stretches of unregenerate humanity on every side, never touched upon by all the mission agencies at work, despite the consecrated spirit that marks much of the service rendered.

Opportunities at Southend.

Mr. T. Swanston Smith wishes it to be understood that his recent remarks regarding outdoor preaching in Southend applied to the East Cliff. He writes:—"Although I did not see it, I was told that there was a hearty open-air service on Sunday afternoons near the band stand on the West Cliff.

"I forgot, however, to mention the outdoor services on Thursday and Sunday evenings, conducted by Rev. M. Roberts, Primitive Methodist minister, on the East Cliff. One object I had in view in calling attention to this important branch of Christian work at Southend was to secure, if possible, a daily united open-air service for two or three months in the season on the East Cliff, where most of the daily and other excursionists congregate, and where the need is so great and pressing."

Writing of his experience during a three weeks' sojourn at Southend, Mr. C. N. B. Muston (Edinburgh) says:—"In addition to the meetings which Mr. Swanston Smith specifies, very interesting gatherings were held every Lord's Day at 3 and 8 p.m. in what is known as "The Happy Valley," a central spot admirably suited for the purpose. The speakers and singers occupied a band-stand, the use of which was granted gratuitously by the Corporation. The meetings were carried on as a united effort by the Free Churches of the town in connection with the Open-Air Mission.

"I also had the pleasure of hearing some young men preach Christ faithfully and winningly on the Marine Parade one evening; and I heard of open-air meetings in other parts of the town in connection with Wesleyan and Baptist churches and the friends meeting at Union Hall."

Several other friends are thanked for their communications on this subject.

On Sunday last Mr. Bob Johnson conducted services in the Alhambra Theatre, Blackpool, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. There were two other theatres engaged for religious services, and the season is now waning somewhat, but the meetings were very largely attended. Mr. Johnson continues at Blackpool over Sunday next. There are many tokens of Divine blessing.

Remarkable scenes were witnessed at St. James' Hall, Piccadilly, W., on last Lord's Day evening, when Gipsy Smith commenced a brief mission. Regent Street and Piccadilly were thronged with people, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes estimating that about 2,000 persons were unable to gain admission. The message was with power and graceless souls were deeply impressed as the evangelist, with simplicity and directness, proclaimed the evangel. Many inquirers were pointed to Christ.

A nine days' Gospel temperance mission was recently conducted by Mr. Tennyson Smith in the Town Hall, West Hartlepool. The interest in the mission rapidly extended, and after the third night the hall, which seats 1,300 people, was packed, and large numbers were turned away from every meeting. A number of publicans attended and criticized the lecturer's utterances respecting the liquor sellers. The whole town and district was aroused.

Mr. Jack Cooke, "the Boy Preacher," closed his mission at Glasgow on Sunday last. In the morning, mixed meetings (admission without tickets) were crowded into St. Andrew's Hall, until there was no room. In the afternoon the same hall was well filled with men only; and at night another mixed gathering densely filled the building. There have been, it is said, about 1,000 inquirers, of whom the majority professed to have received Christ. A few days before the close, from 500 to 700 persons came in response to a special invitation to converts. They sat together and rose up in the midst of the congregation and sang a hymn together, expressive of their faith in Jesus. The "Boy Preacher" goes to Belfast and begins a mission there next Lord's Day, October 5, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. A card has been issued asking earnest prayer that God may do in regard to this mission exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think.

Requests for Prayer.

That a decidedly Evangelical clergyman may be sent to a rising watering-place.

For rain in the Argentine Republic, where there is terrible distress from prolonged drought.

For blessing on a mission from October 5 to 17 at Bethesda Chapel, Sunderland, conducted by Mr. Herbert R. Francis.

That blessing may attend efforts to evangelise the Jewish people during the New Year feast and succeeding solemn days, October 2-11.

For blessing on a ten days' mission in the Navvy Mission Room, Heysham Harbour works, conducted by Mr. W. H. Holt, October 4-13.

For the spirit of true prayer upon the workers and members of a church, that Sunday-school teachers may be blessed and scholars brought to the Lord.

For a blessing on Evangelistic services to be held at Shrubland Road Congregational Church, Dalston, N.E., on Sunday evenings during October, November, and December.

That Mrs. Tennyson Smith (wife of the well-known Temperance evangelist and lecturer), who is dangerously ill, may be restored to health. The sufferer asks, too, that friends will pray that she may be spiritually blessed in this time of weakness.

Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A.

HALLOWED memories of a glorious past were revived at the reunion of members and friends of Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., Titchborne Street, W., on Friday last.

Brief reminiscent addresses constituted the prominent feature of the gathering, while several speakers referred to recent tokens of Divine blessing, and showed that an earnest spirit of prayer permeates the Association. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who described himself as a child of the revival of '59, traced the origin of that glorious awakening to the gathering of humble people to pray. The "outstanding fact" of Stafford Rooms was the personal dealing with young men, when great numbers were brought to the Lord. Mr. Mathieson referred with tender feeling to the saintly and courageous Henry Hull, and pointed out that Stafford Rooms was a place both of conversion and upbuilding to many.

Mr. Chas. Cook paid a tribute of gratitude for encouragement received when a young convert without a Christian friend in London. Proceeding to outline some stimulating reasons for renewed zeal and activity, the speaker reminded his hearers that of six and a half millions in the metropolis, six and a quarter never cross the threshold of a house of prayer.

The secrets of the Association's early triumphs in the Gospel were defined by Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe as separation from the world, the presentation of a living, personal Christ, mighty to save, and the splendid abandonment of the workers, who, when they saw a newcomer enter, would feel, "Now is the time for his conversion." Sir George Williams (who presided), Dr. Parker Young, Dr. J. H. Gladstone and other speakers also took part. Prayer concluded a very profitable gathering, the message of which was "Pray for Revival."

The Y.M.C.A.

IN connection with the Lancashire Forward Movement, successful Sub-District Conferences have been held during the present month at Preston, Waterford, Clayton-le-Moors, St, Helens, and other centres, and have been attended by some 330 representative workers.

Mr. W. G. Sprigg, who has been on a visit to this country, left for South Africa on the 27th inst. He returned accompanied by Mr. C. E. Derham, known as the secretary of the Sheffield Association, who goes out to fill the office of general secretary at Capetown, while Mr. Sprigg will proceed direct to Johannesburg to re-organize the work at that centre.

Young Men's Bible Reading Union.—An interesting Conference in connection with the World's Young Men's Bible Reading Union, was held at Birmingham a few days ago. Rev. J. Glyn Davies (Newport, Mon.) gave stirring addresses on "The Book of God and the Man of God," and "Following Christ, in Heart, in Demeanour, in Service." Dr. H. B. Wilson, International hon. sec., spoke on "The Christian's Personal Health of Soul, of Mind, of Body." Reports were given of the spread of the work, and Mr. F. C. Bennett gave an account of the meeting lately held in Christiana during the Y.M.C.A. Conference.

Gospel Services at the Olympic Theatre.—Now that the St. Giles' Christian Mission has had to vacate the old chapel in Little Wild Street—the building being required by the London County Council, who are constructing a new thoroughfare from Euston to the Strand—the Mission will hold services in the spacious Olympic Theatre, Wych Street. This is a new departure, and great efforts are being made to attract a large congregation. It is the earnest wish of Mr. Wheatley, the superintendent, that those persons shall be brought in who have not been accustomed to attend the public worship of God. These services will continue while the new meeting-place in St. Giles' is in course of erection. These Sunday services of the Mission are always attended by a promising battalion of lads from the Boys' Homes, which are maintained for their industrial training. On the last day of meeting in the old chapel, extracts read from a time-stained memorandum-book showed that John Howard, the philanthropist, gave £30 to the building fund, and that it was there Dr. Stennett preached Howard's funeral sermon from the words, "He went about doing good." The work still carried on is so much in unison with Howard's day-dream that it is hoped that more extended progress may attend it amid new surroundings.

From Mr. John Kensit.

Royal Infirmary, Liverpool.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Laid low by the hand of an enemy of the truth; in pain, yet rejoicing in hope; upon my bed of sickness, the Lord has been very near me. With both eyes temporarily blinded, and in feebleness, I was enabled to give a short address to the men in this ward on Sunday evening. I remembered very kindly the people at Arthur Street, Camberwell, where I should have been preaching; "Man proposes; God disposes."

I could not name the many who have written, but I especially wish to thank the Bishops of Liverpool and Sodor and Man, Archdeacons Taylor and Madden, Canon Woodward, Rev. Lindsay Young, dear Mr. Tebbs, of Wigan, who came and prayed with me, and others too numerous to mention.

All my plans and engagements for the present must be cancelled. The prayers and affections of God's people are greatly valued at this terrible time. May my dear boy be strengthened in body and soul. How I long to see him, but this is forbidden at present. God can and will overrule all to promote His glory.—Yours, &c., John Kensit.

[Dictated on Monday, September 29, to Mrs. Kensit, who wishes also to thank many Christian friends for expressions of sympathy in a time of severe trial.]

Livingstone College.

DEAR SIR,—May I make known the needs of Livingstone College at this time?

1. We have felt it necessary during the past few years to take steps to acquire and disseminate information concerning the preservation of health in tropical climates. This has been done chiefly by the circulation of our quarterly journal Climate, and by the holding of two Livingstone Exhibitions. These have been most highly valued by missionaries and others, but a good deal of expense was incurred in connection with these undertakings which has not yet been fully met.

2. The removal of Livingstone College to its present beautiful premises took place two years ago, the change being considered absolutely necessary by all who knew the facts of the case; and the efficiency of the College has been very largely increased thereby. At the same time, probably owing to the financial difficulties occasioned by the war, the full sum needed for the purchase of the property, and fitting it for use as Livingstone College, has not been forthcoming, and we have therefore been compelled to take out a mortgage for £3,500, which involves a serious strain on the annual income which otherwise should be sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditure, provided that a reasonable number of students enter for the course of training.

3. At the same time the prospects in other respects were never better than at the present time, and the entry for the new session, which commences on October 1, is considerably above the average, so that we feel justified in making a special appeal to our friends for £600, to enable us to tide over the present emergency. Mr. John Cory has promised £25 if the total sum is realized by September 30, and as another friend has given us £100, and other sums have been received amounting to £50, £425 is the sum now required.

4. I may add that expenses have been curtailed to the utmost extent, though we hope without diminishing the efficiency of the work, and I will gladly furnish all particulars to any who would be willing to aid us in setting Livingstone College free from the financial burden which handicaps us in our undertaking.—Yours faithfully, Charles F. Harford.

Mr. James Wharton, whose evangelistic labours among the negro population of the United States have been accompanied by many tokens of Divine blessing, hopes to return to America for a further campaign during the coming winter. Mr. Wharton sails in the Campania on October 25.

Girls' Letter Guild.—Miss A. Pelham Lowe (46, George Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham) writes that the Guild is greatly in need of Christian ladies willing to correspond with working young women and girls employed in factories and warehouses. This is a work in which invalids and those unable to take up the usual forms of service for God can well help. "If only the Lord's servants realized how by means of a letter they could bring brightness into many a dull, hard-worked sister's life, and gain a real influence for good over lives spent in the midst of great temptations, many would, one feels sure, come forward to help in this work for the Master's sake."

Welsh Notes.

THE Bangor Diocesan Conference was held on September 25 at Bangor. Papers were read and addresses delivered on various subjects. The Bishop delivered an important pronouncement, giving it as his opinion that the Education Bill, if passed, would not be to the advantage of the Church of England.

The annual meetings of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Temperance Association were held at Abersychan, Monmouthshire, on September 22 and 23. A resolution was passed expressing approval of the Licensing Act of the Government. at the same time regretting the exclusion of existing grocers' licences from the control of licensing magistrates. The resolution also declared the Act to be "much too mild for the crying evil demanding remedy." A strongly-worded resolution was passed in favour of "watching and counteracting" the action of the Public-House Trust Companies. A women's conference was held in connection with the meetings of the Association.

The annual Conference of the English Presbyterian 23-25. The Conference sermon was preached by Rev. Church in Wales was held at Wrexham, September Hugh Black, of Edinburgh. The address of the retiring president—Mr. J. R. Davies, J.P., of Menai Bridge—was of exceptional interest, as the expression of a cultured layman's views upon certain topics of vital interest to the Christian Church. The opinion was expressed that the Spirit of God has been moving among the masses of the people, and has brought about a religious life outside the circle of the churches. Among the other subjects dealt with were "Christian Mysticism" and "The Growth of Indifference."

The meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union were held at Merthyr. The proceedings opened with a sermon by Rev. W. E. Davies, of Drefach; when the president of the Union—Rev. W. P. Williams, D.D., of Landore—delivered his address from the chair. The subject chosen was, "Our Position as Strict Communicants." In the course of his address the president spoke strongly against the introduction of the Lord's Supper into the programme of conferences, and referred specifically with strong disapproval to the holding of a communion service in connection with the Chatauqua gatherings. A protest was made against the Education Bill, and a resolution was passed to offer continuous passive resistance to the Bill if it should become law. Among the most important of the reports presented on Tuesday was that of the Temperance Committee. A gratifying growth of temperance sentiment in the churches, and a large accession of names to the roll of abstaining ministers, were the most encouraging features of this report. The "Forward Movement" Committee were able to speak of much useful work done during the year in assisting weak causes and establishing new churches. The report of the Home Mission Fund was not so satisfactory as, for the first time since the formation of the society, there is a deficit.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. John James Muir, minister emeritus of Waterloo Church, Liverpool, aged sixty-three. He was ordained in 1865, and held pastorates at Mellan and St. Heliers. He was settled at Waterloo in 1874, and owing to failing health resigned the full pastorate two years ago, after ministering for many years to a large and attached congregation.—Mr. A. Hine, J.P., of Maryport, a prominent and generous supporter of the Baptist cause, particularly in the North of England.—At Scarborough, Mr. William Keys-Wells, who was for over forty years a staunch Protestant and Evangelical clergyman of the Church of England, but who retired and ceased to use the title of "Reverend" as a protest against sacerdotalism in the Church. From 1856 to 1870 he was vicar of St. Thomas's, Scarborough, and then for twenty years (1870 to 1890) vicar of Clifton, near Penrith, Cumberland.—Aged eighty-three, Mr. Charles Barnard, of Liscard. Prior to taking up his residence in Liscard, some twenty years ago, he had been for twenty-two years at the head of the Friends' School, Rawdon. He was a minister of the Society of Friends, and in later years spent much of his leisure time in visiting isolated Friends in various parts of the country and those by age or illness prevented from attending meeting.—On September 22, Rev. Charles Falconer, minister of the United Free Church at Fortrose.—At Plymouth, Rev. John Armstrong, Presbyterian minister at Kingston from 1840 to 1871, then Presbyterian military chaplain at the Curragh Camp and elsewhere, and for the last twenty years an active elder in the Presbyterian church at Plymouth.

Forthcoming Conferences.

Whitstable Convention, Oct. 6-9; Clifton Conference (Victoria Rooms), Oct. 7, 8; Coventry, Oct. 7-9; International Vigilance Conference for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic, Frankfort-on-Main, Oct. 7-10; Autumnal Police Conference, Gloucester, Oct. 8-10; Church Congress, Northampton, Oct. 6-10; Brentwood, Nov. 18-20.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—A party of emigrants, numbering 317 children, 177 boys and 140 girls, left Paddington on September 26 for Canada, via Liverpool. They travelled by the Great Western, and sailed in the afternoon in the Dominion liner, Colonian. This party, the fourth for the year, brings the number of emigrants from the Homes for 1902 up to 1053, and the total number emigrated from the first to 13,657

NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

In thanking the readers of The Christian for their kind response in the past, I again bring before them two more cases that require immediate aid.

A Blind Musician.—L. A., aged 50 years, has become blind through overstudy. She worked 10 hours per day to gain a gold medal for music in order to support her parents, who died at the age of 92-82. She is extremely delicate, and, owing to a cancer at the back of her eyes, suffers constant pain, and quite unable to earn her own living.

G. S., in whom I am interested, has been blind from lead poisoning since 1897. He was sent to the Exeter School for 2½ years, and then went to the Normal College. He had to leave the latter as the Doctors said the poisoning was beginning to affect his brain.—R. D. C.

The Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or they may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row London; and at the Office of The Christian.

REV. J. O. GAGE DOUGHERTY, M.A.,
Secretary and treasurer.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

14, BLOMFIELD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now in its second century of work. Distinguished for its Catholic basis, its famous Missionaries (Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison, Ellis, Gilmour, &c.), its Pioneering successes, its enterprising Native Agents, its self-supporting Churches, its Bible Translation Work, its Contributions to Christian Literature, its Preaching to the Masses, its Women's Work for Women, its Schools and Orphanages, its Training Institutions, its Medical Missionaries, its Hospitals and Dispensaries, and its Leper Asylums.

Funds greatly needed. Special contributions for support of "Own Missionaries," or for Native Helpers, gladly received.

Home Secretary: Rev. Arthur N. Johnson M.A.

THE MORAVIAN MISSIONS (Established 1732).

Oldest Protestant Missions to the Heathen — First to the Lepers.

About ONE in SIXTY members is a missionary. There are gathered under their care, from darkest heathenism, nearly 100,000; i.e., more than THREE TIMES AS MANY as the parent Church!

To help these devoted people whom God so blesses, and who, in the preponderating proportion of their missionaries, are so largely doing the work of other Churches,

THE LONDON ASSOCIATION IN AID

was formed in 1817.

The following are some of many PRESSING NEEDS for which EARNEST PRAYER AND SUPPORT ARE SOUGHT—

For GENERAL FUND—largely increased annual help of at least £4,000, if existing Missions are to be maintained and deficiency averted.

For THE LEPER HOME, Jerusalem, where the Inmates have doubled in number, funds are still urgently wanted to defray the cost of the new Water Reservoir, &c.

For LABRADOR, hitherto self-supporting, but crippled for a time in its resources, £2,000 annually is required for a few years, until the Mission can be re-established. For this need, and to avert loss to the General Fund, an ADDITIONAL Fund is being raised.

Contributions will be thankfully received and information given, by the Rev. W. Wetton Cox, at the offices of the London Association, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C., who will also gladly arrange for Meetings, Sermons, Lectures, &c.

FOR GOD AND THE EMPIRE!

Dear Readers of The Christian,

I have thankfully returned to my post in time to equip another party of Young Emigrants for Canada. I am hoping, God willing, to send some 370 Boys and Girls as little Colonists to the great Dominion before this month closes. Three parties have already left this year; and, if all goes well, my total for 1902 will be 1,106, bringing up our grand total to 13,710, the great majority of whom have done excellently since their emigration. Not a few are standing out as Witnesses for Christ in the land of their adoption.

All of the present party of 370 who are old enough have been trained to such arts and employments as will enable them to adapt themselves to their new environment, and so to form satisfactory units in the great Empire of which we are a part.

You know why I believe in emigration! The experience of thirty-six years has convinced me of its vast benefits and great advantages. I have often stated these, but you may have perhaps forgotten the chief items. Let me recount them, for a good thing will bear repetition! To begin with—Emigration saves the Boys and Girls, for they thereby leave the perils of their former lot behind them for ever! Secondly, it relieves our over-crowded cities and our congested labour market here in England, and so lightens appreciably the terrible struggle for existence among the very poor. Thirdly, it supplies Canada and the Colonies with what they most require—honest, industrious, and piously-trained youths and maidens—the best material for useful citizens. Finally, it makes room in our Homes for fresh admissions from the ranks of the homeless and needy, whom day and night we are searching for and rescuing from the haunts of the destitute all over the Kingdom. Our doors are never closed in the face of a Destitute Child.

Will you help me to effect all this for and through these rescued children, and so to give each of them a start in life? To send out these 370 lads and lasses to the Dominion £10 per child is required, or £3,700, within a fortnight, for the good of Christ's Little Ones and for the benefit of the Empire at large.

Yours sincerely, in the Children's Cause,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

About Books.

THE JEWISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

THE expectations that were raised on the appearance of the initial volume of The Jewish Encyclopædia are fully vindicated in the second volume just issued.* Prepared by more than 400 scholars and specialists, under an editorial board having the oversight of particular departments, the work is, to begin with, a marvel of literary enterprise. When completed, it will comprise twelve volumes, with an aggregate of 8,000 pages. There are many illustrations, and a number of highly-finished plates; altogether, the Encyclopædia is to include about 2,000 engravings—many of them reproductions of antiquarian objects and photographs of celebrated men.

The second volume contains much that is curious, and a number of articles of general interest. The writers are for the most part Jews, but not all; there are Christian scholars on the editorial board as well as on the working staff. Hence the subjects of greatest importance are treated in a generous spirit, race prejudice or religious difference not being allowed to show themselves unduly in the making of the book. In Biblical matters we have here breadth rather than depth. The Christian student may turn from the Hastings Bible Dictionary with a mind full of critical and expository thought, and here find many a notion and impression gathered from the great and varied field of Rabbinical literature. The Jew, however, will find other service rendered by the work; it gives the history of his people in various lands, and describes the institutions which have made the race what it is.

Among the articles of special interest and value we would mention: Apostasy and Apostates from Judaism, Aquila, Archæology, Ark of the Covenant, Ark of the Law, Articles of Faith, Asceticism, Astronomy, Atonement, Day of Atonement, Auto da Fé, Babylonia, Badge, Baptism, Bar Kokba, Baraita, and Bat Kol. Jews will find here just what they want, and plenty of it; Christians will profit most by the articles that are distinctively Jewish—not so much the theology as the history—also by the translated excerpts from the Talmud, and the descriptions of religious practices.

This is a work that makes a strong appeal to scholars of all complexions. In its pages one finds not only much that illuminates and explains Jewish influences, past and present, but the interpretation of many a racial mystery. Lexicons give little or no clue to the reasoning processes of a people; just here one needs a "guide, philosopher, and friend," who can conduct one through the labyrinth of the traditions of the Rabbinical elders. Along that way this Encyclopædia goes, and as we master its contents, so we shall increase in the knowledge of Semitic thought and Hebrew life.

Messrs. Cassell have issued the first serial part of the illustrated edition of their great work, Social England—a history of the progress of the people in religion, laws, learning, arts, industry, commerce, science, literature, and manners, from the earliest times to the present day. Written by the highest authorities, and edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L., and J. S. Mann, M.A. (Fortnightly part, 1s. net.) The completed work will contain some 2,500 illustrations, reproduced from historic documents and pictures, and numerous coloured plates and maps.

Church of England.

The Misses March, of Yorkshire, have generously given £1,400 for a mission steam launch, to be built at the Hartlepools, to convey the Missions to Seamen chaplain for the Tees to the shipping and lighthouses.

The Bishop of Liverpool has been conducting the services in a small mission chapel at Derby Haven fishing village. Mrs. Chavasse played the little organ. The simplicity of the services, and the zest with which the fisher-folks entered into them, showed how highly they were appreciated. The congregation on one Sunday overcrowded the little hall, and the Bishop came out and preached on the beach.

Rev. C. Askwith, vicar of St. James's, Carlisle, in his annual report says that the general work of the parish has been well maintained, the Sunday congregations being somewhat larger than before. "This," he adds, "is a healthy sign, for we make no attempt to attract by means of musical services or sensational methods, but congregational worship and the simple preaching of the Word of God." During the past year a missionary mission was held in the Parish Church, and evangelistic missions in Milbourne Street and at Cummersdale, all of which were much used of God.

The advisory architects have presented their report to the Executive Committee on the designs sent in for the proposed cathedral for the diocese of Liverpool, and this has now been adopted. Of the 103 plans sent in they have selected five, and recommend that the designers should be asked to furnish further plans for the final competition. The report says:—"Many of the designs sent in have plans more or less like numerous fine mediæval cathedrals, with many chapels clustering round the eastern end of the choir. . . . One or two such chapels may be desirable, as being very useful in bringing comparatively small congregations together for early or evening services; but many such chapels would not seem to be appropriate for the uses of the English Church. There should certainly be one or two such chapels, but we suppose not more would be needed."

In the course of a sermon at St. Catherine's, Edge Hill, Liverpool, on Sunday week, the vicar, Rev. J. Kirkby, made reference to the efforts of the Liverpool Hairdressers' Association to close their places of business on Sunday. He claimed the Sabbath Day to be of Divine institution and of perpetual obligation. The late Queen Victoria, he said, set a high example of Lord's Day observance at Court, which had a beneficial influence throughout her wide Empire; yet in the later years of her reign a tendency to secularise the Lord's Day had set in, and now her powerful influence is withdrawn the tendency is increasing, and, if unchecked, will be attended with irreparable loss to the nation. The efforts of the Hairdressers' Association deal with a part of a great whole. Let the barber have his birthright. He, with attention and courtesy, serves the community at all reasonable hours for six days; more he cannot offer for their service, for the seventh day is the Lord's.

Congregational.

Dinner-hour services have been started at Falcon Square Church, E.C., on Wednesdays, lasting from 1.20 to 1.50.

The London Missionary Society has received £49,216 towards the deficiency on its accounts. Thus a further sum of about £800 will secure the £1,000 offered when £50,000 had been contributed. The native Christians at Belgaum, Southern India, sent £30 towards the fund.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's success in drawing audiences to mid-day services at Westminster Chapel were valuable as a proof that much can be accomplished with the vast building, which has come to be regarded somewhat as a "white elephant." At the concluding service he addressed a congregation of over 600 people.

Rev. F. W. Walker is leaving New Guinea for London on furlough. He has already spent fourteen years in the mission field in connection with the London Missionary Society. He intends to confer with the directors upon the development of the mission in the Fly River region, and the advisability of extending the mission on industrial lines.

Saturday, September 20, was a red-letter day in the annals of Orchard Street Chapel, Stockport, when the opening of the mission chapel in Swann Street, Portwood, took place; the mayor and mayoress (Councillor and Mrs Albert Johnson) of Stockport presided. The building will hold from 250 to 260 people. The cost has been £650. Of this sum the friends have received £350, leaving £300 still to be raised.

Baptist.

An anonymous friend of Westgate Church, Bradford, has relieved the church of all liability with regard to its new building—a gift representing about £4,000.

The opening services of an iron church which has recently been acquired by the congregation hitherto meeting in Dovecote Hall, Green Lanes, N., were recently conducted by Rev. J. B. Myers. The surrounding site has been secured, and important building developments are contemplated as the work progresses.

Fruitful services have been held on the sands in connection with Skegness Church (Rev. G. Goodchild's) during the past ten years. During that time 907 meetings have been held, large quantities of Gospel and Temperance tracts distributed, and speakers of all Evangelical denominations and from all parts of the country have taken part.

It is not often that Rev. W. Y. Fullerton is able to leave his church work at Leicester and resume his evangelistic labours. Londoners will, therefore, be glad to know that he is to conduct a mission at Salter's Hall, Baxter Road, Essex Road, N. (Pastor James Smith), from October 11 to 20. In addition to the night meetings, Bible readings will be read on October 15 to 16, at 3.30 p.m.

Mr. Theophilus Caleb, recently gave an address on "Hindoo Life" to a crowded audience at Handel Street Chapel, W.C., Rev. A. Collie presiding. Mr. Caleb treated the subject as an Indian, and quoted interesting translations from old Sanskrit books and "charms," all bearing upon "Hindoo Life." He urged the Church to exert more and more effort in sending consecrated lives for the service of God in foreign fields.

The first anniversary of St. John's Free Church, Tunbridge Wells (Pastor, Rev. James Mountain), was celebrated on Wednesday week. It will be remembered that when Mr. Mountain inaugurated his present work, his congregation worshipped with him in Salem Chapel; then the lower hall of the present building was erected. Last year the present church was opened, since when the congregation has considerably increased. A well-attended series of services was held. At the public meeting held in the evening Mr. Frank East, J.P., presided, and hearty and stimulating addresses were given by Rev. J. H. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Skipper, and other friends. Mrs. Skipper attributed the success of the church largely to the fact that the pastor is "a true fisher of souls."

Methodist.

The engagement of Rev. J. H. Cartwright to the Leeds (Brunswick) Wesleyan Circuit has been cancelled. Under medical advice, for the benefit of the health of a delicate boy, Mr. Cartwright feels compelled to seek a residence for the next three years in a country district.

At a Wesleyan service in a village in Bucks, held recently in a large marquee, when an ex-president of the Conference preached, there were present two clergymen of the Church of England, one Wesleyan minister, several Congregational and Baptist ministers, and one or two Quakers. "Surely," the Methodist Recorder comments, "we may, in these days, find illustrations of the 'unity of the Spirit.'"

Rev. James Fletcher gives an encouraging report of the four months' work among the soldiers at Salisbury Plain during the camping seasons. The Wesleyan Home at Bulford has been greatly enlarged, and made practically a new and highly-attractive place, with a church attached. A satisfactory account is also given of the working of the Temporary Home at Canterbury. The spiritual benefit has been most marked.

Wesleyan Methodism is continuing to make headway in the Midlands. During the last decade there has been an increase of 3,063 members, with 664 on trial and 1,58[illegible] juniors, in the Nottingham and Derby district. Twenty nine new chapels have been erected, with sitting accommodation for 12,350 persons. Leicester has taken a leading part in these extensions, its membership having grown by more than 2,000, and eight new chapels and halls having been added there. Wesley Hall, in the heart of the town, where Rev. George H. M'Neal labours, is filled every Sunday by a congregation of the working class.

Presbyterian.

An epoch in the history of Presbyterianism in Leeds was marked by the services held recently in Cavendish Road Church, which consummated the union between the congregations of St. Columba and Cavendish Road, opening a new era of desired progress in the cause of a more effective development. Rev. Dr. Thoburn McGaw preached the union sermons to large congregations.

Within the last three years a large new town, named Vickerstown, has been in course of erection on the Island of Walney, Lancs. At present about one thousand houses are occupied by the workmen and officials of Messrs. Vickers, Sons, and Maxim. As a number of those residents are connected with the Barrow-in-Furness congregation, application was made by the session for a site of land on which to erect a mission church. The office-bearers at once secured a temporary building in the shape of a large wooden bungalow, which was removed in sections and re-erected upon the site granted. Workmen have been at work, and the interior of the building was the admiration of the large congregation that literally packed the building when Rev. George Patterson, minister of Barrow, conducted an appropriate opening service.

Society of Friends.

A meeting to bid farewell to Alexander Currie and James W. Ryan, who are leaving shortly for Madagascar, was held recently at the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields. The hall was well filled when J. Fyfe Stewart took the chair. Dr. Wilson spoke of the need of high attainment in the language so as to understand the innermost thought of the native mind, and cited the words of Samuel Clemes to him, "William, you'll never know Malagasy until you dream in it."

The twenty-second anniversary of Sherborne Street Mission, Gloucester, was celebrated lately, when George Ash, of Evesham, was present. On the Sunday he addressed a large gathering at the usual meetings, and next day a special Gospel meeting. The annual meeting was very well attended, and Frederick Sessions presided. An address was given by Harry Frizzell, late of Llandrindod.

William Hobson has held a week's meetings at Osmotherley, Yorks. An interesting lecture was given on "The Roots and Fruits of the Quaker Movement," while five Gospel meetings, a gathering for children, and a prayer-meeting, were also held. Towards the close of the first-day evening meeting a large number of Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists came from their separate places of worship, and a really good prayer-meeting was held. The visit was blessedly helpful, and cannot fail to have deepened the spiritual life of many.

The annual day of prayer in connection with the Women's Protestant Union was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, when three well-attended meetings were held in the drawing-room. At the first gathering, Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot presided, and Miss H. E. Soltau, of the China Inland Mission, spoke. At the afternoon meeting Rev. Trevor Fielder, vicar of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, presided, and a suitable and very helpful address was given by Madame Leite-Rozas. In the evening Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and Sir Robert Anderson gave an address which was full of instruction and earnest exhortation. The gatherings formed a very encouraging commencement for the winter's work of the Union.

A Tragic Dispute. The unhappy dispute between Lord Penrhyn and his workers has once more settled into hopelessness. The demand of the men to have a right of free representation by deputation to their employer is reasonable in view of the fact that it is an acknowledged right in every other industry in the country. Lord Penrhyn has declined both conciliation and arbitration, and will not have friendly mediation. This is in every sense a belated attitude to take up. The consequences have already been tragic, involving the ruin of bread-winners, the starving of little children, and to a large extent the depopulation of the valley of Bethesda. The reasonable and law-abiding attitude of the men has on the whole been exemplary. It is a pity that the Government feels incompetent to interfere effectively in a dispute so deplorable in its consequences. It is impossible to refuse Christian sympathy with the men and their suffering wives and children.

Government Monopolies. The part played by the Government in the great "Atlantic Combine," by which Mr. Pierpont Morgan has practically succumbed to its pressure, shows that even millionaires are not "omnipotent," and that President Roosevelt's demand that trusts shall in future be subject to Government control is no visionary scheme, but one capable of practical realization. No greater peril has threatened our civilization than these huge commercial and industrial monopolies, that have sprung up during the last ten years. There is no difference between the irresponsible tyranny of money and any other form of despotism. Under its pressure the cruellest oppression may be practised at present with impunity. A menace to our naval supremacy has been evaded by the prompt action of our Government. There are threatening perils of an even graver kind that may be similarly met, when the responsibility of the State is felt and recognised by its representatives.

Magistrates and Licensing Laws. The exact nature and limits of their authority over licences, is little understood, even by many magistrates themselves. A small pamphlet by Mr. Alfred T. Davies, of Liverpool, on "The Licensing Problem and Magisterial Discretion," throws a flood of light on this question. All who make it their business to resist the renewal of licences that are unnecessary, or have been abused, should study this excellent little production. It is full of encouragement to those who would do their part in mitigating the temptations to drink. Briefly, we are told that whereas a few years ago one of the law officers of the Crown expressed the opinion that, under the licensing statutes, justices are not warranted in refusing to renew a public-house licence simply on the ground that there is no need for it, or that there are too many licences in the neighbourhood, the Court of Appeal has now decided that justices have full power to decline any licence on the grounds named. This decision should be universally known, and remembered when the licensing sessions are held.

What May be Done. Mr. Davies brings abundant testimony that the number of public-houses in a district not only seriously affects the drinking habits of the people around, but has a vital connection with the prevalence of crime. From 1882 to 1890, 1,033 licences were suppressed solely on the ground that they were not required. This suppression had a great moral effect. Between 1890 and 1901, 339 licences were suppressed in Liverpool alone, with the result that the total number proceeded against for drunkenness fell from 14,680 to 4,327. These figures could be paralleled from other towns where the magistrates have awakened to their responsibility. The facts point to a splendid chance for helping the temperance cause, on the basis of the present law. Many reforms in that law are needed. Meanwhile, it should be the aim of all true citizens to see that the law, as it is, is made an instrument of betterment.

Another Good Example. Much credit is due to the magistrates of Kensington for their action in connection with an application on the part of a well-known firm of brewers for sanction of proposed alterations in some dilapidated public-house property, of which they are the owners. The justices, pointing out that they did not sit to consider private interests, and that when they could get rid of existing beerhouses, "without detriment to the public," they meant to do it, refused the application, and wisely so, for it is evident that in many cases of these so-called "improvements" the object is that of increasing the value of the "vested interest" which the brewers claim to possess, but which has no foundation in law; and also the value of premises which may have to be removed in street improvements. Unhappily, however, it is only here and there that the magistrates appreciate their powers, and realise that they have nothing to do with private interests in the drink traffic. Example is better than precept, however, and that set by the justices at Farnham, Richmond, and Dover, as well as in the present case, will, we trust, have wide-reaching influence.

The Bane of Ignorance. That famous proverb, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise," is responsible for much mischief. Ignorance, in many cases, is a bane and a curse. We have no hesitation in saying that a little more knowledge of some elementary religious principles would have saved several recent speakers upon the Education Bill from making very foolish and unjust charges. It is really pitiful to read some of the sentiments which have been publicly enunciated. Saddest of all is the report of one or two speeches made at a clergy gathering in the West of England. We notice from a Yeovil newspaper that there was anxiety that these speeches should not be reported. Unhappily they have gone all over the country. When a High Churchman can brand Free Churchmen as being practically in the descent from Satan and Cain, we will not say he is malicious, but we can fairly describe him as wilfully and unpardonably ignorant. No man who had read history, or who had used his eyes, could make so shameful a statement. It is this baneful ignorance that produces unreasoning bigotry.

A Voice from Ireland. Like other leaders of opinion in Ireland who have resented the domination of the priest, Mr. Michael Davitt, in his recent letter on the Education Bill, has given circulation to some truths which will be anything but pleasing to the Roman Catholic bishops. Mr. Davitt, apparently, is a patriot first and a Romanist afterwards, which is by no means the usual attitude, and in reference to "the consistent plan of making an insidious war upon the educational rights and religious safeguards of the Nonconformist communities," he says:—

> The attitude of the English Catholic bishops is clear enough. They know what they want and how to get it. If they care anything at all for the country represented by the Irish members it is purely and solely for Catholic, as distinguished from Irish, secular interests. They look upon us just as Rome does, as propagandists of its faith. We are good children when we back the Church and extend its rule. . . . Converts come to Rome chiefly through the High Church party; therefore make the political allies of this party the direct or indirect manipulators of English popular education to the greatest extent practicable, and the good work of reclaiming heretical England will proceed under hopeful auspices.

The Education of Boys. Professor Armstrong's recent attack on our educational methods has evoked considerable correspondence in the daily papers, and the subject is being thoroughly ventilated. In the interests of our country, it is quite time that the whole subject should be faced. If it is proved that conservative methods and subjects are unfitted to cope with modern conditions, then it is time to change them. Continental competition will force us to pay earnest attention to the mastery of modern rather than dabbling in ancient tongues. The head master of the Bedford County School, however, adds a note to the correspondence which is very significant. He says:—

> We schoolmasters fight against hydra-headed difficulties. Our schools suffer from the effect of that deplorable exaltation of professional athletics throughout the country. It is the absorbing interest in professional records, names, and statistics, which tend to make our boys but "flannelled fools." Let our boys be athletes, but athletics carried on to manhood is a national evil.

After all, there is very much in the suggestion that an excess of pleasure, rather than a plethora of subjects in school, is embarrassing our youths.

Loosing the Bonds. The claim of Rome to the possession of unchangeable dogmas and unchanging practice, is scarcely borne out by the story of the remarkable accretions which have been made to the formulas of the great apostasy. Of late the dignitaries seem to have found a slackening of the ropes necessary, and from the Duke of Norfolk, with his new hymn-book in English, downward and upward, there has been a tendency to widen the boundaries in a misleading imitation of those bodies whom the truth has made free. The latest innovation, it would seem, is in Wales, where, it is stated, Roman services in Welsh have been arranged for, and priests who can speak and preach in Welsh have been imported from Brittany. It is gratifying to find that apparently Welsh-speaking priests could not be found nearer home; and the reason is not far to seek, for Wales has long enjoyed an open Bible in her own tongue, and the preaching of the simple Gospel of Christ in her native language, so that Rome comes rather late into the field.

Zolaism v. Evangelicalism. The tragic death of M. Zola removes one of the leading representatives of Continental fiction. Lovers of the true and the pure, agree in denouncing his books on the score of their "realism," which is another word for obscenity. His defence of Dreyfus was a proof that in personal character he had a vein of nobleness in him, and could cheerfully submit to martyrdom in a cause he deemed right. But his trilogy, entitled "Lourdes," "Rome," and "Paris," showed that he had absolutely no conception of what the Christian religion is, in its pure Evangelical essence. He saw the Christianity of Rome, recognized its hopeless corruption, and came to the conclusion that the only alternative was a fetish which he called "Science," by which he meant a kind of enlightened secularism. There are thousands, if not millions, of educated men on the Continent (many in this country) who have fallen into the same mistake. The only true antidote to this bastard agnosticism is a study of the Bible, and a recognition of the simple truths of the Evangelical faith.

Cause and Effect. The united action of the London Borough Councils, in regard to immorality in the Metropolis, has given prominence to a statement in the Press, that in this respect the streets of London are as bad to-day as they were ten years ago, and to the Bishop of London's assertion that there are no fewer than 80,000 "women of loose habits earning an execrable living on the streets, one prison chaplain having had 16,000 under his ministry in six years." The subject cannot, however, be thoughtfully considered without giving rise to doubt in the mind of every Christian man interested in the social well-being, how far the legislation which makes woman the scapegoat, and lets the male offender off scot-free, is responsible for the growth of vice; and whether the terrible condition of things is not also to a large extent traceable to cruel cheapness and the starvation wage. Such thoughts do not in any way tend to toleration of the sin; but while we deal with the effects, it is wise to investigate the social and economic causes.

Labourers for the Harvest. A recent statement from the Bishop of Liverpool, that, owing to the difficulty of filling up vacant curacies in some of the parishes in that diocese, the sick and dying had to be left unvisited, emphasizes in a striking manner a question which gradually is becoming more and more pressing, namely, that if the ordinary means are found wanting, extraordinary ones should be adopted, and possibly the beneficed clergy of the Diocese of Worcester have suggested the proper remedy. Following the lines once laid down by Bishop Perowne, they have petitioned the present Bishop to take action to secure the services of trained laymen to perform all the duties of deacons, "save the administering of the Chalice in Holy Communion, and administering Baptism." The result of this appeal will be looked for with interest, but the noble records of Wesleyan Methodism are full of evidence to show that the adoption of the suggested plan in the Establishment would doubtless result in intensifying the spiritual life of the people, and in extending Christ's Kingdom upon earth.

Bunyan and the Artist. Lovers of the great dreamer will turn with interest to a paper in the current number of The Quiver, in which Mr. Arthur Fish deals with Bunyan's "Christian" in art. Mr. Fish's list of artists is by no means an exhaustive one, and perhaps it was inevitable that such a record should be one largely of failures, for, despite the writer's opinion that "The Pilgrim's Progress" contains much "splendid material," and many scenes "that almost appeal for adequate pictorial representation," the noble book does not lend itself to elaboration on the part of artists. The word-painting of the author, in its simple purity and strength, satisfies both the literary student and the child. As is the case with Dante's great masterpiece, the work cannot be "improved," for, written under the impulse of sanctified genius, it comes (as one of the ablest of its many editors, Mr. George Offor, has said) "nearer to the inspired poetry of the Hebrews than any other human composition," and is, in fact, in itself "a beautiful transparency seen as the heavenly light shines through."

The Youthful Criminal. Any wise suggestion that will really help to solve the difficult problem of dealing with juvenile criminals in the most efficient manner is welcome at present. The revival of street ruffianism is a very serious matter, and this, coupled with the recent gloomy report of the Prison Commissioners, must compel serious and speedy action. The well-known police-court missionary, Mr. Holmes, writes to the Daily Chronicle, offering some suggestions and criticisms which ought to have weight in the proper quarter. His letter will surprise most people in its revelations of the deplorable laxity of the present industrial school system. The authorities seem to be playing with the matter. What sense is there in a law which takes children under fourteen out of the grasp of thieves or prostitutes, and then releases them at sixteen (the age limit), with no trade at their command? The little germinal criminals simply go back to their old haunts to develop depravity. Mr. Holmes makes a statesmanlike suggestion, that reformatories shall become part of the national penal system, and that in them every boy shall be taught a trade.

"Deep-Sea" Curiosities. Among the very interesting collection of curious objects rescued from the bottom of the sea, and preserved in the museum at the office of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen (Queen Victoria Street), are to be seen a Bible and a copy of "Sacred Songs and Solos." The former is much torn in its earlier pages, and the first whole page at which the Book naturally opens begins with this passage:—

"The waters returned and covered the chariots and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharoah" (Ex. xiv. 28).

The hymn book was recovered in good condition from the sunken s.s. Mohegan (which sank off the Channel Islands), after eight months' submergence, for which it seems little the worse. The museum is well worth a visit. But better than all its exhibits, are the many reclaimed and regenerated lives of men among whom the Mission labours.

Prayer for Revival.

WE have reason to believe that many are praying that Dr. Torrey's visit to Britain early in next year, may be God's time to give Revival to his Church and great blessing to the people at large. The reports which we have given from time to time of the remarkable work in Australasia have stirred many hearts; and our appeals for earnest prayer in view of the meetings which, God willing, will be held in the United Kingdom, have met with sympathetic readers who, like ourselves, are looking for "showers of blessing."

We have known Dr. Torrey for several years, but only recently have we come to realize the remarkable depth and extent of his work in Chicago. The many books which he has published have given him a warm place in our hearts. The story of his preaching in the Southern Hemisphere has added another aspect to those already familiar, so that we now find, to our great delight, that the man who, during recent years, has secured such a hold of the public ear in American cities, and has done such a wonderful work in opening up the Scriptures for the help of those designed to teach and shepherd the flock, is an evangelist of God's own making—one whom the Master has of late greatly honoured as a "fisher of men."

It is this servant of the Lord whose coming we have had the joy of heralding for some months past. He is a man of faith and works, a good man, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." This evangelist comes with the Old Gospel; he preaches no doubts, but the "things most surely believed among us." His books reveal the strong-minded, consistent Christian teacher, and those who have known him longest are among the many who are now praying for his wider ministry. In one handsome volume he has answered the question, "What the Bible Teaches," on the great themes of revealed truth. In another, of like dimensions, he has furnished a compendium of effective methods, with the title, "How to work for Christ." Workers will welcome one who has helped them; and they will influence "them that are without" to attend his meetings.

Dr. Torrey is a man of prayer. In asking for much prayer upon his labours, we are but complying with his own strong desire. While the arrangements are in progress, will our readers remember the work and the worker at the Throne of Grace; also that the right places may be chosen, the right buildings be available, and the right helpers forthcoming? For all these things God will be inquired of. And if we ask in faith, and co-operate as we may be able, also in faith, the prayers of years will be answered, and our Heavenly Father will pour out a blessing that will be large above all our expectations, but not larger than His heart of ove is ever ready to bestow.

"O Lord, revive Thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known [Thyself]; in wrath remember mercy" (Hab. iii. 2).

The Everlasting Gospel!

THE Gospel according to the angel Gabriel to the Virgin Mary was: "Thou shalt bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus; for He shall save His people from their sins." The Gospel message of the angel of the Lord who appeared to the shepherds as they watched their flocks by night was: "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

The Evangelists speak of it as the Gospel of the Kingdom; the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; the Good Tidings of the Kingdom (the reign) of God. The Gospel according to John the Baptist is: "Behold the Lamb of God, which beareth away the sin of the world."

Jesus Himself comprehends it in the invitation and the promise: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The "good seed" of His fundamental parable is "the Word of the Kingdom" (Matt. xiii. 19).

Luke, in one chapter of the Acts of the Apostles (viii.), defines the Gospel under

SEVEN DIFFERENT TERMS—

Philip, in Samaria, preached the word; preached Christ; preached the things concerning the Kingdom (the reign) of God, and the name of Jesus Christ; the Samaritans received the word of God; Peter and John preached the word of the Lord in Samaria, and preached the Gospel in many villages; and when Philip met with the eunuch he preached unto him Jesus.

Luke summarizes the Gospel preached by Paul as "Jesus and the Resurrection," as he had before said that "with great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." The Apostle Paul himself describes it as "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," and he recounts the Gospel which he preached to the Corinthians—that "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried; and that He rose again the third day; and that He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve; after that, of 500 brethren at once; of James; then of all the Apostles; last of all, of Paul himself, as of one born out of due time." Evidently in the mind of the Apostle the Resurrection was a vital element of the Gospel, apart from which their faith was vain, they were yet in their sins (1 Cor. xv. 1-17).

The Seer of the Apocalypse calls it the Everlasting Gospel, as in his Gospel and Epistle he had spoken of it as eternal life.

OF FAR-REACHING SIGNIFICANCE.

The words Rest, Salvation, Kingdom, Reign, Eternal, bear witness that the Gospel cannot be limited to the first experience of the sinner, when he is turned from darkness to light; but covers the whole of the present life and the life to come.

The Gospel has not finished its work when the sinner is born again, and believes, to the saving of his soul. There is not a promise nor a precept, from conviction of sin to eternal glory, which is not an essential and vital element of the Gospel of God.

All along the line, from repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, until we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ—all the way from our being foreknown, predestined, and called, to our being justified and glorified—the Gospel is the

MAGNA CHARTA OF THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

There is not a Gospel word we say to a sinner that is not true and timely to the saint; and when we exhort the anxious one to

> Venture on Him, venture wholly,
> Let no other trust intrude;
> None but Jesus
> Can do helpless sinners good,

the exhortation is as necessary for ourselves as for him; though in the last line we may change "helpless sinners" into "helpless Christians."

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" means, Believe and keep on believing. It was as necessary, in continuous exercise, for the Apostles in the prison, as for the gaoler who had so cruelly beaten them; as essential for Paul the aged, when he was ready to be offered, and the day of his departure was at hand, as when the young man named Saul was consenting to Stephen's death.

Every day of our new life should begin with the exercise of faith in the very same promise with which its first day began: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Saved from sin, saved to the uttermost, saved in His life—for "if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved in His life," "seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for us."

Not only saved from sin and transgression, from anxiety and carefulness, from hurry and worry and flurry; but saved to holiness and to fellowship with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ, and with all saints; saved to fulness of joy; saved to know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, that we may be made conformable unto His death, if by any means we may attain unto the resurrection from the dead.

All this, and far more, is contained in the first Gospel message, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." M.

"False Christs."

IS it not characteristic of that Divine wisdom which has forestalled all our dangers, that in the very forefront of our Lord's reply to the inquiry, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming?" He should have placed this warning: "Take heed that no man lead you astray. For many shall come in My name, saying, 'I am the Christ'; and shall lead many astray? Further on, He says: "If any man shall say unto you, 'Lo, here is the Christ, or Here,' believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect. Behold, I have told you beforehand. If, therefore, they shall say unto you . . . 'Behold, he is in the inner chambers,' believe it not" (Matt. xxiv. R.V.).

Thus the very delusions which are ensnaring the unwary and scandalizing the unwarned should serve to strengthen the faith of the watchful student of the Word, for here stand out those delusions, broadly sketched upon the open page by the prophetic finger of Christ Himself.

Our Lord proceeds, in the same place, to state the distinguishing marks of His own appearing—marks which no false Messiah can simulate: "for as the lightning cometh forth from the east, and is seen even unto the west, so shall be the coming of the Son of man" (27). He will come, not clothed in a body of humiliation, and liable, as of old, to the hootings of a mob, but "with power and great glory." By these marks even a child might confute the absurdities of the Agapemonite Messiah.

ON "SUMMER AND HARVEST."

HOW strangely mingled are the notes of harvest; how weirdly their harmonies and discords of joy and disappointment blend—praise for the munificent supplies, the fruit of earnest sowing; chagrin at the no less certain reaping of misspent early years. With a fidelity that appeals to every honest mind, the promises and warnings of Holy Writ recur, in alternate modulations of comfort or of pain.

The dominant note at this season of the year is that of thankfulness that the earth once more yields her increase; and well it is that, now and then at least, the goodness of God inspires the people's heart to praise. We may trace our earthly blessings to natural causes if we will; but only partially are they thus accounted for. The baker, the miller, the farmer, may supply the loaf, the flour, the corn; but beyond these, we are forced to an acknowledgment of God, from whom alone come life and growth, the ultimate Provider of every good and every perfect gift.

By no object in creation does God more insistently instruct the world than by the harvest. One of His earliest promises was that, "While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest . . shall not cease" (Gen. viii. 22). By it our Lord portrayed the final separation of His faithful people from those who prove as worthless as the tares (Matt. xiii. 30); by it He stimulates them to activity in gathering in from whitening fields the precious human grain (John iv. 35). By it the Apostle Paul enjoins the liberal sowing of earthly wealth (2 Cor. ix. 6); by it he urges that eternal destiny will be in strict accord with the kind of seed we sow (Gal. vi. 7). And bowed with grief beneath a nation's woe, the weeping Prophet recalls the piteous anthem of scattered Israel—"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved" (Jer. viii. 20).

The harvest of Palestine is gathered in April or the early part of May, commencing with the barley, and followed three weeks' later by the reaping of the wheat. The seed is sown in mid-winter, when the husbandman, having waited for the rains to penetrate the ground, applies his frail, wooden plough to the softened surface of the land. To this Solomon alludes when he says: "The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold; therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing" (Prov. xx. 4). Earth's luxury must yield to eternity's necessity; self-indulgence, to the call of God. He who would reap must sow, be the weather inclement as it may.

The summer is the time of fruit-gathering, which occurs in June, following the harvest, instead of, as with us, preceding it. Together, they represent the brightest and most joyous seasons of the year.

Israel and Judah had sown their seed of idolatry and sin in the bitterest spiritual winter. The sunshine of Jehovah's smile was withdrawn; the lowering clouds of wrath had burst upon their heads; the storm had swept them from their fruitful native soil to cheerless, Godless Babylon. There they dwelt in poignant grief, stricken by the remorseful memories of how long-suffering the Lord had been, and writhing beneath their callous victors' taunts (Psa. cxxxv. 1-3). Pitiably they longed for the day of deliverance, in frantic hope that soon they should see their native land again.

But season followed season, year succeeded year, until at length their grief found vent in the dismal, wailing cry: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved" (or delivered). Then they knew, what millions before and since have proved, that sowing of good or ill must yield its own peculiar harvest.

And what of ourselves? In spite of a few sunny days that have lately cheered our way, the fact is forced upon our reluctant sense that this year's harvest and summer are o'er. Sickle and scythe have done their work, and the cornfields that delighted the passer-by with golden tints stand naked, forsaken and forlorn. The aspect of the forest is changing with that of the field. Stately monarchs of the wood, affording to weary travellers a grateful shade, will soon be stripped of their glory, and the grass at their feet be strewn with fallen leaves. Gardens and parks, of late resplendent with colour, daily display less beauty to the eye, as gravel and mould alike are bedecked with the remnants of a passing loveliness.

The solemn voice of autumn declares how frail we are; yet it cheers our hearts to know that trees which bear abundant fruit and foliage are the most resplendent as they fade, and that a fruitful Christian's life is ever beautiful until its close. To some the season brings the gladness of the Harvest Home; to others, who have sown unworthy seed, it can but speak of woe.

Most of us have enjoyed, in recent weeks, the wondrous beauties of the earth; how far they have suggested thoughts of God, or inspired a sacrifice of praise, the individual heart alone can testify. Thousands, alas, are deaf to Nature's pleading on her God's behalf, until, perchance, some grim disaster reminds them that He holds their life as a thread in His hand. Glacier, mountain, lake, and sea contribute each its mournful share to the anguish of the world; deaths by drowning, exposure, misadventure, fill countless homes with mourning, while narrow and providential escapes bring many a careless sinner low before his God.

(1) Let us frankly face this fact—if we had met with some calamity, we should, instinctively, have turned to Him; and even now would do so, if we lacked our daily food. Yet while preserved in health and strength, and well supplied with all we need, how prone we are to let the season pass, and leave us exiles still! Strange that His unceasing care should be rewarded with neglect, and the regularity of His providence should win forgetfulness!

(2) And what of the religious privileges pertaining to these seasons of the year—the opportunities we do not find at other times? Summer breezes bear the Gospel hope to thousands by the wayside and the shore, who otherwise had been beyond its reach; and bare-legged, happy children have built their "chapels" in the sand, for meetings of their own. Have any of us left such sacred scenes with unimpressioned hearts? Has the harvest passed in vain, with all the thoughts of God suggested by it? Has summer run its course, with eternal lessons still unlearned? "Despisest thou the riches of His goodness . . . not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" (Rom. ii. 4.) Rejoicing in earthly summer, replete with mental peace, have we no desire for the sunshine of the everlasting rest above? Admiring the earthly harvest, with its wealth of golden store, have we sought no part in the Harvest Home of heaven, when the ransomed of the Lord return, laden with joyful sheaves?

(3) It may be so. The seasons of Time may come and go, and bear into oblivion their priceless benedictions; yet still a hope remains; the Lord of the harvest has not yet sent His reapers forth; the end is not yet come.

The Eastern farmer, if he fail of harvest, may still rely upon the summer, with its yield of grapes and olives, figs, and other fruits, even though, like the sluggard, he may have refused on the winter's morn to sow his seed. But two crops are better than one; and good fruit will not bring back lost harvest. He may eke out a bare existence, but with nothing left to save, or spare to help another's need.

Do not some of us thus regard eternal things—too easily content with part when we might possess the whole—achieving but a graceless entrance into the higher life beyond; bearing "no gathered sheaves of life's fair ripening grain," nor of souls won, by earnest toil, from sin?

(4) And if this be true of the indolent saint (who reaps not grain, but stalk!), how much more of the careless sinner! He who "will not plough by reason of the cold," or from any cause that Satan may inspire, who procrastinates, or stops his ear to the call of grace, may find to-morrow as uncongenial as to-day; or, should it be propitious, the moisture may have left the earth, enhancing the labour of the harrow and the plough.

If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all;
Not the righteous—
Sinners Jesus came to call.

Disinclination increases with the lapse of time; the chill breath of indifference hardens the heart, which, bereft of the softening influence of the Holy Spirit, is less capable of impression than before. Such an one "shall beg in harvest, and have nothing." Others prosper, but he must starve; they may sing, but he must weep; they are welcomed with, "Well done!" he is banished with, "Depart!" theirs the joy of Harvest Home, his the darkness of despair.

(5) When harvest and summer are over, then winter comes again—not a mere "winter of discontent," but one of dire, eternal loss. Then is the starving time, when the soul finds nought of nourishment; when "the clouds return not after the rain," and "the grinders cease because they are few"; when "desire shall fail," and "man goeth to his long home"; when "the dust shall return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it" (Eccles. xii. 3-7). Ah, terrible fate: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved!" Ah, pitiful wail: "What might have been!" G.

The Lord's Prayer.

CHRIST saith, whoso loveth Him will keep His commandments; and they that keep them are His friends, as He saith in another place. And He will hear His friends, and grant them all reasonable things that they ask of Him, needful to health of soul and body. And all things needful to man, either to soul or body, are contained in the Lord's Prayer. It is the prayer full of wisdom and health which Christ taught his disciples.

This holy prayer contains seven askings. And in these short askings is contained more wisdom than any tongue of man can fully tell here on earth. God careth not for long tarrying, nor for smooth words, either rhymed or in prayer. For St. Gregory saith, True praying is not to speak fine words with the mouth, but to make great complaint and sorrow for sin, with sore sighing of heart, and great desire of forgiveness.

What is it to patter with lips when the heart prayeth not by desire? What difference there is betwixt the bran and flour of the wheat, such there is between the sound of the lips and the devotion of heart. When the mouth prayeth God for one thing, and the heart is busy about another, such worship God with lips, but the heart of them is far from him, as he complaineth by the prophet.—John Wickliff (1324-1384).

*"Be Filled with the Spirit."

By Rev. FRANCIS PAYNTER.

"BE filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18)—"The Spirit of God," "The Spirit of holiness," "The Spirit of wisdom," "The Spirit of truth," "The Spirit of life," "The Spirit of Christ"—"The Comforter," "The Holy Ghost"—"When He is come." "Be filled," i.e., constantly filled.

These words suggest three important questions. What is meant by being filled with the Spirit? How can we be filled with the Spirit for the first time? How can we be kept filled day by day?

The Apostle says, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit." It is sadly possible to be in the Spirit, and yet not filled with the Spirit. Let me give you an illustration for which I am indebted to the Bishop of Durham. A vessel—an earthen vessel—is placed in the sea. It is in the water, surrounded by it at every point. But it carries in it a quantity of air, and is so placed that, though its mouth is open to the water, this air (tainted and malarious air we will suppose) cannot escape.

PEACE AT THE CROSS.

So we have come to the foot of the cross, and found peace in believing, but there are portions in us, perhaps large portions, which are occupied with obstructions. Before we can be filled with the Spirit, all these things must be expelled.

This cannot be done by us, but if we look to the Lord He will expel the obstructing matter, and fill us with Himself.

"Be filled with the Spirit." What are the words that go before? "Be not drunk with wine." If it is a sin to be drunken—to use our body for our own personal gratification—it is equally a sin not to be filled with the Spirit. It is a sin of deep ingratitude.

By the Spirit is meant the Holy Ghost, who came down on the Church, represented by the little body of Christians assembled in the upper room, on the day of Pentecost. Then for the first time the 120 souls gathered there were filled with the Spirit. They had the Holy Ghost before—but now they were "all filled with the Holy Ghost," filled to overflowing. So in this passage the Pentecostal gift of the Spirit is spoken of.

FOR EVERY CHRISTIAN.

These words, "Be filled with the Spirit," whilst addressed to ministers and teachers and to matured Christians, are equally addressed to the rank and file of the Church, and even to those who have only just been converted. They are spoken to every one who belongs to Christ. Have you been truly converted to God? Have you come as a lost sinner to Jesus Christ, and received the Holy Ghost in the new birth? Then God says to you, "Be filled with the Spirit." This blessing is definite in character. It does not come by ordinary Christian growth, but is received as a free gift. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "In whom, having believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise" (Eph. i. 13).

This fulness of the Spirit is a gift offered to all, a gift which is received by faith in Christ, and which is continued in precisely the same manner.

Bethcar Maternity Home, Leeds.—Among the institutions about which little is known outside the town in which they are situated is Bethcar, the Maternity Home for Girls. For eight years its ministry has been used of God to awaken in the hearts of those who have sought succour in their time of trouble, holy desires and aspirations. First cases only are taken. They are cared for and nursed during their illness, and are either placed into respectable domestic service or sent to relatives or friends. While under the Christian influence of the Home many have given themselves fully to Christ, and thus leave with a new hope and strength for the future. The work is of a painful nature, but its necessity is only too painfully emphasized by the number of applications received. The superintendent is Mrs. Walker, 40, Sunny Bank Terrace, Leeds.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 12. 1 Samuel xxiv.

NOTHING more clearly proves the blind infatuation of Saul's jealousy, than that he should pursue his outlawed son-in-law among these craggy and dangerous precipices, with their almost inaccessible caves.

David's magnanimity was clearly approved by his noble treatment of his persecutor. It was so easy to argue, as indeed, his men did, that the opportunity of ridding himself of all further trouble, gave him the right to take advantage of it. He might have argued, also, that he was not the aggressor, and that Saul had often shown murderous designs upon his life. But he refused to forestall God's dealings with the anointed king, and even relented at having shown some slight discourtesy. All this proves him to have been a truly great and good man, and is worthy of our sincere admiration. When men treat us wrongfully, we have no right to repay them in the same coin. We must treat our enemies with courtesy. Opportunity does not justify our doing wrong; it is rather a test whether we will follow the dictate of conscience against the suggestions of sense. We must be still, and abide the Lord's leisure. He will come, and will not tarry.

David's expostulation, and the evidence of the skirt of his robe, smote Saul's heart, and aroused his better nature. He even asked that David would spare his house in those coming days, when he knew that he would be king. But the change of mood was only temporary. Oh, let us not contract the awful habit of trusting in our emotions! There is nothing permanent, save the will energised by the will of God. (See Psalm cxlii.)

MONDAY, October 13. 1 Samuel xxv

David and his men stationed themselves on the southern borders of Palestine. There were large tracts of pasture there, to which cattle were sent at the grazing season, though there was constant danger of the prowling Arabs making raids upon them and driving them off. The outlaws performed a most useful service in warding off these attacks; and, according to Eastern custom, had a right to be recompensed at the annual sheep-shearing festival. Nabal's refusal was a clear violation of the established usage of the country.

What a good angel Abigail was! Blessed are the peacemakers—is a beatitude which many of us have had reason to pronounce on those who have saved us from our worse selves. One may well plead with the Holy Spirit to perform a similar office in our hearts. "O gentle blessed Spirit of God, put Thy cool hand on our hot heads!" Notice how God interposed to vindicate His servant, and how David blessed Him for keeping him back from evil. Possibly this incident was in his mind when he said, "Keep back Thy servant from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me."

All women may be proud of Abigail; and let them learn from her not to foment, but allay strife. It is a temptation to do the former, but it is Godlike to do the latter. Let Christian women cast all their influence on the side of peace.

TUESDAY, October 14. 1 Samuel xxvi.

Among the wandering tribes of the East, the encampments are usually of a circular form, the circumference being composed of the baggage; then the common soldiers; and, in the inner circle, the king, or chief. The fact of David having penetrated to the centre of Saul's camp proved his heroic daring, while his refusal to take advantage of the sleeping monarch, as Abishai prompted, was a convincing evidence of his noble generosity. He determined to take no step of his own toward securing the fulfilment of the Divine promise. He knew that it was sure, but it was not for him to secure it by stratagem or force. "Fret not thyself in any wise to do evil, for evil doers shall be cut off. Trust in the Lord, and do good." Such were the principles of his inner choice. He believed, and therefore would not make haste. If God has given you an assurance, be still; rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him.

As Abishai stands over Saul, spear in hand, asking permission to strike him dead with one blow, we are reminded how Death stands threatening us, and Satan, and Temptation, and how often the blow is averted, because there is One who loves, and pleads, and stays the descending blow. If it were not so, we should have been felled to the ground long ago, perhaps to rise no more.

David's pleading with Saul was very touching. He suggested that traducers had been at work, poisoning his mind, and that he was not worth all the trouble that Saul was expending on him. He asked if they might not offer a sacrifice together, and complained that the treatment to which he had been subjected might have had the effect of driving him away from God. Saul was touched by it; and he referred to his own "tribulation," as though he had not been his own worst enemy. So jealousy blinds us to ourselves, and to our friends and foes. And let us take care not to drive any soul away from the inheritance of the Lord.

WEDNESDAY, October 15. 1 Samuel xxvii.

In a moment of despair, David made up his mind to quit his native land. It was a disastrous lapse of faith. As God had kept him, so He was prepared to keep him. But he seems to have had a fainting fit, and feared that he would one day fall into the hands of his foes. However great our difficulties in holding our ground, we have no right to retreat from the place where God has fixed us, unless the door unmistakably opens in front and as clearly closes behind. This false step on David's part was destined to have several difficult and pernicious consequences. Directly we abandon principle for expediency, we take a step which is likely to land us in untold difficulties. The way of faith is the only safe way, after all.

These raids which David made, and the deceit with which he covered his actions, are very unfavourable episodes in his career; but we must not judge him by our own standards. The longer I observe human life, the surer I am that the Apostle is right in laying supreme emphasis on truth and love. Read again the Second Epistle of John. "I love in truth;" "in truth and love;" "for the truth's sake which abideth in us, and it shall be with us for ever." Again the Third Epistle: "I love in truth;" "fellow-workers with the truth;" "the witness of the truth." What a contrast between David and John! How can we account for it, apart from Calvary and Pentecost?

THURSDAY, October 16. 1 Samuel xxviii.

We come now to almost the climax of this sad and awful story. The shadows gather around the ill-fated king, and involve not him alone, but his unhappy kingdom, David meanwhile is finding his own path extremely difficult.

The Philistines had poured up by the sea coast to the plain of Esdraelon, and pitched near Shunem, on the northern slopes; so that to reach the witch whom his servants had discovered for him, Saul had to pass, disguised, behind the left wing of the Philistine hosts. It was useless for him to inquire of the Lord, because the Divine Oracle was dumb. "The Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." What an awful condition to be reduced to. There is no doubt that he might have secured an answer if he had put away his sins. But while these were unconfessed, Heaven was silent. A man cannot live altogether without the supernatural. If he may not have God, he will seek the devil. If he absents himself from the Church, he will betake himself to the necromancer or the spiritualist.

Whether Samuel really came into that séance has been greatly discussed. I should be disposed to think that if a demon personated him, he was at least compelled to speak the truth, as Balaam was. In any case, Saul heard the full truth about himself, and swooned—only to be revived by the kind offices of the woman.

There were many signs which suggested to the woman his identity—such as his towering height, his eagerness to see Samuel, his asseveration that she should not be hurt. O harassed soul, be sure to turn, not to witches that peep and mutter, but to the Lord with full purpose of heart. Thou wilt not be helped by Moses, Samuel, or Elijah. Jesus is near. Out of the stormy night hear His word, "It is I, be not afraid." Not a spirit, but a Saviour!

FRIDAY, October 17. 1 Samuel xxix.

It is interesting to know that Gilboa, Jezreel, Shunem, and Endor, are all easily located. They still bear the same names, and lie within sight of one another.

David's position had become a very awkward and delicate one. In consequence of his prevarications and lapse of faith, he had been brought into the field of battle as an ally of the Philistines against his own people. Whatever his protestations (8), it must have been a fixed resolution on his part, that he would not go into battle under such circumstances. Yet how was he to extricate himself? He was undeserving of the confidence which Achish reposed in him (6); but it was an extremely difficult thing to do anything to forfeit it, the more especially as the guileless monarch had appointed him the captain of his lifeguard. Doubtless it was made a matter of almost agonizing prayer, until presently a way was opened by which he could retreat from the grave position in which he found himself.

This chapter is therefore very helpful to those of us who find themselves involved in similar perplexity. Through our want of candour and lack of faith (and the two almost invariably go together), we may have got into a perfect labyrinth and maze of perplexity. Whatever course we take, seems likely to land us in trouble, and to bring discredit on the Kingdom. What can we do under such circumstances except to carry our crooked and rough ways to God, confessing our sins, and professing our desire to do whatever He would have us do? When we are genuinely contrite and broken, His help will arise in the darkness.

SATURDAY, October 18. 1 Samuel xxx.

While the entire force of Israel was called upon to face the Philistines on the Plain of Esdraelon, the Amalekites took advantage and invaded the southern territory. They were specially merciless on Ziklag, in memory of David's recent raids. Added to his anguish at his personal losses, there was the peculiar pain of mutiny among his followers, who looked on him as the indirect occasion of their losses. The spirit of any other leader would have been quelled before the storm; not so David's. In spite of the duplicity of which he had been recently guilty, he was really and essentially a godly and believing soul, and he turned at once to encourage and strengthen himself in God (6).

With the full assurance of faith, resting on the Divine word (8), he started in pursuit; fell on the host when they fancied that he and all of the warriors were far away; recovered all and more than he had lost; and was able to make presents to many who had befriended him. It is interesting to add 1 Chron. xii. 22 to this narrative, and to see how, from this moment, the number of his followers began to increase. Day by day fresh adherents gathered to his side.

In God's armies, as in David's, the rule holds good that, "as his share is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his share be that tarrieth by the stuff." For many an invalid, or mother, or secluded Christian soul, it is not possible to go down to the battle. Necessarily such must stay by the stuff. A life of patient waiting is theirs day by day. But they shall share alike with those who have borne the brunt of the fight. Our Lord rewards according to the ready mind and willing heart. It may be that many will wear a martyr's crown, and have a reward as missionaries, who have never left the small country village where they were born. "Lord, when saw we Thee . . .?"

Dublin Christian Convention.

THE twenty-ninth annual Convention has been held at Dublin. At the preliminary conversazione, Rev. Duncan Craig, D.D., an old and tried friend of the United Services, took the chair; and in his opening address referred to the various attacks which had been made upon the Bible during the past generation. At one time geology, and then astronomy, and again that mystic thing, protoplasm, were all objects of dread by timid Christians, as likely to upset the authority of the Scriptures; but the Word had survived, and would in like manner survive the higher critics, whom the speaker advised young ministers to let alone, as in attacking error from the pulpit the impression made would probably be more permanent as regards the error stated than its refutation. Rev. Hugh D. Brown spoke on "Partnership with the Holy Ghost." Referring to the lack of the Holy Spirit power in many Christians, he said that just as electricity had been in the world since the creation, but is only now being understood, so the power of the Holy Spirit has been in the world since Pentecost, although many of God's people have not availed themselves of His mighty influences.

Rev. A. J. Palmer, of Folkestone, spoke eloquently and fervently on some experiences of Peter. He distinguished between regeneration and conversion; the latter consisting in the carrying out of what the new birth determines. Regeneration can take place only once, but conversion may be repeated, when the Holy Spirit reveals new faults to be removed and new excellencies to be acquired, as in the case of Peter, where impetuosity had to give place to calm faith, and cowardice to courage.

ELIJAH AND HIS WORK.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., of Brooklyn, made a profound impression, and his striking expositions of the Word will not soon be forgotten. He spoke first from 1 Kings xviii. 36-39. Elijah had two great qualifications for the work of a reformer. First, he is introduced abruptly as one who "stands before God"—so busy on his Master's errands that he has not time to sit down. Then the other—"Go, hide thyself," followed by "Go, show thyself." That is always God's order, hiding in the secret place of communion before showing forth His glory in the presence of men. Elijah did not need to watch for the cloud appearing. He prayed—others watched. Praying men do not need to watch circumstances. Their eye is fixed on God, but others note the circumstances which supply the answer.

ABIDING IN CHRIST.

Dr. Pierson's address in John xiv. 20, "Ye in Me, and I in you," was powerful. "Abide in Me and I in you." The order was not arbitrary—always "Me" first. This fact underlies the speaker's latest discovery after preaching for forty years. He had not realized it fully until lately. In what sense can anything be in me and I in it? I am in this building, but it is not in me. Yet nature supplies an illustration. The plant is in the earth, and the earth is in the plant; the fish in the water, and the water in the fish; the bird in the air, and the air in the bird; the iron in the fire, and the fire in the iron. The first three words have to do with standing, and the second three with state.

He considered the vine and its branches the greatest of all our Lord's parables. The vine and its branches have a mutual relationship quite rare in the vegetable kingdom, the vine penetrates the branch and the branch the vine. The branch is not brittle as in many other trees. You cannot tear off a branch without tearing off a considerable part of the fibres and bark of the trunk, for the fibres reach from the root to the extremity of every branch. So the life of Jesus permeates the believer, and the believer's life, in a sense, permeates the life of Jesus. The fruit referred to here is not soul-winning; God regards not what you do, until it is first settled what you are. Gal. v. 22 refers to frames of mind and heart and will-attitudes. Abiding in Christ, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

THE RISEN CHRIST.

Rev. Geo. Hanson, D.D., of London, delivered a timely address on the evidence of the resurrection of our Lord, based upon Matt. xxviii. 9-15. There was a great difference between knowing the truth and being mastered by the truth. This was illustrated by the experience of Dr. Dale, as mentioned in his biography, who, once, preparing an Easter sermon, received, as a new inspiration, the thought that Christ lived, and was so impressed that for months after every sermon was upon "The Living Christ." Had all present believed with heart and soul that Christ was alive, and were they living as in the presence of their Lord?

The evidence for the resurrection of our Lord was outlined. So far from the Apostles being credulous and gullible men, they were the very reverse. They had no notion of resurrection at all. "We hoped that it should have been He that would redeem Israel." Also, some of them were very intimate with their Master, knew every tone and look, and no one could have personated the Christ to them. Then again, only a very short interval had intervened between the crucifixion and the alleged resurrection. The speaker concluded with two inferences: First, if Christ has risen, then we have, not only an argument for immortality, but we have its definite proof; second, if Christ be really risen, then we have a living Christ, whom we can claim as our life.

THE REGIONS BEYOND.

The missionary meeting awoke much enthusiasm. Dr. Pierson's address from the verse, "Unto me, who am the least of all saints was this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. iii. 8), was heart-searching. He began by referring to the importance of motive as the measure of the value of Christian missions. Obedience to a command was not the highest motive—their passage rises higher, up to privilege, "Unto Me . . . this grace given that I should," &c. It is the language of transcendent privilege, a sense of consummate favour bestowed. The speaker dwelt upon the magnificence of this motive, enlarging upon the four leading words of the passage:—(1) riches, (2) mystery, (3) wisdom, (4) purpose. With regard to the latter word, he said that nothing moved him into the work like the idea of falling in with the purpose and plan of God. He had devoted his seven children to the work, some of whom were already engaged in it. Jesus wants us all. He would not say to the humblest Christian, "I have no need of thee." God does not want heralds, otherwise He would have employed the angels; but men, because they only can be witnesses. Cornelius had to send to Joppa for Peter; the angel did not bring about his conversion—a man, a witness, was necessary.

God's plans never will be accomplished until the Church comes into line with His purposes. The question is not so much, How can the world be saved? but, How can Christians be saved if they neglect this command? These days have been spoken of as the era of persecution in China; but the Chinese martyrdoms were really a blessing. The loss of the martyr spirit is the loss of the mission. "The moment we cease to bleed, we cease to bless."

Accounts of work were given by several friends:—Rev. J. Ashcroft, from India; Rev. Mr. Colborn, who spoke of London needs; Rev. J. Stuart Holden, of the Church Parochial Mission; and Rev. H. A. Scott, of Wolverhampton.

The prayer meeting for Ireland was conducted by Rev. Thomas Connellan.

Altogether it was a very blessed Convention, and, as usual, Rev. Mr. Mullan and Mr. Dawson were ably supported in the carrying out of the arrangements.

The Education Bill.—A non-party Women's Protest against the Bill, on account of the disqualification of women, is to be made at a meeting (open also to men) at St. James' Hall, Monday, October 13, at 8 p.m. Lady Strachey will preside, and among those who will address the meeting are Lady Battersea, Mrs. Dickenson Berry, M.D., Mrs. Homan, M.L.S.B., Rev. A. Lilley (vicar of St. Mary's, Paddington), Miss Catherine Webb (Women's Industrial Council), and Mr. Cyril Dodd, K.C.

The Salisbury Conference—2.

SCRIPTURE READING IN IRELAND.

At the Salisbury Conference Rev. J. O. Gage Dougherty gave an interesting address upon the work of the Scripture Readers in Ireland. Not long ago in England the opinion might almost be said to be general which he had once heard expressed in a railway carriage: "Ireland is just an impossible country, with an impossible people." He confessed that in earlier years he could not help having a certain amount of sympathy with such an opinion. The more he had seen, however, of what the Gospel could do with the hearts and lives of those who received it in simplicity and truth, the more convinced was he that the Scripture reader, in whatever district he worked, had hold of the weapon which, through God, would ever prove mighty in the pulling down of the strongholds of sin and Satan. It had again and again been seen that the means to make the people better and brighter was the pure Word of God, and that was why, with all his heart, he believed in such an agency as the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

M. B., who has for thirty-four years been at work in the slums of a great city, coming into contact with thieves, infidels, drunkards, harlots, is able to testify that during this period some of these have been savingly converted to God. He writes, "I am visiting ——, a lion-like man. At first he would not hear me, nor let me into his bedroom; but now he sits to hear me, and the big tear rolls down his cheek. Now he makes me welcome whenever I come. Mrs. —— had a public house, but has sold her interest in it. Once she was most careless and godless; but now she is most docile, drinking in every word that tells about Jesus, and praying for mercy. Mrs. ——, once one of the careless women, told me that she feels God has forgiven her. B. said, 'I can't tell why it is, but Jesus Christ is never out of my thoughts, day or night.' Mrs. ——, dying in consumption, said to me, 'I feel so happy, I would like to get to Jesus soon.' Miss ——, dying from a broken thigh bone, said, 'I am waiting on the Lord; He is coming for me. I am, by His grace, ready to go whenever He calls, at any moment.' J. said, 'I am trusting to His own Word.'"

Mr. Dougherty added, in conclusion, that, about two months ago, during the summer, he had commenced open-air work in the vicinity of the Dublin Custom House, on Lord's Day evenings, at the close of his service in Trinity Church. Frequently he addressed on these occasions from 400 to 500 people, and he drew from the evident interest a significant proof of readiness to hear the Gospel. He earnestly asked that the labours of the Scripture Readers might have first remembrance in the prayers of the Lord's people. D. J. E.

THE POSITION IN ARMENIA.

On the invitation of Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites there were present at the Conference Rev. Krikor Behesnilian, an Armenian exiled minister, and his brother Mr. John Behesnilian, a survivor of the massacres. On Wednesday Mr. Behesnilian, who was imprisoned about three months in a Turkish dungeon, and released at the intervention of the British Government, spoke on behalf of his suffering brethren. He reminded his hearers that, since 1894, some 200,000 Armenian Christians had sealed their faith with their blood; and that there are at the present time some 50,000 fatherless children, with a proportionate number of widows. Mr. Behesnilian had addressed over 700 meetings throughout Great Britain. He expressed the joy with which he had realised that the Christians of this country sympathised with the oppressed, and had provided him with the means to bring up some of the fatherless children in his Home at Marash (Armenia), as well as assist several of the native Christian churches. Friends who were present expressed deep sympathy with him, and bought many of his pamphlets, "Unrest in Armenia," and "My Escape from the Grip of the Turk."

A Glasgow Conference.

ST. GEORGE'S CROSS TABERNACLE.

THE annual Conference at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, which began on Saturday, September 27, was, from different standpoints, quite equal to any that went before. The gathering was as widely representative as ever, both on the platform and in the area and gallery of the building. There were missionaries present from many parts of the wide world, besides "evangelists, pastors, teachers," representative of work at home, with a great body of others whose Christian service in their own local spheres bears the hall-mark of heaven's approbation. The missionary element, always a strong feature of the Tabernacle work, becomes more strongly marked as the years roll on.

Saturday's proceedings opened under the presidency, as usual, of Pastor David J. Findlay. For the first half-hour prayer and praise alternated. The opening speaker was Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, "a man of God" and a true minister of the Gospel. As we listened to him we felt assured that all his being's ransomed powers were pressed into Christ's service in his preaching. The note of reality and the spirit of intensity were easily perceived, and he was listened to throughout his interesting address with eagerness. Preachers such as Mr. Montgomery greatly help to solve the question as to how to reach the masses, and we can readily understand how he wins souls to Christ in his own sphere in the linen city in the North of Ireland, His word on limiting God carried weight with it, and we dare not doubt but that some saw the gravity of that sin as they had never seen it before. He spoke of the unlimited faith that some men have in limited companies, many of which are never far from the brink of insolvency, and of the limited faith too often shown in an unlimited God. Unbelief says, "Can God?" Faith says, "God can." The breezy address was greatly enjoyed, and some felt as if the stirring word was brought to an end too soon.

Rev. David Baron (London) spoke on the purging out of the old leaven, preparatory to the keeping of the feast. His exposition ran on clear Scriptural lines, and in his comments on the feasts named in Leviticus xxiii. his insight and exegetical gift were abundantly evident. Few men possess a fuller knowledge of the Word of God, and being himself one of the house of Israel, his competence in handling such a subject was apparent. Three things he bade us note as related to the feasts: (1) Rest; not idleness, but exchange of exercise, as illustrated in the words: "Take My yoke and learn of Me . . . and ye shall find rest. . . ." (2) Joy; "Thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God" (Deut. xvi. 11). (3) Offering; a portion for those for whom nothing has been prepared.

"THE HARDEST MISSION FIELD."

Introduced as coming "from the hardest mission field in the world," Dr. Churcher (North African Mission) referred to work among the Mohammedans. His address was on the text, "Ye shall receive power," and three points were named and spoken to: (1) Preparation; (2) Power; (3) Progress.

Mr. Robert Grierson (China Inland Mission), described by Mr. Findlay as his "son in the faith"—having been led to Christ through his instrumentality many years ago—had with him a picture-lesson in the form of two ribbons, a short white one, and a very long black one, which are hung out as representing the disparity between the Protestant Christian world and the large heathen population. It proved a very striking way of presenting the state of things existing after the lapse of nineteen centuries of Gospel light, and made us feel like saying, How long, Oh Lord! How long!

In the evening the speakers included Rev. Gordon B. Watt (Kilmarnock), Mr. L. W. Tweedie (Brazil Mission), Dr. Anderson (China), and Mr. John George Govan (Faith Mission). Rev. Henry Montgomery gave a rousing address, which closed the day.

Throughout Lord's Day, twice on Monday, and once on Tuesday, the sessions of the conference continued, and it was felt to be a time of refreshing throughout. One brother writes that "the dew was falling in abundance," and we trust that it was allowed to soak into many lives. At the principal diets, the Tabernacle was closely packed, and the collection-boxes enabled £40 to be divided among the various mission fields represented.

The early morning prayer meeting was a season of helpfulness, and indicated how and where the various addresses had struck at least a portion of the audience. Another large prayer-meeting was partly used as a missionary testimony experience meeting, and proved a profitable time.

The missionary addresses of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Morgan, after their long tour in India, were listened to with deep interest. On no past occasion have we had so many ministers, evangelists, missionaries, and leaders in various departments of the work of the Lord with us.

Baptists at Birmingham.

THE Autumn assembly of the Baptist Union opened at Birmingham on Monday, with a reception given by the Lord Mayor. The function was a brilliant one, an immense crowd thronging every part of the Council House. The central nature of the meeting-place is opportune, as, on account of the importance of the Education Bill discussion, intense interest has been aroused throughout the denomination. The names were received of no fewer than 1,750 delegates who purposed being present. Tuesday was devoted to the gatherings in connection with the Missionary Society; and on Wednesday the business sessions of the Union commenced under the presidency of Rev. J. R. Wood.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

After a preliminary survey of public events, Mr. Wood said he thought that the presidential address at the Spring Assembly—"The Place of the Minister in the Life of the Church"—might fitly be followed by the kindred topic, "The Place of the Church in the Life of the Nation." As the minister is the most potent of the forces which make the life of the Church, so the Church is the most potent of the forces operating on the life of the nation.

NEW CONDITIONS TO BE FACED.

Directing special attention to the new set of circumstances to be faced in the aggregation of the English population in cities, he quoted the words:—"A new type is being produced—the city type—physically, mentally, and spiritually different from the type characteristic of Englishmen for the last 200 years. The city-bred man is often stunted, narrow-chested, easily wearied, excitable; seeking stimulus in drink, in betting, in any unaccustomed conflicts at home or abroad." To these features the original writer had added: "The almost universal decay among these massed populations of any form of spiritual religion."

Drunkenness diminishes, but we view with dismay the increased consumption of intoxicating liquors through the steady drinking of vast masses of the people; the soaking always goes on, and never ceases. The drinking habits of the people are a neurotic centre, where diseases of many kinds have their seat. The love of pleasure—often selfish and ignoble, disdaining restraint, and delighting in excess—is connected with the love of stimulants; and so is the gambling mania, which infects nearly all classes of the community. These, and kindred problems in our national life are not new; what is new about them is their immense bulk, the ripple has become "an ever climbing wave."

There are elements of nobleness in English life, and we do not forget them. Reverence for the past still lives; duty is sacred; courage and power of endurance survive among the poor as well as the rich. Though we are keen in the pursuit of wealth, humanity and regard for the rights of others still count as virtues. We have less of the love of war than some nations, and we are not less generous than they when we make peace.

WHAT IS THE "CHURCH"?

Much would be done for Christian thought, and for efficiency in Christian service, if we could rescue the term "Church" from misuse, and restore it to its primitive place and value. We need to re-mint the coin which has been defaced in passing through many hands. Jesus Christ founded the Church, the visible embodiment of the kingdom of God. It is His only monument; He founded nothing else. What place does the town or village church hold in the nation's life? What is the society of believers expected to do in the community of which it forms part? The Founder cherished high expectations of the Church which He founded, though it consisted only of "a handful of peasants" from Galilee; and in this the prophets were His forerunners.

It has been well said that "the sacerdotal priest is the ghost sitting on the grave of the dead and buried Church"; and we join issue with the High Churchman, not on the claims he makes on behalf of the Church, but on the fact that he has superseded and destroyed that Scriptural conception of the Church for which these claims can be rightly maintained. Thinking of the twenty Christian centuries, we cannot say that the high expectations of the Founder of the Christian Church have been wholly disappointed. The treasure—the Divine life—has been deposited in an "earthen vessel"; but it has been preserved, and made available for daily use.

PRIVILEGE AND RESPONSIBILITY.

As Christian citizens we should bear our part in social reforms; principles learnt in the Church are to be applied in the world; but Churches of Christ best serve the common weal when they are true to their own distinctive mission. "Preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season;" is our direct mission; our indirect mission is social reform, and if we are faithful to the first, we shall make our best contribution to the second. Conversion is the straight road to national improvement; bring men to God, and you bring them to every other possession worth having. "Faith cometh out of hearing, and hearing from the word of Christ." It will be a radiant day for our empire when all ministers and Christian workers are occupied with the word of Christ, and the millions of our people become interested hearers.

AIMS AND DANGERS.

Three things we must aim at within the fellowships to which we belong. We must take time to realise (1) our union with Jesus Christ; that His life has taken possession, and we are simply, solely, and for ever His. We must develop (2) a warmer union with one another. The note of fellowship needs to be struck afresh, and the "communion of saints" translated out of the Apostles' Creed into the life of our Baptist Churches. The chief want in our large centres of population is a real brotherhood. "I know of no true Christianity without fellowship," said Count Zinzendorf; and this principle, loyally carried out, made the Moravian Church the missionary church it became. When the fire of holy love burns in the heart it will burn through, and be felt by others; and fellowship will not only be enjoyed between different classes in the Church, but between different evangelical Churches in the nation. We have the highest authority for regarding brotherly love as a condition of successful evangelization. We must aim at (3) that Pentecostal prayer union which was not only the precursor, but the condition of the Pentecostal blessing.

Brethren, as we think of these things, let us guard against a double danger—the danger of thinking that this work in the Church to which we belong is the work of somebody else, and the danger of thinking we can compound for an annual subscription; our obligation is not discharged when we have made a money gift. When we became Christians we contracted obligations to Christ, to our brethren, and to the nation, from which there is no discharge till we receive a discharge from the Master Himself. "Power to the last particle is duty"; and to personal service there is no limit but the power to render it.

A Brave Woman.

THE LATE MRS. J. W. INNES-WRIGHT.

NEPAUL MISSION.

THE work of a pioneer missionary is one that calls for qualities of no mean order. It is a testing one, not only of character, but of physical strength. Small wonder then if sometimes the strength yields to the strain, and the call to the higher service comes suddenly. It was so with Mrs. Innes-Wright, of the Nepaul Mission. As we have already intimated, very suddenly at Sukhia Pokhri, near Darjeeling, in the north-west of India, on the morning of Thursday, July 24, she was taken ill, and, within a few hours, unconscious that her end was coming, passed away.

The eldest of seven sisters, Rebecca Rowland Johnston, was born in the Scotch county town of Dumfries, on March 2, 1856. As a child her health was delicate for some years; and when she gained strength, an old doctor said of her, "The Lord must have some work for that child, or she would never have come through what she has." Undoubtedly there was a plan for her, and now that she has passed away it is of interest to note how she was being prepared for her latest service, and how she was enabled to be the leader of all her six sisters into missionary work. Five of them are working as independent, self-supporting missionaries in China, and the sixth is engaged in mission work in Scotland. As she herself, while working as a missionary in India, lived upon her private means, the family record must, we think, be unique in the missionary world.

HOME-TRAINING FOR FOREIGN WORK.

Converted in the spring of 1873, in her own room, being enabled to lay hold of the Lord by faith, through John vi. 37: "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out," she shortly afterwards began work among mill girls in Dumfries. This was for long up-hill work. Ultimately there was much blessing. Some of the worst girls who came under her influence were turned to her Master, and are now workers for Him at home and abroad.

Going to Glasgow some time in the "eighties," Miss Johnston associated herself with work at Grove Street Hall, especially in the Mill Girls' Society and the Children's Church, and was much blessed in her service there. It was at this time the writer of this article got to know her, and he will never forget what she once said about a girl who had caused her endless trouble and many hours of anxious work. Her question was, "What more can I do?" On the suggestion being made to her that perhaps she had done all she could, and that the responsibility must be on the girl, her word was:—"Is not the Master's way to go after the lost sheep until he find it?"

PERSEVERANCE, PURPOSE, PRAYER,

were characteristics of Rebecca Johnston. From 1886 to 1891 she took a leading part in the Water Street Mission, in one of the poorest parts of Glasgow, and often went out at night with Salvation Army workers after lost girls. She was no less used of God in the West-end of the city, and in a time of revival, when many young ladies were led to Christ, her help and influence were of the greatest value. She held evangelistic meetings, principally for young women, in Dundee, Dunfermline, Belfast, and other places; and also conducted general meetings in Aberdeenshire, which were very much blessed. She was always keen on medical work, and had some experience among the sick poor in their own homes.

Such was her home training for foreign work; and, when it is added that she was a good speaker, with a wonderful grasp of Scripture, a capable teacher, and a trained musician and singer, it can readily be seen how full was her equipment for wider service. The claims of the heathen had long lain on her heart, and after the death of her father, Mr. James Johnson, banker, Dumfries, she sailed for China in December, 1891, with two of her younger sisters. She carried on Gospel work on some of the British men-of-war in Shanghai harbour; taught in the English-speaking Chinese High Schools, and studied and practised medical work under Dr. Reifsynder, the well-known American lady doctor.

A PIONEER MISSION.

Early in 1893, Miss Johnston went to Calcutta, and was married there, on her birthday, to Mr. J. W. Innes-Wright, who had gone from Glasgow to India for missionary service. Eventually they settled in the North-West Provinces, and after some experience, were led to inaugurate a pioneer mission on the borders of Nepaul. Operations were begun about five years ago, and the aim of the mission was to reach with the Gospel the Nepaulese living in Nepaul. The population of the country is estimated at 3,000,000. Like Tibet, Nepaul is practically a closed land, and the plan of campaign was to establish a small headquarters on the frontier, to influence the Nepaul natives who came into India for trading and other purposes, and by degrees so to gain their confidence that it might be possible to gain access to the country.

Beginning in a small way the work has extended, and every morning in the week, except Friday, a short Gospel meeting is held in the dispensary before medical help is given. Friday is the bazaar day, and 1,200 people, or more, come into Sukhia Pokhri, when a meeting is held in front of the mission house, and one or two hundred people stand listening to the Gospel. Through the dispensary 12,000 cases were treated last year, receiving surgical or medical assistance.

From Photograph by Mr. A. Warneuke, 127, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

During the dry season the missionaries went on tour as much as possible, walking from place to place, preaching and giving medical help. Sometimes a day's work included a climb of three or four thousand feet up the great ridges of the Himalayas, with an encampment at night beside a few huts, 10,000 feet above the sea. One year Mr. and Mrs. Innes-Wright walked over 700 miles, and climbed fully 100,000 feet. At first they could stay only a few hours across the frontier, but during the winter of 1901 they spent quite a month, encamping in different places. By the use of the limelight lantern, blackboard teaching, music, preaching, and personal dealing, fully 60,000 people have through this Mission heard of Christ and His salvation during the last three years. To many of them Gospel portions have been sold, and by degrees their confidence and friendship have been gained.

By the removal of his wife, Mr. Innes-Wright will thus be left alone. The sympathy of many at home will go out to him, and he has, besides this, that of the natives among whom he works. Hundreds on both sides of the frontier have heard the sad news with sorrow, and there will be much grief on his behalf as the news spreads from village to village, and from plantation to plantation. May this time of "sowing in tears" be followed by a widespread spiritual harvest.

"Heart Searchings of the Home."

SIR,—I feel impelled to send you a few long-suppressed thoughts on the most important subject which a "Thinker" tapped in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN.

There appear to me to be at least two distinct classes of men (fathers shall I say?), who err in directions kindred to what your correspondent indicates. The first are such as have been lulled to sleep, and possess little or no really spiritual vitality in middle age. In many temporal things they are alert and keen; but the bright gold has become dim. Their Christianity has sunk into what Dean Farrar terms "the apathetic torpor of functional religionism," or else they have specialized on certain doctrines, and are blind to all else. In short, by whatever means, they have got out of fellowship with God.

Hence their children will be found to have little regard for eternal things, and often become worldly. Then these fathers sigh, "Oh, how the son degenerates from the sire!" while they are themselves responsible for their declension by ignoring the immutable law of biogenesis ("He that hath the Son hath life"), and insisting in its stead on a rigid and barren morality that exercises a repellant action on the young and is but earth-born at the best.

The other class is more hopeful, though here the disease is a sad one. The patients appear to be spiritually active, and may be engaged in Christian work. They study the Word, expound it by the Spirit, and preach the Gospel with power. But the home-life is rather that of men out of Christ (is it as good?) from the standpoint of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, and so forth. Father is not an attractive Christian, but almost a repulsive one; and although the great principles of his life are sound in its details, the Christian is only to be seen occasionally. He is somewhat irritable; though you know he means well, his manner is unfortunate.

Then as to love (is this the whole point?) the family see little, and the poor wife—how can she be bright and cheer the children? Upon her weighs the really awful load of a husband whom she implicity trusts, but who very definitely neglects to show any affection either in a practical or a sentimental manner.

The enemy doubtless sets himself to prevent one from adorning the doctrine, but he could not succeed if Christians would carry out themselves what they teach as to "abiding in the Vine." We know how easy it is to put all this down to weakness of the flesh, but I incline to the belief that it is weakness of the spirit, for God alone can be "sufficient for these things."—Yours faithfully,

A THIRD THINKER.

Slaves and Debtors.

"Paul, the bondservant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle (missionary)" (Rom. i. 1).
"I am debtor . . . . so . . . . I am ready to preach the Gospel" (Rom. i. 14, 15).

BECAUSE we are the slaves
Of Christ our royal Lord;
Because He bought the souls He loved,
With His own life outpoured—

Therefore we must obey
The missionary call,
And linger not but haste away,
To preach the Word to all.

Because we debtors are
To Jesus and mankind;
Because for all, both near and far,
The Gospel is designed—

Our duty is to share
The good things we possess,
The royal gifts and treasures rare
Of heaven's own bounteousness.

Forgive Thy Church, O Lord,
Her disobedience,
Her failure to fulfil Thy Word,
Her guilty negligence.

Forgive her selfishness,
Refusing to pass on
That which was meant the world to bless,
Not for herself alone.

Slaves, debtors, then, are we
The double call we hear,
For God and for humanity
Our duty stands out clear.

The King's command says, "Go,
The world evangelize,"
The heathen sunk in helpless woe
Should stir our sympathies.

Gather the harvest in
Which to the Lord belongs,
The lost sheep save from ways of sin,
And bring them home with songs.

Madras. (Rev.) R. J. WARD.

Diligent in Business—Serving the Lord.

THE unexpected death of Mr. J. E. Kirby has removed from the ranks of the London Free Churches one of their most useful and honoured workers. In the prime of life, and in the ripeness of his powers and experience, he has been called from service to reward. Few men of business have crowded so much Christian effort into an otherwise very busy life, or have exercised a loftier or wider influence for good on their fellow-men. He leaves a vacant place in a large circle of activities, of which he was ever a central figure, which will be hard to fill.

John E. Kirby was born in 1847 in the town of Buckingham, where his father, Joseph Kirby, was a draper, and a leading Nonconformist, being a deacon at the Congregational church. His mother, a cousin of Archbishop Tait, was a woman of independent character, great piety, and good education, who had been brought up a Churchwoman, but who after her marriage became a member of her husband's church. As a boy, John is remembered to have been of a very bright, cheerful, happy disposition, and a general favourite; and it is said that "he never fell into disgrace with his elders." He was educated in a private school in the town, entering business in his father's shop when only twelve years old. At fifteen he went to a shop at Aylesbury, where he made a public profession of faith in Christ, and joined the church, becoming a Sunday-school teacher soon afterwards.

Two or three years later, he removed to London, to a warehouse in Friday Street. Soon after, he went in casually one morning to hear the Hon. Baptist Noel at John Street Chapel, Bedford Row. At the entrance he was greeted by a genial stranger (Mr. Joseph Benson, now of the London County Council) and invited to join the young men's class. On a hint being given that he would prefer taking a class of his own, he was introduced to another stranger who became a life-long friend, Mr. James Halford, Superintendent of the Calthorpe Street School. He became a regular teacher, and afterwards leader of a large young men's class.

At an unusually early age he was made a deacon of John Street Baptist Chapel. Meanwhile, he settled down to family life, marrying Miss Cooper of Aylesbury in December, 1869. Here he remained about ten years, when he removed to Finsbury Park, joining Upper Holloway Baptist Church, under Rev. J. R. Wood (President of Baptist Union for the present year); here again he became a deacon, and leader of the young men's class. In 1885 he removed to Crouch End and joined Park Chapel (Congregational), once more taking the presidency of the young men's Bible-class. When, under the auspices of this and other neighbouring churches, Mount View Congregational Church, Stroud Green, was started in 1886, Mr. Kirby was prominent among those who initiated the new cause.

Here, as elsewhere, his great business capacity, his energy and perseverance, his foresight and cheery optimism, his gift of leadership, found their congenial sphere. His influence was equally great among the scholars in the Sunday-school and among the adults in the church, and it was always exercised with a view to drawing forth the best efforts of all in the common service.

Meanwhile Mr. Kirby was busy in many other ways. He was a member of the committee of the London Congregational Union, and of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, taking a leading part in the establishment of the Young People's Union; of the council of the Religious Tract Society, and of many trade and philanthropic societies. At the time of his death, he was chairman of the house committee of the Board of Management of the Warehousemen's, Clerks' and Drapers' Schools, and was chairman of the Colonial Young Men's Missionary Band, and of the Hornsey Free Church Council. While taking a keen and active share of the work of these institutions and committees, he found time for constant preaching. Indeed, this was the ruling passion of his life.

His fine presence, rich Christian experience, natural eloquence, and charm of manner, enabled him to preach the Gospel with unfailing power and acceptance. Consequently he was in perpetual demand in London churches and mission halls, and for nearly twenty-five years he preached once a month at Belle Isle Mission, Brewery Road. His first address was delivered in Clerkenwell Workhouse when twenty years of age, since which time he was seldom a full Sunday out of the pulpit. Latterly he was in great request at P.S.A. meetings all over London, and, as a life-long abstainer, he was an earnest temperance advocate. The astonishing energy and industry he thus showed in the religious world can only be truly measured when we remember that all this time he was climbing to the top of his business in the City, becoming during the last three years of his life a managing director of Woolley, Saunders, and Co., of Wood Street, E.C., directing the details of a large business with the thoroughness and wholeheartedness which he showed in all that he did.

THE LATE MR. JOHN E. KIRBY.

From Photograph by Mr. A. W. Lee, 118, Stroud Green Road, N.

In mind he was ever sensitive to great, fresh, living ideas, and eminently receptive to and retentive of religious truth. Broad in his instincts, yet he cut a straight path for himself in thought as well as action, and was troubled by no vacillating doubts, such as smaller minds often fall a prey to. It is doubtful if he ever passed through a period of great religious difficulty or strain; his balanced nature being well defended against one-sided views of things, and his mind being of an instinctively trustful and practical kind. His ruling characteristics were clearness of judgment, health and breadth of outlook on life, and a most contagious optimism, in the face of which difficulties melted away like icicles in the sun.

Great gifts call for great training for their adequate development. Mr. Kirby was trained in the rough school of city life from an early age. Though, like thousands of young men, he came up to the City at an impressionable age, he was never in danger of being led away by any of the coarse temptations of the streets. His character had already taken its bent, and was safe in the keeping of the Great Shepherd of Souls. He knew the "charmed life," of which he always thought the writer of the 91st Psalm (this was one of his favourite passages) wrote "in a parable." His constancy in early life was one of the sources of his spiritual influence afterwards. He could appeal to young men with the sympathy and the authority of one who had met and mastered the same temptations as they were passing through. His own character had grown out of a pure childhood, through a stainless youth, into the assured victory of a disciplined Christian manhood.

For it was his religion that gave the true stamp and quality to this noble life. He would have been the first to acknowledge that what strength and influence he possessed were not his, but the gift of God's grace. His religion was so thoroughly a part of himself that it needed no parade or ostentation. His lamp of faith shone brightly everywhere; of which there is abundant testimony from his colleagues that it was most influential for good in City circles. His instinctive sense of justice, his thought for others, his desire to make them comfortable and happy in their work, made him dear to his subordinates; and predisposed them to listen to him on all subjects (especially the most important of all) with a respect that was rooted in affection and admiration for his sterling qualities. One of these told the writer that never in the course of a business relationship of twenty-four years' standing, had he heard him utter an unjust or an angry word. At once gentle and strong, he was ever able to hold his own and to secure his will without making any show of authority. "A true friend" was the phrase which oftenest appeared in the countless letters of condolence.

At the funeral ceremony at Highgate, many hundreds of people—mainly City folk, or fellow-workers in the many channels of service with which he was associated—gathered round the open grave; and on every face was written the sadness of an irreparable loss. In all the broadening relations of life, he was ever the same true, loyal, upright, gentle Christian man. He was fortunate in his wife, who with self-sacrificing devotion encouraged him in all his good enterprises, giving up his company for the Lord's sake without a murmur, that others might be benefited. His children follow in his steps. His eldest son is Rev. Edward T. Kirby, A.T.S., of Southport; his youngest daughter was recently married to Rev. Herbert Heywood, of Hove, Brighton. A good man, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," he was instrumental in adding many to the Church.

Other Lands.

"Succourers of Many."

'MIND and see the Lees;" "Be sure and make acquaintance with the Lees," were injunctions repeatedly made by friends on our way to India's capital.

At Benares we met, coming from Calcutta, Mrs. Brewster, a warm supporter of Christian work, who was bent upon the same errand as ourselves, namely, visiting missions. She informed us that every apartment in the hotels was occupied by holiday trippers, who, during the fortnight following Christmas, thronged to the metropolis for its gaieties and excitements of race-courses. Having no room secured, we telegraphed to the Editor of the Indian Witness, who replied: "The Lees will meet and entertain you."

The names of Rev. H. D. and Mrs. Lee are well known among Christian workers and others in India and America. Their mention will fill many a mother's eyes with tears, as she gazes upon a darling child that may be wistfully looking into her face.

Both are arduous workers in the Lord's vineyard; but it is not their work, good as it is, that gave them for a time a sad celebrity.

A TERRIBLE AFFLICTION.

In the foothills of the Himalayas there is a beautiful spot, Darjeeling, a panorama of unequalled beauty, the mountain slopes studded with mansions, villas, and cottages. On a mountain side, where the thinly scattered houses end, there is some brushwood, fringing a tea plantation; nothing special to attract attention, nothing to show that three years ago there stood a cottage, and that it sheltered seven young lives from the blast of the monsoon and the fierceness of the sun. It stood there one day when the rain poured down in torrents; it stood there in the evening, but at the dawn of another day every vestige of it had disappeared. God in his mercy permitted the bereaved parents to lift for a moment the veil of mysterious darkness as to how the precious loved ones passed away. The knowledge of their triumphant translation threw a radiant gleam of comfort into their loneliness. Like Job they bowed down in submission: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Great was the amazement of friends, greater that of the Hindus, to whom death means curse and despair, as about a week later Mrs. Lee gave utterance to a Gospel message more intense than ever. There is truly no antidote to grief so powerful and efficacious as work—especially work for the Lord. With intensified yearning for souls, both Mr. and Mrs. Lee set themselves to pursue their task of rescuing the perishing from sin and the grave. With a narrowed family circle, the cycle of opportunity was widened, as, prompted by loving sympathy, doors were opened to the missionaries which, without the hallowing sorrow of their lives, would probably have remained closed.

The Bengali Mission is interdenominational, receiving funds for its support independently of the American Methodist Episcopal Board, in connection with which it works. Its efforts are for the salvation of the Bengali people. A Christian community has been the result—superintended by a native pastor, and nursed and taught like our own churches.

Mr. Lee devotes his time to city mission work, and to labouring among the Bengali students; while Mrs. Lee has a training school and a home for girls, in which over a hundred of the destitute class receive shelter, while about eighty others come from outside to attend day-school. All the teaching is given in Bengali. The girls retain their national costume, and are trained in a way suitable to their status in life, while instruction in house and needlework forms an important part of the training. The first and only object in opening the school was to lead to Christ those who would become workers among their own people. Several of the girls, mostly widows, have already become Bible-women and teachers, and are doing good work in the zenanas and among the young.

The Mission premises almost in the centre of the city are tight in space, making privacy or quiet almost impossible. An extension is contemplated, which will be carried into effect as soon as the needed funds have come in for the proposed building, which is to serve as a permanent home for the institution.

This suitable way of perpetuating the memory of the six children described as beautiful in physique and manners by everybody who knew them, and of Jessiedar, the native servant girl, was suggested by various friends and warmly taken up by the parents, who pledged to it the first Rs.1000 they would have spent on their children if they had lived. Others have sent contributions to the treasurer of the Building Committee, but as yet the sum of the required Rs.50000 is far from being realized.

In the outskirts of the metropolis there is a Boys' Orphanage, superintended by Mr. Wroten, which forms a part of the Bengal Mission. Mrs. Lee took me there one day, and pointing to an open space across the road, in a rather dilapidated condition, she said: "This is the spot where we hope in God's own time to see a Christian village." The boys—orphans saved from the famine, whom she trains as servants—are already saving for their future little homes. One of them has Rs.11 in the bank. They will have their own cottages, their own little plots for gardening and farming, their own school, workshops, &c. I seemed to see it all before me, as her faith painted it. Later in the day I could not refrain from saying, "Mrs Lee certainly makes a full and a consecrated use of her imagination." "Yes," replied the friend to whom my remark was addressed, "and the wonderful thing is that

HER DREAMS GENERALLY COME TRUE."

In 1898 a Society for the Protection of Children in India was formed in Calcutta, and we hear that, with others, Mrs. Lee, to some degree, was instrumental in bringing it about. Experience has given her an insight into Hindu customs, of which the child-marriage is the most cruel and the most appalling one. Unfortunately this custom is not confined to Hinduism only, but is imitated by some native Christian churches. Mrs. Lee speaks of a woman—member of a mission church—who was a mother of three children before the age of sixteen.

A school-girl of hers was married before the age of thirteen to a wicked, good-for-nothing young man. She could not bear his name to be mentioned, and whenever spoken to about the arrangement, she would spend hours in frantic grief, begging her father to allow her to remain in school. Notwithstanding that friends entreated for her, the child was tied to the man for life, and the wicked deed was sanctioned by Christian law and hallowed by Christian ceremony. That girl became a mother at the age of fourteen, and that by no consent of hers.

A CRYING EVIL.

These instances can be multiplied. To express our own opinion, we cannot do any better than quote what Mrs. Lee says in a paper of hers:—

"Some of our missionary friends, even, contend that, owing to existing evils, child-marriage must be resorted to; that the leading native church officials demand it for the good of the people. And yet those very same friends are one with us to build a native, self-supporting church in India. Pray, tell me, how can this ever be done, if young girls are compelled to marry at the age of thirteen, men who are not able to support them and their children. They have nothing to start with, and contract debt at the very beginning from which many never extricate themselves. I know men who earn five or six rupees per month, with no hope of ever earning more, who have a family of six or eight children. Expect such people to support the church! I believe it is criminal to compel a girl to marry under such circumstances.

"A girl at thirteen is physically, mentally, and morally unfit for the high and holy duties of wife and mother, and no combination of circumstances can make such a sin right in the sight of God. Often this excuse for early marriage is given both by native persons and others: 'We cannot keep our girls pure.' Of course, they think it does not matter so much whether the man be pure or not. Friends, I only know of one way for girls or boys of any country to be kept pure, and that is, to get them to Jesus, that they may obtain from Him a pure heart and a new nature. Such girls and boys will not need to be married in order to be kept pure.

"I find a thoroughly converted Bengali girl is as chaste and true and as trustworthy as a converted girl in any land. The religion of Jesus Christ has not lost its power, and is able to do for the people in India just what it has done for people of all ages and climes. So let us do all we can to put down the dreadful customs that bind the people, and never lower the standard of Christ to suit their miserable condition. Let us protect and save the children. Standing by the truth, though earth and hell oppose, the victory is ours; for—

"Truth—crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies among her worshippers."

American Notes.

THE Mount Hermon School for Young Men at Northfield, Mass., opened its winter session with more than 400 students; and the Northfield Seminary began work with about the same number of young women. The Bible Training School opened October 1, and besides the training for special work and instruction in the Bible, the students in the latter institution are admitted to the lectures at Mount Hermon.

Rev. C. W. Drees, superintendent of the mission work of the Methodist church in Porto Rico, is in this country, seeking to raise a fund of 60,000dols. for educational and mission work in that new dependency, and he has received considerable aid and encouragement for his project.

President Roosevelt's attention having been brought to the near approach of Rally Day for the Sunday-schools, when teachers and scholars start in again at their efforts after the summer vacations, he wrote a letter to Dr. Trumbull, the editor of the Sunday School Times, in which he said: "Every effort looking to improvement in methods for Bible study and instruction should, of course, be most earnestly supported. The Sunday-school workers are entitled to the hearty support of all well-wishers to the nation."

The Y.M.C.A. evening schools are now commencing their fall and winter terms; 340 branches last year enrolled 29,000 men, and expect to get 35,000 this year. Ages range from fourteen to sixty, and eighty per cent. of the men are employed during the day Many of these schools are splendidly equipped for special studies. The demonstrating apparatus in the club-room of the Electrical Club in Chicago is worth 3,000dols. In Omaha, Nebraska, almost the entire force of the Western Union Telegraph Company's messengers is enrolled either in the classes or the gymnasiums. Colorado, California, and Idaho have various classes in practical mining, and Brockton, Mass., conducts classes for men engaged in the shoe trade. Of fifty-five men lately appointed to the Post Office Department from New England alone, fifteen were Association-trained men.

A new religious organization has just been incorporated in N.Y. State, under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to be called the Church Militant Army. The purposes for which it is formed are to assist churches, missions, and societies, and to engage in general evangelistic work. On general lines it is to follow the pattern of Mr. Carlile's Church Army in England. The directors of the new American force are Dr. Page, rector of St. John's Church, Cornwall-on-Hudson; Joseph Broadhead, and Geo. H. Van Sielen. Dr. Page served with distinction in the Confederate Army under General Robert E. Lee.

Scriptures for India.

[In reference to Lord Radstock's scheme for supplying a special Queen Victoria Memorial edition of the Holy Scriptures (in whole or in part) to the Indian peoples, the following letter indicates the wide-spread desire felt by workers in that hopeful but difficult land. The price of the specially bound Bible is 5s.; New Testament, 1s.; Gospels, 2d. Remittances should be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.]

THE missionaries are patiently waiting to receive the copies they have asked for. Will your readers take an active interest in this glorious cause? A graduate of the Punjab University is now lecturing in this Presidency against Christianity. He is endeavouring to show that Jesus Christ is a mythical person, and is advancing the same old arguments put forward by the opposers of Christianity in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The only antidote to his mendacious teachings is the New Testament itself. The lectures are published in the vernacular papers, and have made a great stir everywhere. The evangelists and preachers are confronted at every corner with his line of arguments.

I fully believe that good will come out of this evil. Hitherto the orthodox Hindus were afraid to have any of their people read the Bible, for they knew that with it there was power to convert men. A Hindu graduate friend of mine was so struck with the teachings of the Bible that he read it at all hours. His wife, on inquiring about the book, learned that it was the religious book of the Christians. She became so alarmed that she told her husband if he did not cease reading that dangerous book she would commit suicide. Knowing the headstrong character of his ignorant wife, he yielded to her threat! But now, as a result of these false and misleading lectures on Christianity, the orthodox and ignorant non-Christians will not oppose the Book as vehemently as they did before. The Bible will now quietly enter into their homes and perform its saving work.

From my twenty years' experience I am fully convinced that the Bible is a two-edged sword. There is now a grand opportunity. As each copy of the Bible, New Testament, and the Gospels is stamped with the name of our late beloved Queen-Empress, her noble and excellent Christian character will influence the recipient to read the same. Will you, dear reader, help?

Obstacles Overcome at Aligarh.

SOME of the everyday difficulties of Indian missions are aptly illustrated in a recent communication from Mrs. J. C. Lawson, descriptive of her efforts to establish a bakery as a branch of the industrial work. She writes:—

The native baker thinks he has the monopoly in yeast, and keeps the mixture a profound secret, just as every other business in India is kept secret. With the help of our yeast cakes from America the yeast was a success the first day.

The baker looked discomfited. "How do you make your yeast, Mem Sahiba?" he inquired. "How do you make yours?" was her reply.

Later he felt that if he left the bakery would be closed, so next morning, instead of coming to his work, he was making house to house visitation, informing the people that the mission bakery had closed, and that he would furnish bread himself.

The help of a lady from a neighbouring orphanage was enlisted. She directed the Christian cook, and the batch was fine. The bread was delivered as usual much to the consternation of the baker. Since then the bakery has gone on finely, and the bread is better than ever. This same baker had an accomplice, who stole the mission-bread and substituted bad loaves, until a complaint was made and the trick discovered. Industrial work in India is a struggle; we missionaries have to learn to do everything.

"A Cry from India."—A correspondent forwards extracts from a letter received from a magistrate in India regarding the need for rescue work, particularly among English and Eurasian women, among whom there is an insufficiency of evangelistic effort. In large cities low European, Eurasian, and native women live in sin side by side. Certain streets in Calcutta are full of them, and in Allahabad, Lucknow, Agra, and Meerut the number of the fallen is increasing. The reproach of the English is largely a reproach to Christianity, and it is necessary, while pursuing the work of missioning the native heathen, that the women in question should be reached.

Missionary Farewells.

PUBLIC farewell was taken last week of the members of the Church Missionary Society's staff about to leave for their different fields of labour. Two crowded meetings were held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the platform being occupied on each occasion by the missionaries, who sat in groups according to their countries. On the former evening the countries represented were Egypt, Palestine, Persia, India, Mauritius, and Japan.

The president, Sir John Kennaway, addressed some words of encouragement and good cheer to the friends going forth, and bespoke on their behalf the loving sympathy of the audience and of those not able to be present who were thinking of them.

It was, he said, a very anxious work at the present time—anxious because the Society did not find the same number of offers being made for the mission field; anxious because the means that are necessary for maintaining and carrying on our work have not been given to the extent hoped for.

Failure of Recruits.

The missionaries were introduced to the meeting by Rev. B. Baring-Gould, who stated that the total number of missionaries going out was 180—124 returning after furlough, and fifty-six recruits. This was a falling-off as compared with the previous year, when the figures were 110 returning, and eighty-eight new missionaries, making a total of 198.

A warm welcome was accorded to Bishop Stuart, who was able to speak of a distinct advance all along the line of effort in Persia during his experience of eight years. The people no longer regard the missionaries as unclean and unfit for intercourse. They listen to the ministrations, and are grateful for help given to them, a result largely attained through the influence of the medical and lady missionaries.

With a record of service in India extending over thirty-one years, Rev. J. P. Ellwood made a very earnest appeal for new recruits for the work. He had asked himself why he was going back to India, and one reason was that his young friends did not come forward.

Representing Palestine, Rev. Dr. Sterling spoke chiefly of the great difficulty of missionary work among the Mohammedans. It had been said that it was not possible to convert a Mohammedan. The difficulty of their task was not to make converts, but to preserve them from the peril of the sword. One of the latest converts, who expressed to his friends a desire for baptism, had neither been seen nor heard of from that day.

Speaking of the revival in Japan, Rev. W. P. Buncombe contrasted the position of Christianity previously with what it is now. Then there were only 1,600 workers, and the number of converts led to baptism each year numbered one per worker. But since the Holy Spirit had been poured out upon them all the Christians became evangelists. Another result of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was that it settled the money question. In the past development was hindered for want of means; now there was no difficulty about means, money was always forthcoming from the people themselves.

The recruits were represented by Rev. P. B. Davies (United Provinces, India), Dr. Barton (Punjab), Rev. A. J. Toop (Egypt), and Mr. O. H. Knight (Japan).

On Thursday evening the Chairman (Sir Douglas Fox) showed that if the instructions given to missionaries could be taken to heart by all the supporters at home the difficulties of the situation would very quickly be solved.

The missionaries present — representing Africa, Ceylon, China, and British Columbia—were introduced by Rev. F. Baylis.

The Curse of Meroz.

A deep impression was made by an address from Bishop Tucker (of Uganda), who had made arrangements to leave for his diocese within a week. He opened with a word of hearty and loving farewell on behalf of himself and of his beloved and faithful fellow-workers, who had already preceded him to their field of labour. The bishop passed at once, however, to the expression of the solemn thoughts awakened by the fact that the present reinforcement of the staff of the Uganda Mission consists of only two men. Here we have one of the greatest opportunities ever offered to the Church of Christ for the waging of that conflict which is, indeed, we believe, to be crowned with victory. The Katikiro of Uganda pleaded not long ago before the committee of the Society for two hundred new missionaries: these were not being sent, but simply two men. As he thought of the fact, and of the attitude of indifference of which it seemed to be a token and evidence, he was irresistibly reminded of the curse pronounced on the people of Meroz (Judges v.) at a moment of national crisis.

What! The people of God refuse to come to his help; is it possible? It was only too true. The statement was twice repeated, so that there might be no mistake about the circumstances. A tremendous battle had been fought, and every particle of help was sorely needed; but a certain village stood aloof. Hidden away safely among the hills, the inhabitants saw the army going forth to the war, as we are witnessing now. They saw the battle sway hither and thither, as we are hearing about it. An opportunity was offered to them, the most glorious that they could have desired—exactly what is offered to us. By one bold effort they might have decided the event of the day; but they were content to look coldly on.

The cause was, however, something more than the cause of the nation. It was the cause of God. The parable needs no interpreter. The mighty conflict is being waged. The mighty foe confronts us, a mightier foe than Jabin and all his hosts. Satan and all his hosts are set in battle array against us. There hangs in the balance not the welfare of the nation only, but the glory of the eternal God in the salvation of immortal souls. To the cry, "to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty!" there responds the little band that we see. Oh, as one thinks of the lukewarmness of which it seems to be a token, is it any wonder that one hears ringing in his ears that old-time warning, "Curse ye, Meroz, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not? I would fain prophecy smooth things, but I cannot and dare not; I must speak right things and straight things."

The Causes at Work.

Why is it that men shrink from the mission field? One reason among the men of Meroz was cowardice; a contemptible reason, doubtless, but one that we must regard as possible. Moral cowardice plays an important part in the battle of the Lord. Young men are shrinking from all kinds of work that entail moral responsibility. The heart is not, it cannot be, right with God. He knew how hard it was to give up all for Christ's sake; but he also knew that the needed strength was given.

The impulse to work for God at home and abroad can come from Christ alone. May He so inspire with His might and power those who are lukewarm and indifferent that they may cry out, not "I must do something;" but "How much can I do?" Not that you must go forth, but "the love of Christ constraineth me."

Speaking under a deep sense of the solemnity of the preceding address, Bishop Tugwell (Western Equatorial Africa) expressed his strong belief that the numbers of missionaries would soon be increased. He called on his hearers to look forward to the future with hope and expectation; believing that God will, in answer to prayer, pour out upon the Church a great blessing, which shall result in the thrusting forth of many men and women.

Recalling the meeting at which he was dismissed to China forty-two years ago, Archdeacon Moule testified to the joy he felt at going forth once more to the work from which he had been laid aside for seven years. A vivid picture of the results of the spread of the Gospel in Western China was given by Rev. D. A. Callum. The recruits were represented by Rev. J. Hind (Dublin University Fuh-kien Mission), Dr. A. E. Druitt (Hausaland), and Mr. Frank Wilson (Sierra Leone). The parting message to the missionaries was spoken by Rev. H. L. C. V. de Candole.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Itinerary.

IN Christiania, as far as I can gather, the clergy of the Lutheran Church are much more liberal and willing to welcome truth from without their ranks than is common in that communion. This is to be attributed to a great movement in the early part of the last century, led by a peasant named Hauge, who drew his inspiration straight from Scripture, and strove to awaken the Church from its deadness. He was the Wesley of his age in this land.

Hauge was persecuted with great severity, and spent eight of the best years of his life in prison, but he perpetually said to his followers, "Do not leave the Church; let us remain in the Church until we see a great revival of religion." Towards the close of his life his prayers were answered, and he saw the harvest of his tears and sufferings. The clergy were converted in large numbers, and the Church in Norway has never lost the impulse of this holy man and the movement which he led.

From many of the Lutheran clergy I received great kindness, especially from Dean Hall and his brother, whom I met years ago at Cardiff. I preached in one of the finest churches in the city, and occupied the University pulpit on Sunday morning. The latter occasion especially gave me a wonderful opportunity of pleading the claims of Christ before the leading theologians and citizens.

WOMEN'S WORK.

The Scandinavian Y.W.C.A.'s were holding a united conference in Christiania, delegates being present from Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Finland, and I was privileged to address them on four separate occasions, which again gave a great opportunity of reaching some of the noblest women workers in these lands. I also went as their guest to some magnificently wooded heights, which overlook the beautiful city, with its surrounding hills and its noble fiord. Two hundred dined there together, and I was glad to find that the Scandinavian nature was not quite so stolid (Scotch, dour) as I thought; but was quite ready to light up with Christian gladness. I recommended the delegates to keep round faces for the glory of God, a remark in which the daily papers seems to have found considerable surprise and pleasure. But why should our religious life not sparkle, as the fiord did, while it lay beneath us in the glory of that September afternoon? I augur great things for this women's work, led by some of the noblest ladies in the land, as remarkable for their grace as for refinement and culture.

We may not speak of rank in Norway, for all titles have been abolished by Act of Parliament, and every man is, so far as title is concerned, as good as his neighbour.

I had several Bible-readings and two remarkable meetings of students at the University, under the direction of Professor Michelet. But perhaps the most memorable was a gathering of 2,000 young men and women in one of the largest buildings in the city.

Another interesting episode was a private meeting with the leaders of the Free Church movement, at the house of Dr. Hübert, the son of the friend with whom the labours of the beloved Dr. Baedeker have been associated.

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.

The Christian circles in Christiania are full of good works. There is a miniature Mildmay Institution for the training of deaconesses for hospital and church work. In spite of the commercial depression, large sums are raised for missions in China, India, and Madagascar. Considerable interest is felt for the widows and orphans of Armenia, and agencies are on foot for the relief of suffering, and the prevention, so far as possible, of the destruction of young girls. Devoted friends of Mrs. Butler are here, who have achieved reforms that must have gladdened her heart.

There is the breath of spring in this land. The singing of birds is in the air. The crowding eagerness to hear the Gospel is in itself a blessed sign. But everywhere, and more than I can tell, I trace the influence of Great Britain. Our religious movements, especially Keswick, have exerted, and are exerting, a gracious influence here. The Christian comes, with its story of God's work, into many homes. Perpetually the lesson is forced home on me, which I have learnt repeatedly in the East—India and Syria; in the West—the United States, what a vast responsibility rests on the believers of my native land to lead aright the spiritual progress of the world.

I am leaving for Sweden, conducting missions in two large towns on my way to Stockholm.

Mission to Drift-Children.

AN important and fully-attended conference took place a few days ago at the headquarters of the Ragged-School Union (John Street, Bedford Row), on the best methods for reaching children outside all religious influences.

Mr. T. S. Downing Wallace, a member of the Council, presided, and Mr. W. E. Bowie, chairman of the Drift Section, made an interesting statement. Referring to the outlook, he said they had a great body of workers, and hoped for a good start for the coming winter. It was resolved in August, 1901, to begin efforts for those who were outside the Sunday-schools. Many workers at the schools already had their hands full, but others undertook to do special "drift" work. Difficulties had been overcome, and now they had a scheme. On Sundays some friends went out and gave cards of invitation to Gospel services. Then they weeded out those children who go elsewhere, and so got at the poorest. The meetings had an average attendance of 100, and the children were delighted. So far they had held 238 meetings; many of the children had been taken for a day into the country, some being supplied with clothes.

In reply to Mr. Peregrine Platt (Field Lane Institutions), Mr. John Kirk said that it was well to assure themselves that there was much land to be possessed. It was a large question; Sunday-schools were not increasing; the children were escaping them. Moody aimed at getting all in, and they must not be too critical, but must gather all in, so that all might have the Gospel preached to them. Many who had been won to the schools were first brought in by means of the magic-lantern.

Mr. Dyer (Chelsea) spoke of a number of very rough lads who had been gathered into a special class. In addition to attending the latter, many of the lads were now to be seen at Gospel open-air meetings, and a few were very earnest about the salvation of their souls. Mr. Kingsbury (Peckham) spoke of lads who were uncontrollable, and would not go to Sunday-school. Seventy or eighty boys had been gathered, and their meeting was made attractive. Such as those would go to boys' meetings, but were too big for Sunday-school. A teacher from Harrow Green spoke of himself as a recruiting sergeant to get the children into the school. Many were converted. The work needs one to have a big heart of love for the children. Mr. Walker (Leytonstone) said that not only did ragged children stay away from the Sunday-schools, but also many who were well dressed. He referred to the gambling which prevailed on Wanstead Flats. Mr. Collinson, speaking on behalf of the Hoxton Costers' Mission, said that the results at that station had been very blessed, and the work showed immense possibilities. It appeared that all were in happy accord with the Sunday School Union.

Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.—Captain Frank Young (R.A.) will be glad to receive the names of any cadets joining the Royal Military Academy for the first time, from parents and friends who wish them to become connected with the cadet s Bible-class. This Bible-class, founded by the late Rev. W. M. Thompson, Presbyterian chaplain about the year 1860, has been held regularly, since that date, on Thursday evenings, being addressed by officers and others in the cadets, and has proved to be the source of much blessing to those who have passed through the Academy in years gone by. Captain Young asks the opportunity to personally invite cadets to attend the class.

"One-by-One."

A STREAM of praise-notes continues to flow from members of the "One-by-One" Band, whose hearts have been gladdened by the definite answers to prayer which have been given. Many are becoming convinced that no method of work is more successful in winning souls, or so truly satisfying to the worker, as that of reaching them one by one.

A SAVED BIBLE CLASS.

Rev. R. Middleton, St. Michael's, Norwich, writes:—"One of my workers has a Bible-class on the 'One-by-One' method. All the women in the class—about a hundred—are converted to God. As soon as any new member joins, the teacher finds out if she is a child of God. If not, the whole class is set to pray for her conversion at once, and special times are set apart by the chief members of the class to plead for her soul. No unconverted soul for years has been able to stay long in this class without yielding to God. Scores of souls have been won for Christ in this way, and I think it illustrates your method in a very practical manner. Most of the members of her class also belong to the 'One-by-One' Band in connection with our parish. The Lord strengthen and bless you very greatly and constantly."

A MUSIC TEACHER'S TESTIMONY.

Another encouraging communication is that from a music-teacher in Southsea: "I praise God for giving me such blessed opportunities of speaking to my pupils of a Saviour's love, and pointing them to Jesus. One dear girl listened very attentively, as from time to time I told her the 'old, old story,' and pleaded with her to give her heart to the Saviour. About five months ago she came to Jesus and found in Him a resting-place. Every time I see her she is brighter, filled with His joy and gladness. She began to pray at once for the souls of others, and joined the 'One-by-One' Band. The Lord has laid upon her the burden of souls. The tide of blessing has widened, and one of the eight girls she prayed into the Kingdom has been used in winning three others, all of whom now belong to the 'One-by-One' Band."

AFTER TWO YEARS OF PRAYER.

The leader of a Glasgow Bible-Class gives an instance of ten souls being saved after two years of prayer:—"Although I have been a member of the Band for two or three years, I have not been able to report much result. However, I am glad to say that prayer has been answered at last. Constantly have I prayed for the members of my Bible-class of lads, and this summer ten of them have decided for Christ, and are giving evidence of the reality of their faith. I have every reason to believe that many more will follow their example."

Numerous other testimonies of a similarly cheering nature from members at home and abroad are given in the October issue of One by One. (1d. Morgan & Scott.) Mr. Thomas Hogben, the founder of the movement, is hoping to visit different centres during the coming winter, for the purpose of conducting prayer missions, and forming local bands to extend the work. Communications may be addressed to him at the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

The Protection of Young Girls.—For sixty-seven years the promoters of the Princess Louise Home have vindicated the purpose of the institution by saving young girls, whether orphans or otherwise, who are, from any circumstances, in danger of becoming abandoned. To protect them during the most critical period of their lives, to fit them for domestic service, and to procure situations, are not easy tasks; but the results of the work go to show that a large measure of success has been realized. During the early part of the current year over £300 was expended on necessary repairs, and considerable loss was sustained through the inevitable closing of the laundry for a time. The institution is almost self-supporting, but in order that no really urgent case shall be refused the Committee of Management are seeking to stimulate a wider interest in the Home. It is situated at Kingston Hill, Surrey, the London offices being 32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W

Famine in India.

THE encouraging news of copious rains in many districts will bring a sense of relief to Christians in the homeland who have prayerfully followed the course of events in our great Eastern dependency.

At the same time it must be remembered that much remains to be done. Grain is needed for seed-corn, feeble and sickly people have to be sustained and tended, and in many cases the poor peasantry must be fed while the crops are growing.

DROUGHT AND FLOOD.

Rev. Albert Norton (Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, Poona) writes, under date Sept. 19:—"On August 29 we took over a Government jungle of twenty-eight acres. I was then satisfied that, no matter how favourable the weather might be in the weeks to come, there would be people starving in the eastern part of our district during the coming months, and this jungle is to afford them work in felling trees and cutting them into firewood. Floods have come in many places of late, and I hear it estimated that the Sholapur district, east of us, and the Ahmednagar district, to the north, will probably get a half to a three-quarter crop. In this section we have not had much rain. As a result, the rainy season crop here has been a total failure, and the prospect for a cold season crop is bad, unless heavy rain falls soon."

FOR FAMINE SUFFERERS.

Rev. J. C. Lawson, of the M. E. Mission, Aligarh, N.W.P. expresses his grateful thanks to the many friends in the United Kingdom who have so generously aided him in his efforts on behalf of famine sufferers. Many hundreds of stricken men, women, and children have been temporarily rescued from the pangs of hunger; but the problem which has to be faced is, how to give the permanent aid which is so greatly needed. The solution is being found in the development of Industrial Missions. Mr. Lawson is making important efforts to continue and add to the present industries, whereby sufferers may obtain regular employment, and so secure immunity from famine. Shelter, food, and clothing are also being provided for the old or feeble as funds permit.

THE DISTRESSED BHEELS.

"A month ago the maize crop was beginning to wither up," writes Mr. G. W. Blair (Irish Presbyterian Bheel Mission, Jhalod, Panch Mahals), "but now the stalks are full grown, and laden with the precious grain, which will soon be ready for the sickle. The people are still in poverty and wretchedness, and, therefore, still require help in many ways; the money sent from your readers will help to provide seed and clothing. The people will also require seed-corn."

CHEERING NEWS FROM GUJERAT.

On the other hand, we are rejoiced to receive from Dr. G. P. Taylor, of Ahmedabad, Gujerat, the following cheering news. It is in happy contrast with the almost empty river-beds, the barked trees, which had been stripped for forage, stretching out their skeleton branches, and the general dreariness of the outlook, as we travelled through the district for many hours, during our visit to India last year.

Dr. Taylor says:—"When last I wrote you, this part of the country was on the very verge of famine, and more than one case had been reported of persons who, preferring a speedy death to a prolonged struggle against starvation, had administered a fatal dose of opium to themselves and all the members of their families. But through the mercy of our God how changed the face of the country now appears.

"The rains that had held off for many weeks at last descended in abundant showers, and it is impossible to express adequately the sense of relief felt throughout the country. The ground, a month ago so hard and barren, is to-day bright with grass, green as that of the Emerald Isle, and the crops are rising apace, giving promise of a bountiful harvest. You will be interested to hear that, at the instance of two members of the Presbytery, the moderator had issued a request that at the Sunday services held throughout the bounds of the Presbytery prayer should be offered for rain. During the week beginning with this day of prayer copious rain fell, and thus on the following Sunday thanksgivings for prayer answered arose from many congregations.

"Before the kind gift of your readers came I had advanced small sums of money to farmers for seed-grain, and more might even yet be well spent in this way. Any balance remaining over, I purpose devoting, with your permission, to the support of the famine orphans. In our Irish Presbyterian Mission we have in all some 1,600 children, nearly all of whom came under our charge in famine times."

Work Among Children.

AT the annual gatherings in connection with the Children's Scripture Union and Children's Special Service Mission, held in the King's Hall, Holborn, on Tuesday of last week, representatives of those who had conducted the past season's work at the seaside gave interesting accounts of their labours—labours of love, as they all most readily confess—and experiences among the children with whom they have been privileged to meet.

The meetings are held both indoors and in the open air, advantage being taken of the seashore whenever the weather is favourable. The proceedings are suited as nearly as possible to the needs and capabilities of the audience gathered there, and other meetings are held specially for boys and girls and for grownups respectively. The missionary spirit is a prominent feature of the gatherings, and it is an interesting fact that not a few of those who as children attended the services have subsequently gone out as missionaries to the foreign field. The physical needs of the young people, moreover, are duly provided for in the form of cricket and other games and sports; and, altogether, the time spent is one of benefit and blessing.

At the afternoon meeting, over which Rev. E. A. Stuart presided, Mr. F. B. Bishop (hon. sec.) referred to the pressing need of Christian effort among the young in connection with both departments of work. He made a special request for increased financial aid. Sir Matthew Dodsworth presided in the evening, when again there was a crowded attendance of representatives from all parts of the country. Among the speakers were Rev. A. E. Dodderidge, Messrs. H. Hutchinson (organizing sec.), M. G. Archibald, G. Goodman, H. D. Salmon, P. H. Shaul, W. H. Stanes, C. F. Fothergill, A. E. W. Gwyn, H. H. Coryton, and E. Hughes.

Missionary Association.

IN almost every field there is felt by Missionaries a strong desire for greater spiritual power in their efforts to evangelize the heathen. Those who are most spiritual among the Missionaries feel this need most. The Committee of the recently formed Missionary Association, whose headquarters are at Donington House, Norfolk Street, Strand, have had it laid upon their hearts to do something to emphasize this felt need, and in a measure to meet it. With this end in view they have arranged a Missionary Spiritual Conference, which is to be held at the Police Institute, Adelphi Terrace, Adam Street, Strand, on Wednesday and Thursday, October 15 and 16. There will be two meetings each day, at four and seven p.m.

The general subject of the Conference may be summed up in the words "Be filled with the Spirit." The sub-sections to be dealt with on Wednesday will be "Spiritual Union" and "Spiritual Liberty;" while on Thursday the points will be "Spiritual Walk" and "Spiritual Fruit." At these meetings the following friends and others have agreed to take part, namely: Lord Kinnaird, Mr. A. A. Head, Rev. F. Paynter, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Rev. H. Wright Hay, Rev. W. P. Buncombe, and Rev. W. Fuller Gooch.

The Committee cordially invite all missionaries who may be in London, and all friends of missionary effort. They hope that many of the officers of Missionary Societies will find it convenient to attend, and they earnestly solicit a special interest in the prayers of God's people on behalf of this Conference, that the outcome may be a great spiritual reviving to all who are actively engaged in promoting the Evangelization of the World.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ALLOA.

THE Alloa campaign of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry proceeded amid enthusiasm. On the Monday and Tuesday large gatherings were held in the Town Hall, when Dr. Henry spoke upon various phases of the Temperance question, and adduced statistics to prove his arguments in favour of temperance reform. The concluding meeting was held in the same building on the Wednesday. Rev. J. D. Robertson, who presided over a large audience, said that during the missions they had received a vast amount of knowledge and enlightenment regarding the Temperance question. The net result had been the securing of 432 pledges and the decision of the Temperance parties of Alloa to take action for the furtherance of the cause.

Dr. Henry subsequently gave a striking address, concluding with a stirring appeal to his hearers to pursue the ideals that he had endeavoured to set before them.

DOLLAR.

As part of his campaign in Alloa and the neighbourhood, Dr. Henry addressed a large and influeutial meeting in the Institution Hall, Dollar, on the evening of Friday, October 3, under the auspices of the local Temperance Union, which took advantage of Dr. Henry's visit to the district to organize the first rally of its members and friends. Upwards of 400 persons were present, and completely filled the area of the large hall of the Institution.

Mr. J. D. Millar, who presided, spoke earnest and sympathetic words of introduction, and Dr. Henry addressed the meeting with eloquence and spiritual power, arguing most convincingly that it is the Church's duty to grapple with and master the drink curse; and showing that that duty will never be discharged so long as the Church generally does not conscientiously face the question, and convince itself that the drink habit and traffic are in opposition to the character of God.

An opportunity to sign the temperance pledge was given, with an encouraging result.

PERTH.

On Saturday last Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones commenced a fortnight's mission in the City Hall, Perth, with a children's meeting and a conference for Christian workers. "On Sabbath evening," writes a correspondent, "the great hall was crowded, and over 200 new pledges were secured."

Home Mission Week.

"WE ARE ORPHANS."

THE pitiful complaint of Zion, "We are orphans and fatherless," which found utterance in the "Lamentations of Jeremiah" is a plea which echoes through every court and alley of our Metropolis, rising with pathetic urgency from young and tender hearts mourning the loss of parents. Happily the day has long since gone by for the cry to be heard and remain unheeded, and among the Christian societies which have responded is the London Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission in the establishment of an orphanage at Clacton-on-Sea. It occupies a small estate on the Old Road, and is formed on the cottage principle. Each of the eleven homes accommodates a family of twenty, and is under the care of a foster-mother. Family life and home training form a special feature, every child being considered a member of the family and not an inmate of an institution. The high road divides the property, six houses on one side being arranged as a crescent, while the other five form a terrace opposite.

A FLOWER VILLAGE.

Presenting myself as a visitor to the orphanage on Friday last, I was at once impressed with the beauty and attractiveness of the buildings. They are double-fronted detached houses of a pretty design, substantially built, and in themselves present a pleasing appearance, which is greatly enhanced by the carefully-tended and well-stocked flower gardens. It was no surprise to learn that the orphanage is known as "Flower Village." Each of the houses is named after some simple flower, such as Snowdrop, Buttercup, Daisy, Violet, Bluebell, &c.

THE ORPHANS AND THEIR HOMES.

A hearty welcome is given to friends by the superintendent, Mr. James Groom (brother of the secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission). The visitor is piloted through each building, and everything is shown and explained, even to the cosy sitting-room of the "mother," where she may sit in the evening, surrounded by her elder girls. Then into the kitchen, where cleanliness and order reign.

In this department there is much to be done, and here the little cooks learn method, economy, and perfection. The large dining-room is next shown, with its strong tables just being laden with the steaming dinner for the hungry children home from school. On the appearance of "uncle," as Mr. Groom is called, and in the eagerness of the little ones to greet him, hunger is for the moment forgotten, and their welcome is another proof of the affectionate tie which binds superintendent to his charge. Proceeding to the dormitories, we come to light, well-ventilated rooms, fitted with every modern appliance necessary to ensure the comfort and safety of the children.

A GLIMPSE OF BABY LAND.

Babies' Villa is an interesting though pathetic study, for each tiny inmate has a story more or less sad. One is the child of a woman left a widow for the second time, who is scarcely able to maintain herself. Another, when a few days old, lost its mother, who had been left a widow two months before the little one was born. The welcome given to "uncle" is again a royal one. As each mite toddles and elbows her way to him who has taken the place of earthly parent, one feels that the purpose of the orphanage is indeed being achieved, in bringing into the lives of these little ones that happiness and love which would otherwise remain unknown. The workroom is next visited, and here the seamstress and her pupils are busily engaged. For so large a family there is much making, mending, and altering to be done, and all the elder girls take their turn in these duties.

There are now 200 girls in the Homes, many of whom are fatherless, motherless, or friendless. They are received from infancy without reference to creed, parish, or age, the only passport being a real need. They all go to the Board or National School until they are fourteen, when they become mother's-helps. At sixteen they are ready for entering domestic service, and on going to their first situation are provided with a good outfit, and one of the London deaconesses undertakes to see that the child is happy in its place and treated kindly. A parental interest is always taken in their future, and the orphanage is looked upon kindly. So great is the demand for the girls that on an average thirty applications are received for every one ready to enter a domestic situation.

STIMULATING HOME PIETY.

An outstanding feature of the Orphanage is the Christian influence that pervades each home. Under this influence the girls grow up to love and revere the things of God. In the days of their youth they are learning that life is meaningless and valueless without an illuminating and inspiring faith, and that the great Author of that faith is never more necessary than in their young and tender years. Thus they have set before them the way of salvation, and many have asked to be pointed to the uplifting life, and above all to the personal Saviour. So it is that the Christian Endeavour and similar gatherings are among the brightest seasons of the week.

Through a wise arrangement no uniform is used, and the past of the children if dark with evil is never referred to. One leaves the homes with a new consciousness of England's debt to the men to whose unwavering and persistent endeavour such institutions as the Clacton Orphanage are due. But both founder and superintendent would at once disclaim all praise for the work they have been enabled to accomplish, and would confess, "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God who giveth the increase."

YOUNG HOP-PICKERS.

I WISH I could take some of my young friends into a hop-yard to see the many children who come hop-picking with their mothers; only we must choose a fine day, when the sun is shining through the leafy bowers, or you might get into such a dreadful mess that you would think a hop-yard a very nasty place.

Perhaps it will be best for you to stay at home, and I will tell you about some of the children I have seen; and as this is my twentieth year of going among those who pick in Herefordshire and Worcester, I have seen many thousands of young pickers.

One day I saw a lot of them running after a boy, and at first I could not think what made him so attractive; then I saw he had his cap full of nuts, which he was handing out. It taught me that if I wanted children to follow me I must have something to give them that they liked.

Another day when we came in sight of a company of pickers, the youngsters shouted, "Hurray!" they were so glad to see us. It was their dinner-hour, so they gathered round, having nothing else to do, and sang,

There is a fountain filled with blood.

Then I gave them some nuts, or rather some words about Jesus, telling them of a little boy who was killed, and how, when his father saw his blood on his little bit of blue ribbon, it touched his heart, and led him to give up drink and trust in Jesus.

Another day I stood beside a gipsy girl who was picking, and as my companion told all the people, "God so loved the world," &c., I could hear her softly repeating to herself the beautiful words, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). I was so pleased to hear this from a poor gipsy.

"Does she know any texts?" we asked a mother, as her little girl prayed us to give her a booklet.

"No, sir, she was brought up a Roman Catholic," was the reply. And the answer revealed how Roman Catholics refuse to let their children know the Word of God.

I pitied her, and another little girl who stood in front of me, making strange noises, I could not understand her; so her parents told me she was deaf and dumb, through having the fever while hop-picking three years before. I showed her some pictures, and then told her mother and father that I feared they were deaf to God, quoting, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear" (Matt. xi. 15). This deafness is even worse than the deafness of the young hop-picker.

A young lady from a farm was looking at the nice papers we had given a poor woman. Thinking she might like one herself, I went back and offered her one of our best. "Give it to the hop-pickers," she said, proudly. Knowing her need of a Saviour, I pressed her to take it, which she reluctantly did, but said—

"I will give it to the girl in the house."

"But you have a soul as well as hop-pickers," we said. Alas, she was putting from her the Word of Life, as too many respectable people do.

"Don't give her any, she's a bad girl," so cried two or three lasses who were picking at a crib. I had others to serve before I came to them, so when I reached them I said—

"Which of you three is the bad one?"

"Oh, that's her," they said, "she uses bad words."

So I gave the two good girls (?) some tracts, and they thought the other would not get any. She seemed disappointed; but I remembered I had a New Testament in my pocket. So offered it to her.

"For me, sir?"

"Yes, and may God make it a blessing."

So the bad girl got the best book, and the last I saw of her she was walking across the hop-yard reading it. That was grace, and illustrated how God often deals with us. Pride and self-righteousness will not get anything, while the despised and sinful are blessed with God's greatest and best gift—salvation from sin.

Self-Mastery (1 Cor. ix. 19-27).

IT was the passion of the Apostle's life to gain men. The word so translated is that of the trader or merchant, eager for gain of wealth. To Paul, souls were jewels of inestimable value. Notice how often he uses that word in this paragraph. Gain more; gain Jews; gain them that are under law; gain them that are without law; gain the weak. By all means he desired to save some. In a strange city he will save a poor girl, possessed by an evil spirit; in the workshop he will win Aquila and Priscilla; at the bar he will almost persuade his judges to be Christians; when he sleeps he dreams of new worlds to conquer for his Master; when he is bound by chains he so speaks to the Roman soldiers who are thus united with him that there come to be many saints in Cæsar's household and the Prætorian Guard.

There never was a man more set on soul-winning than the Apostle. You could not have been with him for half an hour without his speaking to you about his Master. If he had driven, in our days, across London on an omnibus, he would have commenced to speak to the driver about his soul. And, as far as his conscience permitted, he was willing to make any sacrifice and concession, that he might touch men. He knew very well that there must be a point of contact between man and man before you can apprehend them for God. He was willing, therefore, to become all things to all men, that he might get hold of them. The ladder of his human sympathy was put down to where each man lay, that he might raise him up to God.

In order that he might be better qualified for this sacred work, he was very abstemious. In this he differed from the ascetic, who will subject himself to terrible tortures and self-denials that he may extirpate passion, so as to ingratiate himself with God. Paul, on the other hand, gave up many things which other men prize, and accepted much from which others shrink, with no thought of himself, but only to help others. He was running a race, of which the salvation of the lost was the prize. He was striving in the wrestling match, of which the rescue of the perishing was the guerdon. And just as the athlete will be temperate in all things, lest he miss the crown of his endeavour, so, but with more eagerness, and for greater reason, the Apostle laid aside all that would hinder his usefulness. Do you not think that he would have renounced tobacco, alcohol, and the theatre, if there was any risk of these things minimising his influence?

Among the things which he renounced, because he thought that he could do his life-work better without them, were luxurious feeding (4), marriage (5), and the maintenance which his disciples were quite willing to give him (18). In addition to these, he was very careful as to the indulgence of the claims of the body. He says, in effect, that there were times when he had a stand-up fight with his own body, when the imperious claims of appetite asserted themselves. He struck well-directed and heavy blows, each one of which told—"so fight I, not as one beating the air."

The result of the conflict was apparent in the bruises, which made the body "black and blue" (for so the Greek word may be literally rendered). In fact he says that his ardent spirit was not content until it had made the body its slave (26, 27). The reverse obtains, for the most part, among men; for, too often, the Spirit is enslaved by the passions of the flesh, and is obliged to obey their terrible demands, like a noble woman married and enslaved to a brutal tyrant. Here was a man, however, who for Christ's sake and the world's (and these two are identical) was prepared to restrain any insubordination, or inordinate gratification of appetite, lest his spiritual strength should to any extent deteriorate.

Before the Apostle's mind there was the perpetual dread of being a castaway. Of course, he had no fear of being cast into hell. Such a contingency was not thinkable (Rom. viii. 38, 39); but there was another alternative. What if God should cease to use him? What if he should be cast aside as an implement which has lost its edge, or a pen which has become too clogged with dry ink to answer the writer's will? Ah, that would be a fate which the Apostle would rather die than incur! He had proclaimed the rules of the contest to others; but what if he were to be prohibited entering for the prize? There is no greater dignity than to be God's fellow-worker on the souls of men. We must do nothing to forfeit it.

C.E. NOTES.

Barbican Congregational Society, Hoxton, at its first anniversary, reported an enrolment of over seventy.

An exceptionally encouraging report was presented at the eighth annual meeting of the Cleveland and South Durham Union, showing a net increase of twenty-two societies and 650 members, bringing up the total to 201 societies, and 7,786 members.

The Fall of Jericho (Josh vi. 8-20).

Golden Text (Heb. xi. 30).

"THIS month shall be to you the beginning of months"—Abib, "green leaf" or "ears of corn." On the tenth day (Ex. xii. 3) Israel, then fast in Egyptian bondage, by the command of God selected a lamb for the first Passover feast. Forty years afterwards, to the very day, their feet trod the soil of the Promised Land for the first time. The Passover was kept, and "the unleavened cakes and the parched corn" of the new land were eaten at Gilgal on "the self-same day." The manna ceased, but the fruits of Canaan took its place (v. 12).

The Siege of Jericho.

Israel's wandering days were done; their fighting days had now to begin. (1) Their first great battle had been fought in the power of prayer, with weapons (Ex. xvii. 8-16). This battle must be fought in the power of faith, but without weapons (Heb. xi. 30).

Inside the Walls.—The awe-striking news of the Red Sea and Jordan had spread up from the valley to the walled city, and Jericho was filled with terror, all courage gone, all hearts fainting (see Rahab's testimony, ii. 9-11, and the King's anxiety, ii. 2, 3, 7). All they could do was to shut their gates and wait the assault (foretold Ex. xv. 14, 15; xxiii. 27; Deut. ii. 25). The signs of the Lord's presence with Israel struck terror into the hearts of their enemies (ii. 11). Rahab was sheltered under the "scarlet line."

Outside the Walls.—From the human view Jericho was entirely beyond Israel's power. Swords and spears were not made to cut down stone walls. God had given them the city (2), but they must do their part: "Believe and obey." No excitement, but a steady, silent, monotonous march, each day alike. Means, order, organization, all divinely appointed. Patient obedience to orders under a good captain is better than unbridled zeal.

Israel had faith enough (a) to accept the Lord's plan, and work upon it, without asking a reason, or seeing any immediate results. (b) To do what may appear foolish in other people's eyes so long as it was the captain's orders. (c) To do the same thing over and over again patiently. (d) To resist the temptation "to give up" after the twelfth round (Gal. vi. 9; Matt. xxiv. 13). (e) To shout at their captain's signal even before the wall fell.

Lessons.

I. It is not the instrument, but the power behind the instrument, that does the work; one in the hand of the other. Only get the presence and power of Christ in your heart and life, and boy or girl, prince or peasant, may do great deeds for God in the world, against the strongholds of Satan and sin. Israel had received marked preparation (Deut. iv. 32-39; Psa. x. 17).

II. There is a day of terrible fear coming for all who refuse the Lord's reproof and counsel described in Prov. i. 23-33.

III. There are walls of self-will, ill-temper, disobedience, selfishness, obstinacy, Sin, round every heart. We cannot throw them down. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." "We are weak but He is strong."

IV. Jericho may have jeered at the tactics of Israel. We have need to shut our ears to the taunts of the world, and the sneers of the enemy; and listen only to God's promise of present help, and His commands. Nehemiah went on with his great work (Neh. vi. 3 and iv. 3, 4), and left the men who were making game of him for the Lord to deal with.

V. The "jubilee trumpets" (6, R.V.) were typical of the Gospel, and that is "the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. i. 16); "foolishness" to some (1 Cor. i. 18). You keep the Gospel trumpet sounding, and the shout of victory will be yours also in God's own time. "The trump of God" will sound one day (1 Thess. iv. 16), and "the Lord Himself will descend from heaven with a shout," then (2 Thess. i. 7-12).

VI. Some laugh at missionary work; read Jehovah's promise for our "Joshua." The ark the type of Jesus, went with them (Matt. xviii. 20 and xxviii. 18-20; Psa. ii. 8).

VII. "Less talk and more walk" (Eccles. iii. 7). Only jubilee trumpets are heard to witness for Jesus. Unkept lips often mar the Lord's work. "Let us each praise Thee, in silence or in speech, as Thou dost guide."

VIII. Jericho was taken by the same power we can wield if we will seek it. Faith opens the door for God to work (Mark x. 27 with ix. 23) The priests, not the soldiers, held the most important place in the procession. They bore the symbol of the Lord's presence, and sounded the trumpets.

IX. The Lord's followers make a sorry spectacle sometimes in the eyes of the world. Paul was content to be counted a fool for Christ's sake (1 Cor. iv. 10-14).

X. When we claim victory by bare faith in God's Word, then it becomes ours by actual experience. The monotonous duties in obscure places are the hardest, but better be a hidden hero, whom God will reward, than an open rebel, whom He will reject. Note Prov. xxv. 28 with xvi. 30.

TRUST WHERE YOU CANNOT TRACE.

WHEN, years ago, the safety lamp was introduced for the benefit of miners, a strong prejudice was exhibited against the invention throughout the country. That the protected light should ensure safety in the pit could not be understood by the miners, and even to-day many of the men would, if they dared, use naked lights, because the principle of the safety lamp is not always comprehended by them. God determined, in his own way, to deliver Jericho into the hands of Israel, lest they should boast that by their own sword and the might of their own arm they had gotten the victory. The Lord, through Joshua, commanded the people, saying, "Ye shall not shout nor make any noise with your voice until the day I bid you shout" (verse 10), and, to the credit of Israel be it said, they trusted the method of the Lord, though they did not comprehend its meaning. God, therefore, honoured their faith, and delivered Jericho into their hand. God still "moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform," and we have for our part but to "trust and obey."

WAITING THE LORD'S TIME.

Many of the soldiers who have returned from the war in South Africa state that some of the most nerve-trying times have been the periods of waiting, when the men, and especially those unused to constant fighting, have been on guard through the early hours of the morning. Dawn has been the favourite time of attack with the enemy, and the long watching for an uncertain and hidden foe has proved far more detrimental to certain of our troops than the actual hardships of fighting. The faith of the Israelites was severely tested in having to wait seven days before the walls of the city fell. It came to pass on the seventh day that they rose early and compassed the city after the same manner seven times (v. 15). God gave the victory to Israel for their implicit obedience in staying their own hands until the hand of the Lord was seen. "They also serve who only stand and wait."

A PROMISE-KEEPING GOD.

Though a new fountain has lately been opened at Jerusalem, there have been for years severe droughts in the city owing to the inadequate water supply. Long ago a notable engineer offered to arrange for a sufficiency of water to be brought from the Pool of Solomon, and a charitable English lady also made a similar proposal for the benefit of the Holy City. Every effort, however, was unsuccessful, because the Sultan, and the Turkish officials under him, would not keep faith with the well-disposed donors. Whenever the scheme seemed likely to succeed, the word of the Sultan was not kept, and Jerusalem suffered as a result. The Word of the Lord, on the other hand, is true, and when Joshua said to the people, The Lord hath given you the city (v. 16), the Israelites knew that Jehovah's promise was secure, and the city would be theirs. The Lord is not slack concerning His promise.

THE WINGS OF FAITH.

There is a bird, not unlike a pigeon, to be found in Samoa, and though it has perfectly-formed wings, until recently it had never used them. It was content to live on the ground, because there were no natural foes to be found in its island home. As Samoa became more civilized, cats, rats, and other enemies of bird-life appeared, and then it was that the pigeons, in self-defence, learned to make use of their wings. Not only so, but to-day they have also changed their mode of living, and build their nests in the trees in order to save their young from destruction. God permitted enemies to bar the way of the Israelites in order that they should use the powers they possessed, and as they obeyed the Word of the Lord, so did the walls of Jericho fall down flat, that the people went up into the city (v. 20). Obstacles in our path should strengthen our wings of faith; as we rely on our God-given power we shall rise to a nobler life.

About Books.

ON THE UPPER ZAMBESI.

THE story of François Coillard's pioneering among the Barotsi of the Upper Zambesi, constitutes a very important chapter in the progress of Christian civilization in Central Africa. From time to time we have outlined the career and work of the hononred missionary; some of his friends and helpers on the field have also become more or less familiar to readers of these pages. Taken as a whole, the operations of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions have been fruitful of much good in South Africa, and the lives of departed saints—Arbousset, Casalis, Mabille, Dyke, and others—go far to explain the moral transformation which has come over Basutoland during the past seventy years. If any evidence is demanded of the depth of the work of transformation, it is assuredly found in the fact that the mission to the Barotsi was the outcome of an expedition which was proposed and undertaken by the native Christians of Basutoland. Having received the Gospel themselves, these people, who but a few years previously were "sitting in darkness" as heathen, sent the same Good News to other benighted tribes in "the regions beyond."

The story of the expedition—what led to it, the incidents of the way, and ultimate settlement—is told in M. Coillard's remarkable book On the Threshold of Central Africa, a new and cheap edition of which has just been issued (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). Those who have of late heard or read much of Lewanika, King of the Barotsi, will here find an excellent account of his earlier life. Fifteen years have seen a marvellous change in the king and those about him. When, in 1886, M. Coillard's canoe was nearing Lealuyi, a messenger from Lewanika delivered orders that the stranger should "come to the village, and pray to one of the gods of the nation," bringing an offering of white calico with him! "Go and tell the king that we do not pray to the dead. I have come to teach him to pray to the only true God, the living God." This was the protevangelium for Barotsiland. The missionary was excused from praying at the tomb—"The king only asks a yard of white calico, and he will pray for you"! Needless to say, the gift was forthcoming, and the missionary did not rest until he had seen the heathen king.

M. Coillard's pages throw much light upon the tribes of South Central Africa. The style of his vivacious French is admirably preserved in the translation, which has been executed by his niece, Catherine Winkworth Mackintosh. There are forty-four illustrations from photographs, and, of course, portraits of the author and his lamented wife (née Christina Mackintosh). Among the most attractive pages of the book we place those that describe disaster and difficulty. There were perils by land and water, as well as perils of the heathen. In every circumstance of difficulty and disaster, there appeared a mighty faith in God; and the narration of these incidents is a contribution to the higher apologetics of our holy religion. The death of Madame Coillard, after a few days' illness, is related in a touching manner. "My beloved," she said, after looking long and fixedly at her husband, tears filling her eyes, "you will soon have no Christina . . . you will be alone, quite alone . . . But God is good, and His mercy endureth for ever." She had one day of great anguish. Her whole life passed before her. She wept as she poured out her heart—"I am wretched, O so wretched! an unprofitable servant; the least, the most unworthy of the Lord's servants! Oh for zeal, for zeal! Do be in earnest, do!" she exclaimed, uttering the last words in English, her mother tongue.

Here is missionary enthusiasm and human interest; the story of King Lewanika as he was, and the story of a great evangelist to the heathen, who will long be remembered for his bravery and devotion. These are pages which would irresistibly enchain the attention of many who get lost in mere tales of romance. This is emphatically a BOOK, and we trust it will be widely read. No missionary library can be worthy its name without this handsome, and instructive, and inspiring volume.

Messrs. Nelson's children's picture-books are bright and attractive as ever, including Ride-a-Cock Horse, Country Cousins, Red Indians, The House that Jack Built, What's o'clock? and Pick-a-Back (3d. each); Red Riding Hood, Beaks and Bills, Sunny Hours, Pets' Playtime, and Fur Coats (6d. each); Mother Hubbard's Cupboard (1s.); Sunday Afternoon (2s. 6d.).

True spiritual discrimination has been shown by Mr. J. C. Wright in the selection of the daily readings from Christian authors issued under the title Walking in the Light (1s. 6d. Nelson). The name of Dr. Phillips Brooks occurs oftener than any other, but the pages bristle with such names as Revs. F. B. Meyer, A. A. Bonar, Andrew Murray, John Hall, T. L. Cuyler, and J. R. Miller.

The recent visit to this country of Rev. Dr. Gunsaulus, from Chicago, has called attention to his books. One of these—Monk and Knight (3s. 6d. Nelson)—is a story of the Reformation period. Amid much interesting description of home and church life in England and on the Continent, Erasmus stands out vividly in his vacillation between conviction and policy.

In response to a desire expressed by many friends, a series of articles from the pen of Mrs. Macnee, which appeared in the columns of a contemporary, have been published in permanent form, under the title of Faith: A Living Power not a Dead Letter. The writer has endeavoured in these pages to set forth the vital relation of faith to the true Christian life. The stability of God's demands and other significant truths are enunciated in a devout and thoughtful spirit. (1s. Partridge.)

We cordially welcome any book that aims to facilitate Scripture study. Because of its matter as well as its object, we gladly commend The Books of the Bible: Their Contents and Characteristics, by Adeline Campbell. (3s. 6d. Marlborough.) The various books are treated separately, and some of the groups of books form the subject of special chapters. From first to last the pages are thoughtful, and many valuable suggestions are given in aid of thorough study of the Scriptures.

Mr. Ferrar Fenton has issued the second volume of his Bible in Modern English. (2s. 6d. net. Partridge.) It contains the books from Joshua to 2 Kings inclusive, and is uniform in workmanship and style with its predecessors. Not yet has Mr. Fenton learned to reserve judgment on points that are properly questioned; and the extent to which he runs ahead of knowledge in his assumptions, novel and otherwise, is very provoking. While some may criticize the "modern English," we confine our examination to the substance of the work. We are no more pleased with Volume II. than we were with Volume I. We see no traces of the restrained care of a responsible translator; hence we cannot class this work among reliable translations of the Sacred Scriptures.

Among the smaller annuals, a useful place is filled by "The Herald of Mercy and Revival," which for the present year is entitled The Trial Trip and Other Readings. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) The aim kept in view throughout has been the presentation of the Gospel in a fashion calculated to appeal to the hearts of the masses of the people, adults and children alike. The presence of such a book is equal to a regular supply of Gospel tracts, while the attractive appearance within and without will be a strong inducement to the examination of the contents. The type is large and clear, and well-chosen illustrations abound. Brief and pointed readings bear the names of well-known leaders in aggressive work; and pithy stories, anecdotes, and poems combine to constitute the volume a tool which the wise Christian worker will know well how to use with good effect, and which parents will find valuable in the family circle.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is revival spread.)

The Australian Revival.

MELBOURNE.

AT the final meeting of the Melbourne Central Committee of the Simultaneous Mission, Mr. J. C. Langley, one of the secretaries, presented an exhaustive and deeply interesting report of the progress and details of the Melbourne and Suburban Mission, from which it appeared that 8,593 persons had been registered as having passed through the inquiry-rooms.

The Southern Cross, from which we glean these particulars, adds :—"Each name has been sent on, officially, from the office of the Mission to the local minister of the denomination to which the convert belongs, or prefers. A very beautiful and artistic Mission memorial card is being forwarded to each inquirer through the minister of the Church for which preference was expressed, and these cards—framed, as they are well worthy of being, and as doubtless they will be in very many cases—will be handed down in many a family as the memorial of a gracious time."

SYDNEY.

The mission in the Town Hall, Sydney, conducted by Rev. Dr. TORREY, opened with many encouraging signs. Very large numbers have attended the meetings, the preaching has been earnest, pointed, and effective, and the singing of the Gospel has also been powerful. Many have professed their faith in Christ, and there is wide-spread interest manifested in the mission. The Australian Christian World says : "Dr. Torrey is a heart-searching preacher. It must be confessed that there are not many popular preachers who deal as faithfully with their audiences as does the doctor. The wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot mistake Dr. Torrey's meaning. The seat-hardened and heart-hardened churchgoer will hear much to make him uncomfortable. The indifferent can scarcely avoid being arrested by the faithful and even tragic presentation of Gospel fact."

LAUNCESTON, TASMANIA.

A friend in England lately received a letter from Launceston, from which we take the following :—

"By an arranged programme all the meetings had the same hymns, the same Scripture, and the same topics for prayer. Mr. Alexander, who conducted the singing, is a very attractive man, and controlled both choir and congregation with marvellous skill. Never was such singing heard in Launceston.

"The mission has made Christian service a new thing to me. I consented to work in the inquiry-room somewhat reluctantly—not because I was unwilling, but I felt my inability to deal with anxious souls. On the first two nights I remained in my place among the choir. On the Tuesday I had a hard time at the office. Most of the men in the shop had been at the mission, and they were simply raving about it.

"That night I determined, at whatever cost, to throw myself more fully into the work, and when the inquirers began to walk up the aisle I left my place on the platform and followed them into the inquiry-room. I confess it was a trial, for a number of my shopmates saw me, and I knew they would not forget it the next day. But as soon as I began the work, joy came into my heart, and that night a greater joy was mine in being permitted to lead one to Christ. I spoke to a certain young lady who seemed to be in great trouble. She wanted to be a Christian, but was hindered by her love for an ungodly young man. 'If I become a Christian,' she said, 'I can never speak to him again.' After some conversation she received Christ for herself, and began at once to seek to win her companion. We knelt together in prayer for him. Two nights afterwards she came to me with such a beaming face, and told me that the young man had decided for Christ that night.

"It has made a great change in our own church. About 100 members of our congregation have been saved. We have had one baptism service already, and eighteen more are to be baptized on Sunday. Never has anything stirred Launceston as this has done. Business people outside the churches have felt it. Pray for us that we may have wisdom to continue the work. The evangelists have gone, but their God is ours, and He will not fail to bless us."

QUEENSLAND.

Mr. HUGH PATON writes from Gladstone :—"God hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. Every place I have visited has been touched by a breath of real revival. Never did I see such continuous and unbroken blessing. I believe the secret is the much prayer being offered."

Metropolitan Theatre, W.

The services at the Metropolitan Theatre, W., conducted by Mr. CHARLES COOK, were reopened for the twenty-eighth year on Lord's Day last, when a crowded congregation assembled. The address was listened to with close attention, and the solo singing of Madame TETLEY and Mrs. BALL was effective.

The services in Hyde Park were closed on the previous Sunday, when a number of young men came out on the side of Christ in the after meeting; it was encouraging to see some who were blessed on that occasion busy last Sunday in inviting people in the street to the theatre. Mr. Cook's health is somewhat better, and he has been encouraged by the blessing recently seen on the services.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Felixstowe.

An esteemed correspondent writes :—"Praise God for the deep spiritual blessing received at Mrs. BAEYERTZ's recent mission at Felixstowe!

"Many of God's people are rejoicing in a clearer knowledge of God's purposes for His Church. A good many visitors prolonged their stay in order not to miss any of the deeply instructive expositions of God's Word, and testimonies have been received of many hearers being filled with new power and new joy.

"Mrs. Baeyertz's insistence upon absolute surrender, and her clear teaching on the work of the Holy Spirit, were most helpful; and she contended with much force and conviction for the fundamental truths of the faith. The evangelist has a remarkably close knowledge of the Word of God, and the deep personal experience of its power on heart and life was evidenced in her telling addresses. Many are grateful to THE CHRISTIAN for its notification of the mission. One hears of families led to come to Felixstowe to be present at the meetings, and who realized that they received Divine power to follow and serve their Lord with whole-heartedness."

Rev. John McNeill in Glasgow.

Many hundreds of men who live in the Bridgeton district, where Rev. J. MCNEILL's tent is pitched, travel daily in special workmen's trains to Kilbowie, where Singer's great manufacturing works are. It is computed that at least 2,000 men from the east-end are engaged in the sewing-machine industry in Singer's, and by way of reaching these men Mr. McNeill has gone to Kilbowie on different days to preach the Gospel to them at the meal hours. As Kilbowie is at least seven or eight miles distant from Bridgeton, it will be seen that, in pursuit of his object, he has been adopting the practice of the fishermen who follow the fish to the fishing banks.

That he is reaching in his tent campaign numbers who have had little acquaintance with meeting-going is evident to anyone who has had long experience of Gospel work; and it is an unspeakable pleasure to see such a large and varied assortment of artizan life present at the tent meetings night by night. Many of them bear the face marks of a close acquaintance with the "pub.," and, apart from every other consideration, the fact of their being within the radius of the canvas walls for one hour at night is something to be thankful for.

But something more is being achieved than merely gathering a crowd, for God's Gospel is forcing its way into the hearts of many of those who are crowding into the tent. Salvation work by the grace of God is being accomplished, and many will have reason in days to come to thank God for John McNeill's present mission, for as the new life which is being entered into grows in volume and in power, its growth will furnish reasons for multiplied thanksgiving and increasing praise. J. C.

Gipsy Smith at St. James' Hall, W.

Centrally situated, and having with its new and magnificent decorations one of the most beautiful interiors of metropolitan buildings, St. James' Hall has many advantages for the holding of an evangelistic mission. Throughout last week it was thronged nightly to hear GIPSY SMITH, who was conducting services in connection with the West London Mission.

A typical gathering was that of Friday evening last. With the exception of a few platform seats the building was filled by a huge audience, which extended to the back of the topmost gallery, and evidently consisted, for the greater part, of business young men and women from the great houses of the fashionable West. Here and there was a sturdy old-fashioned Methodist, fervent in prayer; here and there a foreigner from adjacent Soho, drawn by curiosity, and occasionally expressing cynical comment or avowing inability to understand "these mad English." Mingled, too, with the well-dressed assembly, were not a few of the labouring class in working attire.

The evangelist's message, however, was well suited to all and sundry, being a clear, practical setting forth of the story of the young ruler (Matt. xix. 16-22), with especial reference to the words, "the young man . . . went away." The musical part of the service, too, was remarkably effective. Mr. W. H. JUDE of Liverpool, and Gipsy Smith gave "When the trumpet of the Lord shall sound" with power. At the conclusion of the address there were many responses to the appeal for immediate decision. From all parts of the hall men and women pressed their way to the inquiry-room, and there was rejoicing over sinners seeking the Saviour.

On Lord's Day last there were again very large attendances, the number unable to gain admission running into many hundreds. The services were attended by manifest tokens of blessing, and some scores of seeking souls were pointed to the Lord Jesus Christ.

In a tent mission held near Convoy, Co. Donegal, there have been hopeful evidences of the Holy Spirit's blessing in the leading of sinners to Christ and the refreshment of believers. WM. MCCLINTOCK.

Mr. BOB JOHNSON's eight days' mission at Blackpool closed on Lord's Day evening last, when some 2,000 people attended the services. The original songs of our brother were heartily taken up. The "Life Story" appealed effectively to hearers. L. J.

Mrs. and Miss FUTTY, of Scarborough, are conducting an evangelistic mission in Drumgore, in the North of Ireland. Although associated with the church life of this county for many years, the writer has never before witnessed such manifest power of the Holy Spirit. Large crowds gather night after night long before the hour of service. Miss Futty has missioned in the north for over a year as an evangelist of the Irish Christian Workers' Union, and she has been greatly used of God. THOS. J. T.

Requests for Prayer.

For a parochial mission to be conducted by Rev. W. Bryan Brown at St. Mary's Church, Callington, Cornwall, Oct. 11-21, and South Hill, Oct. 22-28.

For a mission to be held in St. Thomas Church, Edinburgh, Nov. 15-24, that many may be converted to Christ.

For blessing on two Gospel missions in connection with the Navvy Mission to be conducted in Cardiff by Pastor John M. McAuliffe, commencing Oct. 12.

For evangelistic services during October at Westbourne Presbyterian Church, Belfast, conducted by Mr. William Thompson, jun.

For a distressing case of a young mother addicted to the use of an opiate.

For a ten days' mission at St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, to be conducted by Rev. W. H. Stone.

Personalia.

Mr. Charles Inglis was to sail for the United States on October 7; he expects to be absent from England for nearly three months.

Mr. Charles Hill, of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, has been greatly benefited in health by rest and change of scene, rendered necessary by his forty-three years of service as secretary.

We learn, with deep regret, that Mr. John Kensit has met with a severe relapse. On Monday evening it was stated that double pneumonia had set in, and orders were given for the sufferer's depositions to be taken. On Tuesday morning Mrs. Kensit wired from the Liverpool Royal Infirmary, "Slightly improved; condition most grave."

Obituary.

MRS. A. J. THOBURN, M.D.

On September 16 the home-call came to Mrs. Anna J. Thoburn, M.D., the esteemed wife of Bishop Thoburn, at Portland, Oregon, U.S.A. The Indian Witness says:—"A cablegram from Bishop Thoburn contains the touching words, 'Beloved wife rests for ever.' For over four years Mrs. Thoburn had been a great invalid, but bore her illness with remarkable fortitude and hopefulness. Her death was expected almost at any time during the past two years. Few women were more greatly beloved in the large circle in which she moved. Her numberless friends who grieved over her bodily suffering and trials will greatly mourn now that she is no longer a dweller on earth. But all will rejoice at the blessed release which has come to her at last. She rests for ever with the Lord whom she loved and served so joyously and so faithfully. A great multitude in this land will weep with the bereaved husband and motherless children."

REV. CANON RAWLINSON.

Within a few weeks of his ninetieth year, Rev. Canon Rawlinson passed away at Canterbury on Monday last. A man of brilliant gifts, he shone chiefly as a historian. His painstaking investigations on some of the more obscure points of Old Testament history and of the ancient languages are well known. His Bampton Lectures (given in 1859) dealt with "The Historical Evidences of the Scripture Records," and another well-known work is "The Genuineness and Authenticity of the Pentateuch." He contributed very largely to our stores of knowledge on Persia, Babylon, Phœnicia, and other eastern lands, and also wrote for the "Speaker's Commentary" and Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible." Of late years he had been in feeble health.

REV. G. WOOD, BRISTOL.

By the death of Rev. George Wood, of Bristol, a veteran from the ranks of Congregational ministers has passed to his rest and reward at the ripe age of eighty-four. In his early years he was intended for the Law, for which his bent of mind peculiarly fitted him; but with his conversion came a longing to preach the Gospel, and he entered Highbury College, then under the presidency of Professor Godwin. Mr. Wood was called to the pastorate of Zion Chapel, Bedmidster, Bristol, in the year 1843, where he remained for forty-two years, a faithful preacher of the Gospel in all its fulness, and a kind pastor and friend. His ministry was blessed to the conversion of a large number of souls, most of whom on their profession of faith took up Christian work.

In 1885 Mr. Wood retired from the work he loved so well, thinking he might still be useful in preaching occasional sermons, which he did in various chapels in the neighbourhood. Always warmly welcomed, his kindness and simplicity of character endeared him to all who knew him. About eighteen months ago he was laid aside, and was never able to take part in public work again; he was devotedly nursed by his wife, who passed away last October, and since then friends and relatives have cared for him. He was most patient in his long illness, and always had a warm place in his thoughts for his former congregation. E. F. E.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. the Hon. W. Talbot Rice, the new vicar of Swansea, has started a monthly service for men only in the parish church. The first service was attended by over 700 men.

It is stated that the Worcester Diocesan Million Shilling Fund has now been practically closed. A sum of £14,399 8s. 4d has been handed over to eighteen appointed trustees, with the Bishop of the diocese, the Archdeacons of Coventry, Worcester, and Birmingham, and the Dean of Worcester as ex-officio members.

The Bishop of Liverpool, preaching recently at St. Andrew's, Southport, referred to the lack of men coming forward as candidates for the ministry, and pointed out that at the present time in the diocese of Liverpool alone there are at least twenty clergymen who are crying out for curates, but cannot get any applicants for the positions; and consequently the sick, the dying, and the poor in these parishes are left without proper ministration.

On Lord's Day last the Parish Church of St. John-at-Hackney, E., was reopened, after thorough renovation and the installation of electric light. The total cost of the repairs and alterations amounts to £1,823, towards which £1,450 has been raised. The rector (Rev. the Hon. A. G. Lawley) preached at the reopening service, and in the evening the pulpit was occupied by Prebendary Shelford, Rural Dean of Hackney.

Westminster Abbey, after having been closed for nearly six months, was re-opened on Wednesday week for worship. At nine o'clock the boys of Westminster School assembled in the choir for early morning service. At ten o'clock the Abbey doors were thrown open to the public, and within half an hour every available seat had been occupied, and large numbers were unable to get admission. In fact, before half-past ten it was found necessary to close the doors. Morning prayer was conducted by Canon Duckworth.

Dwelling on the lack of candidates for foreign missionary work, The Record asks:—"Will it be denied that the last few years, while they have witnessed a great growth of superficial prosperity in religion in general and the cause of foreign missions in particular, have also seen a decline in depth of spiritual life? Are there more pulpits, or fewer, in which the guilt of sin, conversion, the Atonement of Jesus Christ, and the enabling power of the Holy Ghost are faithfully preached? Compared with former years, have parochial missions fallen off in frequency and in genuineness of resultant conversions? Does the parish prayer meeting languish in numbers and in favour? Is family prayer rarer than it used to be? Is it harder to find devoted helpers for spiritual work? Has the spirit of self-sacrifice died down? We fear that the majority of answers to these questions would be depressing indeed."

Congregational.

Rev. Ignatius Jones has commenced his ministry in Brislington Church, Bristol. This is the first of five buildings to be erected in Bristol by the Twentieth Century Fund and was opened in October, 1901. It accommodates at present 400 persons, but it is intended at some future time to enlarge it to seat 800.

Owing to a relapse, Rev. Dr. Parker was unable to preach at the City Temple on Lord's Day last. It was announced from the pulpit that the esteemed preacher was unwell, having caught a cold during the week. He is being strongly urged by his medical advisers to limit the amount of his work in future. Dr. Parker himself stated last Thursday that he was then so physically exhausted that it was with difficulty he managed to get through his work.

Baptist.

Putney Baptist Church (Rev. F. J. Feltham) has just raised £350 towards the extinction of the debt. A meeting for praise was held on October 1, in which Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Collins, of Harlington, and others, took part.

Rev. George Wainwright, formerly of Westcliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, has accepted the pastorate at Crewkerne, Somerset. Some time ago Mr. Wainwright, owing to ill-health, sought a pastorate in the colonies, but has returned to England fully restored.

Anniversary services were celebrated at Rochester church on Sunday, September 28, when sermons were preached by Rev. J. McAuslane (moderator of Kent and Sussex Baptist Association). On the following day a sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, followed by a public meeting, at which Commander E. A. Salwey, R.N., presided, and cheering reports were given. All the meetings were largely attended and of an inspiring character.

Beltinge, a rapidly growing place, on the coast, near to Herne Bay, has at present neither church, chapel, nor mission hall. Friends connected with Herne Bay Chapel have secured an ample site on the main Reculver Road, and have decided to erect a school-chapel, with vestries, &c. The foundation stones were laid on September 23 for this first place of worship in Beltinge, and at the close of the proceedings it was announced that a little over £400 had been contributed towards the £600 required.

On Sunday week there were rejoicings at Westbourne Park Chapel, W., it being the celebration of the church's semi-jubilee. Twenty-five years ago the cause was transferred from Praed Street to its present building. At a public meeting Dr. Clifford told the story of the formation of the church, which began in 1836 through the devotion of a humble laundress, Mrs. Alice Ludford. Such was her enthusiasm that she actually pawned her cloak in order to take a room for public worship.

A large and enthusiastic public meeting in support of the movement for the erection of a new church in Central Brighton, to supersede that in Queen Square, was held lately in Union Church, by the kind permission of Rev. R. J. Campbell. The chair was occupied by Mr. Compton Rickett, M.P. Rev. D. Llewellyn emphasized the need of such a church in the centre of a town that is so largely given up to pleasure, on the one hand, and sacerdotalism on the other. The scheme will involve an outlay of £12,000, over £6,000 of which is still required.

To meet the growing needs of Northampton a church was built in Adnett Road, which was opened by that veteran, the late Rev. J. T. Brown, on his eightieth birthday (January 19, 1899), when he preached what proved to be his last sermon. Under the pastoral care of Rev. R. T. Anderson, the church has grown to 120 members, and the Sunday-school has enrolled 563 scholars, of whom eighty-four have joined this year. To meet the pressing need of more accommodation a corrugated iron building to seat 150 is being erected at a cost of £120.

Methodist.

The congregations attending the great Central Hall of the Wesleyan Mission in Bermondsey, S.E., are so great that Rev. H. T. Meakin has for nearly a year ceased to advertise the services. Notwithstanding this, on the occasion of the harvest festival hundreds were unable to gain admission; Mr. Meakin conducted, and the service was made a blessing to many.

Rev. Thomas Cook gives an encouraging report of work achieved by the Wesleyan Mission cars. The car "Advance," manned by Captain Davis, has obtained some striking results, especially at village fairs. In one case the cheap jacks, quack doctors, and showmen waited in a sort of deputation on the captain, and begged him to have an interval, so that they might do some trading.

East Street Primitive Methodist Chapel, Walworth, S.E., is renewing its youth under the earnest labours of Mr. John Moseley, lay missionary. To save it going under the hammer, the General Missionary Committee took East Street Chapel under its wing, and affiliated it with the South-East London Mission some months ago. the committee undertaking to provide a grant exclusively for working it.

The work of erecting the new buildings in City Road, N., for the Leysian Mission has been in progress for over two months, and it is fully expected that within the next two years the committee will be in possession of the new premises. Including the grant from the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund and the gift of the Fernley trustees, the promoters of this great enterprise have over £42,000 in actual promises. The total cost will, however, amount to £100 000.

In Fair Isle, one of the Shetlands, difficult of approach, and cut off from the larger towns for many weeks at a time, the Wesleyan services are conducted by a few, chiefly by two, local preachers. These good men preach every Sunday, and keep the little flock together. When Rev. Joseph B. Alger came over from Lerwick to attend the recent Conference he interested a London minister in the work; and the result has been the replenishment of the preachers' libraries for the especial purpose of helping them in their Christian work.

The recent phenomenal growth of Devonport, resulting from the enormous extension of the Dockyard, has led to the creation of the district of Keyham, with a population of 10,000. Methodism, which is the only Nonconformist Church represented in the district, started with a cottage prayer meeting. A small iron chapel was afterwards secured, which served for a few years. To meet the spiritual need of the neighbourhood, the Gloucester Street Circuit is building a church to accommodate 1,000 hearers and a Sunday-school for 600 children. The cost will be £8,000. Toward this nearly £3,000 has been raised.

The progress of Methodism in the Nottingham and Derby district during the last decade has been remarkable. In the course of ten years twenty-nine new chapels have been erected, with additional seating accommodation for 12,350 persons, while the membership has increased by over 5,000. Leicester has been foremost in this extension work, eight new chapels and halls having been erected. The church which now centres at Wesley Hall was commenced in the new artizan district of North Evington in 1891. A steady growth in the membership has been experienced, and the annual report states that "the church has been in a state of constant revival.

The series of great missionary Conventions which are to be held during the coming winter in the various centres of the Methodist Church fittingly began in Oxford last week. The Convention opened on the Wednesday, when the president of the Conference took the chair, and delivered a most telling address. Rev. F. W. Macdonald also addressed the gathering. The special subjects were: "The True Evangelistic Spirit," by Mr. J. Vanner Earley, of Witney; "The Local Preacher and Foreign Missions," by Mr. E. E. Tenner, M.A., of Magdalen College. Rev. Professor W. H. Findlay, M.A., spoke upon Foreign Missions and Prayer, his beautiful subject being "A World-wide Heart"; whilst Rev. W. T. A. Barber, M.A., B.D., head master of the Leys School, Cambridge, took for his subject, "The Power of Sacrifice." The meetings were well attended, and the souls of all truly stirred.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Stalker has paid a long-promised visit to Nottingham, preaching at St. Andrew's Church for his friend, Rev. J. C. Grant. Large audiences listened with great pleasure and manifest appreciation to the sermons. On the Monday afternoon an audience, consisting largely of ministers of various communions and students, filled the church to hear Dr. Stalker lecture.

The re-opening services in St. James's Church, Bristol, have been continued. On the 21st ult. the service in the morning was conducted by Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry. In the evening Rev. Principal Henderson, of the Baptist College, occupied the pulpit. The church, which is one of the most beautiful of the Nonconformist churches in the city, has been further improved in comfort and appearance by the introduction of the electric light and a new heating and ventilating system.

Society of Friends.

Kent Quarterly Meeting, held lately at Canterbury, was more largely attended than for many years, while it was felt to be a time of much interest and profit. In the various gatherings William Edward Turner, travelling with a minute from his monthly meeting, took an appreciated part. In the quarterly meeting the proposal to hold a Friends' mission in a public hall in Canterbury claimed thoughtful attention.

At the Western Quarterly Meeting a conference took place on the use of meeting-houses on First-day evenings. The discussion was opened by George Ash, who illustrated his subject with a picture of Evesham evening meeting in 1890, and the present condition of Friends in that town and neighbourhood. "Then from four to six Friends gathered at the meeting-house on First-day evenings. Since then, largely as the outcome of deeper consecration of heart and life on the part of one Friend, the meeting-house has been enlarged once, two new meeting-houses have been built in neighbouring villages, there are 240 children in the schools, 130 to 140 men and about 100 women in the school at Evesham, and from eighty to 100 persons meeting at the First-day evening meeting at Evesham, and 160 to 200 at Littleton and Badsey. Many are the new lives which have been begun."

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

Government and Opium. The address given by the Bishop of London at Lambeth Palace last week, October 8, on the occasion of the departure to China of an agent of the Church Missionary Society, and also the statements made by Ven. Archdeacon Moule in an interview, should be widely circulated throughout these islands. Few stronger protests have been made against the action of the Government of this country, trading in opium and forcing the trade upon China, and no Christian man can read the indictment without a blush of shame. Unhappily it seems difficult to convince Parliament of the bitter injustice of the wretched trade; but no effort should be spared to keep the matter before the minds of individual members, and to create a healthy and powerful public opinion. (See page 14.)

The White Slave Traffic. It is a matter for much congratulation that the International Congress for suppressing the "White Slave" traffic has accomplished so much good work. It was a great advance this year that the British Consul attended the meetings at Frankfort as the representative of the British Government, and by the command of our Government. One thing it is imperative should at once be done, without waiting for "three years hence at Paris"—since the question is an international one, involving the most solemn and sacred issues, the police ought at once to be empowered, in all countries, to demand the most rigorous proofs of the alleged right of any man to control the actions of any foreign woman. If this were done—and it could be done at the Custom Houses and the ports—much of the evil would be nipped in the bud. Especially should the movements of well-known villains be watched. (See page 14.)

After the Congresses. Within the last few weeks, four of the largest Churches in the land have held their annual congresses. In order of time they are the Wesleyan, the Congregational, the Episcopal, and the Baptist. Now that they are all over, the resolutions all passed, and the business completed, what is to be the nett result to the religious life of the country? That is a most unworthy and unfair judgment which only perceives in these colossal gatherings the occasion for social intercourse and much talk. In three out of the four congresses there has been an unmistakable dominant note of yearning for a revived religious life in the churches. That is to say, the foremost men in all the churches are convinced that a religious revival is the prime necessity for the present time. It would be an unspeakable boon if this note could be struck in every congregation next Sunday, and be emphasized in prayer, song, and exhortation. Political and social strife, however necessary, tends to create an atmosphere which is fatal to higher interests. And in the present strife over the Education Bill, the churches need to take care to speak to God in prayer, as well as to the Government in protest. (See pages 12, 13.)

The Apology for Images. We have read, with mixed feelings, the remarkable apology of Mr. Athelstan Riley for the use of images in the Church of England. It is to be regretted that a man so manifestly sincere should have offered so passionate a plea for the soul's approach to God through images. We suppose, in doing this, he represents the English Church Union, of which he is a spokesman. It is beside the mark to quote the ritual of Tabernacle and Temple, and then say that to-day "God does not command contrary things." Of course He does not. But has Mr. Riley never read the word "abolished" in the New Testament—as applied to the Old Covenant? For the full grown man, the doll is "abolished"—but his manhood is not contrary to his childhood when the doll was permitted; it is the completion of it. To take us back to the world's nursery is, indeed, contrary to the manhood which God holds out to us. All argument aside, however, it is the simple fact that the use of images tends to have the very opposite effect of that which Mr. Riley thinks would take place. In the Greek Church, the use of images is complete, and where will one find worse morals and baser conceptions of the Saviour and all spiritual things? The multiplication of material forms is always injurious to the highest life. Where the soul comes into vital relationship with God, the supposed material media are only obstructive. (See page 12.)

"Your Moderation." The Gospel has its counsel for good behaviour. The Apostle's word regarding "moderation" is given to timely purpose in the R.V.—"Let your forbearance (marg., 'gentleness') be known unto all men." Not always, however, is the grace of patience, the peaceable disposition that is "easy to be entreated," very plainly in evidence in our public life. From time to time it has been noted that, even in meetings of Christian people, the rush and demonstrativeness of political gatherings are apparent; and lack of the "sweet reasonableness" of that love which "doth not behave itself unseemly" is flagrant.

Object Lessons. In last week's issue of a denominational paper, the proceedings of recent meetings, attended by a large number of ministers and Church officers, were described as "vulgar," inconsistent with deliberative purposes and claims—in fact, a "pitiful and humiliating" scene. At other meetings, held since, the presidents have felt themselves compelled to urge a dignified bearing and restraint upon speakers and hearers alike, but not always could they maintain order, notwithstanding. There is nothing very new in this condition of things. Church and Dissent share the disgrace; and to both the lessons of "moderation" should come with an urgent appeal. Why must we let our gentleness be known? Because the Lord is at hand! (Phil. iv. 5.) Yes, verily, the Lord looks on; the Lord is coming!

Beneficial Disease! A speech by Sir Frederick Treves last week at the opening of one of the medical schools gave a fresh light on the higher meanings of disease in the human system. It would appear that many of the so-called symptoms of disease must be considered as expressions of a natural effort towards cure. It is startling to be told that the symptoms of consumption, for instance, are expressions of a beneficent process, which have for their end the cure, and not the destruction of the patient. So with other distressing diseases such as appendicitis, peritonitis, &c. The physician has even to be guided by the symptoms as a suggestion of what treatment to follow. "Counter-irritants" are but medical processes imitative of the inflammations which are Nature's method of expelling poisons out of the system. However this may be, it may have a profound bearing on the spiritual significance of pain and suffering, trial and misfortune, as means of Divine discipline and purification for the soul. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth"—that we may regain health and vigour, purity and love. "Every branch that beareth fruit He pruneth, that it may bring forth much fruit."

"Fortiter, Fideliter, Feliciter." In the same address a high ideal was put before the medical profession in the pursuit of the healing art. The true physician must be strong; this will depend on the fulness of his knowledge of his adversary, and his self-restraint; he must be absolutely faithful, since he that professes to care for the sick undertakes a most solemn responsibility, which must be observed with jealous care; and he must be kind. All these principles had been nobly expressed 260 years ago in Sir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici, a book which, resting for the most part on unchangeable foundations, was beyond criticism. These are qualities equally applicable to those who have the "cure of souls" entrusted to them. Strong in faith and conviction, faithful in the performance of duty, full of sympathy and gentleness—such is the ideal minister, evangelist, missionary, in these things walking in the steps of the "Good Physician," who was strong with the strength of God, faithful unto death, "giving His life for the sheep," and full of gracious love to the needy.

The World-wide Heart. Professor Findlay coined a happy expression last week at the Oxford Missionary meeting. He pleaded for a "world-wide heart" as the real solution of the missionary problem in the churches. If this were universal in the Church, there is no doubt that the evangelization of the world would be enormously advanced. But it is precisely this all-inclusive heart which is lacking. The sympathies of too many are purely local or national—more local, we fear, even than national. And yet, is not this universal sympathy simply the essence of the second Table of the Decalogue? Our Lord has finally illustrated it for us in the parable of the Good Samaritan. The world does not even pretend to accept this view of the Saviour; if it did, we should soon see the rapid abatement of armaments. But in the Church it is very, very far from being common. This world-wide heart is the grand desideratum, for it is at once the solvent of many international difficulties, and the motive force for universal evangelization.

The Obligation of Personal Service. No truer or more needful word to Christian men and women has lately been uttered than that which was spoken a day or two ago by a wealthy layman to a large body of church members, i.e. :—

Gifts of money, much as they are and always will be needed, cannot absolve us from the obligation to offer to the Saviour our personal service—service of speech, service of endeavour, service of influence. The gift of personal service remains the chief gift.

That sentence is worthy of a golden setting' for it goes to the heart of all service. Many, we fear, among the wealthy Christian class do not believe it. Payment of pew rent, and more or less liberal contributions to charities, is regarded as a discharge of all liabilities. But a money offering is no true equivalent for the immeasurable power of personal influence and personal service. We cannot dispense with monetary gifts, but it is remarkable that our Lord said nothing about such things when He sent His disciples out to preach the Gospel. When a man is so fully consecrated to Christ that he gives himself for the holy service, the money gift is bound to follow; but the latter without the former is the gift of the inferior thing.

The Far Reach of Ungodliness. One of the things which made a profound impression upon the friends of the Baptist Missionary Society gathered at Birmingham last week was the reading, by Rev. H. J. Thomas, of Delhi, of an extract from a Moslem paper published in India, in which the drunkenness and vice of this country are detailed to India Moslems as "proofs" of the failure of the Gospel to evangelize this so-called Christian country. The educated Moslems of India faithfully report to their co-religionists the moral state of this country, and, as Mr. Thomas said, this constitutes one of the most terrible difficulties in the way of evangelizing native India. The Moslem does not accept so readily as we do the distinction between true and nominal Christians. What a frightful vista this kind of thing opens up! How true it is that a country, as well as an individual, cannot sin alone! The far reach of ungodliness is terrible to contemplate. Our vices not only damage our own national life; they prevent the highest good coming to far-off peoples. Would God our people understood this and trembled before it.

A Plea for the Drunkard. At the recent North Wales Poor Law conference, methods of saving the drunkard were considered, and prominence was given to an opinion that very great improvements and changes are urgently called for. Dr. Rhodes, of the Manchester Asylums Board, appealed for increased powers to enable local bodies to get at the drunkards before they become familiar with the gaols, and to remove from temptation those whose inability to resist is only too evident. At present, as Dr. Rhodes pointed out, many of these unhappy creatures, who, virtually, are martyrs to the State-fostered drink traffic, are permitted to drift to a drunkard's death in the workhouse or the streets. They require to be saved from themselves and from the law-protected publican, and that at an earlier stage of their career; but unhappily the local bodies have no legal power to step in and save them.

Prisoners and Captives. A prison missioner, writing in the current number of The Quiver, gives an interesting account of convict life at Dartmoor, which prison contains, on an average, about 1,000 male convicts, many of whom are undergoing life sentences. The summary of the chaplain's duties and engagements shows what a blessing the office can be made in the hands of a devoted servant of God. It is a grand field for labour, in which the earnest seeker after souls may well wish to work, and if it has its numerous disappointments and almost heartbreaking failures, it has its consolations also; for, as the missioner says:—

There is a more joyful side to it when men, tired and weary of sin, turn to the Sin-bearer, and bravely live a Christian life amidst their fellows in a convict prison.

Surely the labourers in this field, which "is yielding precious fruit for God," should have a place in our prayers.

Abodes of Peace. In the Nineteenth Century for October Miss Edith Sellers gives a graphic account of the Old Age Homes in Denmark and Russia, and certainly the comparison with the unions in these islands is a startling one. That those countries are far ahead of us as regards the treatment of the deserving poor, cannot be doubted; and as the system to which Miss Sellers calls attention is more economical than ours, there seems to be strong reason for it to be adopted here. The writer asserts that a visit to any of the abodes in England where the aged poor are housed is more depressing than to a prison; whereas in Denmark, Austria, and Russia the homes provided for the old people are "the brightest and cheeriest of resorts." They are open only to those who have led decent honest lives, and in these respects differ essentially from our institutions. The cost per head in Denmark is only 1s. per day, and in Russia 9¾d.; whereas, in Great Britain, the average is 1s. 11d.

The Shop Girl. We have more than once called attention to the conditions under which our female shop-assistants live. Compelled to dress well, and to assume cheerful manners, many of these girls in large establishments are easily passed by as being well cared for, while all the time they live in conditions that are the reverse of helpful to a true woman's life. If "living in" is compulsory in great establishments, it should also be made compulsory that the food supplied shall be such as will nourish the body; and ventilation and sanitary arrangements should also be satisfactory. Many of these girls are exposed to great temptations, and should be well protected.

Pernicious Literature. The evil effects of the morbid literature in which the children of the poor so often indulge, are growing so serious that the authorities are beginning to awake to the need of action. A conference has been arranged by the Poplar Borough Council on the question, at the instance of the headmasters of public schools. Delegates are to be sent to this conference with a view of considering what steps may be taken with a view to common action. This is a question which concerns parents even more nearly, and of all classes. Far too little interest is given to the reading of the young, and in view of the flood of objectionable publications which finds its way into the homes of the nation, parents, teachers, and others cannot be too vigilant, or too wise and careful, in advising those under their care.

A Law of Growth. Bishop Phillips-Brooks has said, in reference to the disposition to make a special and technical religious life, and to open the gates to go away "to where the eyes and ears shall see and learn nothing but their own sacred sights and sounds," that God will not allow that impulse to find perfect satisfaction:

He is always forcing the new religious life into contact with the old. The new man must still mix with the old men, and touch them closely in all the pressure of our ever-shifting life. The circumstances will not be entirely altered with the alteration of the spirit. With everything that is inherently wicked in the old occupations once and for ever cast away, the soul finds that it is to keep the rest and grow, not out of them, but in them, and enlarge them as it grows, making them fit for the new work they have to do in ministering to an ever-enlarging soul.

The Great Crisis.

WHAT WILL PROTESTANTS DO?

THE Education Question has become overwhelmingly important. Up to a few days ago, many Protestants felt quite free to support the Government Bill; but since then two things have happened that can hardly fail to startle and shock them. First, they have been shown, by no less an authority than Cardinal Vaughan himself, the real end and practical effect of the Bill; and since then, a vicar of the English Church has completed this statement by showing how this end is to be reached. The one reveals the goal, and the other the road to it. Together they unveil the vast peril to Protestantism that lurks in this Bill, and so make it our first duty to oppose it to the uttermost.

1. The Real End of the Bill.—"Catholic teaching for Catholic children in our Catholic schools." This, according to the Cardinal, is its real end; so, on the ground that it will really secure this, he pleads for the support of the Irish members.

But this statement applies equally well to the Anglo-Catholics. We may say, then, on the unanswerable authority of the Cardinal, that the Bill gives full scope to Roman and Anglo-Catholic teaching at public expense!

Nor is this all. In a vast number of cases the children thus drilled in Romish teaching, and poisoned by the Romish "atmosphere," will be the children of Protestants. Not only are we to be rated to pay for the R.C. teaching of R.C. children, but also for R.C. teaching to our own Protestant children.

2. The Road to this End.—In his remarkable letter to the Daily News (October 9), Mr. Donovan, vicar of Garton, Hull, lifts the veil in the following passage:—

"What really restrains a clergyman at present who wishes to teach extreme views in 'his' school, to set up crucifixes, madonnas, and 'sacred hearts,' to march the children to 'mass,' &c., is that he would probably lose many subscriptions, and some might even refuse to pay the voluntary rate. Under the new régime this salutary fear will not be felt—the grant and rates will pay for all."

Now, in face of this, what are we going to do? Hitherto, the Free Churches have faced the foe almost alone, except as other Protestants have helped individually. But this is now no specially Free Church question; it concerns all Protestants alike, as well as all true patriots. With a foe so wily and so deadly at our very gate, with our children almost in his power, can we allow any denominational or party interest whatever to hinder us from vigorous protest? If only the true Protestants within the Church of England will act as boldly and resolutely as the Free Churches, the Bill will be wrecked and an infinite peril averted.

The Power and the Faith of the Church of God.

By WILLIAM WOODS SMYTH.

IN these days of weakness and impotence, of empty verbosity and ritualistic masquerades in religion, it may surprise us, it must admonish us, and it ought to humble us, when we reflect that one of the most pronounced characteristics of the religion we confess is Power. Turn to the institutes of its inauguration, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." The word for "power," exousia, is here more omnipotent than dunamis, since it signifies "authority" over all power "Go ye therefore"—observe the full force of the expression. "Therefore" is a logical term, emphasizing and accentuating the foregoing declaration, that the supreme reason why these servants of God should now go to teach all mankind was because of this gift of all authority and power to the Son of man. To all this is added another wonderful thought, "Lo, I AM with you alway."

The day of Pentecost introduced to the world the religion of power which the Lord had inaugurated before His ascension. The history of subsequent events is a continuous manifestation of power, exhibited not only in swaying the minds of the people, overcoming their prejudices, filling Jerusalem with the doctrine of the Cross, but also in opening the doors of fast-bound Roman-guarded prisons; in the swift judgment of death upon two persons attempting to deceive the Apostles, and blindness upon a hinderer of the word of God; and no less evidently is power manifested in the moral triumph of Stephen in the hour of the martyr's death.

That this clearly marked character of the Christian religion was not to be a temporary and evanescent feature of the Church's first foundation is proved to us by the emphatic statement of Paul to the Corinthians—"I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power (dunamis). For the Kingdom of God is not in word, but in power."

Again, it was designed that the faith of the Church should be begotten and stand "in the Power of God." (See 1 Corinthians ii. 4, 5) And in the Epistle to the Romans, Paul describes his progress in the Gospel as "through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God"—"not by army, nor by power" (of that nature, Zechariah iv. 6), but by "the power of the Spirit of God."

We cannot, therefore, hesitate to conclude but that the Church of God was originally designed to advance in power to the utmost contemplated conquest of the world—power not only manifested in saving the souls of men and healing their bodies, but in strongly evinced judgment against those who take high-handed measures to mar or oppose the truth of the Gospel. However, this fair morning of power, with the Church seen as enthroned in heaven, arrayed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars, came to an end. After giving birth to the Martyrs, who, suffering with Christ, shall, therefore, reign with Him, and rule the nations with a rod of iron, the Church exchanged her high place of visible manifestation for the seclusion of the Wilderness, for a term to be fulfilled. This prophecy explains to us difficulties which perplex many in regard to the Church of Christ. When George Fox was asked in a law court as to what denomination he belonged, he replied, "I am of the remnant of the seed of the woman long since fled into the Wilderness." A perfect answer. Not in all the Bible is to be found, nor, indeed, is it possible to give, a better definition of the Christian than is here given in this Scripture — namely, those "which keep the commandments of God and hold the testimony of Jesus."

Yet, still, though of rare occurrence in the true history of Christianity, there have been instances of the power of God among "the remnant of the seed of the woman." As authentic, and near our own time, I may adduce the ministry of George Fox, who was manifestly raised up of God to turn men to the reality of the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. This, then almost-forgotten, but all-important part of our faith, was the great secret of that remarkable movement. The views of the early Friends, in highly spiritualizing the ordinances, were of far less importance, and might well have been left to the individual leading of each member, though it is a testimony of no small significance against the ritualistic exaltation of these ordinances. However, we have undoubted proof in the ministry of Fox of most impressive of mighty works of healing, of remarkable deliverances from prison, of his delivering certain men to death in the Name of the Lord, and of their dying according to his word.

Perhaps, not since the days of the Apostles have we any authentic history of another such minister of God walking and working in the power of God. But mark the significance. He was eminently an apostle of the Holy Ghost, and this fact, all important at this present time, when we are looking for a world-wide revival by the Spirit of God, impels me to refer to his ministry. We have, moreover, the distinct testimony of Barclay and Penn that it was for this all-important reason that God raised up the early Friends.

It is not necessary to advance any further proof that the religion of Jesus Christ was designed to be distinguished by the attributes of Power, and so we turn to inquire regarding the secret of the exercise of this power by the Church of God. Acts iii. 12, 16, is instructive. The manifestation of power in making the lame man walk is thus explained by the Apostle: "Not by our own power or godliness," Peter explains, "we have made him to walk," but "by faith in His name hath His name made this man strong." It is clear, therefore, that the power which the Apostles received at Pentecost, and which was renewed to them upon subsequent occasions, was the power of the Holy Ghost to enable them to avail themselves of the power of Jesus Christ, and that they availed themselves of this power by FAITH IN THE LORD.

The Glad Tidings.

(A Gospel Song.)

O TELL the glad news to a sin-stricken world,
The banner of Jesus must wide be unfurled!
He died on the Cross as the Saviour of men,
O tell the glad news—ring it forth once again!

To deal with its sorrows this world hath no charm.
Christ is the Physician with Gilead's balm;
His touch can yet heal e'en the vilest of men,
O tell the glad news—ring it forth once again!

Come, sing we the song of salvation from sin,
By the way of the Cross we may victory win;
Here perfect redemption is offered to men,
O tell the glad news—ring it forth once again!

There is hope for the sinner whose conscience is stirred,
There is mercy thro' Christ as we trust in His Word;
The fount is yet open for sin-stricken men;
O tell the glad news—ring it forth once again!

Prayer for Revival.

NOT here and there only, but wherever believers are banded together in faithful service, prayer for Revival is at present ascending to Heaven. Without distinction of sect or party, men and women are lifting up holy hands to God, beseeching Him to put forth His great power—to manifest Himself in saving might. We rejoice to know that so large a number of Christian people are calling upon the Lord daily to honour His Son and get glory to His Name, by quickening His Church, and bringing the thoughtless and indifferent, the godless and wicked, among the peoples of the earth, to acknowledge Him—to know that He is God, and beside Him there is no Saviour.

A RENEWED CALL.

It is interesting to note that such a call as has gone forth in recent times preceded the great work of missionary expansion with which the eighteenth century closed. In 1789 John Sutcliff, of Olney, issued a reprint of a stirring book which Jonathan Edwards gave to the Church some forty years previously. Once again this book is reissued; it bears the comprehensive title—AN HUMBLE ATTEMPT TO PROMOTE EXPLICIT AGREEMENT AND VISIBLE UNION OF GOD'S PEOPLE IN EXTRAORDINARY PRAYER, for the Revival of Religion and the Advancement of Christ's Kingdom on Earth. Copies of this historic treatise may be had from the Mission House, 19, Furnival St., E.C. (1s.)

AN AWAKENED CHURCH.

Dr. Andrew Murray has more than once emphasized the need for definite prayer for THE CHURCH OF CHRIST. If good is to come to the outside world, it will be because God has revived His own people. As an esteemed correspondent points out, on page 20, Christians must first be awakened; an awakened Church will be a channel of blessing to mankind at large. Surely it is just here that the question of Revival becomes fraught with its deepest solemnity. A sleeping Church is delinquent in the discharge of duty. "A city set on a hill" should be seen; a candle should give light. An indifferent, somnolent, dying Church is no instrument for God's service.

PREPARING FOR REVIVAL.

Are we ready for Revival? How shall we prepare? This question was answered over seventy years ago, with interesting detail, by the sainted John Angell James, who said:—

Let us court a Revival. Let our minds be drawn to the subject. Let it engage our thoughts, our feelings, our conversation. If we would experience it, we must intensely long for it; our desires must be wrought up to a very high pitch; and, in order to this, we must be sensible that we need it.

We must then take proper steps to obtain it. The first of these is a willingness to endure the sneers and discouraging influence, not only of the world, but of false brethren, of worldly-minded, lukewarm, fashionable professors. We must brace up our mind to endure the charge of enthusiasm, fanaticism, and affected sanctity. In most churches there are some who would think such awakenings unnecessary, and condemn all attempts to procure them as visionary. Seasons of humiliation and prayer, with fasting, should be set apart.

Ministers must begin the work in their own souls; and, from an experimental acquaintance with the subject, converse about it in all their private intercourse with their friends. Meetings should be appointed by them for the purpose of conversing with those who are under religious concern. Visits should be paid be them to the houses of their flocks, to inspect thy state of the souls committed to their care.

God give His people "a mind to work" in this holy cause! It is not for men to give "life from the dead"; but rather to pray the Lord and Giver of Life to move among the churches, reinvigorating the members, and adding to their number such as are being saved.

The Church Congress.

THE forty-second meeting of the Church Congress was held last week at Northampton. In consequence of the Bishop of Peterborough's illness, the Bishop of Leicester presided at all the chief meetings. The attendance of clergy and visitors was estimated at 1,600, a number considerably less than that of recent years. The Church of England is not strong in the "cordwainers' town," but a hearty welcome was given to the Congress by the Mayor and Corporation, the former, Mr. Adnitt, being a leading Nonconformist. The chief official meetings were held in the Corn Exchange, the Temperance Hall being put into requisition for the duplicate gatherings. They were all splendidly attended, both by delegates and townspeople, and were characterized on the whole by a high order of speaking and a cordial and united spirit. There was at times a sharp division of opinion freely expressed, and the audience was by no means always in agreement with the platform; but with the exception of one speech, in which Prebendary Webb-Peploe was grossly insulted by a representative of the sacerdotal party, who was forced to withdraw his words by an indignant meeting, there was no disturbance.

Among the sermons which preceded the opening of Congress, three were spoken of as specially significant—those of the Bishop of Rochester, Rev. A. V. Magee (a son of the late Archbishop of York), and the Bishop of Durham. The first was a plea to meet the self-indulgence and shallowness of the age by a "fresh rush and sweep of zealous, stooping love through the whole body of the Church"; the second, an eloquent blast on the sacerdotal trumpet against all compromise; and the third, a vindication of the power and place of the pulpit. Dr. Moule deplored the way in which nowadays the sermon was made to give way to everything—in some churches to the music, in others to the ceremonial—and appealed for a worthier place for the element of Bible truth.

Home Reunion.

The first subject for discussion at the regular meetings of Congress was "Home Reunion—the Basis to be Adopted, and the Practical Steps towards Reunion." The Bishop of Ripon read the first paper. He said there were three possible methods of reunion with Nonconformists—that of surrender on the one side or the other, that of confederation, and that of reorganization. These were all set aside as impracticable, and the Bishop's solution was that of co-operation between the Church and other bodies in Christian devotion and service. He deplored the spirit which said: "We may converse with you, we may dine with you, but we will not pray with you." He spoke hopefully on the whole, but there was nothing of a very practical character in his suggestions.

He was followed by Professor Collins, of King's College, who took a harder view of the case. He maintained that "truth" was even more essential than peace, and asserted that episcopal orders of ministry, as original to the early Church, were no longer a hypothesis, but a fact—a statement strongly demurred to by Canon Henson who read the next paper, and by many in the audience. Prof. Collins further claimed that it was no use giving up non-essentials on the one side, if that course only made fresh difficulties on the other. By this he meant that it was no use jeopardizing reunion with Romanists and Greek Churchmen, for the sake of Nonconformist reunion. It was clear which alternative the Professor favoured, and many in the audience were with him.

Canon Henson spoke with immense vigour and force on the other side, and demanded that Churchmen should acknowledge, as a preliminary to union, the validity of Dissenting Churches and of their ministry. This brought forth a storm of opposition, and shocked members shouted their hostility to an idea so sacrilegious! This he met by saying that to talk of reunion on any other basis was to "perpetuate an absurdity and to offer an insult." He was indeed convinced that the obstacle to "Home Reunion" did not lie in the general sentiment of English Churchmen, but in the rigid Episcopalianism which has dominated many of the Anglican clergy in recent years.

Lord Nelson, a veteran advocate in the cause of reunion, first safeguarded his attitude towards the principle of episcopacy, and then paid a high tribute to the work done by Nonconformists in stemming the tide of Erastianism in this country, and in securing to the nation the inestimable blessings of civil and religious liberty. He said that when the present acute crisis in the Education question had passed away, he would be a strong advocate for meetings with these religious bodies. "Unless we are all shams," he said, "it would be impossible for Christians to meet together with earnest prayer, without learning better what those have in common who are trying to serve the same Master." The discussion was continued by the Dean of Perth (Australia), who stated what had been done in the direction of reunion in the colonies, where they were in a more favourable position on this question, owing to their comparative freedom from historic animosities, and the fact that the Church was not Established.

The Bishop of Victoria (Hong Kong) gave a graphic picture of the way in which the problem had been practically solved in the China mission field, by the fraternization of Church missionaries with those of other bodies, in Bible translation, in the compilation of hymn books, in the delimitation of spheres of work, and in prayer. It will be one of the rewards which the Church will reap in the future for missionary zeal, that the churches at home will be brought into closer line. Others also spoke on both sides of this vexed question; but nothing further of importance was contributed to the discussion.

Public Worship.

Wednesday's conferences were on Public Worship in the Church of England—the Duty of Worship, the Ideal of Worship, and the Adequacy of the Prayer-Book Services—in the morning; and Christianity and Social Questions—Moral Teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, as applied to social obligations and economics, including the Public Relief and Housing of the Poor—in the afternoon.

Great interest was shown in the Public Worship debate, which was nothing more than a discussion of the burning question of Ritualism. The Dean of Norwich (Dr. Lefroy) led the discussion. He remarked on the freedom of Holy Scripture from specific directions for bodily attitudes in worship, being intended not to deliver rubrics, but to reveal principles. Public worship was more than individual adoration. Romanists and Dissenters were, he alleged, strangely united in denying to people their sacred place in public worship. To see was not to "assist." To listen was not to adore. He pleaded for a reverent performance of the acts of worship, both on the part of the ministrant and of the people.

Canon Glazebrook strongly advocated a more simply arranged form of worship for children who were not developed enough for the Prayer-Book service; and another for simpler and less educated folk, who were repelled by archaic forms, the aloofness from present-day needs, the anti-democratic atmosphere of the authorized services. "Father" Waggett spoke with earnest sympathy as to the best way of bringing in non-worshippers, whom he dared not stigmatize as necessarily absent through indifference and profanity. It was partly due to the fact that our forms of worship are not too rich and large, but too small, too thin. He asked for a more august ritual, which would appeal to men of all classes and tastes and affinities.

Mr. Athelstan Riley followed with what was in many senses the most significant deliverance of the Congress, being nothing less than an uncompromising defence of the use of images in worship. He concluded an elaborate and technical argument, to which a certain section of the audience took strong exception, by saying that there was only one antidote to irreligious materialism—"the opposition of matter to matter, the worship through matter and by matter of the Incarnate God."

This brought up Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who delivered a powerful onslaught upon Mr. Riley's position, and defended the essentially spiritual character of worship, as being nothing else than the expression of religion, and that religion was "the reunion of the soul with God." He greatly objected to children being pressed into the performance of rites and ceremonies redolent of mere materialism; he feared they were hurting children and not benefiting them by pressing on them services in which they could take no part.

The President summed up an interesting debate by emphasizing three points which had been dealt with—the importance of teaching school-children the meaning of the Prayer Book; the value of making the parish church free and open; and the great importance of holding men's Bible-classes in artizan parishes.

Striking Points.

WHAT THE GOSPELS CONVEY.

By Prebendary Wace.

The Christian's conviction is that the Gospels are adequate evidence, provided you take them as they should be taken, as a whole, in their total presentation of Christ, in the immense moral and spiritual impression which that total presentation produces. When they are criticised in a cool, rationalistic atmosphere, when men venture to question the accuracy of this saying or the correctness of that narrative, do they sufficiently reflect what a marvellous creation they are dealing with; and do they sufficiently consider whether it be not an act of dangerous presumption to judge, without deep reflection and deep spiritual experience, whether the features which perplex them could be other than they are, without marring the whole? Let Christians in general trust themselves without reserve to the simple impressions which the Gospels convey, and rest in the ancient belief of the Church that the Saviour whom they reveal is One who "healed all that were sick; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses."

HOME REUNION.

By Canon Hensley Henson.

If we are determined to insist on episcopal ordination as the perpetual and universal condition of a valid Christian ministry, I do not think we should waste our time in discussing "Home Reunion." Nothing can come of our discussions but disappointment, and, in the wake of disappointment, exasperation. I might illustrate my contention by a reference to recent experience. When, a few years ago, an earnest effort was made by some excellent Churchmen to discover a modus vivendi with the Roman Church, the primary question was found to be precisely this, whether the Pope would recognise the validity of Anglican ordinations; and when it was decisively declared that he would not, then the whole project of reunion fell to pieces, and relations with the Roman Church, instead of improving, became more strained than before.

A spirit is abroad among us which threatens the basis of social order. It is a spirit of lawlessness, a hunger at the hearts of men, a law of anarchy. It pervades our literature, degrades our politics, disturbs our streets, defiles our homes. The pressure of this new peril is driving Christians together in spite of themselves. Not alone are life and liberty menaced, but those higher things for which life is valuable, apart from which liberty is a curse; and therefore the basis on which Christians must draw together for defence can be none other than that ultimate basis of discipleship to Jesus Christ, the Source and Sustenance of the higher life. Slowly, indeed, and with many a relapse into those obstinate fanaticisms of history which die so hard, must we attain that ultimate goal of discipleship. But the end is not yet; and even here and now, the while we perforce acquiesce in delimitations of our fellowship which hurt our hearts, we cannot recede from our ideal of fraternity, or shrink our aspirations to the exigencies of time and place. The Church must live its life and fulfil its mission in the spirit of the Apostle's prayer: "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in uncorruptness."

Baptists at Birmingham.

CARR'S LANE Chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity on Wednesday afternoon, long before the time announced for the meeting on the Education Bill. The feeling of the vast audience was deep and intense. The occasion was historic. The death of Mr. Kensit, a Protestant martyr in a Protestant country, which had been announced that morning, gave additional value to a meeting which aimed to stem the tide of priestly aggression. When the speakers appeared on the platform, and Dr. Clifford was seen among them, the audience rose to their feet and cheered vigorously. The presence of so valiant a warrior in this cause, strengthened their determination, and made them more eager to act.

After prayer, led by Rev. J. W. Ewing, the PRESIDENT (Rev. J. R. WOOD) referred to the grave crisis they had reached, and urged that the proceedings should be dignified and worthy of the occasion. He could hardly have had a more difficult task than that of controlling that vast and excited audience.

To Resist Priestism.

Rev. CHARLES WILLIAMS, a veteran in the cause of education, moved the resolution. He did so, not with a light heart. If passed, it would pledge them to take a leading part in a struggle with great forces. The past encourages us. Our forefathers met their foes, and defeated them. If we are loyal as they, we shall withstand the attack made upon us. We have come to the parting of the ways. Let this Bill pass, and it will take twenty-five years to undo it. We must fight now, and fight to the bitter end. The issues are great and wide-reaching. Quit you like men! In refusing to pay the proposed rate, we are not disloyal. Was John Bunyan disloyal? Were our forefathers disloyal when they suffered distraint of goods rather than pay a rate which their consciences condemned? Of the issue we have no fear. Three-fourths of the laymen of the Church of England are with us. Members of Parliament are with us, for Mr. Balfour dare not let his followers vote in this matter according to their principles. Two-thirds of the parents are with us. The conscience of the nation is with us. We shall win!

Rev. W. E. BLOMFIELD, of Coventry, seconded the resolution in a perfect tornado of eloquence, which roused to a still higher pitch the enthusiasm of the assembly. The first clause was put to the vote and carried unanimously. On this point there was no disagreement.

Then Dr. GLOVER rose to move his amendment. None but a brave, true man would have done it before such an audience. He made clear at once that his condemnation of the Bill was as emphatic as that of the mover and seconder of the resolution. He differed from them only on the question of how such a Bill should be fought. He advanced several considerations against the policy of refusing to pay the rate, but in none of them did he carry the audience with him. After Rev. CHAS. JOSEPH had seconded the amendment, there were loud calls for Dr. CLIFFORD, who, on rising to speak, received a great ovation. He sought to make it clear that Dr. Glover's policy was impracticable, and quoted Mr. Talbot's statement that "the Bill will not be repealed in this generation, perhaps not in the next." The disease was a desperate one, and required desperate remedies. When the vote was taken, it was found that not more than about twenty supported the amendment; and the original resolution was carried with twenty-three dissentients. Some did not vote at all, but these were comparatively few. And so the vast number of ministers and delegates connected with Baptist churches are pledged to resist the payment of a rate in support of what their consciences condemn.

Other Public Questions.

At the great meeting in the Town Hall in the evening, three addresses were delivered, dealing with Sunday Observance, Drink, and Gambling. Rev. T. PHILLIPS dealt with the last topic, delivering a most powerful and convincing speech. The gambler seeks to gain by his brother's loss—to get money without working for it. In view of the stewardship of money, it is as wrong for the millionaire to bet as for the poor man.

On Thursday night another large and enthusiastic meeting, held in the Town Hall, was devoted to the exposition and enforcement of Free Church Principles. The Education Bill was again vigorously attacked. Rev. JOHN THOMAS, of Liverpool, dealing with the subject of "Spiritual Grace and Church Ordinances," moved the audience greatly. To limit the operation of grace to priestly channels, he described as "the most fantastic heresy ever conceived." Spiritual grace through ordinances was essentially dependent on the faculty of the receiver. There was not an inch of standing room for the priest, not the space of the point of a needle; he was a redundant number in the arithmetic of life; there was no legitimate business for a priest on this planet. The speaker referred to the growing aggression and dominance of the priest in the land, and to the Education Bill, by which the present Government seemed ready to sacrifice the people's liberties to the scheming priests. "Men of Birmingham," the speaker cried passionately, "will you linger in such a war as this? It was not your custom so to do. You will not fail us now! Remember your Dawson, Vince, and Dale. Rise to your glorious past. The battle is before us; and in the strength of God we mean to win it!"

Church Extension.

On Thursday morning the assembly settled down to the consideration of problems affecting the further extension of the work. Four papers were read, dealing successively with "The Mid-Town Church," "Suburban Work," "The Mission Dispensary," and "The Rural Baptist Church." As the president afterwards said, the papers were not only interesting and instructive, but gave the assembly food for reflection, and furnished subjects for earnest prayer. The men who, on Wednesday afternoon, were so resolute in their resistance of error, were on Thursday morning just as eager to know how to extend the cause of truth.

Missionary Meetings.

The great work of Foreign Missions was again represented on Thursday afternoon, when a valedictory meeting was held, to say farewell to a number of Zenana missionaries. And the last meeting of the week was a Young People's Missionary Meeting, on Friday night. It was an inspiring sight to see the great Town Hall thronged with young people from Sunday-schools, Bible Classes, and Endeavour Societies. The chairman, Mr. T. S. PENNY, of Taunton, gave a most appropriate and effective address on "Missionary Heroes." Rev. S. J. BOWSKILL delighted the young people by the story of his experiences on the Congo.

REV. J. G. GREENHOUGH'S SERMON, preached earlier in the week, was so valuable an utterance as to deserve special mention, even in this issue. His text was, "Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of the Lord Jesus." The long story of Christ's missions, he said, is epitomized in the text. In the Saviour's kingdom every advance has been made with bleeding feet, every step of progress has been marked by a gibbet, a scaffold, or a stake. Every line of march has left behind it nameless graves, and before every victory and resurrection there has been the sweat of a Gethsemane, the agony of a cross. Illustrations of this come to us sadly vivid and new to-day. We think of the men who laid down their lives in China, and whose names, still fresh and sweet, we can hardly mention without a twinge of pain. We can never forget the graves which line the long, lonely course of the Congo and other African rivers, or the men who in other fields have fallen or broken down in health. There are some who have drawn us pictures of men out in the dark moral jungle, living lives of professional ease and indolence, and faring sumptuously every day. God forgive the eyes that see so little and so crookedly, and the lips that utter slanders so heedlessly and cruelly.

Is the gain worth the cost? To those who take the secular, material, egotistical, or epicurean view of life, the heroes of the Cross are always, as Paul ironically called himself and others, "fools for Christ's sake." If the Christian faith is not the greatest thing in the world, and the world's only hope, it is the most egregious of blunders and the most pitiable of human delusions. Then all the loveliest institutions in the world are the creations of a falsehood; then all human progress has been gained by following a will o' the wisp, and humanity has marched onward and upward to the music of cozening promises. Either the Christian faith is nothing, or it is the glory of our lives. If you do not believe it, fling it away and call us fools who hold it with a grasp stronger than death, and have it as a fire burning in our bones.

The Church gains by all its sacrifices. The missionary cause is replenished by its losses, re-invigorated by its sufferings, and rises into new and stronger life from its very graves. Our Christian England shows its noblest feature in the part it takes in this work; and perhaps its surest title to greatness is in the fact that it sends the secrets of its greatness to the nations that are wallowing in the slums and kennels of heathenism.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Itinerary.

SELDOM, if ever, in my life, have I experienced such a week as the past one. Leaving Christiania, I travelled to Jönköping, a thriving Swedish town of about 23,000 inhabitants; there I held seven meetings. From the first the large place of worship was crowded, and we had to hold the final meeting in a noble church, where about 3,000 gathered. All through the meetings, there were evidences of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Many were broken down to tears, and entered on a new life, besides some clear cases of conversion.

Thence I went to the town of Orebro, where we had the same eager and crowded audiences, and more evidences of the blessed convicting power of the Holy Spirit. In three of the meetings, the weeping was so general that it seemed impossible to go on; and this on the part of people who are said to be rather phlegmatic in temperament. I cannot account for it, except that some at home are making these meetings the subject of very special intercession, and that I have been thrown, more than usually, on the gracious help and co-operation of the Holy Spirit. Speaking, as I have done, by interpretation, I must literally stand still and see the salvation of God.

At Stockholm, yesterday, we had a most helpful season of Bible-study and prayer in the home of the Prince and Princess Bernadotte, which was attended by her Majesty the Queen of Sweden. I cannot say more than express my thankfulness, that one in so exalted a station is a sincere and devoted follower of the Saviour.

We are now at Söderbilge, a beautiful town, about thirty miles from Stockholm, where 700 persons are gathered for the fifth annual conference. Oh, for showers of blessing! I realize that they will be given. It is beautiful autumn weather, and I am well. I hope to spend two or three days next week in Helsingfors, and to be in England in time for the Sunday-School Convention at Exeter. F. B. MEYER.

October 8.

The Bible League.—A most interesting and helpful conference was held in St. Thomas' Hall, Lambeth, last Friday, under the presidency of Rev. John B. Barraclough, vicar of the parish. Rev. Trevor Fielder dealt with our Lord's quotations of and references to the Old Testament Scriptures, as given in St. Luke's Gospel, and showed that to deny the inspiration of those Scriptures is virtually to deny our Lord's Divinity. Rev. Paulus Ashkenazi dealt with some of the statements of the so-called Higher Critics, and pointed out the ignorance of the sacred text which their statements evince. Rev. G. Robinson Lees, Pastor Fuller Gooch, Mr. Attwood (Lansdowne Hall), Mr. S. Wells (Northampton), Mr. A. H. Carter, and others took part in the two meetings, an hour between them being spent in praise and prayer.

The White Slave Traffic.

CONGRESS AT FRANKFORT.

THE second International Congress, convened by the German National Committee, under the auspices of the National Vigilance Association, was held at Frankfort, October 7 to 10. It consisted of delegates from the National Committees of Germany, England, France, Russia, Italy, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Hungary, Spain, Switzerland, Belgium, and Denmark. Some forty-seven towns in Germany also sent special delegates, the total number amounting to 300. Amongst those from England were—The Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen, the Lord Braye, and Mr. Percy William Bunting.

On arrival in Frankfort, Mr. Coote was requested by Her Highness, Princess Battenberg, who was one of the delegates, to call on her at the hotel at which she way staying. During the audience, Her Highness said: "I have been authorized by 5,000 women of Berlin to thank you personally, on their behalf, for the great work which you have done for the women of Germany, in your crusade against the white slave traffic. Directly and indirectly, they recognize that in the social work in which they are engaged, their tasks have been made much easier, and success more certainly assured, through the great work which you have done for them and the whole of Europe. Before you began your work it was not easy for the women of Germany to co-operate with the men on this question, but now they are welcomed on the National Committee, and together are working heartily for the care and protection of women. This is why I have been commissioned by them to thank you."

IMPERIAL PATRONAGE.

The Congress was under the immediate patronage of the German Emperor and Empress. His Imperial Majesty was represented, both at the Congress and the functions connected with it, by Count Keller, the Court Chamberlain; Count Bernstorff represented the Empress.

A reception was given to the delegates by the town of Frankfort, at the Frankfurter Hof, on the evening of Tuesday, October 7. The Burgomaster thanked the delegates for meeting in Frankfort, and promised that the town would do all it could to make their stay both pleasant and interesting. He was followed by Count Keller, who explained how deep an interest the Emperor had in the question which the Congress had met to discuss. For years he had been interested in the objects, and on behalf of his august Majesty, the Count gave the delegates a hearty welcome to Germany. He particularly referred to the remarkable work which had been accomplished throughout Europe by the delegates from England, and said that now Europe had been aroused to the importance of the question, no time would be lost by the respective Governments in seeing that steps were taken to stop this dreadful traffic. In his speech he referred to Mr. Coote and Senator Berenger as the two men who had done very much in connection with the movement.

The Earl of Aberdeen, as representing the English delegates, spoke a few words in reply, saying that they felt much honoured at the way in which the members of all nations had been received by the German National Committee, and especially by the town of Frankfort.

Monsieur Andre Sabouroff, Russian Minister of State, also spoke, and in closing his speech moved a resolution of thanks to the Emperor for the gracious words which he had commissioned Count Keller to convey to the delegates. The resolution was carried, and telegraphed to the Emperor. After this the whole of the delegates were invited to a supper provided by the town of Frankfort.

FAR-REACHING RECOMMENDATIONS.

On Tuesday, the first session of the Congress was held, and the chair was occupied by Count Bernstorff, as representing the German National Committee, Count Keller representing the Emperor. The first business the report of the English National Committee, which had also been printed in French and German. The report was taken as read, and the secretary moved the adoption of the two resolutions, which were as follow:—

(1) When a man or woman is found in the possession of young women professedly for the purpose of taking them to a foreign country, with a view to place them in employment, the police of the country where they may be found should have power to compel the man or woman to give some account of his or her antecedents, and to throw upon them the onus of legally proving that they are engaged in the conduct of a respectable business.

(2) Any woman pursuing the trade of prostitution in any nation other than that to which she belongs, should be repatriated.

These resolutions led to a great deal of discussion, and were strongly opposed by Senator Berenger as representing the French National Committee. At length it was agreed that they should not be submitted to a vote by the Congress, but sent round to the different National Committees for an expression of their opinion on them, then, if opinion should be favourable, to be brought up at a future Congress.

International Co-operation.

In the afternoon, the Earl of Aberdeen took the chair, and, in opening the proceedings, said: There can be no doubt as to the method which the Governments should adopt, viz., that of co-operation and uniformity of action. This is essential, and it is a fine thing in itself, the attainment of harmonious united action in a noble cause. It may have a far-reaching beneficial influence apart from the immediate purpose, an influence promoting a good understanding among the nations; in short, the interests of peace at large. So shall we see in the arena of Government communication what we have already witnessed in the arena of unofficial and private intercourse. I mean the coming together, the fraternizing, the co-operating of different nationalities, different creeds, different politics, in support of one noble and sacred purpose.

The findings of the Paris Official Congress give ground for high hopes and encouragement. But when these hopes are fulfilled, will the work of the committees be at an end? Far from it. There will always be need for their watchful help in securing that the new laws are actively carried out, and in other ways, especially the personal protection of women and girls. For, alas! the evil against which we contend is the product of two powerful tendencies and instincts, namely appetite and avarice, and so long as human nature remains what it is, these forces will be ready to assert themselves.

Meanwhile, until the time comes when new measures will be ready for administration, what is our immediate duty? Merely to give no rest to ourselves or others, in stimulating the resolve that on the ground of humanity, of religion, of civilization, this cruel, and abominable system shall be put down and kept down.

Proposed Central Bureau.

The whole of the afternoon was occupied until six in receiving reports from different nations, some of which were remarkably interesting. The chair was taken on Thursday morning by Senator Berenger, when the German National Committee's report was read and considered. The German Committee advocated the establishment of a bureau in Central Europe, with agents working in connection with the various Governments, who would have full official power to deal with this white slave traffic. This gave rise to a very long discussion, the bulk of the delegates being favourable to the views set forth. All, however, considered that the whole arrangement, both of the office and the officers, should be under the sole and complete control of the National Vigilance Association. Senator Denis and Senator Berenger both spoke very strongly in favour of everything being left in the hands of the International Bureau of London. Ultimately, it was resolved that the matter should be referred to the Bureau, with instructions to confer with all the National Committees in reference to the matter, and to take what steps were desirable to establish the proposed office in Central Europe. This resolution was unanimously carried.

A resolution thanking the French Government for having called an official conference in July last, and expressing satisfaction at the conclusions arrived at, was moved by the Earl of Aberdeen, seconded by M. Sabouroff (Russia), and telegraphed to the French Government.

Count Bernstorff, on behalf of the Princess Battenberg, moved a resolution of hearty thanks to the French National Committee for the part they had taken in bringing to a successful issue the convening of the official conference. This resolution (in the absence of Lord Braye) was seconded by M. de Graaf (Holland), and carried unanimously. Another resolution, moved by Senator Denis, of Paris, seconded by M. de Meuron (Switzerland), thanking the German National Committee for the organisation of the Congress and the successful way in which its deliberations had been dealt with, was carried unanimously.

Telegrams were received during the afternoon from the Emperor and Empress acknowledging the receipt of the telegrams from the Congress, and expressing their great interest The Empress in her telegram concluded by wishing the blessing of God upon the deliberations of the Congress.

A very interesting feature, and a source of gratification to the English delegates, was the fact that Mr. Coote received a letter from the English Foreign Office stating that the English Government, in order to show its interest in, and sympathy with, the work of the Congress, had authorised the Consul-General in Frankfort, Mr. Francis C. Oppenheimer, to attend as their representative and report the proceedings to them.

On Friday the whole of the delegates were taken to Homburg under the direction of specially appointed guides, where, on the invitation of the Emperor, they lunched at the Castle of Saalbourg. From there the delegates went to the Saalbau, where a tea had been provided for them by the Emperor in a portion of the building hitherto reserved especially for himself and family.

The trains which took the delegates from Saalbourg to the Saalbau were, by order of the Emperor, decorated with flowers and flags of the different nations represented. The importance of the Congress was manifested by the number of leading people in Europe who had, in some cases at great inconvenience, made the journey to Frankfort in order to be present.

The Opium Trade.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury presided at Lambeth Palace Library on Wednesday week over a meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, at which an illuminated address was presented to Archdeacon Moule, prior to his return to China. Dr. Temple took the opportunity to reiterate his deep conviction of the indefensible character of this trade. Such answers as had been made to the Society's contention were generally evasive. It was undeniable that we had forcibly interfered with the Government of China. It was said that if we did not supply the Chinese with opium they would supply themselves with it, and someone else would obtain the profit. He could not understand how it was possible to reconcile that argument with Christian principles. It was further urged that if we did not realize money by the trade we should have to tax the inhabitants of India to supply the deficiency in the revenue. But it was no justification to say that we could lighten the burden upon the Indians by entering into a trade which did great harm to our neighbours. How could it be reconciled with any principle of justice to interfere with the Chinese Government and say: Your subjects shall not be prevented by you from obtaining from us what in your judgment very much interferes with their character and lowers them in their own eyes and in the eyes of all the nations of the world? The trade was a very great blot upon the nation, and one which it was astonishing we should have allowed to rest on the name of England for so many years. They had not succeeded in their endeavours to persuade the English Government that this was a great wrong; but he held it to be a grave duty to persist in these endeavours. In conclusion, the Archbishop expressed to Archdeacon Moule the heartiness of their sympathy in his efforts to mitigate this injustice.

Mr. J. G. Alexander, hon. secretary of the Society, then read the address, which was presented to Archdeacon Moule by Rev. W. T. A. Barber, Headmaster of the Leys School, himself formerly a missionary in China. The address, after expressing thankfulness for the Archdeacon's restoration to health, which permits his return to his beloved field of labour, after more than eight years, with Mrs. Moule, proceeded: "We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of your work in the Anti-Opium cause during the past quarter of a century. As one who has seen with his own eyes the ravages of opium in China, you have been to your fellow-countrymen at home 'a true witness,' of whom Holy Scripture declares that he 'delivereth souls.' As a student of history and a true patriot, you have exposed the grievous wrong inflicted by your country upon China, knowing that national sin must be followed by national chastisement. As a Christian missionary you have recognised that it is a part of your duty to combat a traffic of which the Missionary Conference of Shanghai declared at your instance, in 1877, that 'from its past history and its present enormous extent, producing suspicion and dislike in the minds of the Chinese, it is a most formidable obstacle to the cause of Christianity.' And in the expression of your conviction you have displayed that combination of firmness with moderation which characterizes your distinguished brothers, the Bishops of Durham and Mid-China, equally with yourself."

Archdeacon Moule, in reply, told how, as a young missionary, he had taken up the study of this question at the request of the late Bishop Russell, and with the assurance that he should find the case against England less grievous than was represented, but had been unable to find any alleviation of the case against his country, which he so greatly loved. He had brought the matter before the Church Congress at Newcastle in a paper, of which 30,000 copies were afterwards printed at the expense of the late Rev. John Venn, and a copy sent to every clergyman of the Church of England. Many times, in preaching to the Chinese, he had been interrupted by the question, "Who sends the opium?" to which he had been accustomed to answer by another question: "Who smokes the opium?" But he would never use that answer again. He would be able in future to reply that the last farewell meeting attended by him before his departure from England was one at which the venerable Primate of the Church of England, supported by Christians of different denominations, had assured him of their determination to protest against the opium traffic.

Christian Business Men Abroad.—The Scottish National Council of Y.M C.A. and Fellowship Unions, have at present before them a scheme for the carrying out of what your correspondent suggests. The scheme owes its origin to Mr. A. McLeish, M.A., of Crieff, and, if carried out, will be somewhat on the lines of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union. The idea is to enrol, in a Business Men's Missionary Union, the names of young men who are willing, if God opens the way, to go abroad, and who, while earning their living in a business capacity, are willing to devote such time as they can spare to the furtherance of the Gospel.—Archibald Kennedy, Wardie Crescent, Edinburgh.

A Village Crusade.—The Farnborough Gospel Mission, inaugurated several years ago to contend against the influence and growth of Popery and Ritualism in the district, has recently been organized into a church. The members meet at present in a hall, and in order to prevent the building from being obscured it has been found necessary to purchase adjoining property. The workers are now confronted with a debt of £500, which it is felt cannot be raised without the aid of outside friends. Messrs. Rawlings and Marshall (Rock House, South Farnborough, Hants), have undertaken the pastoral oversight of the work, which gives promise of extension and greater usefulness.

PRAYER WITH THANKSGIVING.

THE long spell of dry weather was succeeded by heavy rains just in time to allow of rice and potatoes being planted here and in Haitan. Famine, greater than ever before, had seemed imminent. The fields, which should have been under water, were dry and hard as a high-road, quite unworkable, and our hearts were failing us. Much prayer went up, and in our extremity God heard and answered.

Now will you pray, please, for this district and Haitan? The plague is terrible. Other years it has been bad, but we are feeling it specially this year because so many of our dear people, the Christians, are being taken. Eleven baptized members of this one congregation alone have gone. All died in His faith and fear. Other congregations have suffered too; three Christians in a tiny village near have gone. The special need for prayer is for those who when taken ill are surrounded by heathen all ready to tempt them; all saying, 'What profit is there in your worshipping God? You get ill just as we do. You die just as we do." Relatives come and say to the sick person's friends, "If you do not go to the idols about this man or woman you will be responsible if he dies, and we shall punish you." This is often the case when a Christian woman has heathen parents. They come and tempt, and do their best to force her husband to worship idols. But, thank God, many of even the weak ones stand firm, proving the reality of their faith.—Miss E. J. Harrison, Ko-sang-che, Hok-Chiang, South China.

PRAYING IN DIFFERENT DIALECTS.

We had just finished our frugal dinner at the little village of Z-seng, and were preparing for the afternoon's examinations, when two young Wen-chow artisans were ushered up. After considerable cross-questioning (the dialects differ completely), it was elicited that they were Christians of Mr. Soothill's English Methodist Church in Wen-chow, and had come up to Lu-gyiao to call home a relative on family matters. Returning, however, their relative had been taken violently ill with an abdominal complaint, and was lying in a house two or three miles distant. They had heard of a foreigner in the vicinity, and had come to inquire whether he could render any assistance. Upon further interrogation, they stated that one had been baptized six years since and the other last year. They produced in evidence the Wen-chow hymn-book of their Church and a Mandarin Testament. The first was unintelligible to us, but one of them read with evident appreciation the story of the Centurion in the opening verses of St. Luke vii., whither I had turned by a coincidence. "Just as I am asking you," he said, when he got to the third verse. This was the convert baptized last year; previous to his adherence to Christ he had been illiterate. The case of their sick friend was evidently beyond one's scanty supply of antipyretics. We knelt and prayed in the T'ai-chow and Wen-chow dialects, after which our Christians let them have a local sedan chair, and they set off with happy faces to carry their friend a long two days' journey into the heart of the mountains which shut off the Wen-chow from the T'ai-chow plains. One needs not to add that the fact that the two lads setting out upon a ten days' journey with no impedimenta other than an umbrella, and maybe a change of raiment and spare pair of sandals, should have taken with them their Testament and hymn-book, speaks for the reality of their faith. And that they should voluntarily accept the degrading office of chair-bearer (a barber, a chair coolie, and an actor are debarred the public examinations) speaks for their love of kindred.—Rev. E. Thompson, T'ai-chow.

Girls in Cairo.—The proposal to establish a Y.W.C.A. Home at Cairo, similar to the one which is fulfilling so useful a ministry at Alexandria, has met with much approval. Information will be gladly given by Mrs. Boldero, 187, Queen's Gate, S.W. (not 87, as recently stated).

Englishmen in India.

ON the eve of leaving for another period of work in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, Mr. Reginald A. Studd said farewell to a company of friends gathered in Marylebone Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday evening of last week. Rev. Dr. George Hanson, who presided, called attention to the great need of provision for the spiritual needs of Englishmen who have gone in large numbers to India, and are to a large extent absolutely removed from the ordinary means of grace—instancing a member of his own congregation who had been there for a number of years, but from the day of his arrival had never seen the face of a Christian teacher. He marvelled that an organization so much required should not be better supported.

The needs of the English-speaking community were emphasized in telling fashion by Rev. J. R. Hewison, whose efforts have been devoted to railway men, with Dharwar as his centre. He recalled with deep gratitude the fresh impetus given to the movement by the arrival of Rev. Dr. Mackay, from whom the evangelists themselves had received help into a deeper Christian experience, and into more earnest living for the interests of the people to whom they had been sent with the Gospel.

As a member for many years, Lord Kinnaird said the fact that the committee were still striving to do this work with absolutely inadequate means, proved that the evangelization of Anglo-Indians is no more popular than it was twenty-five years ago. The idea that such a work among well-to-do people did not call for liberality was unreasonable; those who are spiritually asleep must be reached from without.

Being able to report that his efforts had improved the financial condition of the Society, Mr. Reginald A. Studd asked that friends at home will now bestir themselves in this direction. He spoke of the goodness of the Lord as he had experienced it during the thirteen months he spent travelling from station to station in India. Beginning in Ceylon, among the centres at which he held meetings were Dharwar, Hyderabad, Secunderabad, Poona, Bombay, Allahabad, Agra, Cawnpore, Amritsar, Rawal Pindi, Mukhti, and Deoghar. Everywhere the preaching of a full salvation had been eagerly listened to by soldiers and civilians alike—Eurasians and natives sharing in the blessing as well as Europeans. The half-night of prayer was new even to many missionaries, but proved a highly valued means of grace.

Work Among Moslems in Beyrout.

AFTER an absence of sixteen years, Miss Taylor has come home to secure the continuance of her work among the Moslems, and the establishment of the Mission on a permanent basis. She desires to place her work under the permanent Mission Board of an Evangelical Church, so that it should not cease at her death, and asks contributions for the purchase of the house and grounds which her school has so long rented.

The owner desires to sell the property at once, and offers it to Miss Taylor for the moderate price of £1,100. It has been adapted in all respects for its present use, and is the only suitable place in Beyrout. Miss Taylor would, of course, hand over the whole property to the Church which undertakes to continue the work among the Moslems, a work which God has signally owned and blessed during the last thirty-five years in Beyrout.

The Mission has not hitherto been connected with any church, being maintained by voluntary contributions, and these to a large extent, if not wholly, would be available. If the £1,100 required is raised, it is understood that the Jewish Committee of the Church of Scotland is willing to resile from the agreement recently entered into between them and Dr. Ferguson on the basis of a change in the character of the work.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Jessie Taylor, care of Mr. A. W. Gifford, 28, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 19. 1 Samuel xxxi.

HERE is the final act in this sad tragedy. The life which, at the beginning promised so well, ended in suicide. Saul had not only brought shame and sorrow on himself, but also disaster on his people. And now his life went out, so far as this world was concerned, in midnight darkness. Like Judas, he went out, and it was night. Surely, in those last days, if he had returned to God, he would have found mercy. If he had confessed his sins, God would have been faithful and just to forgive. Not only did Samuel mourn for Him, but God also. But he despaired of himself and of the love of God. And this is the unpardonable sin. So long as we can believe in God's forgiving grace, He can do anything with us. It is not sin, but unbelief, that makes salvation impossible.

There is one gleam of light in this sombre picture, arising from the chivalrous act of the men of Jabesh-Gilead, who could not forget the manner in which Saul had delivered them. It is an ill life, indeed, which has failed during its course to help some other soul, or souls, when hardly tested. It is good to know, also, that such acts are remembered by our fellows, even when there has been but a transient gleam of light on a long and desolate coast-line. See to it, that when you come to die, not one or two, but many shall be sorry, and shall thank God that you were born into the world.

So the kingdoms of this world come to an end and pass away; but, thank God, there is a kingdom that cannot be moved. Under Saul's kingdom, David's was forming; under that of Satan, Christ's is forming. The winter ends the life of the year, but in its heart it bears the promise of the coming spring.

MONDAY, October 20. 2 Samuel i.

We must accept the statements of 1 Sam. xxxi. as the true account of Saul's death. This Amalekite invented a story to ingratiate himself with David, and in the hope of a handsome reward. The man was condemned, on his own confession, of regicide; and by his prompt execution David showed that he was in no way an accessory to his pretended deed. He knew that the kingdom would inevitably come into his hands, but he took care to await quietly the Lord's time, and in the meanwhile so to conduct himself that he might secure the respect of all right-thinking men. "He that believeth shall not make haste."

The exquisite elegy with which he lamented the death of the two men who had been so intimately associated with his life, was known as "The Song of the Bow," and became a national ode, keeping fragrant among the common people the names of Saul and Jonathan. The refrain is, "How are the mighty fallen!" The motive of the ode seems to be an endeavour to group around that terrible tragedy various mirrors, each reflecting it from its own angle. There is the joyous effect it must produce on the streets of Gath and Askelon, the sterilizing effect it should have on the mountains of Gilboa, and the sorrowful effect it must have on the daughters of Israel, whose persons had often been adorned with the spoils of his successful wars. The manly prowess and personal virtues of the two dead warriors pass under review; they were swifter than the eagle in its flight, stronger than the lion in its might. But the last strain is the sweetest, in which the psalmist laments his lost friend, whose disposition had been so pleasant, and whose love had passed that of noble woman.

How clearly the love of God had triumphed in his heart, that David should sing such elegiacs over Saul! Let us never rest until we love those that hate us and despitefully use us—allowing the Divine love to pass through us to them, and praying for them, as the Lord on the cross for those who compassed His death.

TUESDAY, October 21. 2 Samuel ii.

The deliberateness of David's movements shows the depths of his faith. Here was the moment for which Samuel had prepared him, and of which Jonathan and he had spoken together, for the way to the vacant throne seemed to lie straight before him. But he would take no steps along it until God said that he might. What benefit would it be if he were to shake the tree? he knew that the fruit must fall into his hand if he would only wait for it. This page of Scripture seems to say to us, "Wait on the Lord, and keep His way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the earth: Fret not thyself in any wise to do evil." As a general rule, we may say that we had better stay where we are till the door closes behind us and opens in front. If you are not sure as to what God would have you do, stand still till He makes it known. God does not ask you to act without the assurance that you are in the line of His will, though you have often to step out on what seems to be an absolute void.

Abner was first cousin to Saul, and was animated, in part, probably, by loyalty to the royal house and also by personal ambition. It is a remarkable fact that he set up his standard beyond the Jordan, as though the Philistines had almost appropriated the western tribes. We are reminded that though our king is God's anointed sovereign, yet there are large numbers who set Him at defiance, as we see in the Second Psalm.

WEDNESDAY, October 22. 2 Samuel iii.

In this enumeration of David's wives, notice should be taken of his union with Maacah, who came from across the northern frontier. This marriage was perhaps dictated by political reasons. He wished by such an alliance to strengthen himself against Ishbosheth, but the bitter results of this alliance with a heathen family were patent in the turbulent life of Absalom. To marry out of the Lord is to prepare severe chastenings for ourselves.

Abner pretended that he was only actuated by religious motives in the negotiations that he opened up with David for the transference to him of the whole kingdom; but as a matter of fact he was partly piqued by the reprimand that Ishbosheth had administered, and partly conscious that it was useless to pursue the policy of separation. His influence with the elders of Israel, and notably with Benjamin, from which Saul had sprung, was all-important for David (17-19). And apparently this mission was covered by his visit to Hebron, as escort for Michal, David's wife. There is no doubt that Abner was guilty of disloyalty and treachery; but this was no excuse for Joab's dastardly deed of blood.

In the case of Joab, he could not claim to have acted as goel for the dead Asahel, who had died a soldier's death in open war; and he was probably actuated by jealousy of the military talents, the vast influence, and universal popularity of the rival general, whom he murdered in cold blood, just outside the city of refuge.

David took immediate steps to disavow the deed; and his behaviour on hearing of Abner's death, together with the accompaniments of his burial, not only removed all suspicion of guilt, but opened the way naturally to great popularity with the whole nation (36, 37). How little we can judge for one another! We may be outwardly anointed kings, but have men and things in our lives which are "too hard" for us. Every heart knows its own bitterness.

THURSDAY, October 23. 2 Samuel iv.

Another dastardly crime is related in this chapter, by which the way was laid open for David to become king of the whole nation, according to Samuel's prediction. We are reminded of Peter's words on the day of Pentecost: "Him being delivered by the counsel of God . . . ye have taken by wicked hands." The wrath of man is made to serve God's plans. Not that their sin is necessary to God, who could find other means of accomplishing His purpose; but such sinful acts make it needless for other machinery to be put in operation. It was a horrible deed, and David took immediate steps to show his abhorrence of it.

Notice his asseveration: "As the Lord liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity." He used it once again afterwards (1 Kings i. 29). It was his daily theme. Few have known greater and deeper adversities, but throughout his life he was accustomed to trace that redeeming and delivering hand (Psa. lvi. 13). Let us bless God who redeemeth our lives from destruction, and crowneth us with lovingkindness and tender mercies (Psa. ciii. 4). However great your adversities are, be of good cheer, there is a way out, and God sees it, and He will bring you thither. Only be strong, and fret not yourself in any wise to do evil.

FRIDAY, October 24. 2 Samuel v.

All Israel now comes to anoint David king. He was anointed thrice—first by Samuel in his father's house, second by the men of Judah, and thirdly as here. So our Lord has been crowned by the Father's purpose in the Council Chamber of Eternity and by His Church. But there awaits yet another day, when He will be recognised as King by the whole universe. (Rev. xi. 15, &c.).

It was a wise policy to secure Jerusalem as the site of the metropolis, partly because from the days of Melchizedek, and before, it had been a religious centre, and partly because of its impregnable position. It was so strongly fortified that the battlements were manned by the blind and lame, who shouted in derision of his attack, "David cannot come in hither." David stormed the ancient fortress, and changed its name to the City of David. On the northern slope he built a number of stone fortifications, to secure himself from the Jebusites, who still dwelt in the lower city. He waxed greater and greater, because God was with him.

Thus there broke gradually on his mind the perception of the Divine purpose (12). Often we are unable to descry this in the earlier stages of our history. We can see no meaning, no purpose; but as year is added to year, the great scheme begins to unfold. Only let us be sure that whatever the position may be to which we are come, it is not intended for us alone, but "for His people's sake."

The more prosperous we become, the more liable we are to the attacks of Philistines. Let us not fight them in our own strength, but in reliance on God. Do not go before them. Wait till you hear the sound of marching, and then bestir yourself.

SATURDAY, October 25. 2 Samuel vi.

For fifty years the Ark had been in the house of Obed-edom (1 Chron. xiii. 1-5). With the concurrence of his people, David resolved now to establish it in the heart of the new metropolis. The journey to Baale (related in 1 Chron. xiii. 6) is here pre-supposed, and the historian, in this place, is treating only of the journey from thence to the capital. For this and the later procession, David seems to have composed that magnificent ode, Psa. lxviii.

The substitution of oxen for living men (1 Chron. xv. 2) was a great mistake, and it led to a terrible tragedy when Uzzah put out his hand to steady it. His sudden death must have called all the people back to the reality and holiness of Jehovah. God would still be had in reverence of all that called upon His Name. No liberties might be taken with the sacred symbols.

The blessing that befell the house of Obed-edom awaits all those who welcome and foster the work of God. In the present day, family prayer, interest in missions and Christian philanthropy, the consecration of money and time to God's cause, are what Obed-edom's welcome to the Ark was in those far-away days; so are they recognised and recompensed.

Great encouragement was thus afforded to David to proceed with his original plan; and the Ark was removed to its prepared place, with the careful observance of due form and solemnity. The king's personal joy seems to have been exuberant, much to the annoyance of the proud Michal. But his cup ran over. How it hurts us when those nearest to us are out of sympathy with our religious fervour!

F. B. M.

The Late Mr. Kensit.

HIS WORK AND MESSAGE.

THE painful intelligence of Mr. John Kensit's death, following the brutal attack at Birkenhead which had laid him low, aroused deep emotion among those who are concerned for the maintenance of the verities of the Gospel. Mr. Kensit fell in the midst of one of his most arduous struggles, and the pathetic character of the bedside scene in Liverpool Infirmary was intensified by the knowledge that near by, in Walton Gaol, there lay incarcerated the earnest-minded son of this courageous Protestant preacher and reformer.

Mr. Kensit lived in the full light of publicity; many of his labours and controversies were, consequently, familiar to those who follow the course of events. A man of strong convictions, quick to translate thought into action, bold and persevering in attacking that which he held to be lawless—his fervent campaigns against priestism and the Romanizing party in the Church of England, necessarily aroused the fierce opposition of sacerdotalists, who, with a cheap superiority, endeavoured to write Mr. Kensit down as "a mere agitator." A study of his career, however, reveals the true man—bluff but kindly, outspoken but thoughtful, and in all things possessed by a determination to witness that "there is one God and one Mediator between God and men—the Man Christ Jesus."

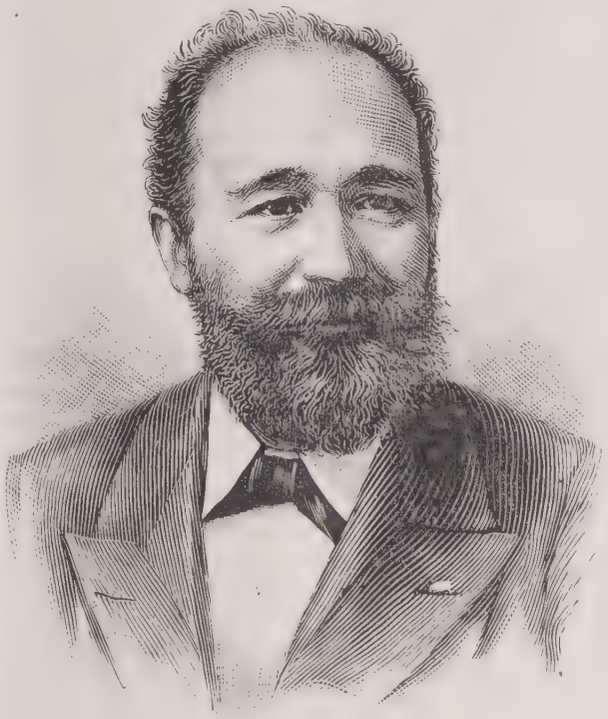
A Londoner by birth, our friend early became connected with Church life in the Metropolis; early, too, he was impressed with the inherent falsity of the Romish apostasy. The services at the city church of St. Lawrence Jewry, where he was a choir boy, were pronouncedly "High," and the lad felt their want of spiritual illumination. A series of lectures by the then vicar of Clerkenwell, the late Dr. Maguire, helped to inculcate sound Evangelical principles. About the same time, the young fellow commenced to preach the Gospel in the open air in some of the crowded thoroughfares of north-east London; he made his spiritual home in the Established Church, joining the congregation of St. John's, Hoxton. At another period he was a member at St. James', Holloway, under the ministry of Rev. E. A. Stuart.

A PROTESTANT BOOKSELLER.

Entering one of the largest of London business houses, that of Messrs. Morley, Mr. Kensit maintained his labours in Christian work, particularly in the Sunday-school. It was while visiting his scholars that he became impressed with the vast harm wrought by pernicious literature, and the need for supplying the people with elevating reading. A number of friends co-operated for the dissemination of pure literature, and the outcome of the operations was the establishment by Mr. Kensit of a publishing business at Hoxton. Later, the well-known establishment in Paternoster Row became the central office, and Mr. Kensit gradually came into prominence as a Protestant publisher and bookseller. Large and increasing quantities of enlightening books and pamphlets have been issued, the numbers last year including no fewer than 100,000 copies each of a penny "Foxe's Book of Martyrs" and "Three Years as a Nun"; as well as 50,000 each of the Bishop of Sodor and Man's "The Confessional in the Church of England," and a cheap condensation of Chiniquy's Life, entitled "Why I left the Church of Rome." In his business undertakings Mr. Kensit by no means escaped the calumnies of Ritualist critics. It was charged against him that a certain book which he issued was of an improper character, but he carried the war into the enemy's country by showing that it was simply an extract from a work published by The Society of the Holy Cross, brought out to inform the public as to the nature of certain semi-Romish publications.

PROTESTS AGAINST RITUALISM.

In the earlier stages of his career, Mr. Kensit contented himself with addressing the members of the episcopal bench; but they for the most part simply returned polite, formal acknowledgments to his emphatic letters of complaint. He then decided upon more active measures, and made a public objection to the services at St. Anne's, Hoxton, where the vicar had set up and openly advocated the confessional. Attention was next drawn to the somewhat notorious St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate Street, E.C. Here Mr. Kensit's action ultimately led to the removal of a number of Romish adornments. A still larger measure of public interest was aroused in connection with St. Cuthbert's, Kensington, where "a large crucifix, covered in crape, was held up before the congregation, and, as each piece of crape was removed, and the wood shown, the vicar called out, 'Behold the wood of the cross!' the people replying, and falling prostrate at the same time saying, 'Come, let us adore it!' After this the crucifix was laid on the ground in the chancel, and after adoration, vicar, choir, and congregation, went down on their knees and singly kissed the graven image."



From Photograph by Mr. Rheinhold Thiele, 66, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Against these superstitions Mr. Kensit indignantly protested. Holding up the crucifix at arm's length, he cried, "I denounce this idolatry in the Church of England!" The police were promptly called in; Mr. Kensit had to answer for his action before a magistrate, and was convicted. The sentence, however, was quashed at Quarter Sessions.

Mr. Kensit had, of course, many controversies with the Archbishops and Bishops; these continued practically to the end of his life, and involved public demonstrations in various parts of the country. In July last Mr. Kensit wrote a vigorous letter, objecting to the action of the Archbishop of York in devoting a sum of money to the new church of St. Columba, Middlesbrough: "In the Parish Magazine, Protestantism is assailed, and described as 'imported trash brought into this country and made in Germany.' The Holy Communion or Lord's Supper is described as the Mass. A Mass for the dead is offered up every Saturday. This is described as 'The Holy Sacrifice for the peace and repose of the soul.' Daily Mass is held and sung, in spite of our Church describing such services as 'blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits.' The abominable confessional is set up and described as 'the sacrament of penance.'" The Archbishop took no notice of the communication, but Mr. Kensit persevered, held large meetings in the town, and aroused the Protestant party. These experiences, indeed, were typical of vigorous agitations set up wherever the Romeward party broke the law.

THE WYCLIFFE PREACHERS.

Of late years Mr. Kensit, assisted by his son, Mr. J. A. Kensit, devoted time and energy to the organization of a body of young men, somewhat on the lines of the great Lutterworth divine and reformer, designated "Wycliffe Preachers." These evangelists went forth two by two to proclaim the Evangelical Gospel, particularly in districts that were plunged in the darkness of Ritualism. Popular apathy in religious matters was overcome, and the Protestant cause strengthened. Nor have the preachers been daunted by persecution. In spite of stonings and beatings by "lewd fellows of the baser sort," and miscarriages of justice held to be traceable to party bigotry, they have continued on their way.

THE TRAGIC END.

The record of the closing days of Mr. Kensit's full and exhausting career forms a sad and moving history. Most readers are familiar with the salient facts of the controversy between the Messrs. Kensit and the Wycliffe Preachers on the one hand, and the Liverpool stipendiary magistrate on the other. It will assuredly appear to many people that the conviction of Mr. Kensit, jun., was by no means in accordance with the well-known principles of English law. As that distinguished authority, Professor Dicey, has said: "A meeting is not an unlawful assembly because it excites persons, who dislike the meeting, to break the peace." This is a question for courts and judges, but equity-loving folk will find it difficult to exclude the thought that the contrast between the heavy alternative sentence of three months' imprisonment passed upon the young preacher, and the leniency with which certain rough disturbers were treated, may have suggested something of encouragement to local hatred.

In the presence of death, however, controversy is hushed; a courageous upholder of the Gospel has been cruelly stricken, and his cause has passed to a Higher Court. At the final interview with his son—who was brought to his dying father's bedside under prison escort—he urged the young man not to accept release from prison, unless he could do so without sacrifice of principle. Then he committed his weeping family to the care of God, and in almost his last clear utterance said that he was going to be with the Lord Jesus Christ. "The end," says his sorrowing widow, "was perfect peace."

Surely, in the struggles and wrestlings of this combative life, as well as in its solemn conclusion, we may discern a call to prayer and action, and an earnest reminder to us all of the Apostle's words, "I am set for the defence of the Gospel."

Mrs. Kensit and family desire to express their thanks to all those who have shown much sympathy with them in the great loss of their beloved husband and father. "Please pray that we may say from our hearts, It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good."

JOHN KENSIT: REQUIESCAT.

Still that protesting voice—
The strenuous life;
Its aims, its methods, long time judged by us—
(Acclaimed, denounced, or lightly put aside)—
Now left at last to the Eternal Judge,
Whose thoughts are not as ours, nor ours His plans,
One who fulfils Himself in many ways,
Whose kingdom suffereth violence.

Ceasing from judging, we acclaim him brave;
A trumpet-Gideon, for the truth he saw;
A Greatheart, fearless, free; thus counselling
Fighters in other conflicts than his own.
With his life message: "To thyself be true,"
Building us, haply, "wiselier than he knew."

Open the gaol, where sore confinement now,
Ceases to be the chief of pains decreed;
Let the son, bearer of his father's trust,
Stand, like a son, by this pathetic dust.—F. C.

[The friends of the Protestant cause—and many others, on grounds of humanity—have rejoiced to learn that since his father's death, young Mr. Kensit has been released.]

THE FUNERAL SERVICE.

Solemn and affecting were the scenes witnessed on Saturday last at the funeral service and interment of the departed worker. St. Mary's Church, Kilburn, was filled with a reverent congregation, and the vicinity of the building was thronged with sympathetic onlookers. The coffin, on which lay Mr. Kensit's Bible, was borne from the hearse into the church by the Wycliffe Preachers, between a double line of representatives of the Orange lodges of London, wearing their regalia. Many well-known Evangelical clergy were present, in addition to prominent laymen whose names are associated with the Protestant cause.

The service was conducted by Revs. J. C. Wilcox, vicar of Shepscombe and chaplain to the Wycliffe Preachers, Dr. C. H. Wright, C. Musgrave Brown, of St. Clement's, Liverpool—in whose church a memorial service had been held on the previous day—and James Ormiston, of Bristol. A brief address, given by Rev. F. S. Webster, touched with dignity and true feeling upon the tragic conclusion of Mr. Kensit's useful career. He pointed out that (1) It was no ordinary death. Our friend might have looked forward to a score of years spent in the Master's service. (2) It was a death which is felt by many to be a national disgrace. (3) Thousands mourn the death of this good man, who is "with Christ, which is far better." None who knew him could doubt the sincerity of his faith in the Gospel for which he died. He was a true and zealous labourer, but, more than that, he was a converted man, glorying in the title, "A sinner saved by grace." But while he has fallen, the cause for which he suffered remains—the purging of the Church of England from sacerdotal error, and the re-establishment of a sober, Scriptural, and Protestant faith.

PRAYER, NOT RETALIATION.

Let there be no thought of retaliation; not so will John Kensit be avenged. We stand by the Christian law:—"If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Let us pray for the man who flung the missile, that he may become a follower of Christ, and if we think the recent magisterial decision unfair, let us "retaliate" only by prayer. Then healing influences shall flow from this deplorable event.

The foundation truths of the Gospel are mighty to the overthrowing of Satan's kingdom. Let us therefore take up its proclamation afresh, with hope and faith, remembering that we are to live it as well as preach it. Above all, let there be prayer for a revival of true religion. The Holy Ghost is the only true guardian of the Church's orthodoxy. We pray that men shall be convicted of sin, and that those who are so convicted shall look to the Gospel of the free grace of God, of justification by faith only, as their sole hope.

AT THE GRAVE.

While the mournful notes of the "Dead March" swelled from the organ, the coffin was removed to the hearse, and a procession was formed. Along the entire route to Hampstead Cemetery the thoroughfares were lined with respectful spectators, not a few of whom raised their voices in harmony with the singing by the friends in the procession of "Rock of Ages," "Jesu, Lover of my Soul," "Sleep on, Beloved," and other suitable hymns.

When the funeral cortège passed the Cemetery gates, the hour was late in the afternoon, but a vast assemblage of people, many of whom had waited for some hours, received the mourners at the grave side with the singing of hymns. Then, in the gathering gloom of the autumn evening, the solemn words of committal were pronounced. In order to prevent any injury to the flowers and shrubs, the service was made as brief as possible, no addresses being given, but an adjournment was made to Fortune Green, immediately adjoining. Addresses were there given by Rev. H. Dening, Mr. Walter Walsh, and other friends.

Romanism in Ireland.

THE new volume by Mr. Michael J. F. McCarthy — Priests and People in Ireland (7s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall)—to which we have already called the attention of our readers, supplies the Protestant lecturer with a veritable storehouse of facts so far as Ireland is concerned. Himself a Roman Catholic, the author writes under a keen sense of the wrongs from which his country suffers at the hands of the priests and nuns. Strong statements are made; but they are preceded or immediately followed up by figures and concrete instances of the evils in question, which give tremendous force to the indictment. It is not too much to say that many of the stories told would appear utterly incredible, were they not made by a credible witness, and backed up so strongly by facts. The provinces and counties are gone over in detail, and the result of the examination shows that Ireland is burdened with an incubus, without the removal of which the outlook along the lines of material or intellectual progress is hopeless indeed. An already poverty-stricken peasantry is being steadily robbed of hardly-won earnings, and dragged downward in every way, in order that the numbers of the "religious" may grow, and that palatial churches, cathedrals, convents, colleges, clerical residences, &c., may be multiplied in the midst of hovels.

The practical administration of the Poor Law Acts is tacitly vested in them (the clergy). The Roman Catholic dispensary doctors, clerks of unions and local government inspectors all owe their appointments to sacerdotal influence; the nuns and chaplains rule the Roman Catholic Unions; and the boards of guardians are used as a machinery for disseminating sacerdotal views under the guise of public opinion.

On the question of education, evidence abounds as to the manner in which all arrangements are made to serve the ends of the priests, without reference to the interests of the rising generation or of the taxpayers. Those who have the control of rating and "grants" have interests identical with the recipients of the money; and one of the results of this state of affairs is that while in six years (1895-1900) the number of pupils reported to the Education Department fell twenty-seven per cent., the expenditure rose twenty-two per cent!

Those who are tempted to think that Romish priests may be safely admitted to a share in the direction of public affairs will be disillusionized if they will read this volume. Their own laymen do not trust them implicitly; and Protestants are exercising a false and fatal charity when they concede anything to the presumption and pretensions of men who certainly do not aim at the true enlightenment of the race.

The Soldiers' Leisure.

THE establishment of a military camp at Bulford, on Salisbury Plain, has transformed an erstwhile solitary place, certainly not into a garden, but, at any rate, into a centre of life during a large portion of the year. For five years it was studded with tents of various shapes and sizes, which have now given place to more permanent buildings of corrugated iron, arranged for the most part in parallel streets running at right angles to a chief thoroughfare.

It is impossible to over-estimate the boon conferred on the men in camp by Soldiers' Homes and similar scenes of social and spiritual activity. The "off-duty" hours of camp life are necessarily monotonous, if not dangerous—the former in such a situation as Bulford, the latter when located in a populous centre where temptations are all too insistent. And bearing in mind the extent of the camp in question, there is full and ample scope for the Church of England, Wesleyan, and undenominational institutions to take each its respective part.

Concerning the last named (which is an extension of Miss Perks' valuable work in Winchester), the laying of a memorial-stone last week was the occasion of an interesting ceremony performed by Lady Wimborne, who, with her distinguished husband, has taken the greatest interest in the work, and given liberal financial aid to this Bulford scheme. A large number of interested friends and spectators were present, including the Countess of Lindsey, several officers and clergymen, and members of Miss Perks' council. Lord Roberts, being unable to attend the stone-laying, wrote promising to visit the Home at Winchester the following day, which he accordingly did.

In a forcible and graceful speech, Lady Wimborne referred to the privilege and necessity of providing such institutions for the men, in which they can find rest for body, stimulus for the mind, and, above all, peace for the soul—for the purpose of this Home, as of all Miss Perks' other work, is distinctively evangelistic, and aims at the leading of the men to Christ as Saviour and Strength. Lady Wimborne made an eloquent and touching allusion to the fitness of godly women for such work as this—the touch of a woman's hand, and the sound of a woman's voice, often striking a responsive chord in a soldier's heart as no other human means will do.

Miss Perks spoke of the mingled delights and anxieties of the work, which, with her equally devoted sister, she has been enabled to carry on for twenty-eight years—with the efficient and loyal co-operation, for upwards of twenty years, of Mr. Charles Edwards. In recent years a widely-extended sphere of blessing has been the troopship visitation at Southampton, especially during the period of the late war; and countless testimonies have been received as to the subsequent fruits of this earnest sowing.

General Battersby, who presided, and Mr J. H. Lydall, of London, also spoke, from long personal knowledge, of the value of the work, and pleaded its financial claims. The buildings comprise large kitchens, refreshment, reading, writing, and recreation rooms, a capacious hall to seat 500 people or more, bedrooms, baths, workers' quarters, &c., all excellently arranged and appointed. The total cost will not be less than £6,000, of which about £3,500 is already secured—Lord Wimborne having given £1,000 and Mr. John Cory (Cardiff) £500. Each of these gentlemen promises a further donation when the total required is nearly in sight. The Home, for which a choice position has been allotted, will be ready for occupation in another month or two; the formal opening may be delayed till the warmer weather of spring, but long before that its benefits will be available for the men in whose interests it has been erected. Warm appreciation of Miss Perks' labours has been expressed by the highest military authorities.

Billingsgate Christian Mission

FINDING that the month of July was inconvenient for holding its annual meeting, the Billingsgate Christian Mission decided that the gathering should take place in October. Accordingly a large company of friends assembled on Thursday last to celebrate the twenty-fourth anniversary of the Mission. The keynote of the meeting was given by the opening hymn, "To God be the glory," and speakers and hearers throughout were united in the confession—"Great things He hath done."

The secretary (Mr. A. Walters) presented a concise report of the year's operations of an inspiring nature. It was gratifying to learn that there never was a time when the workers were in touch with a larger number of men in the market and neighbourhood. All the agencies had combined to impress upon the people the fact that the primary object of the Mission is to win them for Christ. The medical mission, inaugurated four years ago, has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectations, and the attendance continues to increase. During nine months of this year over 5,000 cases were treated, while last month saw an average attendance of thirty-eight daily. As an evidence of the appreciation of the work it was mentioned that over a hundred of the salesmen contribute to the funds; and the patients showed their gratitude by placing £40 2s. 10d. in the dispensary box.

The visitation of the homes of the people has enabled the Sunday evening Gospel services to become more widely known, with the result that the attendance has doubled. To the Sunday-school and Band of Hope the children are gathered in, while weekly prayer meetings, missionary gatherings, and the Monday noon service in the market, are maintained amid encouraging signs.

PROPOSED EXTENSIONS.

Turning to the building fund, Mr. Walters announced that two-thirds of the amount required has been received; but over £2,000 remains to be raised. A much needed extension is contemplated—viz., the provision of a surgical and accident ward, where cases which have now to wait for several hours at the hospitals before treatment would be immediately dealt with. To meet the initial cost £300 was required, in addition to the ordinary income.

In submitting the statement of accounts, Mr. W. H. Williamson (treasurer) spoke in reassuring terms of the Mission's financial position, and mentioned that he had that morning secured the interest and patronage of the Lord Mayor, who had promised to bring their work before some of the guilds.

Mr. F. A. Bevan (who presided), warmly commended the Mission in its various agencies, particularly the efforts which combined the healing of the body with ministering to the spiritual needs of men.

THE NEEDY MULTITUDE.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins gave a timely message to the workers on our Lord's command, "Give ye them to eat;" urging his hearers, in approaching the needy multitude, to bear in mind the boundless resources they had in Christ.

Words of encouragement were also given by Rev. Edwin H. Ellis; and Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield related some incidents in which personal service had been used of God in winning men from the slavery of sin to the service of Christ. Dr. Stansfeld outlined the work of the medical mission, and emphasized the need for the proposed surgical ward. A warm tribute to the good feeling and appreciation of the salesmen was afterwards paid by Mr. W. Heading, who, some months ago, was appointed as missionary, and whose labours are daily proving fruitful.

Bible Flower Mission.—Mrs. W. W. Turton, superintendent of Bible Flower Mission, 110, Cannon Street, E.C., writes concerning the efforts made during recent weeks: "Over 10,000 lavender bags, ornamental cards, and little gifts for children have been sent to the hop-pickers."

Among the Hop-Pickers.

FROM the various outposts—Malvern District, Tenbury, Bromyard, and neighbourhood, come cheering tidings from our missionaries. The workers are warmly welcomed in the hop-gardens; while the camp services are full of interest, and not without cases of spiritual blessing. All our missionaries are total abstainers; each one carries a pledge book, and is prepared, in camp or garden, to accept signatures. John Burnham.

Fern Bank, Brentford.

A UNIQUE GATHERING.

Describing a lantern meeting conducted by Mr. Burnham, a correspondent writes:—"The service was held in a barn, the sheet being fixed at one end of the building. In the centre of the barn was the lantern perched upon two huge blocks, and by its side the portable organ, at which Mr. Burnham presided.

"Around there were gathered the 'hoppers' with their wives and children, who had come from Dudley, Dudley Port, and the slums of Smethwick and Kidderminster, as well as villagers. The interest which these 'lantern services' create will be better understood when it is remembered that these hoppers had but just finished a hard day's picking at the cribs, and hurried through their simple evening meal in order to be present; and some who have been late in leaving the hop-yard have actually left their meal in order that they might not miss the service.

"After a brief, earnest prayer, the hymn, 'Anywhere with Jesus,' was placed upon the sheet and heartily sung. Then followed a series of pictures on the subject of "Scenes from the Life of the Saviour"; and as each picture was thrown upon the sheet it was accompanied by a short, pointed Gospel address.

"Thus both by 'eye-gate' and 'ear-gate' these soldiers of the Cross made their assault on the 'citadel of man-soul'; and it was an assault which evidently made the citadel to shake, for more than one of these rough men was seen with tears in his eyes.

"As we stood there and witnessed this deeply-interesting scene, we felt 'surely God was in this place.' Though it was but an old barn, it was to us 'none other than the house of God,' and it was our earnest prayer that to many of those poor pickers it might also become 'the gate of Heaven.'"

TWENTY-SEVEN YEARS IN KENT.

One of the most familiar figures in the Faversham district is Mr. George Heath, of Canterbury, who for the past twenty-seven years has laboured in the hop-gardens at Selling with unabated energy, and has won a unique position in the hearts of the people. On week evenings the workers chiefly devote themselves to entertaining the children, and encouraging them to learn passages of Scripture.

The bodily and spiritual necessities of the sick are also ministered to. On Sundays Mr. Heath and several voluntary workers traverse a distance of eight or ten miles, visiting all the encampments in the district, and holding open-air services in their midst. On Sunday evenings Mr. Heath's addresses were illustrated with lantern views, and the Gospel stories made simple and clear.

On the last Sunday evening the speaker addressed 800 people with much earnestness and pathos. He described the sufferings of Christ in an effective manner; pointed to the invaluable blessings of the Atonement, and emphasized the necessity of appropriating them immediately. Many were moved to tears, and several have borne witness to good received.

Sunday Evening.

Now Thy day, O Lord, is closing,
Blessèd, holiest, happiest day!
Ended now its work and worship,
Silent at Thy feet we stay.

Hymn, and prayer, and Gospel message
In our hearts are echoing still,
Now like dew at eve descending
May Thy peace our spirits fill.

Far and wide this day has fallen
Precious seed of life Divine,
Human hands have sown and watered,
Let the increase, Lord, be Thine!

Gracious Master, bless Thy servants
Who this day have toiled for Thee,
Grant to them the sweet assurance
Not in vain their work shall be.

So shall six days' work returning,
Vibrate to one glorious chord—
Well may they go forth rejoicing
Who afresh have seen the Lord.

Obituary.

DR. GEORGE W. CHAMBERLAIN.

THE Northern Presbyterian Church of America has for years carried on vigorous and fruitful missions in South America, and Dr. Chamberlain has been one of the chief outstanding workers in that field. Some forty years ago he visited Brazil, as he was somewhat run down by his college work. He had no idea of finding his sphere of life work there. But, having an introduction to one of the missionaries, he became greatly interested in the work, and returned to the States that he might fit himself for service in Brazil. He entered on his life work with great enthusiasm, and for all these years he has laboured to win the people of that land to Christ. He has preached the Gospel, taught the people, and organised churches all over the Central provinces of Brazil, and has been the successful agent in developing a great work in that superstitious and benighted land which will be his memorial through the ages. He visited the States lately for a malady which was found to be cancer, and which several operations failed to remove. He returned to Brazil to work as long as he could, and he died recently at Bahia, among his own people.

DR. J. H. GLADSTONE.

While a front-rank scientific man, Dr. J. H. Gladstone, F.R.S., whose sudden death has been announced, was also ardently devoted to Christian service. He was well known as a speaker for the Christian Evidence Society; while both as an Evangelical believer and an educationalist he strenuously opposed the action of Mr. Athelstan Riley during the controversy of 1894. On that memorable occasion Dr. Gladstone defended the system of religious instruction adopted in the Board Schools, and urged that the disputes threatened to wreck the very existence of the valuable Bible teaching that was being given.

Dr. Gladstone also identified himself with the Y.M.C.A. movement while quite a young man, and thirty years ago accepted office as president of one of the then best-known centres of Association work, that of Stafford Rooms, Titchborne Street, W. He was a member of the National Council from its formation in 1882. Few international Y.M.C.A. gatherings have taken place without Dr. Gladstone's counsel being called for. He was one of the few who assembled in 1855 in Paris, and drew up and adopted the Basis, which has ever since been the bond of union between Associations throughout the world. To the latest hours of his life Dr. Gladstone maintained a deep interest in everything that could promote the welfare of young men. He attended a meeting of the National Council on the 3rd inst., was the announced speaker at a meeting of his own branch on the 5th, and on the 6th he took the chair at a meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, but that evening was suddenly called to his rest and reward.

Personalia.

Dr. Heywood Smith has changed his address to 25, Welbeck Street, W.

Mr. J. D. McEwen (of Brooklyn, Nova Scotia) hopes to be again in England, en route for his field of labour in Brazil, for the second half of November. Friends desiring to communicate with him with a view to meetings should address Mr. A. T. Dence, Hillside, Byfleet.

Many of our readers will share our sorrow on learning that Rev. Dr. Valentine, of Agra, India, who is at present living at Bridge of Allan, is far from well. This honoured servant of God has devoted his life for the past forty-one years to India, and we are assured that many will most readily accede to his request to remember him in their prayers.

Many of our readers will be grieved to learn that a great sorrow has befallen Mr. George Clarke, the evangelist, in the death of his son, Harold, aged twenty-two, of typhoid fever. The young man's condition gave great anxiety for six weeks until the end came on Friday last. Mr. Clarke's friends all over the country will, we are sure, remember both father and mother at the throne of grace, in this dark hour.

The Children's Home.

AT an important meeting, held last week, of the general committee of the Children's Home, Bonner Road, Dr. Arthur Gregory, the principal, presented a carefully prepared scheme, indicating the lines upon which the Children's Home should develop in the next five years. The committee will have at its disposal within that period a very considerable sum of money to spend on the extension of its work. They resolved that they would contemplate the increase of the community at the rate of 110 children per annum for the next five years. The new branch, which is to be started at Liverpool, by the generous gift of £20,000 of a lady resident in that city, will, it is estimated, provide for fifty fresh children per annum. The remaining sixty children will be provided for by additional houses at the existing branches.

It was further reported that Mr. Joshua Locke, of Southport, and Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, had each promised £500 on condition that an additional £4,000 should be raised within twelve months for the establishment of a special branch for crippled and afflicted children. In recent years the Children's Home has greatly developed this pathetic side of its work, and the need of such a branch, where careful individual training, educational and technical, could be gained, has become an urgent necessity.

The committee resolved to accept the challenge of Messrs. Locke and Cory. Dr. Gregory specially emphasized the fact that the large sums given, or about to be given, to the Home were only available for property, and that this expenditure would involve the necessity for raising the income of the Home by about £2,000 per annum. The committee felt that the position and prospects of the Home warranted them in expecting that this amount could be raised.

Liverpool's Little Outcasts.

AFTER visiting Canada for the second time this summer with a party of young emigrants, Mrs. Birt writes:—"We have returned to find the Home filling up again with a number of helpless little ones. Canada is at present enjoying great prosperity; we have received over 700 applications for the 170 children we took out this year. One of our boys, aged twenty, has been back to the old country. This lad went to Canada at ten years of age, and now owns a farm and sawmill worth £1,000, and is now taking his mother out to keep house for him.

"Ten to fourteen is the age to save boys; we are trying to save them from coming on to the streets. After they get an experience of the streets it is much harder to reform them, or to induce them to settle down. For instance, Geoffrey (aged eleven), mother died ten weeks ago, father is taking to drink; eight children in the family, only one working; girl (13) giving trouble already, and sent to a day industrial school. Geoffrey persuaded by a naughty boy to steal some fruit; the Scripture Reader brought him to the Home. These children have absolutely no control or good influence at home since their mother died.

"Another family has been deserted for seven years by father; mother goes out daily to work; she finds the eldest girl, age sixteen, has been led away by bad companions, she has pawned a great many things out of the poor little house, has spent the money foolishly, and has run her mother into debt. The younger boy and girl were brought to the Sheltering Home to save them from being ruined altogether.

"We have had a heavy season's work. After fitting out the three bands of young emigrants, our store of clothing is exhausted. We hope that friends will remember the poor and hungry children daily seeking shelter and protection at our doors."

Opportunities on the South Coast.—It may not be generally known that the present season of the year affords exceptional opportunites for "sowing the Word of truth" among the many onion sellers who come over from France, and are frequently met with in the South of England. An esteemed correspondent who has found these visitors to our shores easily accessible, has had much joy in distributing French Gospels among them, and conversing with them in their own language. Christian workers in this locality will be glad to know that such efforts are warmly appreciated by the strangers.

From Our Readers.

"PRAYER FOR REVIVAL."

DEAR SIR,—Under the above heading in this week's issue of The Christian you give "A Scripture Summary" of Revivals. Every one of them in the Old Testament times you refer to was among God's chosen people, and not among the unsaved world: and those quoted from the Acts arose entirely through the instrumentality and activity of God's servants, energized in both Old and New Testament by the Holy Ghost. Is it not Christians that want reviving in these days? "Truth through personality" is as true now as ever; and if a Revival is to come to our or any other country, it will come through Christians being revived and going forth as of old to preach and work in the power of the Spirit of God, as Acts vi. 4, where prayer and the ministry of the Word are linked together.

"Prayer Circles" are being formed, the chief prayer suggested being the outpouring spoken of in Joel ii. 28, and quoted by Peter (Acts ii. 17). Is there any Scriptural warrant for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the unsaved world? Is He not "poured out"? and are we not told that "the world cannot receive Him because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him." The original prophecy refers to the Jews—it was partly fulfilled to them at Pentecost, and to the Gentiles later on; but the fulfilment in full is yet to come, and will be upon the Jews, and to the nations through them; and both in times gone by, in the present, and in the future, Revival came and will come through the instrumentality and activity of God's true Israel, as mentioned before, and not through prayer alone.

It seems to me that we are in danger of being led away on false lines in regard to this matter. One hears such expressions as "Prayer is in the air," "Only get people to pray," as if prayer alone was everything, and work quite a secondary consideration. We need to keep close to what the Scripture saith.

If you would open your columns to this matter much good might be done.—Yours faithfully, A.

11th October.

MY DEAR SIR,—I rejoice greatly that you are pressing upon the heart of your readers the need of believing prayer. The Lord who has made His people to desire a great Revival will assuredly answer prayer, and that soon.

I have been holding mission services in the north, where the tragic death of our brother, Mr. Kensit, has made a profound impression, and it is laid upon my heart that this is a special call to prayer for his and our enemies who are in the bondage of sacerdotalism. The deadly doings of the priests are exposed, and the Christian public is aroused. The battle is the Lord's. Our weapons are not carnal. Our hope is not in eloquence, argument, or organization, but in the living God. On one side the Church of Christ is assailed by priestcraft, and on the other side by the world-spirit. Perhaps it would be difficult to say which is doing the greater damage.

Can we not arrange a united prayer mission on one day every week throughout the coming winter in every city, town, and village throughout our land, to pray definitely that the Spirit of the Lord will so reveal to those who are in error the simplicity of the Gospel of Christ, that they may be saved and filled with all the fulness of God? I believe we can, and in doing so the revival we seek will assuredly begin.—Yours in Christ's service, Thomas Hogben.

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

A VOICE FROM THE MINE.

DEAR SIR,—One cannot help but be inspired and interested in the manly and straightforward utterance of Mr. Chas. Cook in his article, "Ancient Lights," in your highly esteemed paper. In these days of indifference to the sacred claims of God's Word, the turning away of many to the shallow forms of worldly teaching, to the callousness of milk-and-water professors of religion, it is an inspiration to follow every week the teaching inculcated in The Christian.

In these dark pit villages in which we live, surrounded as we are by men of the grossest ignorance and superstition, whose chief delight and pleasure is to hustle pigeons about, and leading prize members of the canine family in leaders on Sundays as well as week days, we are constrained to ask ourselves the question, Are we not sadly drifting into godlessness and apathy to His blessed Word and Gospel?

Ungodly men do not stop to think of the awful judgments that will be meted out to those who obey not the Gospel. They think not of the time when "they shall stumble and fall, and be snared, and be taken." Many members of our churches are living entirely in disregard of the claims of the Word of God and of a consistent life before the world, and many to-day are content to "feed on ashes." The sad reason of their failure and downfall is the neglect of the reading of God's Word.

I may say I follow Mr. Meyer through every day, and other studies of sacred truth, and find in The Christian a mine of spiritual wealth.—Yours in Christ, Robt. Blenkinsop.

The Genesis of Religious Error

THE Holy Spirit gives us through Paul two indications of the Genesis of Religious Error, in its two great epochal departures from a primitive purity.

I. The Primeval Apostasy. "When they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. . . . And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind" (Rom. i. 21, 28). Here, as the whole passage shows, the stages are: (1) disregard for God's glory; (2) inward rejection of man's high privilege, the knowledge of God; (3) penal consequences: mental, religious, moral degeneration.

II. The Christian Apostasy. "They received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. They believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. For this cause God shall send them" (providentially, judicially) "strong delusion, that they should believe a lie" (2 Thess. ii. 11, 12). (The rearrangement of clauses retains, and perhaps makes clearer, the line of thought.)

We cannot miss the solemn lessons that appear even at the surface of these profound statements. Bringing to light the secrets of human nature from times historically thousands of years apart, they yet contain the same elements—light rejected, light withdrawn. Whenever the truth is cast away, the lie is entertained. The departure of God is the signal for the entrance of the wicked one. The only defence against delusion is to receive the truth in the love of it—to abide in Him who is the Truth. F. W. Schofield.

Harley College.

"Chief-Corner-Stone" Mission to Jews.—Mr. J. S. Davidson, missionary, conducts periodical meetings at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, and in other centres of North and East London. He enjoys the confidence and assistance of several voluntary helpers. He has had many trials of faith and patience, but holds on his way with singular devotion. His address is—53, Pyrland Road, Canonbury, London, N.

Y.W.C.A.—An interesting meeting was held in Elgin on Wednesday, 8th inst., when the members of the local Y.W.C.A. entered into possession of new premises in Greyfriars Street, acquired by them at a cost of nearly £1,100. Lord Provost Young occupied the chair, and addresses were given by several local gentlemen, and Rev. James Paterson, White Memorial U.F. Church, Glasgow. The following evening the annual united social meeting of the Y.W. and Y.M.C.A.'s was held, when the new buildings were taxed to their utmost capacity. Mr. William Gall, J.P., bank agent, occupied the chair, and the speakers were Mrs. Fischer, Cambuslang, and Rev. Mr. Paterson, Glasgow. An era of great usefulness and prosperity is hoped for in the new premises. J. M. S.

East London Tabernacle.—Now that the winter is fairly started, Pastor Edwin H. Ellis, of the East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E., is once more pushing on the useful Home Mission Work started and carried on successfully by Pastor Archibald G. Brown. Two missionaries are fully engaged, both admirably qualified for the work—house-to-house and room-to-room visitation, by which means the Gospel is taken right into the homes of the people. In this work many cases of extreme poverty are met with and relieved as far as funds in hand will allow. A Medical Mission, with a trained Christian nurse, would be a great blessing in this work. We are praying for this. The Orphan Homes are full, and this work of looking after the fatherless children in the needy East-end of London could be wisely extended if only generous hearts would help.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ALVA.

ONE of the evenings included in the campaign in Alloa and vicinity was devoted to Alva, where a large meeting, under the presidency of Rev. Charles Watson, was held in the Town Hall, primarily to inaugurate the Alva Temperance Union to focus the efforts of all the local societies. Rev. J. Q. A. Henry delivered a forceful and eloquent address dealing with the evils of the drink traffic in the crime, poverty, and disease which it imposed upon the people of the United Kingdom, and the benefits which might accrue to widows and orphans, and by way of old-age pensions, if the traffic were stopped. He concluded with an impassioned appeal to his hearers to fight this giant evil. The singing of Mr. T. Armon Jones was greatly appreciated. Fifty pledges were taken.

PERTH.

The first public meeting of the series which Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones are at present holding in Perth was convened in the City Hall on Sabbath week under the chairmanship of Mr. Henry Coates. The subject of the address by Dr. Henry was "Rolling Away Britain's Supreme Reproach," and among many terrible facts cited it was asserted that no fewer than three-quarters of a million persons—or one in every forty—of all classes of society, from bishops and clergymen down to various grades of people outside the Christian Church, have money invested in the manufacture and sale of alcohol; an equal number being dependent upon those so employed, making one out of every twenty persons in the nation indebted for a living to the drink traffic. In face of such deplorable facts the time has come when every pulpit in the land should ring with the gospel of Temperance.

On Monday evening Mr. Robert Scott (of London), who had just returned from a visit to the United States of America, was on the platform, and received a cordial welcome. During the week Dr. Henry, on successive evenings, dealt with the Drink Problem under its various aspects — Political, Social, Economic, and Physical, respectively. The meetings grew in attendances and interest.

A drawing-room meeting at Balhousie Castle (the residence of Mr. James Ramsey) was a most helpful gathering. Dr. Henry spoke on "The Drink, the Scourge of Society," and Mr. Jones melted all hearts by his pathetic rendering of "Looking this Way."

In all the meetings Dr. Henry's words were listened to with profound attention. The facts came as a revelation to the people concerning the magnitude and momentous importance of the temperance problem. The address in which the missioner clearly showed the uncompromising demand made by the Bible for abstinence on the part of priests, Nazarites, Rechabites, kings, princes, and people, exercised a powerful influence.

On Sabbath evening there was an immense audience; every available seat was occupied, and also the extra forms which were brought in. Rev. Dr. Bannerman, who presided, said that during the twenty years of his ministry in Perth, no such meetings had been held, and no such comprehensive and Christian pronouncements on the Temperance question delivered.

A large number of new pledges were taken, totalling about 650 in the meetings, in addition to hundreds secured outside by young people and others. On Tuesday Dr. Henry spoke to gatherings of workpeople during the breakfast and dinner hour.

Hints to Congregations.

IN connection with the quarterly meetings of the London Baptist Association, convened at Ferme Park Chapel, Hornsey, N. (Rev. Chas. Brown), a public meeting was held in the evening, Rev. T. Greenwood presiding. In an able address, claiming that we owe many public benefits to the association of Free Churches, Rev. Richard Richard admitted also deep indebtedness to holy men in the Established Church. He urged Free Churchmen to resist the Education Bill, and, in the words of an Irish orator, to bring their backbone to the front.

Showing that the common events of church life have been of intense interest and importance, Rev. Dr. Newton Marshall instanced the ordinary work of evangelization as an example. From the evangelist's point of view the outlook is almost overwhelming owing to fearful and varied evils. Society seems to be more than ever becoming separated into two classes, in the sense that one, chiefly from hereditary causes, is not touched by the Gospel, while the other gladly gives its allegiance to it. It is consequently the duty of the latter to overcome its lethargy, and utilize the best methods to alter such a serious condition of things in the former.

A great danger exists of the minister being regarded as the only proper and authorized individual to engage in Christian work, the layman consequently standing aloof. The greatest present need is individual testimony, through the medium of friendship in its broadest sense—Jesus Christ being the greatest example in this respect. Over organization is an evil, the great necessity being to use the methods likeliest of success irrespective of organization. The second coming of Christ should be thoroughly believed in, and looked for to remind us of fleeting life. Personal consecration is the great desideratum.

From Mr. Henry Varley.

I HAVE just been reading the latest number of The Christian. I wonder whether, when you are weary with editorial cares, it refreshes and cheers you to know how you stimulate thousands by the good tidings circulating with, and found in, your valued columns. You put us in close relation with the active thinkers and workers in the wide harvest field.

The weeks since my return to America have passed rapidly and have been crowded with interest. Northfield and Winona Conferences have been held, and at both of them we have met thousands of our fellow-labourers, with whom it has been a real blessing to come into contact. I hardly ever remember such greetings, and in one sense sorrowful partings. Hundreds of brethren in the ministry, both pastors and evangelists, tell of definite accession of power, as also fresh, and to them new, lights upon revealed truth.

I am persuaded there is already a marked reaction against many of the vagaries and bold assertions of the "Higher Criticism." The cry of many men is for "the Living God," and to be "strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man." Our honoured brother Johnstone Ross, spoke with great power at Winona, as also many others; but I want to write about God. We had His power and glory in great and varied display, and no single meeting, in the judgment of many, could compare with that which 140 of the brethren met together to spend.

What a time of humbling, confession, and breaking down it was! Surely it was good to be there. God was in the place, and we knew it. The reflex influence of that night sounded out in all directions. We met at 10.30 p.m. and broke up at 5.30 a.m., the sun shining upon us, as upon Jacob at Peniel. The "little group" meetings, with personal confessions of ignorance, weakness, and sin, the inquiries made, the meaning of Scriptures, &c., were most blessed. Surely our hearts burned within us.

This Winona Conference is in the main Presbyterian, with wide and extended evangelistic interest. One distinguished business man has given 50,000dols to be expended in sending devoted and well-educated evangelists into many of the States.

Since our return from Northfield I have been preaching again in Boston, where the Lord has opened for me a wide door. Dr. Lorimer has gone to New York, and the splendid building known as Tremont Temple, of which he was pastor, is vacant so far as a settled minister is concerned. Asked to supply this vacancy for a brief season, I began on the second Lord's Day in this month. Already the magnificent hall is crowded to excess, and last Sunday many could not be admitted for lack of room. Far better, however, than this important factor in successful work, the presence of our great Lord has been recognised with gratitude and praise.

Certainly from the large number of testimonies given, and the evident power in the meetings, His effectual working is with us. I have been asked to continue the ministry and special meetings, and have consented to do so for a short time. There is great interest, but I want to see unmistakable proofs on a large scale that the risen and exalted Lord Jesus Christ is in very deed with us, "confirming the word with signs following." To this end I ask your readers to labour in prayer for us. It certainly is a joy beyond expression in this city, that appears to have as many gods in it as Athens of old, to see these wonderful gatherings drawn together to hear "the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God." Last Sunday there must have been an aggregate of well-nigh 7,000 in the three meetings.

Oxford Notes.

OXFORD Y.M.C.A. has begun its winter session of debates. The opening subject was, "The Education Bill." 130 were present at the discussion.

The meetings of the Oxford Diocesan Conference, held this week in the Sheldonian Theatre under the presidency of the Bishop, have been full of interest. Resolutions as to the increase of betting and gambling were passed.

The Oxford Christian Social Union held its annual meeting this week in St. Mary's Parish Room. The special subject was, "Medical Administration and the Poor." This was ably dealt with by Mr. G. W. Farmer, F.R.G.S., who urged the insurance of the poor, a better supply of labour, and the inculcation of thrift and independence, on Christian social lines.

The great event in Oxford this week has been the Tercentenary of the Bodleian Library. Opened on November 8, 1622, with a total of 2,500 volumes, it has to-day, after a lapse of nearly 300 years, no less than 700,000 volumes upon its shelves. During these years the Bodleian has impressed and moulded the minds of thinkers, scholars, and preachers throughout the whole world. This week every portion of the civilized world has sent her representative, and nearly every great university her delegate, to do honour to the name and memory of Sir Thomas Bodley. Christianity to-day has much cause to thank the founder of Oxford's great library.

Armenian Orphans at Marsovan.—Dr. Charles C. Tracy, who has been compelled to return to the United States for a time to recruit his health, is very anxious that a wider interest should be aroused throughout this country in the cluster of institutions at Marsovan, Asia Minor. The young people gathered there number 600, 115 of them being massacre orphans. In spite of every effort, the funds fall short of meeting the remaining expense. The teachers are truly labouring for Christ's sake, receiving the barest provision for living. The situation would be much relieved if £100 per annum could be contributed from this country for four or five years.

Pacific Garden Mission.—Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Maynard, who have just returned from a visit to Chicago, report a very happy visit paid to the Pacific Garden Mission. They convey a message from Miss Clarke of thanksgiving that God has indeed been blessing their work and working mightily. Among the testimonies they heard given was that of one man, who, from a good position, had tottered penniless into the hall, and is now saved and prosperous. Another said that though he now earns less money than formerly, his home is far happier, because Christ dwells with him. He has stoutly resisted the temptation of a large salary if he will keep a gambling den. A splendid after-meeting was conducted by Mr. Monroe.

Lost and Found.

I WONDER how many times in a week you lose something—pen, pencil, grammar, gloves, and lots of other things! How long do you search for a lost article? Well, that may depend upon its value. If it were a shilling, you would spend more time and trouble than over a broken bit of slate pencil that you can easily replace. The more a thing is worth, the more trouble you will take to find it.

When I was a lad, my mother lost a pet dog, of which she was very fond. We children were sent off in different directions to hunt for it, bills were printed and circulated offering a reward, the whole countryside was searched, and there wasn't a small boy in the place who did not look anxiously (though sometimes cautiously!) at nearly every dog he met, in the hope that he would be richer by 10s. as the result. But such hopes were doomed to disappointment; for the truth was, the cook had poisoned it and buried it, out of spite for a scolding she had received.

You may sometimes see a knot of persons outside a police-station reading the notices which are headed with that little word, "LOST!" I have seen some describing a man, or woman, or child whose relations are anxious to find them; and you can understand that a loving mother would think no trouble too great in searching for a little one who was lost. Nearly every Bank Holiday quite a number of tiny mites get lost on Hampstead Heath, and there are some touching scenes at night at the police-stations when their frantic mothers are enquiring for the little ones. I am glad to say they nearly always find them, because the policemen take charge of any little stragglers they find wandering about.

A large children's meeting was being held, one day, in a great hall in Philadelphia, when a gentleman walked quickly up the aisle, and said to the leader: "Oh, sir! I am in great distress. I was coming to this meeting with my little girl, but somehow she got separated from me in the crowd outside, and I cannot think where she is!"

"I am very sorry," said the superintendent, "but how can I help you?"

"Well," replied the agitated father, "she may have found her way in here, and I should be so glad if you would ask. Her name is Mary Wilson." So the leader, having called for silence, said in a loud voice: "Is there a little lost girl here, named Mary Wilson? If so, will she stand up?"

A great many children, and some grown-up people, stood up and looked at each other, but no one answered, so once more the leader said: "If Mary Wilson, who is lost, is here, will she stand up!" This time nearly a hundred children stood up to look for the little missing girl, but with no better result than before. So the leader said: "I am very sorry, sir, but apparently she is not here; and I think we must get on with the meeting now;" and the poor anxious father left the hall in great distress to give information to the police.

At the close of the meeting, when most of the children had trooped off home, a little girl was seen sitting on a corner seat. "What are you waiting for?" asked a teacher. "I'm waiting for my papa or someone to take me home," was the artless reply. "What is your name?" "Mary Wilson." "Mary Wilson!" exclaimed the astonished teacher, "did you not hear Mr. A—— say that if a little girl named Mary Wilson who was lost was here she was to stand up? Why didn't you do so?"

"Oh," replied the child, "I wasn't lost; I was here!"

Thus she had not been found at the right time because she did not know she was lost; and there are many older and wiser people than little Mary who make a similar mistake. They are never saved, because they do not know that they are lost. Jesus said, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Thus the Good Shepherd found the sheep upon the mountain, and carried it home in His bosom. Thus He will save you, if you will acknowledge that you have "erred and strayed from His ways like lost sheep," and accept the pardon which He gave His life to secure.

When you are found you will no longer be lost; but you will always be lost until you are found.

School-Days.

Hymn for a Child at School.

O gentle Saviour, strong and kind,
Be near me while at school I stay,
When friends and home are left behind,
And mother-love seems far away.
Thou, who wert homeless on the wild,
Give comfort to Thy little child.

When lesson-tasks are hard to learn,
And irksome duties weigh me down,
Be Thou my wisdom, bid me turn
Where light is for Thy children sown.
Help me to work with faithful care,
Because each task-time Thou dost share.

And when the playground, after toil,
With merry fun and gladness rings,
Let naught of sin the pleasure spoil,
Keep back all mean and selfish things,
In every game that claims my part,
Lord, make me true and pure in heart.

Wash me that I with Thee may live
When terms and lessons all are past;
To me Thy grace and favour give,
And, till I reach Thy heaven at last,
At home or absent let me be
Well pleasing, always, unto Thee!

Mary Rowles Jarvis.

"Do Right."

On a glorious summer morning,
'Mid the perfect sunshine bright,
People, people, take ye warning,
Oh! do right.

Should the day be long and dreary,
Lone and sleepless be the night,
Though the hours be sad and weary,
Still do right.

Do your footsteps tend but slowly
On life's pathway towards the light,
Think of Christ so meek and lowly,
Who did right.

His example to us giving,
Always 'gainst the wrong to fight,
By His Holy Spirit striving
To do right.

Fruitful or Fruitless (John xv. 1-8, 16).

SURELY a vine was swaying around the window of the upper room, or about the door, as our Lord and His disciples passed out into the light of the Passover moon, shining in brilliant glory and casting sharply-defined shadows. This furnished Him with His text, and perhaps vines had often spoken to Him of His own identity with the Father, in virtue of which He was able to say, My Father and I are one.

We will not stay to think long on that beautiful thought of spiritual unity, in virtue of which Christ and all His members make one tree. It is a very deep and blessed truth. We are called upon, not to make, but to manifest, the unity of the Lord and His followers to the end of this dispensation. There is not one single believer on earth, or saint in heaven, who is not a twig or leaf in that great tree, the root of which was planted in the dark pit where the cross stood, but the boughs reach all through the centuries. As the heavenly ones look down on our earth, seeing things not in the succession of time, but in their reality, as they are, they behold the green beauty and fruitfulness of Christ and His church—not twain, but one.

When the Lord speaks of some branches being "taken away," "cast forth and withered," I do not think that He is referring to any final rejection of the believer, but to our being put away from the opportunity of fruit-bearing. This is one of the most awful deprivations that can befall us in this world, and is only a little less to be dreaded than the being absolutely and eternally severed from the Son of God. Paul knew that nothing could separate him from the love of God, but he greatly feared lest he should become a castaway from service.

To return to the figure of the vine, one is greatly helped by considering the absolute effortlessness of fruit. Go to a branch and condole with it for the great exertions it will have to make before it can bear fruit, and it will laugh merrily back and say: "Spare your condolence. The difficulty with me is not, how to bear fruit, but how not to bear it. If only I can keep an unbroken union and connection with the tree, the sap arises from the root so easily and strongly that I find it swelling within my heart with irresistible energy. All that I need do is to be quiet, to keep my ducts and channels open, and to let the full force of the root enter me." There is no need to explain that metaphor. We have all been conscious of the effort and strain of our life—that we resolve to do this, and must do that; and constantly the ground has been littered with broken ideals. But Jesus shows us a more excellent way. He says that the one thing we must care for is to keep an open means of communication between Himself and us; and He will send up through all our being the living sap, which will swell in the ruddy fruit—here a cluster of prayer, there of witness-bearing, and again of love, joy, and patience. The holy life is not so difficult after all, when we understand that the living Saviour is prepared to realize it in and through us, if only we abide in Him.

If there be a question as to how to abide in Him, let it be remembered that we remain in a room not by thinking about the room, but by not moving out of it; and we abide in Christ, not by incessantly thinking about Him, but by not leaving Him, not getting out of touch with Him, in one of these three ways—by permitted sin, by worry, or by failure to give Him quiet times. If you guard against these, you remain in holy union with Him, not in the mind, but in the subconscious region of the soul. Then the hunger of the soul for holy things, prayer, and all other products of the holy life, will come as naturally as fruit on a tree.

The vine suffers more than any other tree. It is pruned in spring, and in winter cut down to the ground. Its bunches are thinned with unsparing rigour; the ground is often strewn with tendrils and leaves. So with Christ and His Church, God's vine—there is pain and anguish that cut to the heart, as the Husbandman prunes and the world despises. The nailing to the trellis-work is a sharp discipline. But what matter, if fruit be borne for God and man!

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, October 26, 1902.

Joshua and Caleb (Josh. xiv. 5-15).

Golden Text—Josh. xiv. 14.

THE victory of Jericho opened the gate to the promised land; the next step was defeat through disobedience. The sin revealed and the criminal stoned, Ai was conquered. Both in the southern (x.) and in the northern portions of the land (xi.) Joshua came off victor also. In seven years the land was practically conquered, though not actually possessed (xiii. 1). Israel was resting, and Eleazar and Joshua with the princes of Israel were by command of the Lord assembled "at the door of the Tabernacle (xiv. 1) to distribute the inheritance.

While preparation was being made for casting the lots (for position, not boundary) Caleb presented his individual claim before Joshua, and asked for a fulfilment of God's promise made to him through His servant Moses (Deut. i. 36; Num. xiv. 24); but as he was one of the nominees appointed to preside over the division of the country, he might have been charged with using his power as commissioner to his own advantage had he made his request in private. Before the whole assembly with witnesses (6) Joshua's pleasure must have been great to find himself in the position, by the will of God, to grant the request of his comrade in arms and his old and valued friend. Caleb was eighty-five years old and Joshua over ninety, both older by twenty years and more than any single man in the assembly.

Casting lots was appointed by God in the time of Moses (Num. xxvi. 55), and observed for the first time on record at Gilgal. It was a direct appeal to God (Josh. xviii. 6-10; Prov. xvi. 33; Lev. xvi. 8), and did not depend on the caprice of men; had nothing in common with the gambling swindle of the present day, called lottery.

Who was Caleb? A descendant of Duke Kenaz, a grandson of Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 8, 11, 42, 43). A proselyte to the faith of Israel, but an Israelite in heart (Rom. ii. 29). His name signified a "dog." But by faith the heathen dog became a "son" (Matt. xv. 26). He had not crumbs merely, but a large loaf in Israel for his faithful service to God, annexed to the tribe of Judah (xv. 13).

What was Caleb? The Lord's description of him was (1) "My servant"; (2) "had another spirit with him"; (3) "hath followed Me fully." God measured Caleb when He made him the promise, and Caleb did not disappoint the Lord. The Lord understands each boy and girl (Psa. cxxxix.), how much they can do for Him during their life, can and will give them life and strength to do the work He has laid out for them, if only they will trust Him, and follow Him fully. "God is faithful." "Be ye faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. ii. 10).

Caleb's character. A man of (1) sturdy independence, could form an opinion of his own and stand by it, even though he had to stand alone, if it was according to God's Word, even when that Word is scoffed at. (2) Truthful, did not suppress or hide the difficulties, yet said what he felt in his own heart to be right in God's sight. (3) Courage, more than physical, for that often fails under disease and at death. Courage inspired by faith in God will grow stronger as death draws nearer. (4) No confidence apart from God (12), but his faith burned as brightly as it did forty-five years before. Perhaps he had learned by experience his own weakness and God's power (2 Cor. xii. 10). Whether the enemies were five together, or as sand on the sea-shore, Joshua and Caleb met them and conquered by the power of God (x. 5-18). (5) Strong faith. Could count on God for all He had promised (Eph. iii. 20). (6) Whole-hearted devotion to God.

Caleb's claim, founded on the Lord's promise and the visible signs of His preserving care, life and strength (10). The basis of our claim (John xiv. 13). He is faithful that promised (Heb. x. 23). "My reward is with me" (Rev. xxii. 12 and iii. 4). It was a soldier's choice and a warrior's speech.

Caleb's Claim met.—Hebron, the old home of Abraham, mountainous region between the Dead Sea and Mediterranean. The cave of Machpelah was there wherein three patriarchs were buried (Gen. xxiii. 19). The whole range and hill country; Joshua had already reduced the city (x. 37). Headquarters of the Anakims (xv. 14); given to the Levite (xxi. 11); one of the cities of refuge (xxi. 13). As Caleb served so did he reap a full harvest of blessing (Rev. iii. 21). A Christian's old age may be like Mount Hecla, snow on the crest and fire in the heart. "I am on the bright side of seventy," said an aged man, who was nearing glory.

Lessons.

I.—Caleb "wholly followed the Lord." The architect's plans, however good and true, cannot insure a perfect building for strength and beauty unless the workmen one and all fulfil after the plan given. Faithful in mixing the mortar, as in laying the top stone (Eph. vi. 6, 7).

II. Many in Israel followed God when His ways suited them, but when it was difficult or meant self-sacrifice, they went their own way. Result, death.

III. v. 9. "An inheritance reserved in heaven" (1 Pet. i. 4), "Many mansions" (John xiv. 2, 3). Like Caleb, let us encourage any who are seeking the Better Country with Peter's word. "Kept by the power of God." Satan's plan is to discourage. Solemn words (Matt. xviii. 6).

IV. "Sons of Anak"—our giants described (Eph. vi. 12). How to subdue them (1 John iv. 4).

V. Joshua "off guard" (x. 22) entanglement. Peter also, and denied his Lord (Luke xxii. 54-62). Learn to do Pro. iii. 5, 6, 7: not fail thee (2 Cor. xi. 14).

VI. Children and the Bible (viii. 35). Joshua read the law of God to "the little ones."

THE WORD IN THE HEART.

IN the recent South African war, there were occasions when the Kaffir boys showed a rare devotion to their white masters. In one case, a civilian, imprisoned at Mafeking, was able several times to send word to his friends in England, because his faithful black boy succeeded in carrying the messages through the Boer lines. The letters were written on tissue paper, and the Kaffir more than once was compelled to swallow the despatches to escape being captured as a spy. He was willing to jeopardize his life for a master whom he loved, and whose word he carried. Caleb, who loved Moses, went to spy out the land, and brought him word again as it was in his heart (v. 7). It is heart service rather than mere lip service that God requires of us. May we ever respond when He calls, "Here am I, send me."

WHOLLY FOLLOWING THE LORD.

Not long since, a remarkable proclamation was issued by the Governor of the Chinese Province of Shan-si. He explained that the China Inland Mission had, through its representative, refused any indemnity for the destruction of their buildings by the Boxers, because "Jesus, in His instructions, inculcated forbearance and forgiveness, and all desire for revenge is discouraged." The Governor added in the proclamation: "From this time forward I charge you all to bear in mind this example, as taught by Jesus, and at the same time to exemplify the words of Confucius to treat with kindness the kind act of others." The missionaries, in wholly following in the steps of Jesus, softened the heart of the Chinese Governor, and caused him to issue the remarkable proclamation. Very often in this our land, the Lord's disciples are compelled to confess that the mind that was in Christ Jesus is not seen in them, and it should be our aim to say with Caleb, "I wholly followed the Lord my God" (v. 8).

THE REWARD OF FAITHFUL SERVICE.

More than sixty years ago a sailor was wrecked on the island of Tristan, near St. Helena, in the Atlantic. On deciding to remain there, he was eventually elected governor of the place. During his long stay on the island he was able, both personally and by his direction as leader, to save the lives of a great many shipwrecked persons, and at different times he was the recipient of a number of tokens of gratitude from the rulers of the nations that had been benefited. On one occasion the President of the United States presented him with a gold chronometer and chain, the King of Italy also gave a gold medal, and our late Queen, in recognition of his services, sent him a portrait of herself. If the faithful service of one man was thus rewarded by more than one earthly sovereign, shall not God reward those who are loyal and true to Himself? The Lord, through Moses, said to Caleb, "Surely the land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritauce, and thy children's for ever" (v. 9), and God will as truly keep his word concerning us.

THE LORD KEEPETH ALIVE.

Some months ago, after a service at a London City Mission Hall, the preacher was bidding farewell to his congregation, when a young soldier approached him, and explained that as a lad he attended the Mission Sunday-school. Running away from home, he had enlisted, and during the recent war had been wounded and left for dead upon the battlefield. By the mercy of God he was rescued, and in a field hospital had been led to God by a Christian nurse. Then it was he remembered his early training, and on returning home he felt it his duty to visit the Mission Hall, and thank God because, in the words of Caleb, the Lord had kept him alive (v. 10). The word of God is as faithful to-day; "He shall still preserve thee from all evil; He shall preserve thy soul." The Lord may be sparing our lives for the accomplishment of great things through us.

Scottish Notes.

THE Bible Booth in connection with the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland recently finished its round for the season at Lanark, the following places having been also visited—Greenock, Glasgow, Paisley, Dumbarton, and Ayr. The sales included 553 Bibles and 1,356 New Testaments, while 26,900 tracts were distributed. The work has been carried through under the direction of Mr. Daniel Graham, superintendent for Glasgow (43, Holmhead Street), who has been loyally supported in his efforts by the local colporteurs. In this way the quiet, unobtrusive work of the men is brought before the public, while at the same time an entirely new and needy field is sown with the Gospel seed.

Rev. George Fleming, U.F. Church, formerly of Edinburgh, now of Kilmarnock, has been appointed as a missionary to the New Hebrides, through Dr. James Paton, of Glasgow, under instructions from the Victorian Presbyterian Church. He leaves early in 1903, along with three others—two medical and two clerical—destined for the same field of labour. Dr. M'Causland and Mr. Fleming go for the Victorian Church, and Dr. Nicholson and Rev. Mr. Yates for the John G. Paton Mission Fund.

A Cottage Hospital has been provided for soldiers who, on account of incurable illnesses, have been discharged from the Army, and are not eligible for admission into any existing hospital or institution in Scotland. Up to the present time many of these men have practically had no place to which they could go to spend or to end their days, except the poorhouse infirmary, or the poorest parts of our great cities. A small and influential committee has taken the matter in hand, Lady Campbell, of Garscube, has most generously placed her Cottage Hospital at the disposal of the committee for one year, and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein has become patron and shown a practical interest in the scheme. The Garscube Cottage Hospital for Sick and Incurable Soldiers is situated in a choice spot, west of Maryhill, in quiet and beautiful surroundings. The house is well equipped for dealing with consumption and various prevailing illnesses. Everything is done that can be done to alleviate the sufferings and brighten the lives of the soldiers who are received. Dr. Robert Gourlay, Bank of Scotland, St. Vincent Place, Glasgow, is honorary treasurer.

At the annual Conference of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild, Rev. D. W. Wilson, Stobhill, speaking of the work in a mining centre, lamented the ceaseless migration of population that took place, and said that it was leading to a steady deterioration of character. Never was more done for the youth of the country, yet the net result too often was the production of the pleasure-loving animal. Never a good book was opened nor a sermon heard. Faculties of thought, of observation, of spiritual possibility were all unused. Every influence that would quicken their intellectual life, or feed their immortal souls, or ennoble their higher nature, was shunned and avoided almost as they would the pestilence. Newspapers were bought, but not to read leading articles, nor what was happening in the country or world, but for betting news. The many hours of spare time which, if rightly employed, would make our youths fit to hold their own intellectually and morally with the best, were spent in lounging at street corners, playing cards, or in kicking and hunting the ball. Not that he disbelieved in amusements or athletic sports, but young men should remember that they had a higher nature as well as a lower, a soul as well as a body.

At the annual meeting of the Dundee Home Mission, held a few days ago, Rev. Dr. C. M. Grant presided. Mr. Andrew Hutcheson, Vice-Convener of Perthshire, gave an address on the subject of Home Mission work. Rev. W. Clow (Glasgow) said that at the present time, on the part of the Home Mission workers, there ought to be a noble discontent at the resultlessness of their labours. He proceeded to refer to what he described as the fallacy of environment finding expression in the idea that if libraries were established in every street, to educate a man and his children, public baths to keep their bodies clean, and such like, a state of society approaching the kingdom of heaven would be realized. The old story of the Garden of Eden, of Judas who betrayed his Master, went to show that the great stress laid on environment as a factor in social and religious reform was only a fallacy after all. Let them do their best for their fellow men in improving their material conditions, but he urged those engaged in mission work to neglect no opportunity of enunciating the promise of salvation as contained in the Gospel. He strongly impressed as a Christian duty the obligation of temperance, remarking that the drinking customs of the country were a great impediment to the success of the Christian Church, and that drinking ministers were a stumbling-block to Christian life in any community.

Irish Notes.

AT a largely-attended meeting of ministers and members of various churches held in the Y.M.C.A. buildings, Belfast, last week, Rev. W. Park Mill presiding, it was resolved to observe week November 2-9 as a time of special effort on behalf of the salvation of the young people in the Sunday-schools, each school to make its own arrangements for the purpose of carrying on the mission.

There are twenty-eight Congregational churches in Ireland, and of these only twelve are self-supporting. The other sixteen are sustained chiefly by contributions from England and Scotland. All are doing a good work.

In connection with the mission to Sunday-school scholars suggested some time ago by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and which is about to be held during the first week of November, it is worthy of note that nearly all the ministers of the Irish Church parishes in Belfast and neighbourhood had resolved to fall in with it.

Meetings to bid farewell to missionaries going out to India under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society have been held both in Londonderry and in Dublin. In the latter case the Archbishop of Dublin presided, and the valedictory address was delivered by the Dean of St. Patrick's. The mission party consisted of three clergymen and two ladies.

The Bishop of Ossory, Dr. Crozier, has taken a new departure, and one which should bear much fruit. He has appointed three of his clergy each to give two courses of lectures, at suitable centres, to Sunday-school teachers on their work, and he has established an examination for Sunday-school teachers, in connection with which he proposes to give valuable prizes.

The twenty-ninth annual Convention in connection with the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance was held last week in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, and, as usual, was largely attended. Among those present and taking part in the proceedings were Dr. George Hanson, Dr. A. T. Pierson, H. Amand Scott (Wolverhampton), A. J. Palmer (Folkestone), Lord Radstock, Sir Algernon Coote, Bart., and Major-General Dillon. The various addresses were impressive and practical, and were listened to with deep attention.

Welsh Notes.

IT has been decided to have two Welsh sermons at the autumnal meetings of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland. The selected preachers are Revs. Charles Davies, of Cardiff, and E. T. Jones, Llanelly.

The new vicar of Swansea, Rev. Talbot Rice, has already initiated new movements which are full of promise. The first is a series of open-air services, which have been well attended. The other and more recent is a service for men only. At the first of these there were some 700 present.

Through the death of the late Rev. Dr. Herber Evans, of Carnarvon, the editorship of the monthly magazine of the Welsh Congregationalists, Y Dysgedydd, became vacant. The vacancy has now been filled by the appointment of Rev. B. Evans, D.D., and Mr. Jonah Thomas, of Liverpool, to be joint editors.

At the annual meetings of the North Wales Wesleyan Synod at Ruthin, Mr. J. Herbert Roberts, M.P., spoke strongly on behalf of general temperance instruction in day schools, and gave it as his opinion that the time had come when such instruction should have a recognised place in the elementary educational system of the State.

The Bala-Bangor Theological College has commenced its winter's term under cheering and encouraging circumstances. The number of new students is eight. The examiners were able to speak in favourable terms of the attainments of those who had sat for the entrance examination. The total number of students at the college is now twenty-eight.

The annual meetings of the Swansea Christian Endeavourers were held on Thursday, October 9. The report showed a membership of 629, with 160 associates. An encouraging feature of the report was the fact of a great and increasing desire for open-air work. One society alone had visited 1,428 ships in the Swansea harbour. The annual Endeavour sermon was preached by Rev. Justin Evans, of London.

A resolution was passed condemnatory of the Education Bill and urging the Wesleyans of North Wales, in case the Bill should pass without any mandate from the people, to resist it, and make it impossible for its provisions to be carried into practice. The report of the Twentieth Century Fund showed that over £13,000 have already come to hand and £2,000 are remaining to be collected. At the missionary meeting addresses were delivered by Mr. J. Herbert Lewis, M.P., and several other speakers.

The John Cory Sailors' and Soldiers' Rest was opened at Cardiff on Monday, October 6. The former hall having become too small, the present buildings have been erected at a cost of £6,000 by the gentleman whose name they bear, while Mrs. Cory has given £1,000 towards the expenses of furnishing, &c. The new Rest is splendidly adapted for the purposes for which it has been built. At the opening ceremony a message was read from Princess Henry of Battenberg, wishing the Rest every success.

The Home Mission Committee of the Welsh Baptists have issued a report which presents some interesting features. In the mission churches alone there has been an increase of 199 in membership during last year. The total membership of these aided churches now stands at 1,135. In outlining modes of aggression the suggestions of the committee cover a wide field. They include medical assistance for the poor, the institution of ragged schools, rescue work, aid for discharged prisoners, &c.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Stratford Association commenced its winter work a few days ago with a reception given by the president, Mr. Clement O. Boardman. About 200 young men were present, and in the course of the evening they were addressed by Rev. Alex. Jeffrey.

The winter's work of the Derby Association has been commenced with much promise. The syllabus is replete with engagements of the most varied and interesting kind. On the religious side, a start has been made with an entirely successful mission conducted by Messrs. Frank and Bewley Weaver. The building debt is now reduced by payments and promises to £1,764.

The annual conference of the South-Western district, comprising the counties of Devon and Cornwall, took place at Exeter, on the 1st inst. Rev. H. M. Booth conducted a devotional meeting at 10 a.m., which was followed by a business session. At the afternoon meeting a paper was read by Mr. A. K. Yapp, travelling secretary for Lancashire, upon "Causes of Failure, Conditions of Success;" and a special address was given by Rev. Chancellor Edmonds, B.D.

The reception of past and present students at the science and commercial classes organized by the Sunderland Association, held recently, was attended by a large number of members and friends. Various works, models, &c., were exhibited, and served to illustrate the splendid educational work carried on. The previous evening a successful inaugural meeting was held of the "Get One" Club, which was recently formed at this centre for the purpose of securing the interest of the members and associates in a special effort to increase the membership, by getting outside young men to join.

The Eastbourne Y.M.C.A. made a good start with the winter's work on Wednesday week, when the mayor of the town gave a reception in the rooms of the Association. After welcoming his guests, the mayor spoke appreciatively of the good work of the Y.M.C.A. throughout the country, and of the value which the Aldersgate Street Branch had been to him when a young man in the city of London. Of the work of the local branch he spoke in high terms, and urged upon the members the importance of making full use of its privileges and advantages, which are designed to build up strong Christian characters.

Hanley Y.M.C.A. celebrated the opening of its new premises on the 9th inst., when, supported by the mayor, clergymen and ministers, and a number of prominent townsmen, Mr. Robert Heath, J.P., the president, performed the ceremony, a silver key being presented to him for the purpose. Mr. J. T. Harris, J.P., presided at an afternoon meeting, and Lord Kinnaird at a public demonstration in the evening in the new Association hall. Mr. W. H. Mills (Exeter Hall) and Mr. W. M. Oatts (Glasgow) were among the speakers, and the proceedings, which were characterized by much interest and enthusiasm, give promise of a largely extended work being carried on by the Association.

Special meetings of the National Council were held at Exeter Hall on Friday last. To the regret of the representatives, who came together from all parts of the country, Sir George Williams, the honoured president, was prevented by indisposition from being present. At the morning session, returns were presented from the various districts of the English Union, showing an increase of twenty-three Associations and of 6,462 members. The important question of the development of the work in large cities, by the formation of branch organizations, was considered. Bristol, among provincial towns, was referred to as an example of success in this direction, the central Association being now surrounded by no fewer than five growing branch efforts, while there is a demand for others in various suburban localities. The reports of the travelling secretaries, in relation to preparations for the work of the current autumn session, afforded much encouragement

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is revival spread.)

Mr. W. R. Lane at Gloucester.

A WEEK'S mission at Gloucester was concluded by Mr. W. R. Lane on October 6. The services were conducted under the auspices of the Non-conformist Ministers' Union, and they were held in the largest hall in the city, which towards the end of the mission was crowded. A goodly number testified to the blessing they received, and a notable feature was the number of men who professed conversion. There was universal regret that the mission was so short, and a general feeling that if it had continued longer there was the promise of large ingathering.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Alloa.

A very encouraging mission has just concluded at Alloa, in connection with Greenside Mission Church, by Mr. Chas. E. Barraclough. The numbers attending the meetings increased steadily till the end, and the closing gatherings were unusually large. The processions each evening and the Saturday evening open-air meetings created quite a stir in the town, and were the means of drawing quite a number within doors. Meetings were also held during the dinner hour at the gate of the large wool factory, and at these hundreds were present daily. "Chalk Talks to Children" constituted a feature of the mission. A. Cormack.

Blackpool Theatre Services.

For some seventeen Sundays this season the Alhambra Theatre, on the Promenade, Blackpool, has been used for religious services with manifest blessing and encouragement. The speakers have been well-known and tried workers in the Master's vineyard, and many have been the signs and tokens of blessing. The closing services were taken last Lord's Day by Mr. A. K. Yapp, travelling secretary for Lancashire Y.M.C.A.'s. The visitors to Blackpool, as certified by the railway companies, number over three millions, and it is estimated that from eighty to one hundred thousand persons have gathered to listen to "The Old, Old Story." L. J.

Dr. Harry Guinness at Exeter Hall.

The fortnight's mission to men by Dr. Harry Guinness at Exeter Hall, has commenced with encouraging signs. On Saturday last, this gifted and earnest evangelist spoke on "Purity" to a large and attentive audience, when salutary truths and lofty appeals evidently found entrance to many minds. On Lord's Day last, Dr. Guinness addressed two large audiences at 3.45 and 7 p.m., and his Scriptural, powerful addresses were graciously owned. The lucidity and fulness with which the Gospel plan was set forth were not without their effect on the crowds. In response to the invitation, many present signified their intention to yield to the Saviour. The mission is to last until October 26, but there will be no meeting on Saturday, 18th inst.

High Kirk, Kilmarnock.

Mr. William Hill's visit in March last was attended by such great blessing that he was invited to pay a return visit to conduct a series of special services at the beginning of the winter's work. These services have just concluded. The nightly meetings have been largely attended, while on Sabbath evenings the building has been filled, not only with men and women, but with the presence and power of God, resulting in the impression of souls. In addition to the evening meetings, Mr. Hill has given a series of Bible studies on the spiritual life in the afternoons; these have been the channel of very great help and blessing to many of the parish workers, as was evidenced by the verbal testimonies given at the closing meeting on Sabbath evening.

High Park, Southport.

The tent mission held in the above locality for six weeks under the auspices of the London Evangelization Society (Liverpool Branch), by Messrs. Smart and Thompson, have been greatly blessed. It was a faithful proclamation of the Gospel of the grace of God to a poor fallen race. There were also several very striking cases of conversion, two being led out into the light from the darkness of Roman Catholicism.

A cottage has been taken for the continuance of the work during the winter, and already it is filled on the Sabbath and on two nights a week with those "whose hearts the Lord has touched." It is intended, God willing, to erect suitable premises early in the spring of next year by members of the Baptist Tabernacle and other friends who have thrown themselves into the work.

Canning Town Christian Mission, E.

Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a fruitful fifteen-days' mission at the Canning Town Christian Mission, E. Many came to hear the story of Jesus preached faithfully, and we believe that some of the graceless found the Saviour.

As the mission proceeded great interest was aroused, and on the closing night the hall was crowded. The Mission, situated in a typical East London district, is surrounded by large factories, and is in close proximity to Victoria Docks. The population is a shifting one, and very poor, so that there were difficulties to overcome; yet the attendances and general results were full of encouragement. An outstanding feature was the presence of representatives of various nationalities; among the inquirers was a Swede.

Alexander Smith.

At Ayr Races.

We have to praise God for the visit of three evangelists from the Open-Air Mission at this carnival of Satan. It was a time of refreshing to God's people, as well as of blessing to the unsaved. Meetings were held each day on the racecourse, and on the showground in the evening. The message of salvation was told forth faithfully and lovingly. An immense crowd gathered to the meeting on Sabbath evening, conducted by the Bethel Mission, under the leadership of Mr. W. C. Gray. The O.A.M. evangelists, with some local friends, addressed the crowd from a show platform, kindly lent by the proprietor. The Holy Spirit was evidently at work in many hearts. Thousands of booklets were distributed to the crowds on their return from the racecourse, and we believe there will be an abundant harvest from this wide-spread sowing of the good seed. J. Y.

Coatbridge Christian Union.

This Union has just completed a fruitful three weeks' mission with Miss Glover, from Edinburgh. From the very first meeting the Spirit of God was manifestly present. Miss Glover's addresses, which were all founded on familiar Bible incidents, were clothed with fresh thoughts, and were sent home with power to the hearts of the people, as was evidenced by the many who came out to the inquiry room each evening. As we listened with lowered heads to the steady tramp of inquirers going forward, our hearts were raised to God in thanks for His loving kindness. Miss Glover's mission was planned only for a fortnight, but so great was the interest and blessing that we had joyfully to extend it a week longer, and towards the end the large hall was packed each evening. The afternoon Bible readings were a source of inspiration to all who had the privilege of attending, and seldom in Coatbridge has it been our privilege to witness such large and interesting open-air services as were held each evening. The Union has been greatly strengthened, and will no doubt be able to accomplish a greater work for the Master as the result of this soul-refreshing season. J. J., Sec.

"The Rowdy Dozen."

The carriage works of the London and North-Western Railway at Wolverton, Bucks, find employment for nearly 5,000 men. About the middle of August, Mr. J. Hawkins, of the Railway Mission accompanied by Mrs. Hawkins and Miss Wallis, commenced a mission, and from the very first it was evident that a great work had begun. Three meetings were held daily on week-days, and four on Sundays. Large numbers attended, as many as 1,000 coming in and around the tent during the midday meeting, and the interest was sustained to the end of the mission.

A large proportion of the converts were young men and women, some of the former being notorious for their godlessness prior to the mission, their Sundays being spent in the fields, playing cards and gambling.

A band of these called the "Rowdy Dozen" came to the tent one night with a view to upset the meeting, but their leader was brought to Christ before they left the tent, and one after another was reached, until the whole dozen were saved. These young men, with others who have been blessed, have formed themselves into a band for open-air preaching, and have already visited several villages in the neighbourhood, where they have held some bright, happy meetings, one after another testifying to the great things God had done for them. There have been several instances where both husband and wife have been converted, while in some families two and three members have been blessed.

It is intended to form a branch of the Railway Mission at Wolverton. Miss Hampson, who assisted at the tent for the last month, has been left in charge.

The Weaver Brothers in Aberdeen.

The Brothers Weaver have just concluded a most encouraging mission at "The Granite City," under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A. For the Sabbath evenings the music hall—accommodating 3,000 people—was used, and, on both occasions, its capacity was taxed to the utmost. The audiences on week-nights would average about 700, while at the closing service over 1,000 were present. The Gospel was preached nightly by Mr. Bewley Weaver with impressiveness and power, resulting in much searching of heart and sincere seeking after the Saviour on the part of many, both old and young. Scarcely a night passed that did not find the inquiry room thronged with anxious seekers.

Two meetings for men only, held in the Y.M.C.A. hall, were largely attended. On the second Sabbath a meeting for women was conducted by Mr. Frank Weaver in the Bon Accord Congregational Church, the Y.W.C.A. co-operating.

As usual Mr. Frank Weaver's singing did much to brighten the services all through, and his solos undoubtedly helped to prepare the hearts of the people for the message which followed from the lips of his brother. The evangelists received valuable assistance from an earnest band of workers, and also had the sympathy and support of many of the ministers.

Poole Temperance Society.

Mr. Bob Johnson, the converted minstrel, has just concluded an encouraging Gospel Temperance mission in Poole, under the auspices of the above society. The chair was taken on the different evenings by Alderman Curtis, Rev. Norman Bennet (Rector of Hamworthy), Mr. Smith (hon. sec. of the Dorset branch of the Temperance Society), &c., and the audience grew larger each night, until on the concluding evening a full hall testified to the earnest work of the missioner.

Mr. Johnson gave many interesting details in regard to his former life, and told with much vividness how he was converted on the Epsom Racecourse in 1893 through the Racecourse Mission, headed by Mr. Josiah Nix. There could be no doubt of the sincerity of the speaker in giving his experiences. His one aim was to put Christ the Saviour from sin before his hearers, and by doing so to bring in those who might be entangled, as he had been in his past, by sin in its many forms, and more particularly by drunkenness. Mr. Johnson's songs, accompanied by himself on the banjo or mandoline, were full of Gospel truth, and must have left a very deep impression upon those present. A number of pledges were taken during the course of the mission, and there can be no doubt also that many have been stirred up to take a more definite interest in the Temperance cause. N. B.

Mr. J. J. Sims in Dublin.

From September 28 to October 9 Mr. J. J. Sims, Canadian Evangelist, conducted a Gospel mission under the auspices of the Dublin City Y.M.C.A. On Sundays limelight services were held in the great Round Room of the Rotunda. This building, being "non-religious" was in itself an attraction, and we are not exaggerating in saying that hundreds of Roman Catholics were present and listened quietly to the preaching of the Gospel. The room was full both downstairs and in the gallery, and the audience must certainly have numbered 1500.

Night after night throughout Mr. Sims' men's meetings cases of inquiry and of genuine conversion were noted. One notable feature of the mission was the very large number of unconverted people attending. On one memorable night, when Mr. Sims asked those who were Christians to raise the hand, about one-third of the audience did so, showing that the majority in the meeting were just the kind of men one is most anxious to reach.

One night was reserved for a boys' Gospel meeting. The attendance was a record one, the hall being filled. The singing that night was inspiring, and many boys signified their desire to trust the Saviour.

Mrs. W. A. Boyd, wife of the general secretary of the association, rendered valuable service by singing the Gospel on several occasions; very powerful was her message of song.

Londonderry United Mission.

Londonderry has been favoured by the presence of the two widely-known evangelists, Rev. Edgar L. Williams and Mr. H. L. Maxwell. The week-night services commenced in the Union Hall; but it was inadequate to accommodate the numbers that eagerly flocked together. The capacious Guildhall, the largest in the city, was secured, and so great were the gatherings that on several occasions many were unable to obtain admission. The interest deepened as the mission advanced; many were deeply impressed, and expressed their desire to know Christ and henceforth to lead Christlike lives. The children of God have experienced a season of spiritual refreshing, backsliders have been reclaimed, and careless sinners led to rest and peace in Christ Jesus. Those in the city who projected the mission have good reason to thank God for the visit of their beloved brethren.

Mr. Williams has proclaimed the truth fearlessly, fully and fervently. On Sabbath week his addresses reached high-water mark, his sermon at noon in the Waterside Church was strong and tender, and made a deep impression upon the large audience. The address to men in the afternoon was accompanied by the manifest power of the Holy Spirit; while the earnest words in the evening to an immense audience in the Guildhall, were rich in results. The afternoon Bible readings were highly appreciated. The evangelists subsequently sailed for New York. As Mr. Williams has several requests for further evangelistic meetings in the large cities, he is likely to return in January or February for several months of work in the United Kingdom. His address in the interval will be his own home, Peoria, Illinois, U.S.A. J. S.

Rev. Thomas Waugh at Crook.

Wesleyan Methodists at Crook, Durham, have closed a ten days' mission, conducted by Rev. Thomas Waugh. From the first service there was an ever-growing, ever-deepening influence pervading the place. The congregations were overwhelming before the mission was half through, every available foot of space, including the lobbies and vestries, being densely packed with attentive, reverent hearers. Mr. Waugh's sermons were of the most searching character, laying hold of the deepest and holiest feelings of the soul. The response was splendid. Scores of the young people of the district, sons and daughters of Wesleyan families, have quietly, yet boldly, volunteered to become Christ's men and Christ's women. Two-thirds of the seekers are men, and nearly all are in the very morning of their lives.

A Christian Workers' Convention was held in the afternoon of the last day of the mission, when about 400 of the Christian workers of the district met for counsel and mutual help. Mr. Waugh delivered an inspiring address at the last service of the mission, the chapel was filled to its utmost capacity. Many young men and women must have come on purpose to surrender themselves to Christ, for as soon as the invitation was given they filed through the aisles to the inquiry rooms quietly and rapidly until both of the rooms devoted to that purpose were crowded.

The Evangelization Society.

In a pithy and readable account of work, just issued by the Evangelization Society, Mr. John Wood gives some interesting particulars of recent missions.

A report from Whitehaven says:—"The last meetings of the mission were held in the Wesleyan church, lent for the occasion, which was crowded to excess by some 1,000 or 1,200 people, and as the evangelist dealt with the question, 'What shall I do then with Jesus?' the vast audience was visibly moved. At the close the whole congregation rose and spontaneously sang the doxology. The eyes of parents were dimmed with tears of joy as they saw their children dedicating themselves to the Lord. Never do we remember a time of greater blessing at the hands of our Heavenly Father; hundreds are grateful to God for the mission."

A vivid account of a Barrow-in-Furness mission says:—The results exceeded our most sanguine expectations. From the first the evangelist found acceptance. Sunday by Sunday the large tent was crowded, and on the week nights large congregations assembled to hear the good news of the Gospel clearly and lovingly explained. Many professed to receive the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour."

"I desire," a Preston correspondent wrote, "to record my very great joy in the mission which is now closing. Many fellow-Christians desire to express with me their unstinted thankfulness for a society which sends out, in these days of 'itching ears,' men who make no compromise with sin or with sinners, yet tell out a glorious Saviour for such."

A brief summary of the work says:—"The cold weather of May and June, with the occasional heavy rains, especially in some localities, has not only tested the strength of the speakers, but has also tried—perhaps in some cases seriously—the strength of the tents, so that a heavy bill will again be before us for renewals and repairs. Serious though this is, we are still more concerned about the health of two or three of the evangelists, which has suffered considerably. We have taken under canvas during the season the large number of nearly 5,000 meetings."

Mr. Frank Penfold has concluded a tent mission held in Bull Field, Dunstable. A number of seekers were pointed to Christ during the two months that the services lasted.

The mission recently conducted by Mr. W. Collard at Hope Mission Hall, Merton, gave much encouragement to Christian people, and was the means of impressing some of the unconverted with a sense of their spiritual need. Mr. Collard's vigorous words of exhortation and experience were very effective.

A large number of theatrical women and girls accepted Mr. Forbes' invitation to tea on Thursday last at Orange Street Chapel, Leicester Square. After tea, sacred songs and solos were sung and brief addresses were given.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has conducted an eight days' mission at Summer Hill, Newport, Mon. The Bible readings and evangelistic services were very helpful. Many have received a great spiritual impulse, and in the hearts of others there has been kindled an earnest desire to know Jesus Christ and the blessedness of fellowship with Him.

Two missions in Ireland call for notice. Mr. Jack Cooke, the boy preacher, has been addressing overflowing audiences in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Wellington Place, Belfast, and Rev. John M'Neill, M.A., has been preaching to similar congregations in the First Presbyterian Church, Armagh. In each case several persons have professed to have decided for the Saviour.

After twenty-five years absence, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has revisited the banks of the Tyne, conducting a two weeks' united mission, ending September 26, in the Byker Presbyterian Mission Church (where Miss Baxter, a deaconess from Ireland, has had charge for the past two years, during which time many new members have been made). Mr. Bennett Anderson's visit was much blessed to the unsaved and to the encouragement of believers.

Mr. J. H. Cooke, of the Evangelization Society, has conducted a mission at Wells, under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A. Meetings were held in the Guildhall; the attendances were large, and the word was with power. The mission was prolonged for a week, in another and less comfortable building, but the numbers were well sustained. The Gospel appeals were impressive and persuasive, and we have every reason to believe that many accepted Christ as their Saviour. J. H. T.

Mr. John Elliott, of Torquay, after several months' illness, is so far recovered that he has been able to commence preaching again. He has had meetings for Christians as well as Gospel meetings in Bournemouth and neighbourhood; and for several Sundays has been preaching in various places in Devonshire. Mr. Elliott has visited Exminster and Countess Weir (where it is proposed to continue a weekly service during the winter). All the meetings have been well attended, and there has been manifested blessing.

Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted Gospel missions of an encouraging character at Bovey Tracey and Moreton Hampstead, Devon. Commencing at Bovey Tracey on Saturday, September 20, he continued till the 27th, passing to Moreton Hampstead for Sunday, 28th, the mission concluding on October 2. The Bible readings were much enjoyed, and the children's meetings won the attention and cordial interest of the young auditors. The outcome of the missions has been to deepen the spiritual life in both towns, and to revive the aggressive forces of the churches influenced.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Requests for Prayer.

[The attention of friends who are laid aside by illness, and are consequently unable to take part in public ministry, is particularly directed to the movements of evangelists, and to requests made under this heading from time to time. Doubtless such readers will be glad to join in presenting these petitions at the throne of grace.]

For blessing on a series of services being held in Bethesda Hall, Hull.

That a decidedly Evangelical clergyman may be sent to a rising watering-place.

For the Ipswich monthly meeting for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, October 22. Speaker, Dr. A. T. Pierson.

For revival blessing in connection with the visit to Callander, N.B., of Mr. Harry Young, evangelist, at the end of October.

For a mission to children at George Yard Mission, Whitechapel, from October 19 to 26, to be conducted by Mr. C. Dudley Smith.

A mother asks the prayers of Christians for God's blessing and protection to rest on her daughter in her new home, and for the step she has taken.

On behalf of a parochial mission in Christ Church, Southport, to be commenced on Oct. 18 by Rev. C. Fenwick Ward, rector of Albert Memorial Church, Manchester, and carried on from Oct. 20-27 inclusive by Rev. F. S. Webster, rector of All Souls, Langham Place, W.

That wisdom may be given to Parliament, and especially to the House of Commons, in dealing with the Education Bill, so that a comprehensive measure may be passed for giving education to the children of this country, without bringing their young minds under influences which would shut out the pure Gospel of the Word of God.

St. Vincent.—We recently noticed the misfortune of Mr. George Robertson, sugar planter, owner of the Wallibou estate, who lost his home and all else by the eruption of the Soufrière. Rev. Slater Sunderland, of Osset, Yorks., formerly missionary in St. Vincent, writes to us:—"The Government has given Mr. Robertson 400 acres of land in another part of the island, and made him a small money grant. But the land is in a wild state, and will cost much money and time to clear and bring into cultivation. There are no buildings, only such as are dilapidated; these will have to be repaired and new ones erected. Plants, horses, mules, stock and implements will have to be purchased, together with household furniture, clothing, and sustenance for the family. Years must elapse before anything like a comfortable living can be secured. It is just as this juncture that kindly help is needed."

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.—The annual All Day of Prayer for Israel was held as usual at the Central Hall, Philpot Street, Whitechapel, on September 30, the meetings at 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 6.30 p.m. being seasons of much blessing and manifest power. It was a great disappointment to all that the founder of the mission, Rev. John Wilkinson, was absent, being confined to his bed all day. In the morning, Colonel Morton presided, and the subjects specially considered were "Confession" and "Thanksgiving," and prayer that God may awaken in the Church of God an interest in the Jew warranted by the Word of God. Rev. S. H. Wilkinson, speaking on Ezek. viii, gave an earnest address on God's promises concerning Israel. In the afternoon, Mr. James E. Mathieson took the chair, and Pastor Frank White spoke. Colonel Morton presided at the evening gathering, and Pastor Fuller Gooch spoke on Rom. x. 1, emphasizing the necessity of tenderness and compassion, especially among workers for the salvation of the Jews.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To remove a misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

The Fight over the Bill. We trust that our readers are alive to the nature of the crisis which the nation has reached. Little by little, "while men slept," the enemy has encroached upon our Protestant liberties; but now in the Education Bill open war has been declared. There is, unfortunately, now no room for doubt that it is a priestly move—an attempt to capture the children. We made this clear last week. The Government is determined at all hazards to force the Bill through: if they fail, they know they must resign. Mr. Chamberlain said so last week in as many words. The struggle is going on in Parliament. We can do something by protest, but we can do much more by prayer. As we believe that the issues involved are most grave, let us wait much upon God—in the congregation, in the family, in the closet—that He will keep His people faithful to their trust, and that He will overrule the plans of men.

A Shameful Threat. A prominent London minister has received a letter headed with a skull and cross-bones, threatening him with the same fate as Mr. Kensit if he persists in speaking against the Education Bill and the influence of the priests in seeking to get it passed. And this is in a Protestant land and in the twentieth century. When will England have her eyes opened to behold her danger? Well may we pray for our country at this time.

Out of the Heart's Abundance. The address recently delivered to the New College students by Dr. Vaughan Pryce, on Preachers and Preaching, is well worthy of perusal by all who seek to proclaim the Divine Word. Dr. Pryce made one point of vital interest, when he showed that the Gospel won its most remarkable triumphs before preaching became an art. The great masters of the Apostolic and post-Apostolic ages spake out of the abundance of a heart inspired by the Holy Ghost, and a mind permeated with the truth of the Scriptures. We should not be troubled with discussions concerning the decay of preaching if this natural and old-world method prevailed to-day. "Every man can be eloquent when he feels deeply," says a great French writer, and the great requisite for any preacher is to feel deeply. Careful preparation in private and abandon in public will impress any audience. But, when the canons of art prevail and dominate all else, the result is likely to be coldness and death.

Conjecture or Revelation? The case against the assumptions of the extreme higher critics was admirably and succinctly put by Prebendary Wace at the recent Church Congress, when he reduced the whole matter to one of Conjecture versus Revelation. Some devout men who have taken their place with the critics think to preserve their faith and devotion while they allow a great part of the Bible to crumble away at their feet. They will yet discover that it cannot be done. It is astonishing that so many do not perceive the force of the position stated by Prebendary Wace. On the one hand, the necessity of revelation is admitted—it is impossible to know God unless He reveals Himself. Yet, on the other hand, the Book which par excellence professes to be the means of revelation, is interpreted to be only the record of human guesses after God—full of mistakes and patchwork. We must face this supreme question firmly—Have we definite revelation from God, or not? Prebendary Wace has given us unmistakably a clear issue.

Assimilation of the Truth. We have often heard illustrations employed to set forth a Christian's functions as a servant of God and men, representing him as a passive channel along which Divine power may flow. This is not the whole truth of the matter. The Bible illustration is the true one, which represents the prophet receiving the Divine words into his heart, assimilating them with his own life, and then going forth to speak to men in the name of God. The force of the truth through us largely depends upon its force upon us. The Divine method is not to employ human agents as passive instruments, but to inspire and elevate them; then their words will possess a marvellous testimony for God. There is a sentence spoken by the prophet Ezekiel which contains the secret of the whole thing:—"The Spirit entered into me when He spake unto me." Inspiration of the soul comes, not in any mechanical manner, but as the result of carefully attending to the Word of God, and assimilating it.

"Then Cometh the Devil." We are glad to see that The Examiner takes up a subject often mooted in these columns, and boldly attacks a custom that is too prevalent in a great number of churches, and exceedingly detrimental to religious impressions. It is the custom of playing an inappropriate voluntary at the close of the sermon. More frequently than not, the organ is made to display its capacities and range, rather than become the vehicle for deepening any good impression made by the sermon—for an organ may become that. Our Lord warned His hearers that the critical time in a soul's history is just after the preaching of the Word. When the seed has been sown "then cometh the devil." A gay march played after a sermon on repentance is not likely to help men to be serious. The matter can only be remedied by the churches insisting that the spiritual is not subordinated to the professional.

The Christian Church and Socialism. In the midst of the growing dissatisfaction with the existing social system, an unrest which finds its outlet in so many and such various ways, points to the intensified need not only for a number of pressing reforms, but also for union between the churches for the removal of much evil now eating into the national life. A recent writer referring to the "murderous extreme" to which competition is carried, and the way in which men best in character and highest in education are over-ridden by the unscrupulous, and to the gamblers in high places "who make a 'corner' of the necessaries of life, and openly rob the poor to increase their millions," says:—

> It is increasingly recognised that men as well as conditions must be changed. Hence the emphasis on the disposition of men, on education, on the function of the Church in social movements, on the laws and their faithful execution.

In bringing about this vital change in men as well as in conditions, the Christian teacher should be a powerful factor in hastening the wise public control of public interests, and in removing the social evils which now bar the spread of Christ's kingdom.

The Sunday Rest. It is a pleasure to find so popular a person as the secretary of the Football Association expressing himself with unmistakable clearness concerning Sunday sports and Sunday rest. The men who are mad upon pleasure, Sundays and weekdays alike, and especially those who are labouring to bring the country back to that wretched condition of things which prevailed two or three centuries ago, would do well to heed the words of one who is a chief in the world of sport. Speaking to an interviewer a few days ago, he said:—

> I am utterly against clubs playing on the Sunday. In the strenuous life we lead to-day, men need rest, apart from any other consideration. . . The F.A. have set their faces against Sunday playing. For instance, professional registration forms signed on a Sunday are not valid. It is an offence for a club to induce a player to sign on a Sunday, and clubs and players can be dealt with for these irregularities.

All this is excellent, and we congratulate the Football Association upon its policy. When men learn that incessant sport is injurious to body and mind, we may again recover the sweet calm of the Lord's Day, and with it a frame of mind which will dispose many to hear the Word of God.

"Travelling Churches." An interesting interview with Rev. George Hooper, narrated in the Daily News, records how large numbers of "the lapsed masses" are being reached by means of mission vans, which the journalist dignifies by the designation of "travelling churches." Mr. Hooper's account of the labours of one of the itinerating evangelists, preaching and selling copies of the Scriptures, and of "The Pilgrim's Progress" and other religious publications, is an inspiring one. It is an unvarnished story of untiring Christian zeal, entailing much toil, but full of promise and reward. It would, indeed, be difficult to estimate accurately the results of the work. The Wesleyan body now have forty-six of these vans on the road, and some slight idea of what is being done may be gained from one week-day's round:—

> We started at nine o'clock and travelled sixteen miles. I visited every house on one side of the way, my assistant every house on the other. I called at 249 cottages, and we sold 216 penny Testaments and ten tenpenny Bibles. In many of these homes there was neither a Bible nor a Testament.

A Costly Crusade. It is probable that the municipal laxity in regard to the enforcement of the law against the keepers of disorderly houses is largely due to the fact that the legal process is an expensive one, the cost of which has to be defrayed by the ratepayer. With the view of keeping down the rates, the municipal authorities, therefore, abstain from anything like a vigorous crusade in the interests of morality. The Kensington Council, certainly in the front in respect of desirable work of this kind, is endeavouring to bring about a change, and has now petitioned the Treasury to pay such costs out of the heavy fines which are generally inflicted, instead of appropriating them as at present. The movement is an excellent one, and deserves the support of all Christian Members of Parliament who can bring any influence to bear upon the administration. The concession certainly would result in action being taken in many quarters in which the condition of things at present is far from creditable.

Brewers at Bay. It is eminently satisfactory to find that the brewers in the Midlands apparently do not share the opinion expressed from time to time by members of the Government, as to the validity of the publicans' claim to compensation at the cost of the taxpayer in case of the withdrawal of a licence. Mr. Austen Chamberlain's scheme certainly seems to have solved the difficulty in regard to superabundant drinking-shops so far as Birmingham is concerned. In that city, an amicable agreement between the brewers and distillers owning public-houses and the justices has already resulted in the suppression of no fewer than eighty of the licences, fifty-one having been closed out of ninety-nine in one area alone. The figures throw a lurid light upon the State revenue from drink, and upon the anxiety of the Government to be on good terms with the publican and his masters. The Birmingham licensing magistrates, and their advanced chairman, can, however, it is clearly evident, rise superior to political considerations when the well-being of the people is at stake, and the example they have set in dealing drastically with the licensing problem is one well worthy of imitation.

Pictorial Posters. It is to be hoped that other municipal authorities will follow those at Nottingham, in requiring that before illustrated advertisements are placed upon the walls and hoardings they must be submitted to and sanctioned by the Watch Committee. A number of the placards exhibited, not only upon buildings but in shop windows, especially in connection with theatre performances, are so manifestly objectionable that they can only have the effect of deadening the moral sense of the young; and action in regard to them is just as essential as it is in other directions. Happily the evil can satisfactorily be dealt with under existing powers, and if a few Christian men will take up the subject in each borough council, there soon will be a very desirable improvement.

Well-directed Influence. President Roosevelt has once more shown himself to be an ideal ruler. In all great questions he has magnificently taken the right side. By his prompt and firm interference in the American coal strike he has undoubtedly saved that continent from an industrial disaster. He saw at once where the obstacle was, and with great courage directly attacked it. In thus acting, he offers to all who possess power a fine object-lesson in the art of using influence to the best advantage. We need more men of this type in the world, and especially among ourselves. A people's leaders can often do more by direct influence than through legislation. Certain types of injustice break down more easily under the force of a great personality than through any other means. Those who possess power need to be alert, and to employ it directly on behalf of righteousness, without waiting for committees and congresses.

Straining at a Gnat. Any one familiar with the history of the Vatican will find food for reflection in the fact that several of the daily papers, which had no word of protest to utter when pieces were placed upon the stage in which attempts were made to represent the Saviour, have taken strong exception to the presentation of a Pope in a recent drama. Naturally the writer has disclaimed any intention to offend the susceptibilities of Romanists, and has even claimed the object of increasing in the Protestant mind "the reverence felt for the Pontiff." A study of the private lives of quite a number of the occupants of the Papal Chair makes it somewhat easy to comprehend the grounds of this delicacy, a reticence which, by the way, is far from being evident in the work of the French and Italian writers who deal with the annals of the Papacy.

The Outpoured Spirit.—1.

"The Spirit was not yet [outpoured]*; because that Jesus was not yet glorified" (John vii. 39).

OF all the exceeding great and precious promises of God in the Old Testament, there were two which included all the rest—the promise of the incarnate Redeemer, and the promise of the outpouring of the Spirit upon all flesh.

It is a very pertinent question, the answer to which is essential to a right understanding of the subject, Why could not the Spirit be outpoured while Jesus was not yet glorified?

Our human experiences often help us to understand the ways of our faithful Creator, our heavenly Father.

If a son had disobeyed his father, or a servant his master, or a subject his king, it would be impossible for the spirit of the one who had been disobeyed to be poured out upon the disobedient one. The spirit of father, or master, or king, might, indeed, go forth in pity, in love, in sorrow, as in the father of "the prodigal son," but confidence, communion, fellowship, would be impossible without repentance and confession, and, in the case of the subject of the king, without expiation made by the suffering of the legal penalty.

As long as sin was in the world without atonement made, it was impossible that God's Spirit could be poured out without measure upon men. There were, indeed, believing men in the past dispensations with whom God had fellowship, and who were moved by His Spirit, but even they were subject to the temptations of the spirit of disobedience and the indictments of the accuser of the brethren. And these accusations reflected upon the righteousness of God in accepting those whose sins had only been typically expiated, for it was not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats could take away sins.

But through the Eternal Spirit Jesus offered Himself without spot to God, whom God set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in His blood, to show His righteousness because of the passing over of the sins done aforetime, in the forbearance of God, that He might be just and the Justifier of him who is of faith in Jesus. Then the same Spirit who was given without measure to Him was, at the appointed time, the day of Pentecost, poured out without measure upon all flesh, without distinction of race or nation or age or sex: "Whosoever shall call upon the Name of the Lord shall be saved."

But it may be asked, "Why the intervention of fifty days?" If He was the propitiation for the whole world, on account of the blood of His cross, why was not the Spirit immediately poured out when He whispered into the ear of God, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit," and cried, "It is finished," and gave up His life?

Because His victory over death, and sin, and hell must be proved by His resurrection. There must be the public acceptance by the righteous Judge of His atoning death, as the propitiation for the whole world, and the manifestation of the righteousness of God. "If Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins." A man is not justified until the judge has pronounced his judgment.

Then why was not the Spirit poured out when God raised Him from the dead?

Because it was necessary that He should show Himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of His apostles forty days, giving them commandments and speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. They were to be His witnesses, and must be instructed and equipped for their life-work.

Then why was not the Spirit poured out on the day of His ascension, when He returned to the glory which He had with the Father before the world was?

Because there are two parties to the gift—the Giver and the receivers, and it was necessary that the faith of His people in the promise of their Lord, who had been received up out of their sight, should be put to the test. The period of ten days was an historic and well-understood time of testing. Laban asked that his sister might remain a few days, at least ten, before she should depart with Eliezer. Rebekah did not want ten days to make up her mind, but said, "I will go" (Gen. xxiv.).

Johanan was tested by ten days' waiting, and was proved to be false and rebellious (Jer xlii.). Daniel (i.) submitted his God and himself to the ten days' test, and proved that "them that honour Me I will honour." The church at Smyrna suffered tribulation for ten days, a symbolic period in this symbolic book (Rev. ii.), with the promise of the crown of life to those who were faithful unto death.

Believing, waiting, praying, expecting the fulfilment of their Lord's assurances (Luke xxiv., Acts i.)—"Behold I send the promise of the Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city until ye be clothed with power from on high." "Ye shall be baptized in the Holy Ghost not many days hence." "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be My witnesses"—the hundred and twenty were approved by the ten days' test. And as Jesus had been glorified at the right hand of the Father, so now He was glorified by the obedient faith and the faithful obedience of this, the New Testament Church, in her beginning. And Jesus, having received of the Father the promised Spirit, shed forth that which was seen and heard when the day of Pentecost was fully come.

The relation of the individual believer to Pentecost will be considered in another chapter.

* It is suggested that this is a reference to the Old Testament promises of the outpouring of the Spirit, and that the word supplied should be outpoured, rather than given, as in the A.V. and R.V.

The Power and the Faith of the Church of God.—2.

By W. WOODS SMYTH.

SCARCELY twenty years have passed away since the schools of sceptical scientists used to laugh at the Scriptural and the Christian's idea of faith. Now all is changed, and this condition of mind is represented by men of science as clothed with wonderful powers and possibilities. We need not here enter into their meanderings; it is sufficient to say that in the realm of mental or (as I propose to state it) the realm of spiritual causation, Faith is an important factor. This is not wonderful. Mind is the last and highest manifestation of life, and, therefore, exercises a potent influence upon the sum total of the life of the body. Therefore, that a determined voluntary state of mind—pure, strong, persisting, and unmixed with wavering or doubt—should exercise a powerful influence, even to producing changes in the body which it indwells, and reaching to others, is easy to be understood. Here I am speaking of human faith in the realm of our minds and bodies, but it is easy to see that when this powerful mental factor is assisted by Divine grace and the Spirit of God, its influence becomes vastly increased; and when it thereby advances yet further, and lays hold upon the power of Christ in God, we can easily comprehend the words of our Lord in regard to faith when He says: "And nothing shall be impossible to you."

THE SCRIPTURAL TEACHING UPON FAITH.

Says the Apostle: "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen" (Heb. xi. 1); or, in other words, it is the giving substance or reality to things hoped for, or the realizing of these things, and a full conviction of their reality, as if handled, tasted, seen. Faith is a potent cause in the realm of spiritual causation. In this world we are familiar with physical causation in matter and energy, and have such a strong sense of these as almost to exclude the thought of any other.

When we are asked to believe that there are other systems of causation, arising in another realm, and operating in this world, we, being unfamiliar with such causes, have difficulty in admitting them. We declare it is easy to see how the walls of a city should fall at the shocks of a siege train of great guns, but for these walls to fall at the exercise of faith seems beyond comprehension. Yet modern philosophy tells us, if we attempt a real explanation of the former our knowledge turns out to be ignorance. So, in the last result, it is only a question of experience. Had all our experience lain in a spiritual world, then to us most likely faith would have appeared as the only comprehensible way of the walls of Jericho to fall down, or of dividing the Red Sea or the river Jordan; and, on the other hand, physical causation would have seemed hard to understand, a miracle for sceptics and critics to deny.

To return to the direct question. Faith is the giving (in the mind) substance or reality to that which, to our senses, has not these qualities, because they are as yet unseen or unexperienced. Hence is that we should be as sure of obtaining the things we believe for as if we already possessed them; and hence the Scripture which saith that faith "calleth the things that are not, as though they were" (Rom. iv. 17 R.V.). Mrs. Carrie Judd Montgomery tells of a poor negro woman smitten with cancer in her throat. Once a sweet singer, she could now scarcely speak even in a whisper, and longed for death. One touched with compassion at her pitiful condition was led to tell her of the power of God to save and to heal. And she, poor woman, with her helpless throat eaten out by disease, was foolish enough (shall I say in irony?) to trust the Lord with all her heart, and yet with more genuine philosophy than a college of savants; and the Lord healed her completely, and again she sweetly sang His praises. In relating her experience, she loved to say, "The Lord taught me to call the things that were not, as if, as though, they were."

The same word which created the heavens and the earth, and by which they now stand, is the word we are asked to believe, that it may fulfil to us every promise of God. The same word which gave to us the Lord from Heaven as our Redeemer, bringing forth prophecy, incarnation, redemption, resurrection, and ascension, and the coming of the Holy Ghost, is the word offered to our faith, over which to our shame we have doubted, questioned, hesitated, to our loss and to the dishonouring of the Church of God. Oh, the sin of it, and a sin which Christians seldom confess! When we fail, we describe the transgression; but before every failure, comes, in some form, the sin of unbelief.

We are uniting all over the world to intercede for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all flesh. Let us begin by confessing our sin of unbelief, which has restrained the power of God. The holy men of old mourned over the desolations of Israel; they spoke of ruined cities, wasted lands, and men and women gone into captivity. These were but outward calamities. We, if we have any eyes to see, may behold millions of ruined souls, wasted lives, and the pomp and glory of the nations all gone into the captivity of Satan. Oh, for a mighty Revival! How greatly is it needed in these days—"days in which the air is filled with a confusion of voices, some of them mocking voices, some of them wailing and sorrowful voices; when false prophets abound, lying spirits, demon worshippers, and materialists."* Surely the Spirit of the Lord will lift up a standard for the nations.

Why He Did Not.

NOT a word could be said against Mr. Silver's earnestness and devotion. Of his teaching and preaching there was no complaint whatever.

Year in and year out he would walk cheerfully through miles of country lanes to conduct the village week-day service; and the simple village-folk hung upon his words, and owned it "good to be there."

But of late a grievance had arisen. It was spoken of, almost in whispers, from one to another, and bonneted grey heads were drawn together in quiet converse, and then ominously shaken, whilst some younger heads were slightly tossed, as in indignation or self-defence. At length one valiant spirit from the little band was found to voice the general discontent.

"You have been coming backwards and forwards here a good many years now, Mr. Silver."

"Yes," was the cheerful assent.

"There is one thing we feel we should like to ask you, sir. How is it that during all these years you have never so much as taken a cup of tea with any of the congregation? We feel it is hardly friendly. Not one of us can remember that you have ever once drunk tea with us. Excuse me for asking the reason of this, sir."

A faint smile played about the gentle but manly features, and the frank but simple reply came, without a shadow of rebuke in it, "Because I have never yet been asked."

How easy it is to make mistakes! Let the wise lay the lesson to heart. B.

On "DEAD-LETTER" PRAYER.

PRAYER is, or should be, the soul's deep yearning after God. Yet much that goes by the name of prayer is but vain repetition and meaningless phrase—"a half-sincere coquetting with the supernatural."

I often say my prayers,
But do I ever pray?

Here is a query that reaches far beyond the limits of a children's hymn. Some prayers are answered as with telegraphic haste, others as by slow postal delivery; many, alas, as through a dead-letter office, return to us again. Sometimes the best reply that God can give to our petitions is not to respond to them at all. At other times, we do not recognise the answer, because it takes a form widely different from that for which we looked; the All-wise God "having provided some better thing for us."

Why does so much prayer apparently fail of result? First, perhaps, because the time of answer is not yet; second, certainly, because too frequently the are not fulfilled. Let us briefly examine some of these, remembering that most of Scripture's promises in regard to prayer refer to spiritual rather than temporal blessings.

1. According to His will (1 John v. 14).—"Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss" (Jas. iv. 3). Arrows wrongly feathered must ever miss their mark. Self-seeking—and in its worst form, as the Apostle intimates—is the cause of much dead-letter prayer.

Compare the petitions taught in the Lord's Prayer, of which the glory of God and the blessing of our fellows are the major chords. Unless these attune our personal desires, we shall express them but in vain, for they are primary conditions of answered prayer. The most strikingly effectual prayers recorded in the Scriptures (noted below), were offered by the petitioners, not for themselves, but for others; and in seeking good for them, they thus secured their own. This is the sure path of Revival, in the individual and the Church, and for salvation to the world.

2. Bold.—"Come boldly unto the throne of grace" (Heb. iv. 16)—not the boldness of presumption, but of confidence, sincere in its purpose, filial in its plea. How timorous we are—afraid lest we ask too much! Yet the invitation is clear, its meaning unmistakable, issuing from the God of infinite sympathy, generosity, and power, who "giveth liberally and upbraideth not" (Jas. i. 5).

Ponder the bold prayers of Abraham (Gen. xviii. 23-32); of Moses (Ex. xxxii. 31, 32); of Joshua (Josh. x. 12-14); of Samuel (1 Sam. xii. 18); of David (as we infer from 1 Sam. xvii. 46); of Solomon (1 Kings viii. 23-53); of Elijah (1 Kings xviii. 36-37); of Hezekiah (2 Kings xix. 14-19; xx. 2, 3)—and many more—each worthy of thoughtful study, as inspiring examples in the annals of prayer. Surely we have warrant enough to ask great things from Him who only desires His children's weal.

3. Believing.—"Ask in faith, nothing wavering" (Jas. i. 6)—faith, not in our prayers, but in God. Not our possession of a bank-note, nor our physical capacity to present it at the bank, but the stability of the bank itself, is guarantee that we shall receive payment at our call. Without faith, boldness is futile, and clamour is but vain; with it, we may remove difficulties mountains high. "Praying and not expecting, is like ringing a door-bell and running away. If we do not believe, why pray? If we do, why not expect?"

"Increase our faith!" besought the disciples; but our Lord gave no direct encouragement to their plea. "Go and use what you have," was the essence of His reply, "and in the using you shall find increase." So with the widow and her pot of oil (2 Kings iv. 1-7). Supply was bounded only by her faith; when that reached its limit, "the oil stayed." The faith she had, ensured the payment of her debt, and provided her family with bread; with yet more, she might have furnished luxuries as well! Thus we may sometimes as when the Master bade his disciples: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers," and immediately afterwards He sent them forth to begin the work themselves (Matt. ix. 38; x. 5).

4. Fervent.—"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (Jas. v. 16). "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me;" "Oh that Thou wouldest bless me indeed!"—such prayers betoken an earnestness not to be denied. Twice our Lord revealed His Father's heart and His willingness to respond to fervent prayer. In Luke xi. 5-9, He pictures the traveller calling upon his friend for loaves at midnight, and declares that although the latter "will not rise and give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity, he will rise and give him as many as he needeth." And again, in Luke xviii. 1-6, He says: "Hear what the unrighteous judge saith: Because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me." Still more readily, will the righteous God heed the "fervent prayer of a righteous man." How half-heartedly we often pray, wavering in faith, wanting in earnestness, allowing many things to intervene—"robbing Mary to pay Martha," as it were. Not so do we stir the heart and move the hand of the Giver of "every good and every perfect gift."

5. With Thanksgiving.—Thus are we to "make our requests known unto God" (Phil. iv. 6). For lack of this, much prayer is doomed to disappointment. Little prayer proves ignorance of self; little praise shows ignorance of God.

Above we noted that the glory of God must ever stand first; hence we are not surprised to read (Psa. l. 23), "Whoso offereth praise, glorifieth Me." Every answered prayer that is made the subject of praise, becomes a stepping-stone to the higher reaches of Divine favour, and is the earnest of another. David, to an exceptional degree, grasped the blessings of the unseen; no man of his day prayed more ardently than he; yet how large a proportion of his Psalms ring out the note of praise, as he kept alight the lamp of joy with the oil of remembered mercies. If our faith increases in the using, so also will our encouragement in prayer be multiplied in proportion as we engage in thanksgiving for every blessing as it comes. Praise more, and you will repine less.

6. Communion.—"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (John xv. 7). Fulfil this condition, and you cannot "ask amiss," because your inmost desire will be in unison with the mind of God. This is communion, such as was enjoyed by Abraham; before his wonderful prayer for Sodom, God had said, "I know him"—blessed testimony to a holy man!—and at its close, "God left communing" with His "friend."

O the pure delight of a single hour,
That before Thy throne I spend—
When I kneel in prayer, and with Thee, my God,
I commune as friend with friend.

"If we abide in Him."—This does not mean approaching Him in times of need, and living, at others, apart from Him; yet this is our all too common habit—forgetting Him by day, and expecting Him to remember us by night; or accounting prayer as physic, "to be taken only when required." To pray merely when we want something, is to know but little of communion with the Lord.

To a child who delights in his society, a father is ready to grant almost any desire; and such a child cannot do otherwise than seek the parent's will, for it instinctively becomes his own. Far otherwise is it with the lad who prefers the company of others, and comes only now and again to his father's side, to present some coveted desire. Much prayer becomes as a "dead-letter," because we abide not in Him; and we are unfamiliar with His will because His words do not abide in us. Forgetful hearers cannot share the privileges of the Lord's remembrancers.

How human we are, even at the best! We find it so hard to observe all these conditions, simple though they seem to be. But God gives no promise without conditions attached; fulfil them, and his promises are sure. "Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, and prove Me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. iii. 10 R.V.). An Appeal.

By S. TREVOR FRANCIS.

Men and brethren—ye who with your children
In reverence bow before the throne of grace,
Over whose souls has swept the tender love
Which breaks the heart, and heals the heart it breaks;
Ye who have breathed the sacred, holy breath
Of that new life which has its source from God.
Listen, listen—ye who are the leaders
In the dire war, for simple, earnest truth;
Awake! awake! shout ye the battle cry,
Unfurl the flag, the blood-stained flag of truth;
Forward! forward! let the cry of battle
Ring thro' the land. Shall yet again the priest
And priestcraft have their hateful, fateful hold
Upon the child? To "manage," to control
Its plastic mind? Shall our Reformèd faith
Be thus let slip? Awake, O men, awake!
Women, mothers—shall your girls be "managed"
By the priesthood, and in their honest minds
Be sown the seed, the sickly poisonous seed,
Of Romish shams, of men who take the oath
And have the pay of our Established Church,
The Church their hands are seeking to destroy?
Men and women—wake, fling back the challenge,
Tell, tell the foe, the haughty, priestly foe,
It must not be, it cannot, shall not be!

PRAYER.

Almighty God, Thou knowest how, in days
Long, long since past, our fathers suffered sore,
In cruel pangs of rack, of flame, and flood.
Save us, O Lord, and by Thy power and might,
Keep back this wrong, and grant our children may,
In Thy good grace, be kept from priestly hands.
Grant that Thy truth, Thy blessed holy Word,
May be our guide; we ask it in His Name,
That Holy Name of Jesus Christ our Lord.
Amen, Amen.

Lambeth Walk Mission.—Careful thought and consideration are brought to bear on the conduct of the Lambeth Walk Mission. A visitor to the neighbourhood on a Sunday would come face to face with hundreds of men, women, and children buying and selling, utterly regardless of the Day of Rest. To these the Gospel is preached and tracts distributed, and in the evening the Mission with its brass band conducts an open-air meeting, which is largely attended. Following this is the Gospel service in the Mission Hall, when the building is invariably crowded. But the work of the mission does not end here. The people of the district are cheered in their homes by the visits of the missionary, who also conducts services at factories in the neighbourhood, using every opportunity for speaking the "Word in season." It is by such quiet means as this that the light of the Gospel is kept burning in a notoriously "hooligan" district. The secretary is Mr. Frank R. Newbery, 27, Charterhouse Square, E.C.

Revival Memories.

In a thoughtful letter to The Record, Canon Garratt, of Ipswich, recalls memories of the Revival of forty years ago. Among other things, he says:—It was not some new and special mode of working or even of praying. It gave rise to an immense amount of work and a great deal of prayer; it was itself neither one nor the other. It was not the result of any powers of preaching in certain gifted persons, nor of any strong desires on the part of congregations or of ministers. If it came, as it did, sometimes in answer to prayer, it came also sometimes where it was not desired. Unlike the work, so wonderfully blest of God, of Mr. Moody, it needed no preparation; and great preparations, if made, seemed to have no result. It was more than anything else like a change of atmosphere. All real work, all channels of blessing, seemed to be filled to overflowing without effort, and the work resulted from the blessing, not the blessing from the work. There was a total inability to say it was the result of particular means. A child's word was sometimes more effective than the most eloquent sermon.

There is a still more important fact on which it is possible to speak very positively. If it could not be attributed to power of preaching, or earnestness of praying, was the teaching which prevailed through the course of it something new? The truths were those of the Reformation. Those who know the distinction between Reformation teaching and Puritan teaching, as to the nature of justifying faith, and between Evangelical teaching in the eighteenth century and that of the second and third decades of last century, will understand what I mean when I say that it was the former, that of the Reformation, which was universal then. The result of it was the new birth of souls.

But it must also be confessed that in England very few clergymen and very few ministers of any denomination took any active interest in it. To a certain extent this was true also of Sunday-school teachers and other Christian labourers until they found its blessed results in the works in which they themselves were engaged. God raised up special workers, and fitted them for their work.

The inference which I draw myself from all that I remember of those very blessed days is, that such times of refreshing will only be granted in such a way as to bring glory to God in the manner of granting it, as well as in the gift itself. I do not think that preparations and great prayer-meetings are likely to be efficacious. When people are praying in an ordinary way for other things, let them add this to the number of their petitions. But for this particular purpose I believe two or three are much more likely to bring down the blessing, and that nothing is so hopeful as the secret prayers of many Christian men and women in their private audiences with the King of kings.

And it must not be forgotten that God in granting such a blessing may send it in forms which are not to our taste. It was this that in those days prevented so many who felt the work to be of God from wishing to be identified with it, fearing that it might be carried on by God Himself in some way they would not like. Those who pray that God would send a Revival must be contented to accept it, however He may please to send it.

I will only add to this that so great is the blessedness of a real revival of God's own sending, that no Christian man who has really seen one, and known what was passing, can help longing with all his heart to see such times of refreshing again.

Basutoland.—The work of the Paris Evangelical Mission in Basutoland proceeds in a manner that engages the deep interest of workers and friends. The latest "Occasional Paper" contains letters from Rev. R. H. Dyke, and part of an admirable paper by Rev. Alf. Casalis. Copies may be had from the hon. secretary of the English auxiliary, Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, 25, Brownswood Road, Clissold Park, N. The Calendar for 1903, made up of six pictorial cards, will serve to remind many of the mission and its needs. (6d.)

"Be Filled With the Spirit."

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE.

UNDER the auspices of the Missionary Association a two-days' Conference was held last week at the Police Institute, Adam Street, W.C. At the afternoon gathering on Wednesday, the chair was taken by Mr. ALBERT A. HEAD. Reading Psa. cxxxiii., he showed that "the blessing" was associated with the unity which comes by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit under the figure of the anointing oil, or the dew upon the mountains of Zion. From Eph. iv. 11 we learn that we are each qualified to supply that which we are required to do for the whole body.

THE COVERING AND THE OCCUPANT.

Rev. F. H. KING (Stroud Green, N.) dwelt on the attitude of the believer to the Holy Spirit, by comparing the text of Judges vi. 34 with the marginal readings. The A.V. and R.V. each read that the Spirit of the Lord "came upon" Gideon. In the former case the margin gives the word, "clothed," while in the latter case the marginal rendering is "clothed itself with," which may fairly be altered to "clothed Himself with." The first picture is Gideon clothed with the Spirit, and the second the Spirit clothed with Gideon.

Looking at the latter with New Testament eyes, the worker is all that is visible. Yet the Spirit of God is within the man; and God the Spirit has clothed Himself with the servant, who alone is manifest to the people.

DANGERS OF EXTERNALISM.

Speaking under a profound sense of the dangers of the days in which we live, Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH named specially (1) the great amount of externalism and the multiplication of material appliances to be seen in the Church of Christ. Ritualism and Romanism answer to this; but externalism may be found in the most Dissenting body, or soul, or heart, or life. (2) We live in an age of unions and combinations and federations of every kind; a bringing of people together on some basis or for some object on which the Church may have set its heart. (3) Do we not see an alarming dearth of spiritual power and of conversions, with a low standard of spiritual life? He was not speaking against material appliances in their place, or against federation or union; but insisting that the only union which means spiritual power is that which not only includes, but is included in the unity of the Spirit.

In Zechariah iv. we have a beautiful picture, with many externals—the olive trees, the lampstand, the branching lamps, the bowls; but what is the use of them without the free, open channel through which the oil should flow? The link that binds us to the Holy Ghost and to Christ is far more than all our organization. The Spirit of God has no sympathy with anything that does not give Christ absolute headship. How am I to know my brother? By the precise formula he adopts, or the language he uses? No. If he and I have heart to heart fellowship in the things of Christ, if the same Saviour is precious to both, there can be no doubt that the bond exists.

FULNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

The same prayerful spirit that had marked the afternoon meeting also characterized the evening gathering. Lord KINNAIRD, who presided, briefly expounded Luke v., emphasizing the need of the present day for Christians "to launch out into the deep." Turning to the subject set down for consideration—"The fulness of the Spirit"—Rev. W. P. BUNCOMBE directed attention to 2 Cor. iii. 12, 17. He dwelt particularly on the words, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," and pointed out that the apostles were waiting, not merely for blessing on their own souls, but an enduement of power that should enable them to go forth to fulfil the purpose of God. During those fifty days they were remarkably changed in the sight of the risen Lord, and one result was that they recognized Jesus as God. Even unbelieving Thomas fell down at His feet and exclaimed, "My Lord and my God." It also united them as nothing else had; and they became of one heart and one soul. Another evidence of the change that had come over the apostles was that they were able to pray. The same men who, a little before, could not watch with Him one hour, were now able to pray for ten days.

Referring to the awakening that followed, Mr. Buncombe observed that it was the same Spirit who produced in the hearts of the crowd a consciousness of guilt. A study of the history of revivals shows this to be God's plan of working. With earnest words the speaker pressed home the fact that the gift of the Spirit brings with it into the Christian's life and experience liberty of speech, of prayer, and of organization.

THE ARK IN ITS PLACE.

Rev. GEORGE GRUBB followed with a helpful exposition of Psalm cxxxii., drawing some timely lessons from David's anxiety for the the safety of the Ark. The Lord Jesus is our glorified Ark, containing all we need. Why are we so poverty-stricken when Jesus is so wealthy? It is because Jesus is in the wrong place. What we have to do is to let the Ark come back to His resting-place, and victory will come back to Israel. The carnal Church makes blessing hard to obtain. It was a solemn thing for David to say he would bring back the Ark; and it is an equally solemn thing to pray for a revival, for a revival may mean a repetition of former bitter persecution. Will the Church of Christ stand the revival it needs? Recalling an experience in Portugal, of an awakening which took place a few years ago, he pleaded with his hearers, that they should at the present sound of abundance of rain adopt the attitude of Elijah, and keep their whole being fixed on the Lord, that the land may be turned to Jehovah.

POWER FOR WITNESS-BEARING.

On Thursday afternoon, Mr. R. C. MORGAN with special emphasis urged that it is for the purpose of being witnesses the people of God receive the power of testimony, the power of the Holy Spirit. It was not only that the disciples were gathered together, but they were "of one accord" in prayer and supplication. The importance of witnesses is that their testimony should agree together.

Supplying the place of Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Rev. LEWIS H. GAUNT spoke of the special strain upon the minds of foreign missionaries, whose atmosphere is that of isolation and of lack of the usual means of grace. He recalled the words used in the New Testament to describe the walk in the Spirit, which have somewhat different meanings. Peripateó expresses the largeness of the walk of faith, it means to walk about, to journey, to take excursions, and indicates the sense of freedom. Stoicheó indicates rather the soldier's march in the ranks, corresponding to stoicheion, which represents the A B C of Christian truth. We rejoice in the freedom of the Christian walk, but we have ever to remember that it is a walk, step by step, in constant dependence upon the revealed will of God; and we must walk circumspectly toward them that are without, honestly (euschemonos).

PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

Narrating his own experience with regard to yielding to be filled by the Holy Spirit, Pastor WRIGHT HAY said he had been long hindered by special circumstances. He recalled a watch-night service out in India when only a few missionaries were present. The word borne in on them was, "If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." On going home he found that he could not go to rest without first asking God to give him the Holy Spirit in a sense in which he had never had Him before.

He discovered that his wife, as well as a native convert and a fellow-missionary who were living in the house, had all been led in the same way. They simply set aside all reasonings about asking a gift which had already been given, and besought God to give them the Holy Spirit in the fullest measure possible. Then having been obedient in the asking, they obeyed in believing that they had received, and thanked God.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

A numerous company assembled on Thursday evening for the closing meeting. Dr. Cronin occupied the chair. The opening hymn, "God is here, and that to bless us, with the Spirit's quickening power," was followed by a period of silent waiting upon God, and the chairman, having offered prayer, introduced, in a few words, the subject to be considered.

The first address was given by Mr. WALTER B. SLOAN (secretary of the China Inland Mission). It was full of earnest entreaty and affectionate counsel to Christians, based on John xv. 8. The speaker pointed out that the true object of fruit bearing is the glory of God. It is not the success of our labours, or the work of the societies with which we are connected, still less is it the reputation of the particular branch upon which the fruit is to be borne. There is a region in which God works absolutely alone, and there is another region where He works in us and through us; where fruit cannot be borne unless we become His willing trustful, obedient servants. One equipment for fruit-bearing is to be in full and proper relationship with Jesus Christ, and to remain in Him is not some extraordinary addition to full fellowship with Him. The other side of this equipment we have in the words of Gal. v. 22, 23, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." So these two Scriptures show to us that we bear fruit only as we remain in Christ, and the fruit we bear is the fruit of the Spirit.

The numerous lessons of the Conference were gathered up by Mr. H. W. FRY, who gave the closing address. He had often been impressed with the fact that there is in Christian service so little fruit amid so many leaves, and that the fruit which appears is frequently imperfect. The experience and work of a society should be on exactly the same lines as the experience and work of the individual.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

In order to illustrate the purpose that the Missionary Association seeks to serve, Mr. Fry outlined some of the work which God had enabled him to accomplish while travelling abroad. When in New York some years ago he had an opportunity of seeing much of the work of local missions. He found to his surprise that a great number of the workers were not acquainted with one another. In the hope of drawing them into touch with each other, and promoting Christian fellowship among them, Mr. Fry invited the workers to dinner. As soon as the repast was over, however, the members of the party were obliged to return to their missions. Another meeting was consequently arranged to commence at 10 p.m. About ninety responded to the invitation; and, whereas it was intended to keep the meeting open for about two hours, it was not till after three o'clock in the morning that the company dispersed. So remarkable was the power of the gathering that its influence is felt to-day.

In Calcutta Mr. Fry had a similar experience. When inviting the missionaries he asked them to give their hearty co-operation in the exercise of an expectant faith that God would exalt Himself by the bestowal of gifts to one and all, after the measure of "the riches of His glory," rather than after the measure of previous experience. The result of the gathering was a quickening of the spiritual life of the missionaries, and a similar meeting was maintained weekly for several years. Mr. Fry intimated his hope that such instances will be multiplied in the experience of the Association, which will aim at uniting individuals throughout the world, and especially missionaries in foreign lands, who desire that the work of the Holy Spirit shall be fully accomplished in and through them. Among the other objects of the society is that of impressing upon workers, especially missionaries, the necessity of enthusiasm and zeal, by letting the internal fire of the Holy Spirit burn without hindrance or quenching; and of letting the Light shine without being obscured by false notions of refinement, policy, timidity, or indolence.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 26. 2 Samuel vii.

DAVID'S desire to build a house for God's worship was a very natural one, and though it was not accepted because he had been a man of many wars (1 Chron. xxviii. 3), yet God graciously accepted the intention, which would have taken effect had it been allowed. "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart" (2 Chron. vi. 8). How full of comfort those words are! So often in life we are hindered by circumstances which baffle our efforts to do what was in our heart, but God deals with us as though our thoughts had taken shape, and the temple stood perfected (Matt. x. 41).

The wonderful promises, which Nathan made in the Divine Name, were carefully cherished, and in dark days which succeeded they were quoted as the basis of litanies of prayer (Psa. lxxxix. 4, 29, 36, 37); and even when the sins of David's descendants threatened to undo the entire realm, these covenant promises guaranteed that the line of kings should not become extinct. Such were the sure mercies of David (Isa. lv. 3). Ah, soul! if thou wilt but incline thine ear and obey, God will make a similar covenant with thee, "ordered in all things and sure" (2 Sam. xxiii. 5).

How good it is to sit before the Lord—not exactly praying or asking, but communing—speaking as a man with his friend. We can but say, Do as Thou hast said, and may solace ourselves on the absolute certainty that every word will be fulfilled.

MONDAY, October 27. 2 Samuel viii.

This chapter resounds with David's military exploits. Gath had been the bridle by which the Philistines kept Judah in check (1 Chron. xviii. 1). David now made it a barrier against their frequent incursions. While carrying out the ancient promise, that Israel's territory should be bounded by the Euphrates (Gen. xv. 18; Num. xxiv. 17), David came into collision with the King of Zobah and the Syrians of Damascus. He signally defeated them, took many prisoners, rendered their war horses useless, and captured a vast quantity of treasure. The list of victories was crowned by that over Edom (compare 1 Chron. xviii. 12, and Psa. lx. title). The valley was situated at the southern extremity of the Dead Sea.

By these conquests a vast amount of treasure was amassed, which was put aside towards the great object of David's life—the erection of the Temple. Though he might not build it himself, he was most eager to leave behind him all the materials that would be required by his son and successor. When, at last, the Temple stood in its completed splendour, David was remembered and all his afflictions (Psa. cxxxii. 1). So also the names of the Apostles are inscribed on the precious stones which lie in the foundation of the New Jerusalem. The others who have laboured before we entered into the results of their labours, are never forgotten by God (John iv. 36—38). But we shall not want a greater reward than that Christ shall be satisfied. Notice that verse, twice repeated (6, 14); it gives the inner secret of David's life.

Successful in war, he was careful to build up a strong home-administration. Some of the finest men that Israel produced were in his Cabinet. It is a great gift to be able to select and use fellow-helpers in God's work. "It is better to set 100 men to work than do the work of 100 men." Learn to train and develop others. What blessing and pleasure you give, when you teach another to work for God.

TUESDAY, October 28. 2 Samuel ix.

It is necessary to read 1 Sam. xviii. 3, xx. 14, 15, 42, in order to understand the strong inducement, which prompted David to make the inquiry, with which this chapter opens. Friendship is a very sacred thing; next to God it is the most sacred and precious thing on earth or in life. It is the mark of a craven and miserable soul, to be careless of, or indifferent to, the claims of human love. At any cost we must be true to the end, not only to the living, but the dead.

The lameness of this prince (iv. 4) prevented him from taking part in the public life of his age, and he passed a retired existence with one of the great families, beyond the Jordan, which remained faithful to Saul's memory, but was destined to repay this act of David's kindness, when misfortune had befallen him (4, and xvii. 27). The family estate, which had accrued to David (xii. 8, Num. xxvii. 8), was restored to Mephibosheth for his maintenance; and Ziba, Saul's land steward, was appointed to manage it, receiving half the income for his trouble.

Mephibosheth ate at the royal table, and in this is a beautiful example of what God does still for His lame children, who cannot establish their right to aught, but who daily feed on His gracious bounty. Because of the eternal covenant, "The lame take the prey." Our very weakness and helplessness are our strongest argument with God. What He has done, He will do. All your days may be as this, and much more abundant, because of God's infinite resources. O my soul, it is indeed well with thee. Thou hast as much as thou needest, and more also. Thou art as one of the King's sons (11). Thou canst see the King's face, and eat with Him daily!

WEDNESDAY, October 29. 2 Samuel x.

Nahash had probably shown kindness to David during the period of his wanderings, and it was natural that it should be reciprocated to his son. The suspicion entertained by his counsellors was not warranted by anything in David's behaviour, but may have been founded on their acquaintance with Deut. xxiii. 3-6. The Ammonites at once hired an immense number of mercenaries from Lebanon and Gilead, and it was against these that Joab made his assault, reckoning that they would be more likely to take flight than those who were fighting for their fatherland. It was a just and necessary war, and though the numbers of the foe were great, God gave the victory to His people.

The same result accrued in the next campaign against Hadadezer, who had recovered from his former defeat (viii. 3), and now, alarmed at the increasing strength of David's kingdom, sent for auxiliaries from beyond the Euphrates. This vast host had reached Helam, in Eastern Manasseh, when, by vigorous efforts, David defeated and dispersed them.

We may notice specially the words which Joab addressed to Abishai (12, 1 Cor. xvi. 13). Sometimes it is said that a man must set his back against the wall and fight for dear life. Ah, but what if that wall is God Himself? Lean back on Him! It is only possible to play the man when the Divine Man is formed within the heart (Gal. iv. 19).

THURSDAY, October 30. 2 Samuel xi.

This chapter reminds us of the necessity of maintaining a close walk with God. It seems almost impossible to believe that one who has given us such Psalms should have fallen to such a depth of sin. But remember that the nature which is capable of supreme aspirations is capable of equal declension in the other direction. Perhaps no phrase will express it better than Mr. Moody's, which was more forcible than elegant: "The pail that slops over on this side will slop over to the same degree on that." I have often noticed that those who have most capacity for spirituality are most liable to the temptations of the flesh.

If David had gone forth with his soldiers to battle, if he had not yielded to the soft and enervating effects of luxury, if he had not allowed his eye to rest on forbidden sights, if he had quickly turned away to God for grace and purity, this chapter would never have been written—but if it had not been written, what an infinite loss would have been sustained in the sacred literature of the world! Tens of thousands, who have been betrayed into such sins as this, have turned to Psa. xxxii. and li., and have dared to believe that God, who forgave and restored David, was willing to do as much for them, according to the exceeding riches of His grace (Eph. i. 7, 8).

David made every effort to cover his sin, but Uriah resisted it all, and refused to enjoy his homelife whilst his comrades were in hardship and peril. This in itself was a great rebuke to the king. Nought but absolute desperation, and the necessity of making it possible for Bathsheba to become his wife, could have led David to make Uriah carry to Joab the missive of his own death. Thus sin leads to sin. What a man sows he has to reap. An unguarded look leads to the irreparable blemish of an honoured name.

FRIDAY, October 31. 2 Samuel xii.

There is an ominous note in the closing words of the previous chapter. A man may think that he has wiped out the vestiges of his sin and obliterated the tracks that should lead to his discovery. But if God is not pleased, there will be an ugly disillusionment. God cannot be mocked, and He requires sooner or later, in this year or in ten years, in this world or the next, that a man should receive in his body according to that which he has done, whether it be good or bad.

I pray you, do not think that you can postpone to another life the terrible harvest of suffering which accrues from the sowing of wild oats. As Nathan said, "The sword enters the house of our life, not to depart" (9, 10, 11). The lust of Amnon, his murder by Absalom, and Absalom's outrageous treatment of his father, were the Nemesis that filled all David's after years with misery. Sin may be forgiven, but its after-effects will remain. The reclaimed drunkard can never get back his sound nerves or the elasticity of perfect health; and what is true of him is awfully true of other sins which men commit lightly enough, but which will come back for payment.

The first visible chastisement which David suffered was the death of the child of his sin; and this is chiefly interesting because it led to a clear affirmation of his belief that he would recognise the little one again, "when he went to him." This has solaced millions of parents, who have been led by these words to believe that little children, when they die, go at once to the arms of the Good Shepherd, that they do not forget, but await us on the other side, to recognise and be recognised.

Bathsheba's next child was Solomon; but Nathan called him "Jehovah's beloved." Oh wonderful exhibition of Divine grace, that the past did not prejudice the prospects of the little babe. Indeed, he was not only the subject of Divine favour of a special sort, but of very distinct pledges on the part of David to his mother (1 Kings i. 29, 30; Matt. i. 6).

SATURDAY, November 1. 2 Samuel xiii.

The law of Moses distinctly forbade the connection which Amnon sought (Lev. xviii. 11). It was an altogether infamous passion, and the suggestion of Jonadab, if it were any reflection of his father's character, shows why the Lord said of Shammah, "Neither hath the Lord chosen this" (1 Sam. xvi. 9). Tamar pitifully pleaded for her honour—more to her than life; but passion is deaf to such remonstrances, and strangles ruth and pity. Oh let us walk in the Spirit, that He may save us from ourselves; for there is no knowing whither the lower impulses of our nature may not drive us when once they take the reins!

When men are instigated by irregular passion they go from one extreme to another, from wicked love to wicked hatred. If women would but realise this, how often it would save them from lives of misery. To yield to a man's impulse is not to secure his loyalty, but to forfeit it.

Absalom was Tamar's own brother, and therefore her natural protector. Recommending her to hold her peace, he quietly awaited a suitable opportunity of vengeance; and when this was wreaked, he fled for shelter to the Court of Geshur with his maternal grandfather. Ah, David, this is but the beginning of thy sorrows. God help thee; thou hast a rugged path to tread before the results of thy sin have worked themselves out! But out of the eater shall come sweetness for myriads. F. B. M.

Other Lands.

For India's Women.

THE Zenana Bible and Medical Mission is rejoicing in many tokens of God's blessing upon the operations. By such well-tried methods as the regular visitation of zenanas, the establishment and maintenance of girls' schools, medical missions, and itinerant evangelization work in the villages, spiritual life and vigour have their outcome in extended efforts; and it is encouraging to find that, with fresh opportunities, the Society is able to send out new missionaries. On Wednesday last leave was taken of an outgoing party. The twelve missionaries present included two honorary workers, Mrs. Pollen, who is again to take up the mission which she opened at Bulandshuhr, and Miss Luce, who returns to Sultanpur, where a considerable number of young girls are being brought up under Christian instruction. Owing to the urgency of claims from the field two ladies had already sailed for India.

Lord Kinnaird presided, and Rev. A. R. Cavalier (secretary) briefly introduced the missionaries, some of whom, to the evident satisfaction of the large audience, spoke of their past experiences among India's women.

A bright sketch of the work in the Mahommedan city of Kasur and the surrounding villages was given by Miss Sutherland. There are many women, particularly in the nine or ten villages which are missioned, who can give an intelligent account of their spiritual experience in passing from death into life. Dense ignorance abounds, but hearts are touched, even in those benighted places where the Gospel has been seldom or never heard. A need that has arisen is for "rest houses" in the more distant villages, which the missionaries may use as local centres.

"To voice the cry of our Indian Sisters" was the aim of Miss Hill (returning to Jaunpur), who reminded her hearers that India has vast numbers of whom are complete strangers to the Gospel. In the Jaunpur district, with a million and a quarter of people, the only ambassadors of Christ are three English women. Place after place was visited where not one person knew of our Lord and the plan of salvation.

Miss Catt, who is an hospital evangelist at Patna, gladly accepted the title bestowed in the hospital itself, of "bedside missionary." Christian love and tenderness convince the native women that there is "a something" in Christianity which heathen religions have not. At the Mission hospital the Gospel light is kept brightly burning, and the hearts of the sick ones are turned towards Christ. The young native Christian nurses are being patiently trained in their ministry of love.

The new institute at Allahabad for the training of native Christian women is full of promise: to this important centre Miss Meta Smith is proceeding. Miss Smith gave a vivid account of zenana life, describing the ignorance and superstition in which the women are plunged, and at the same time telling of souls won for the Master.

The new missionaries were represented by Miss Lambourne, who is taking up educational work. She quoted the words that "Christian education arches India like a magnificent rainbow," and said that "the sun is Christ and the missionaries the tiny raindrops that together make that rainbow of hope." The valedictory address was given with combined force and sympathy by Rev. J. G. Train. There is just now caused by the ravages of the recent famine and by plague. Mr. Cavalier has received a letter from Miss Harris, of Malegaon, dated September 25, which says: "Plague has been raging in Munmar for some two months; it is of a very bad type, combining with it symptoms of cholera. It first touched us about a month ago, when several of our elder widows who do not dwell, but who work in the compound, fell ill and their children. The first to suffer were the servants. Their quarters are at some distance from the girls' and women's houses, so I was still hopeful that we might escape serious harm. I prepared, however, for emergencies. I had every place in the compound disinfected and whitewashed, and for twelve days we escaped with no fresh case. On the thirteenth day two girls sickened, one dying in less than three hours. On that day, too, we found that not only rats, but squirrels and even birds picking up the grain in the compound were dying. We were bound to move into fresh quarters or lose the majority of the girls. On the next day we made arrangements for migrating back into the old quarters in Malegaon, chuppars being out of the question owing to the continued wet weather. Since arriving here four days ago we have had, I grieve to say, six cases and two deaths, while the plague doctor holds out little hope of recovery for three of the surviving ones. They have no stamina, and succumb at once.

"I am very sad indeed at having such a serious set-back to our work just as we were so nicely in order. But even this dark trouble is among the things that work together for good. It has brought us into such friendly relations with the people of Munmar as probably nothing else would have done."

Egypt Mission Band.

AT the annual meeting of the Egypt Mission Band, held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Belfast, there was a crowded attendance.

Rev. Charles Inwood, chairman of the Home Council, who presided, gave an address upon the present position and prospects of the Mission. He referred to some current misconceptions regarding the Mission. Many think it is mainly a self-supporting organization, which is not the fact. Each member receives his own share of financial support, in accordance with the scale of allowances fixed by the Council—a scale so low as only to meet actual necessities. From the commencement the work (like the China Inland and other Faith Missions) has been entirely dependent upon the unsolicited gifts of the Lord's people.

Mr. Inwood next referred to the new departure which is being made with reference to women's work, and the acceptance of Miss May White as the Society's first lady missionary to Moslem women and children. Proceeding, the speaker told of a pathetic appeal which the Council had received to take over the only orphanage in Egypt (just rendered helpless through the death of Mrs. Pennings, a devoted Dutch missionary worker). The Home Council felt that they could not refuse such a call, or turn the nineteen Moslem orphans adrift. This new responsibility would, therefore, be undertaken.

The meeting was further addressed by Mr. Geo. Swan, hon. travelling secretary, Mr. J. Martin Cleaver, M.A., the field secretary, and Miss May White. The gathering closed with a season of silent prayer, and an appeal for personal consecration to God.

An Isolated Missionary Post.—Bannu (India) is undoubtedly a missionary station of exceptional trial and isolation, but through the devotion and untiring service of Mrs. Croker Pennell and her son (Dr. T. L. Pennell) its evangelization has been made the subject of prayer by many Christians. The district comprises an area of 3,756 square miles, and for many years has been in charge of one medical missionary, who is supposed as far as possible to visit and proclaim the Gospel in every village. The visits of the missionary are necessarily few and far between, and yet the work has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectations. The agencies now at work comprise a high school, hospital, dispensary, preaching hall, vernacular newspaper, printing-press, and bookshop. Some twenty-four illustrations of these are given in an attractive booklet—Mission Scenes in the Bannu District, copies of which may be obtained of Mr. H. L. Orchard, 44, Denning Road, Hampstead.

British Syrian Mission.

AT the annual meeting of the British Syrian Mission held at Exeter Hall a few days ago—Mr. F. Sellwood in the chair—the report read by Mrs. Chapman referred to "the cheerful order, fervent calmness, and spiritual atmosphere," of the Training Institute, Beyrout, which had deeply impressed a recent visitor. The building of the new railway has brought many nationalities together, and Scriptures in Arabic, Turkish, Italian, Modern Greek, French, German, and Bulgarian have been circulated; frequent accidents also proving the special value of the dispensary, where souls as well as bodies are ministered to. In thirteen dark villages round Tyre our Bible-woman holds meetings regularly.

The hon. treasurer, Mr. Robert Barclay reported that the year had closed with a deficit of £200.

Dr. A. T. Pierson followed, saying Syria had four great attractions beyond any other mission-field. It was (1) the land specially identified with the Crucifixion, Resurrection, Ascension, and associated with the return of the Lord; (2) one of the first lands to demonstrate the value of medical missions; (3) the land of marvellous Biblical translations; (4) the land of the Jews, and the prophecies in connection with them seemed in process of immediate fulfilment.

Miss Lord gave encouraging accounts of the progress of the work in Tyre. Rev. H. B. Macartney dealt with his recent visit to the mission stations, and what he had seen of the beauty of Christ in missionaries and native teachers. The Mission is working in five important cities—Beyrout, Tyre, Hasbeya, Baalbec, Zahleh. The edict had gone forth in Syria, "Kill out the name of Christ from the whole country," when in 1860 Mrs. Bowen Thompson came upon the scene. There was then hardly a woman in the whole land who could read. Now thousands are reading the Scriptures in the mission schools. Petitions for teachers are coming in from many villages in the Lebanon.

In response to an appeal for the deficit, promises were received in the meeting amounting to £105.

Notes from China.

(From the Baptist Missionary Herald.)

THE CHOLERA SCOURGE.

THE whole of North China, and, I gather from the papers, perhaps the larger part of the Empire, is suffering from a terrible visitation of cholera. Starting in or near Tientsin, and following the trade routes, it is sweeping the country, slaying thousands in its march.

In some parts it is dislocating trade. People are afraid to travel alone, even for a few miles. They fear to be taken ill away from any means of help. They have before them one of the most dreadful things to a Chinese—to die away from home, without the possibility of the body being conveyed to the family burying ground. In this case the soul will have none of the supposed benefits of ancestral worship. Many innkeepers refuse single guests. A healthy man at night may be dead before morning. People are afraid to go singly to work in the fields. Travelling through the country, we notice the fields are nearly all deserted at one of the busiest seasons for agriculture, and the infrequent wayfarers are all in couples. Christians that come a few miles for medicine come in couples. I sent out a man with medicine to a few stations. Although it rained, he found even Christians unwilling to keep him a night. He refused to go again, and is now ill himself.

Poor, afflicted China! torn by sin and calamity: wars, rebellions, famines, floods, and disease devastate her. Some men appear to think God has forsaken this country; but the most sympathetic and closest observers think far differently. We believe the Heavenly Father is, by terrible chastisement, breaking this people to heal them, casting them down to lift them up. If now their sin and degradation are most prominent, their worth is only obscured; it will emerge and shine forth when they become the people of the Lord.—Rev. E. C. Nickalls.

SCRIPTURES BETTER THAN CLASSICS.

I have not seen a white face for over three months. But with God's Word, and a people to unfold it to, I have had a good time. For nearly a month, several of us assembled for an hour or more several nights a week at our village station, Gospel Village, to search the Scriptures. Several were much delighted at fresh discoveries in God's Word. An elder who had to go into the city to pay his taxes hurried back fifteen miles in order to be in time for an evening meeting. On another occasion when I spoke to this same man of the excellencies of the Chinese classics, he, in quite a humble way, demurred, saying that their classics could not compare with the Scriptures. Another member, a dear old man of seventy-five, whom I brought back with me to the city, I found sitting outside the door one day listening, as he said, to the Bible notes I was dictating inside. You may imagine how gladly I brought the old man into the room! These instances will show that not only are the numbers of adherents increasing, but also that there are those who are desirous of a fuller knowledge of God's Word. —Rev. Frank Madeley, Shensi.

Reminiscences of Mr. Moody.

DURING Mr. Moody's first visit to San Francisco, some twenty years ago, a noted Jewish photographer was converted. The incident has never been published, so far as I know, and yet it is exceedingly interesting. I know the party concerned very well, andas a boy can remember hearing him relate the story of his experience.

Soon after Mr. Moody arrived, the newspapers published accounts of the large meetings he was holding, and also described the great work he had done in the East. One of the foremost photographers in the city at that time was a Hebrew, named George B. Rieman. He had been accustomed to taking the pictures of noted actors and actresses and other distinguished men and women who visited San Francisco, as a compliment. He thought he saw in Mr. Moody another good chance to advertise his business. He wrote him a very cordial note, stating that he would be delighted to take his picture if he would appoint a time for a sitting.

Mr. Moody wrote him in reply that he appreciated the offer, but that he did not come to San Francisco to have his picture taken but to save his (Mr. Rieman's) soul.

The reply made Mr. Rieman furious. He probably said some things in Hebrew that it would be best not to repeat in English.

But the meetings went on. Great crowds attended. Many were converted. The newspapers proclaimed these facts far and wide, with great headlines. Every day this Jewish photographer would read these announcements, and get madder and madder. He also became more and more curious to see and hear this wonderful man.

One morning the newspapers proclaimed in glaring type the last day of the Moody meetings. The Jew read it, and made up his mind he must see this man Moody before he left the city. He telephoned his wife to come down town for early supper, and they would go hear him. They went. They listened to the sermon, were interested, but not very deeply impressed.

When the after-meeting was announced, Mr. Rieman said to his wife:—

"Well, we have been to the circus; let us go into the side-show also!"

They went into the inquiry room, and there two earnest Christian workers met them and talked to them about Christ. They knelt and prayed, and before they left the service, both were happily converted.

Mr. Rieman became a Christian worker immediately, joined the Baptist church, studied for the ministry, and became one of the most earnest Baptist preachers on the Pacific coast. —Rev. Dr. Brougher, in The Institute Tie.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Itinerary.

CONFERENCE AT SODERTILGE (OCT. 8—10).

SÖDERTILGE is a beautiful spot, much frequented during the summer months, and is therefore not unlike Keswick for its lovely associations of natural scenery, and in the spiritual effect which it is having on this country. About 700 persons were present, which is a very large number when it is remembered that the population of this land is small compared to the crowding millions of Great Britain. When this is borne in mind the 700 here would be equal to 7,000 at home.

It was good to meet with about 100 Lutheran clergymen and ministers, for whom I had a special meeting, where questions were asked and impressions deepened.

Prince Bernadotte presided throughout, and the more one knows him and the Princess the more the impression of the nobility and beauty of their Christian character deepens. The eight days of meetings at the Conference, and here at Stockholm, have been full of precious fellowship; and I magnify the grace of God in giving two such lives to this country. They are the centre of a group of noble Christian people, who give them such honour as no Court could emulate, because it arises from deep appreciation of their thoughtfulness, humility, and devotion to the cause of Christ.

We had many circles for prayer in all parts of the town; but there were two main sessions, one from 11.0 to 1.0; the other 5.0 to 7.0. At each there were two addresses, one in Swedish, and one by myself. Cleansing, surrender to the claims of Christ, the fulness of Christ's supply, and the nature of the Holy Spirit's work in the believer were my principal themes. It was very beautiful to see how deep and moving the meetings became, because the Swedish people are not given to much emotion.

MISSION AT STOCKHOLM.

I have now concluded a mission of five memorable days in Stockholm. If the meetings could only have been continued for as many weeks, I believe a permanent work, which would have reached the whole country, would have been done. The people have come in great numbers to hear the Word; and after the services we have been kept till a late hour speaking to those who desired to commence a new life, or to adjust themselves with the claims of God. The Prince and Princess and others are so helpful in speaking to these.

Two meetings here of ministers and evangelists have been full of the gracious presence of God, and through these I hope that a fire may be kindled in all parts of the city and country.

My heart has been deeply pained to hear of the deaths of Dr. Gladstone and Mr. Kensit. The former influenced me greatly in my early life, being indirectly related to me, and always impressing me with the transparency, earnestness, and consistency of his character. With great scientific attainments, he combined the humility of a little child. The latter I honoured as a man of unflinching courage and tenacity in what seemed to him a holy crusade, and I telegraphed at once to Mrs. Kensit my profound sympathy in her multiplied sorrows.

I am now starting for Finland, and so home. How much I depend on the prayers of God's children! F. B. Meyer.

Work in Madrid.—In her new report of work for the Lord carried on in the neighbourhood of "the Bull Ring," Madrid (Calle Diego de Leon, 4, Bjo), Miss Leake tells of gracious service rendered. Homeless ones often find a refuge for the night, or longer. Free meals are given to the really needy. Sometimes men working on the roads, who shelter from bad weather in the doorway of the building, are asked into the Mission, and a bright little meeting is held for them. Tracts are distributed, and women are encouraged to bring their sewing in the afternoon, when a book is read, and hymns are sung. Often when perhaps there have only been two or three inside, it is found that others have been sitting on the stairs outside listening. Sick ones are visited and helped as far as possible. An addition of £200 a year to the funds would enable much more to be done. Among other wants are a fellow worker and a teacher, with house for the latter, which would serve as school, &c.

Convention at Elandsfontein,

SOUTH AFRICA.

AN interesting and unique convention has just been held at Elandsfontein. Capt. Thomson, R.H.A., has been stationed at Pretoria, and has been actively co-operating with the workers of the South Africa General Mission in their work among the soldiers there. For many months a work of faith and sowing has been carried on by three lady missionaries. Recently Mr. James Taylor, soldiers' evangelist, went up from Newcastle, Natal, to help at Pretoria, and a blessed revival broke out, in which many "lads" professed conversion.

The desirability of a convention for all the Christian soldiers in South Africa was laid upon the hearts of the workers; and, although it was a very difficult thing to arrange, faith, prayer, and hard work attained the necessary leave for a large number of the men. Elandsfontein, eight miles from Johannesburg, was considered the most central place for the meetings, and thither many came.

Captain Thomson presided, and gave a very searching introductory address on "The Pharisee and the Publican," applying the spirit represented by each to present-day Christian workers. There was evidence of preparedness among the soldiers, and the gatherings for prayer displayed great liberty and fervour.

After a very impressive and solemn address by Mr. W. Spencer Walton, of the South Africa General Mission, on "The Call of Elisha," a large part of the audience came out to the penitent form as a token of their surrender to God. The Holy Spirit had been convicting many of secret sin, and showing the need of an utter break with the old life and its hindrances. It was a touching sight to see stalwart soldiers broken down in tears and sobs, as in penitence they sought forgiveness for half-hearted service, and renewed their consecration to God.

Mr. James Taylor was a great blessing, and was always ready to speak as occasion required. His earnest, burning words will long be remembered. One address on Nehemiah building the walls of Jerusalem teemed with spiritual lessons for present day workers. Many of the soldiers were young converts, and among these Mr. Taylor laboured in season and out of season. Sometimes gathering them around him between the services, he would sit down on an ant heap, and, with open Bible, assure them of the blessed certainty of eternal life.

Mr. A. W. Baker, of the S.A. Compounds Mission, addressed the closing Gospel meeting, a number professing conversion. Christian workers, representing the various agencies at work among the soldiers were present, a number of whom took part.

The camp broke up on Monday, September 22, and the men returned to their various regiments and batteries, some soon to leave for home, India, Malta, &c. Prayer is asked that they may be kept true to God and be made blessings in their different garrisons.

The financial expenses were large, involving the feeding of the large camp of soldiers for a week, but the promoters had a strong assurance that the work was of God, and that He would provide for all its needs. No collections were made—only a box was hung up for offerings. We understand that more than enough came in to pay all expenses.

J. S. Young.

South Africa Gen. Mission, Durban.

The Protestant Reformation Society has recently made several grants of Rev. Arthur Galton's book, "Our Attitude towards English Roman Catholics," to libraries, clergymen, and private individuals. Among the most interesting of these grants was one made in response to an application from Rev. V. J. Givargese, Principal of the Mar Dionysius Seminary, Kottayam, South India, to whom books have been sent for the library of that institution. In the course of an interesting letter, the Principal alludes to the tradition that his Church (the Syriac) was founded by the Apostle Thomas, and states that through many centuries it had to endure cruel persecution at the hands of Roman ecclesiastics. The community was, he says, sunk in ignorance, but has awakened from lethargy. English education is spreading, and they have their own English schools.

Young Men in London.

Extracts from the annual report of the Central Young Men's Christian Association.

IT is a happy circumstance that the completion of the fifty-eighth year of the work should synchronize with the "coming of age" of

as the headquarters of the parent Association.

Twenty-one years have elapsed since the day, memorable in Association history, when the building so closely associated with all the great Christian movements of the century was declared open as the home of the Central Y.M.C.A. In looking back at the work which has been accomplished during the intervening years, the committee desire to express their gratitude to Almighty God for His unceasing goodness towards them, and for the blessing given to the work which they have sought to carry on in His Name amongst the young men of the Metropolis. Since the Association entered into possession of Exeter Hall, its walls have been hallowed by the fact that thousands of young men have here passed "from death unto life," to multitudes the Gospel message has been proclaimed, and the workers look forward with confidence to the day when the harvest which has resulted from the seed thus sown shall be made manifest.

Here Christian lives and characters have been built up, and many young men have received a training in Christian service which has fitted them for useful labour in the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the comfortably-furnished and attractive rooms, hosts of young men have learned to appreciate the advantages of "A Home from Home;" whilst in the Educational Department thousands have received equipment which has enabled them to take high places in the commercial world.

Year by year the conditions of life in the metropolis, and the rapid multiplication of attractions, render it increasingly difficult to secure the attention of young men to the more important and vital questions which affect their eternal destiny. It is, therefore, gratifying that the past year has in many departments shown progress as compared with previous years; and it has been especially noticeable that there has been a marked increase of interest shown by the members of the Association in the aggressive spiritual work, while the number of entries by young men as members, associates, and students also shows an advance.

A SCHOOL OF BIBLE STUDY.

Mindful of the fact that continuous and successful missionary work can only be the outcome of vigorous spiritual life, they have again given a prominent place in the Association agencies to Bible study, thus seeking better to equip young Christian men for active service in the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The methods employed in this section of the Association work have, therefore, had a twofold purpose: first, to aid young men in the development of Christian life and character, and to train them for Christian service; and secondly, to associate their efforts for the salvation of their fellows. The school of Bible study has been one of the most encouraging features of the work for several years past, and the interest exhibited shows no signs of diminution. It is a gratifying fact in connection with the religious life of London that so many are ready to avail themselves of opportunities for the systematic study of the Word of God.

THE "MEN'S OWN."

Sunday by Sunday throughout the year an earnest band of workers have taken up their allotted posts in the Strand for the purpose of distributing to young men invitations to attend the evening Gospel service. The result of this work has been that week by week numbers of young men who would rightly be classed as "non-church-goers" have been led to attend the meetings, and to listen to the plainly-spoken messages which have been given, telling of the power of Christ to save from the penalty and power of sin. Evidence has not been wanting that to some this proved to be a message of salvation. When it is remembered that at each service a new audience is secured, and that this is also true of all evangelistic meetings held at this centre, it will be seen that an extensive missionary work is being maintained amongst a class of young men not influenced by other Christian agencies.

ALDERSGATE STREET CENTRE.

At the Aldersgate Street Centre Rev. F. B. Meyer's Saturday Bible Talks have been, for the thirteenth year in succession, a gratifying feature of the year's work. With the exception of three Saturdays, when Mr. Meyer was absent on his visit to Russia and Finland, the class has met in customary numbers and with practical continuity. It has been characterized by the same earnestness of spirit as heretofore, while the most hearty relationships continue to exist between the leader and its members. Although each term sees an accession of new men to its ranks in large numbers, it is a pleasure to notice how large a proportion of the men present attend regularly. He is succeeded during his absence from England this autumn, by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, M.A.

THE BIBLE CLASSES.

We have had sufficient cause for gratitude, at Aldersgate Street, in the blessing which has attended our gatherings week by week. The subjects dealt with have been taken alternately from the Old and New Testaments, the former being a series of studies on the Messianic Prophecies, while from the New Testament a course has been taken from the Gospels. The conversational character of the class has been very much improved, largely through a suggestion of some of our members that the Thursday devotional meeting might also be utilized as a preparatory study for the Sunday afternoon lesson.

EVANGELISTIC AGENCIES.

Turning now to the evangelistic agencies in the City, a weekly Gospel meeting has again been conducted on Monday nights, with the assistance of such speakers as Revs. John Wilson (of Woolwich) and H. Elvet Lewis (of Canonbury), Dr. Carless and Mr. Charles Cook. The difficulty of such a work as this in the heart of the City is largely due to the existence of bye-laws prohibiting the distribution of invitations in the streets. Our members, consequently, can only hope to increase the attendance at our meetings by personal solicitation amongst their colleagues in the warehouses. Experience has shown that the largest measure of success results from a series of addresses by the same speakers.

THE NOON PRAYER MEETING.

The mid-day meetings for prayer and praise, which have been maintained at this centre for nearly forty years, continue to be much appreciated, the meetings throughout the past twelve months having been very well supported. Probably the gathering on Monday morning, of the leading workers in the evangelistic field, is quite unique in its nature. Rarely a week passes without matters of special interest to those engaged in evangelistic work being brought before the meeting, while through the year we have had frequent addresses from well-known speakers.

CORNHILL CENTRE.

It is perhaps more particularly true of this centre than of any branch of the Association that it is a "work for young men by young men." That is to say, the success of all endeavour to win the men who make up the complex machinery of this great city must depend almost altogether on the individual effort of the members. Many testimonies have come to hand of blessing received at the meeting for Bible-reading and prayer held each week day (excepting Saturdays), from 1.30 to 2 p.m., on the fourth floor. The Thursday evening conversational Bible class is one of the brightest and most prominent features of the work here. It is held from 6.30 to 7.30.

The following figures of the work will be read with interest:—Members, 2,179; associates, 875; junior section members, 165; meetings for Bible study (weekly), 11; aggregate attendance at same (weekly), 653; meetings for young men (weekly), 42; aggregate attendance (weekly), 1,812; average number of young men visiting the three centres (weekly—estimated), 12,000; recommended to lodgings, 4,250; situations secured, 238; afforded temporary relief, 420.

FRENCH AND DUTCH SECTIONS.

It is generally estimated that there are about 5,000 French-speaking young men in London, the majority of whom are probably never reached by any religious influence. To find these young men and to try to bring them in living contact with Christ is the difficult task to which the French section applies itself with a measure of zeal and success. The work of the Dutch Y.M.C.A. has continued to make progress slowly but surely. The meetings, which are held at the Cornhill Centre, have been advertised as widely as possible in Holland, and as a result more strangers have been welcomed to the rooms. A class for Bible study has attracted quite a number of young Dutchmen, some of whom come a considerable distance to attend. This is followed by a prayer meeting. The other evenings are given up for the most part to literary subjects, while once a quarter a night has been devoted to Foreign Missionary interests.

Mr. J. H. Putterill is general secretary of the work, his colleagues being Mr. Basil Hewer (secretary at Aldersgate Street) and Mr. Clarence Hooper (financial secretary).

Home Missions.

For Paralysed Poor.

AN important branch of philanthropic work is that which ministers to the needs of the distressed poor during their treatment as out-patients of hospitals. In connection with the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, in Queen Square, W.C., there is an auxiliary, entitled "The Ladies' Samaritan Society" (Mrs. L. Curtis, secretary), which in a quiet way renders valuable service to such needy sufferers.

To quote the report:—Among the out-patients who crowd the waiting-room are to be found, perhaps, a strong man able and willing to work and win support for those dependent upon him, but stricken down with that dire disease, epilepsy, and requiring the care of wife, mother, or friend, even in passing through the streets. A little further on may be seen an anxious hard-working mother, whose nervous system unremitting toil and many cares have at last broken down, and who is now paralysed and helpless. It will be seen that in most of these cases not only is the family burdened with the support of one sufferer, but another healthy adult has to be told off to attend to the helpless one, and thus poverty, and often starvation follow in the wake of disease.

SOME TYPICAL CASES.

E. W., stricken by paralysis, has a wife and three children dependent on his earnings. Was sent from the hospital to a convalescent home, and his wife allowed a sum for a few weeks, while looking about for an opportunity to take a small shop, as the husband will never again be fit for his old employment. They were assisted to buy a small general business, by which they are now making a living.

A. P. has his lower limbs paralysed. He was granted a self-propelling chair, in which he can wheel himself out, and thus sell daily papers.

Mrs. H. is in hospital, incurably paralysed, leaving a baby three years old to the care of a daughter of fifteen and a son of nineteen, both employed during the day. Three other children are in the workhouse school. The Society made a weekly grant for the minding of the baby while the mother remains in the hospital.

A number of patients receive relief in money during the year, and in addition, many tickets for bread, coal, and grocery have been bestowed on those to whom it was thought better to give in kind than in cash. A little temporary assistance in an hour of sudden distress, such as is caused by the breakdown of a bread-winner from a stroke of paralysis, often averts ruin and the loss of a home.

Some of the female patients are employed by the Society in making clothing, which is afterwards distributed among necessitous patients; thus remunerative work is given to some while gifts of clothing are made to others, and both forms of relief meet with grateful appreciation.

Lambeth Creche and Mission.—Since the institution of this effort over 1,400 children have been received into the crèche, and cared for by loving hands. A weekly meeting for mothers and another for dust-girls are held. Tea is provided, needlework taught, and the Gospel preached at these gatherings. The work is carried on in the midst of deep poverty and degradation, and the cases received at the crèche are of the saddest description. The following is typical of the frequent experience of the workers:—In one instance we received three children from one family. The mother was in prison for drunkenness and neglect of her children. Before we could bring them from their wretched hovel of a home, we had to supply them with clothing. Their condition was terrible in the extreme, and it took many days to cleanse them of dirt and vermin. The mother, on being released from prison, was kept in our home many weeks, and we have reason to believe she is a changed woman. She is now settled with her husband and children, and is trying to do the part of a mother to her poor little offspring. The superintendent is Miss Reid, 33, Keildon Road, New Wandsworth, S.W.

"Friendless and Fallen."

A STRIKING "Occasional Paper" has been issued by Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the London Preventive and Reformatory Institution (200, Euston Road, N.W.), in which instances are given illustrating the continued blessing which attends the work.

FOURTEEN YEARS AFTER.

Some months ago a lady called to see the secretary respecting the admission of a young woman in whom she had become interested. Before leaving she told him of a woman, now doing well, who, fourteen years ago, was in one of the homes. The books of the Institution show that this was thought by no means a hopeful case. Before her admission she had been in prison for neglecting her illegitimate child; and, moreover, while in the home she once ran away, but was taken back again. It is, however, gratifying to know that "after many days" the seed sown in her heart has borne fruit. She is now happily married, has two or three children, and is quite a changed character.

NEAR THE BRINK.

F. L. B., aged nineteen, was the daughter of highly respectable parents, at N——. She came to London without her parents' knowledge, having (according to her statement) left a letter for her mother explaining her absence. Her object was to see a young woman friend, who she feared might possibly come between her and her lover. On arriving at the London railway station, she was dismayed to discover that she had either lost her friend's address or left it behind her. She was therefore stranded in London without a shelter, or means to obtain one, and wandered about for a time, until a policeman spoke to her, and sent her in a cab, himself paying the fare, to a Home. She could not be admitted there, and they sent her to the Open-all-Night Refuge of this Institution, where she arrived at 1.30 a.m., and was received. The mother was communicated with by telegram and letter, which resulted in a relative attending at the Refuge to receive the young woman and restore her to her parents.

ONLY SIXTEEN YEARS OLD.

H. A. was only sixteen years of age at the time of her admission to a Maternity Home. The daughter of poor, but highly respectable, parents, she had been led astray. The distress of her parents may be better imagined than described; but the case was promptly taken up, with the happy result narrated in the following letter:—"You will be glad to know that the young woman, H. A., who went from here to your Maternity Home some twelve months, or more, since, has developed into a very steady, respectable, Christian girl. She is still very comfortable in the situation where she went when she left the Home. Her friends are very thankful. I pray God may still bless your work."

"VERY SATISFACTORY."

B. L. M. was admitted to the Preventive Training Home many years ago, and fourteen years elapsed without anything being heard of her. She had maintained a thoroughly respectable character, and for some years has been a member of a Christian Church. By birth she belonged to a garrison town, and her parents were both dead at the time of her admission. As in the case of many other young people—especially those who, like this young woman, have no one to counsel and advise them—she left a good situation for no sufficient reason. Difficulties arose, and she became destitute; when she sought aid from this Institution. In a very short time she was started again on life's way. A few months since she called to see the secretary, who, after so long an interval as fourteen years, was pleased to see her again. She is living a consistent Christian life, and, through information received from an independent source, it is known that she is, in every sense, a very satisfactory instance of good accomplished through the Institution.

For Jewish Converts.

THE new Converts' and Inquirers' Home at Mitcham of the Barbican Mission to the Jews is an ideal building for its purpose; position and internal arrangements are alike excellent, and with the blessing of God attending the operations among the Jewish population of the East London Ghetto there is every reason to anticipate that this new institution will prove useful in leading seeking souls out of blindness into the light of the Gospel.

An interested company gathered to the official opening on Friday last. Prediger C. T. Lipshytz explained the circumstances and enlarged needs which led to the removal from Walthamstow to the new premises at Mitcham. Answering the question, "Why is such a Home required?" the speaker said that (1) it affords opportunity to inquirers to compare, in prayerful seclusion, the Old and New Testament Scriptures, and to seek the Way of Life; (2) it is a shelter for those who, after accepting the true Messiah, become exposed to persecution at the hands of their former co-religionists; (3) it is a test of sincerity. The capacious grounds will be utilized for "spadework"—a simple method of differentiating between the honest seeker and the loafer. The latter speedily shows signs of dismay when put to work.

The president of the mission, Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, spoke of the Jew as a problem for the Christian to solve. Those who bless the Jew shall be blessed of God, yet the Jew himself remains under the cloud of God's chastisement. The legacy is bequeathed to us, to seek the Jew, and though missions to Jews are faced with particular difficulties, they meet with particular blessing. Objection is sometimes made to the expenditure incurred in such missions, but investigation would show that the proportion, the number of souls won, and of faithful workers made, are as large as those of other missions. Turning to the Barbican Mission, the speaker said that there exists no spirit of rivalry; indeed, a well-known missionary among the Jews recently said that there is ample room for all the agencies at work. Of the Whitechapel Hall, the Prebendary reported that Bible classes and discussion meetings are spiritually effective, and at Mitcham the young converts will be under wise care and instruction. Seventeen will be accommodated, and, in addition to a residence for the secretary, a section will be used for the reception of poor Jewish children and their mothers, for a brief holiday and rest.

Short addresses of welcome were subse quently given by Rev. F. S. Legg, vicar of the parish, who expressed hearty satisfaction at the establishment of this house of prayer, and Rev. G. P. K. Winlaw, who spoke of the prospects of the Jew, and of coming blessing to the world through Israel. At the present time the nations think of the Jew as typical of everything that is grasping. In any case, the Jews as a people are spiritually dead. "Can these dry bones live?" Yes, God will surely put spiritual life into that which is so very dry.

Mr. H. C. Hogan testified to the good wrought through the Mission, earnestly pleaded the cause of the converts, who, in order to follow the light, are left practically homeless and penniless. From among their ranks some have gone forth as missionaries of Christ, and all who are received are encouraged and trained to walk worthy of the liberty of the Gospel.

Strangers' Friend Society. — The Lord Mayor, as treasurer of the Society, has received a donation of £100 from Mr. F. Waffield, Sevenoaks, to help pressing and urgent cases in view of the work of the coming winter.

Presbyterian Home Missions.—The third annual gathering of the London Presbyterian congregations in connection with home mission work will be held in Exeter Hall next Wednesday, October 29, at seven o'clock. Lord Reay will preside, and among the speakers expected are Gipsy Smith, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. James Christie (Carlisle), and Rev. A. Ramsay (Highgate). The special object is to call attention to "the spiritual needs of London, and how to meet them." The various Wednesday evening services throughout the city and suburban congregations are suspended for the week.

Missionary Day,

AT STRANGEWAYS, MANCHESTER.

THE eleventh missionary anniversary was held at Strangeways Conference Hall, Manchester, on October 17.

At the customary breakfast, when about 120 guests were present, Dr. Moorhouse, Bishop of Manchester, gave a characteristic address. A devout believer in missionary enterprise, he first spoke of the labours of the late Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, who for thirty-two years was at the head of the Strangeways Institution for Homeless Children. He was sure that the first feeling with everyone was the sense of the loss of a loved and gracious presence. He had never known a man who was so absolutely self-less; or whose labours for the waifs and strays was so devoted and unselfish. He thought most of those who needed help most. No money was his own, no time was his own, no strength was his own; it all belonged to the Lord Jesus Christ, who died to save each poor waif and stray.

Prebendary Macdonald presided at the public meeting, and gave as a keynote for the day John xv. 5, "Without Me ye can do nothing," the spirit of which breathed through, and was echoed in, every address. Bishop Tugwell was the first speaker, and as he proceeded to describe his late expedition to Hausaland, with the wonderful reception accorded to his party by the natives, and the cordial welcome awaiting reinforcements so greatly needed, he specially mentioned the need for two consecrated women to return with Mrs. Tugwell and himself.

Canon Flynn (central secretary C.M.S.) followed with an earnest address on "Missionary Problems," showing they are in great part the outcome of answered prayer. God has opened up vast countries to the Gospel; are we ready to carry it to the perishing millions? The British Empire is advancing in every direction; is the Church of Christ ready to advance also?

Rev. A. Bonsey (L.M.S., Hankow), who has been twenty years a missionary, gave an address which sparkled with facts and illustrations full of encouragement. He mentioned in passing the pressing need for ten men at once to work in the province of Hunan. He described the bright side of work in China; but the next speaker had a very different story to tell.

Miss Muir (C.I.M.) has laboured with other devoted missionaries in the far away North-West Province of Kiang Su, which so far has proved a very unfruitful field. There are only about twenty baptized converts after more than fifteen years of labour; yet as this dear sister testified to the satisfying love of God in that dark place, with so little human fellowship and companionship, hearts were deeply moved. Though the mission there has been stripped of superintendent and several workers, it is believed that an abundant harvest will yet crown years of patient devotion and sacrifice. Later in the day Miss Muir described their methods of itinerating in the neighbouring walled villages, and some of the hindrances.

In the afternoon, after ingathering for prayer, Rev. Dr. John Gibson (Presbyterian Mission) gladdened his hearers by telling of 100,000 Protestant communicants in China to-day, and described several cases of conversion quite apart from human instrumentality. He laid great stress on the fact that God the Holy Ghost is the worker and the native Church the chief instrument used in winning souls. Bishop Tugwell pleaded very powerfully the needs of the Yoruba country, where 10,000 are reading the word of God. He told of the horrible overproof spirit of which 800,000 barrels are annually shipped to one port alone (Lagos), and which is such a curse to the land.

Egypt claimed attention as Mr. Martin Cleaver recalled a Mohammedan convert who, through reading the Bible for controversial purposes, found the Lord Jesus Christ, and clave unto Him through the loss of all earthly possessions and friends. He is now in training for Gospel work. From Alexandria thoughts turned to Central Africa, as the Congo Balolo Mission was represented by Mr. H. S. Gamman. Truly few have any adequate conception of the darkness and degradation of heathendom, and it was a revelation to hear that cannibalism is still in full force in that district, as well as terrible immorality, superstition, and witchcraft.

There was a good attendance in the evening, when Miss Muir and Rev. A. Bonsey were the speakers. In Hankow, 15,000 people listen every week to the preaching of the Gospel, and 20,000 tracts and 5,000 copies of the Scriptures are issued weekly. Then Mr. George Swann gave a sketch of the Egypt Mission Band, its birth in a prayer meeting, and its progress and work. Rev. W. Gwynn, of Calcutta, reported good work among native undergraduates, and pressed home the question, would we be willing to follow Christ to the death, if need be? Dr. Gibson pleaded for more personal love to the individual men, women, and little children whom we are inclined to think of as great masses rather than as of possible brothers and sisters in Christ.

The closing address was from Dr. Pierson on "The New Voices of God in the Twentieth Century." He showed how success and suffering are always linked in God's Providence; and as he dealt with the question, "Do Foreign Missions pay?" we saw the privilege of being allowed to preach among the heathen "the unsearchable riches of Christ."

Gipsy Smith at the City Temple.

A LARGE congregation was drawn to the City Temple on Thursday morning where Gipsy Smith was announced to preach. This was the first occasion on which the evangelist had occupied Dr. Parker's pulpit, and, while confessing that he had consented to do so with fear and trembling, he displayed no trace whatever of embarrassment.

Taking as his subject Ephes. v. 18, "Be filled with the Spirit," the preacher delivered a rousing and vigorous address on the lack of spiritual power in the Church to-day compared with the Church of Pentecost. Would anyone come into our churches and say, "These people are drunk." The fact is (exclaimed the Gipsy) you are too sober. How many sickly, sentimental people there are in our churches—afraid to say their souls are their own!

Turning to consider what the result of the Spirit's indwelling and possession of the Church would be, the preacher ventured to think that many remarkable things would happen. Men would not be afraid to witness for Christ. In Peter's speaking there was no trimming, and if men only spoke out to-day as did the Apostle, many of the things that are repugnant and lift up their poisonous heads to the sky would be laid low. Another result would be a greater love for the prayer-meeting. Where there is no prayer-meeting there is no church. It may be an ecclesiastical refrigerator or a religious club, but it is not a church. No difficulty is experienced in getting people to attend entertainments or socials; but announce a prayer-meeting, and where are the people who take communion?

When Christian workers are filled with the Spirit, they will see in "the man in the gutter" some one worth saving. Another outcome will be that we shall be quick to detect when God is working, and willing to acknowledge the graces in other Christians besides those of our own congregation. Then the churches will never have to descend to doubtful means of raising money for carrying on the Lord's work. After pleading with his hearers to seek personally the infilling of the Holy Spirit, Gipsy Smith emphasized his appeal by singing, with much earnestness, "Jesus is waiting His grace to bestow."

The Friendly Female Society, the centenary of which was recently celebrated, has for its object to assist widows and single women of respectable character, of the age of sixty and upwards, who have known better days. There are two sets of almshouses connected with the charity, also a long list of pensioners on the books, and the names of many others to whom relief is granted. The monthly allowance is always taken to the poor women by a lady visitor, who avails herself of the opportunity afforded of saying a few words of cheer and encouragement. Particulars may be had on application to the secretary, Mrs. Cordeaux, Woodford Green, Essex.

For Soldiers and Sailors.

THE opening ceremony of the John Cory Soldiers and Sailors' Rest at Cardiff on Monday, October 6, will long be treasured by those who were present. The magnificent building, said to be one of the finest of its kind in the world, cost about £6,000, and is the gift of Mr. John Cory, and is furnished throughout at a further cost of £1,000 by Mrs. Cory.

Lord Aberdare presided over a representative and crowded gathering in the English meeting hall, when Mrs. Cory formerly declared the institute open.

Mr. Cory recalled the inception of the work twenty-two years ago, when Madame Cadot, then Miss Tilly, began a meeting for coloured seamen in a boarding house. He had watched its growth with much interest, and rejoiced to see it emerge from its humble beginning until it has become one of the largest missions to merchant seamen in the world. The speaker added that during all these years he has taken a deep personal interest in the Christian efforts put forth daily and nightly by their faithful band of workers on behalf of the seamen; and, seeing the great need for larger premises in which to carry on the ever-growing work efficiently, it had been a source of great pleasure to Mrs. Cory and himself to erect and equip the present building.

During 1901 the attendance at the English, Scandinavian, French, and Italian meetings numbered 24,267, and the number of temperance pledges taken was 641. The lady workers distributed 626 bags of literature to sailors on their outward voyages, and hundreds of parcels to soldiers also. More sailors land at Cardiff than at any other port in the world; and at the Rest, as in the past, there will be an ever open door. Admission and all advantages are free.

In the evening a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Cory, and addressed by Mr. F. N. Charrington and Principal Edwards. Much prayer, praise, and testimony was offered up to the glory of God, and the day was all that could be wished for in this forward movement in the work among the sailors and soldiers visiting the port of Cardiff.

Progress at St. Ives.

A CONVENTION for the deepening of spiritua life was lately held at St. Ives, Hunts. This one day of holy gatherings proved an answer to the earnest prayers and heartfelt desires of some of His hidden ones in the town.

The burden of the arrangements fell on Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Dann, of the Society of Friends, who have recently settled in St. Ives. Mr. W. R. Lane, the well-known evangelist, kindly gave up one of his days of rest to take part. Mr. G. Hunnybun, of Godmanchester, also spoke, and Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Hamilton, of the South Africa General Mission.

The attendances were good at all the meetings, but particularly at night, when the Public Institution was full, and the power of God was present to bless. Though there are no great results to be tabulated, the spirit of the meetings showed the need for such gatherings. Certainly God sent through His servants messages for both saint and sinner, and it was distinctly refreshing in these "last days" to hear one testimony after another to the all-sufficiency of Holy Scripture. The thought often occurs, Why cannot hundreds of other small towns follow the example of St. Ives? Many cannot go to large conventions, but here is opportunity to promote brotherly love and stir up our souls to a holy walk.

A special effort is being made to reach the unconverted on Sunday evenings. Mr. and Mrs. Dann have secured the Corn Exchange, and night by night large numbers gather to hear the old, old story.

Bayswater Convention.—Opening on Monday evening next at eight o'clock at Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's Road, W., the Bayswater Convention will be continued during the next four days, with meetings at 11 a.m., 3, 6, and 8 p.m. daily. Among the speakers expected are Revs. E. H. Hopkins, Preb. Webb-Peploe, S. A. McCracken, Darlow Sarjeant, F. S. Webster, Wright Hay, J. George Stuart, Francis Paynter, E. W. Moore, and S. A. Selwyn. Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson will give a Bible reading at each of the eleven o'clock gatherings, and Mrs. Penn Lewis will address Christian workers each evening at six o'clock. Captain Tottenham is expected to preside throughout.

Church Congress Notes.

A Plea for the Pulpit's Revival.

By the Bishop of Durham.

DOES the preaching of Christ hold anything like its proper place at present among us of the Church of England? If I see things at all as they are, it is far otherwise. A certain slight of the sermon is in fashion. I am told that in many churches the thronging congregation melts away before the sermon begins, leaving ranks sadly thinned to listen to the envoy of Christ. And sometimes, I cannot but fear, the fault does not lie altogether with the outgoing troop of worshippers, for the preacher himself is not in love with his work; he allows himself to deal scantily and perfunctorily with his sermon. Perhaps it is not only brief (a merit in the modern fashion), but thin.

Perhaps it is but a glib essay, clever or otherwise, and sometimes all the colder and weaker to the soul for being that poor thing, clever. It is a discussion, a suggestion, an appreciation, a sketch, or what not; anything rather than a message. The sermon is evermore the thing which must give way. Perhaps it has to yield and shrink before the demands of a busy organization, sometimes largely social in its methods and ideals. Perhaps it has to be subordinated to the exigencies of a greatly developed ritual, or a disproportioned elaborateness of music crowds it out. However, it has to give way. It is only the sermon!

In the name of prophets and apostles, and of an innumerable company of witnesses and messengers of the Lord, all down the long walks of Christian history, in the supreme Name of Him Who from Capernaum to the very crisis of His sacrifice, was the preacher of Himself, are we not right in making all the appeal we can to the Church, and all the prayer we can to God, for a great revival of the pulpit?

"Our Unhappy Divisions."

By the Bishop of Ripon.

I cannot understand how any thoughful man who reflects upon the present state of religion, at home or abroad, can fail to hear the many and urgent voices which are calling out for union. Sometimes I think that it would be well if all Christian bodies in our midst would pass a self-denying ordinance for one year, and lay aside all those questions which aggravate our dissensions and embitter our hearts, in order to give themselves heart, mind, and soul, in prayer and in brotherly converse, to the healing of our divisions, the consolidation of our too much scattered energies, the cultivation of the spirit of brotherly love, followed as it would inevitably be by the quickening of our missionary zeal.

We all admit that we are passing through an age of transition. We are rapidly moving towards a new epoch wherein many old things will have passed away. Men are groping for the solution of great and grave questions which touch the welfare of our nation, our Empire, our race, and the world of mankind; and while these matters are in debate the Christian bodies stand stiffly apart, eyeing one another with jealous suspicion; they are powerless to give helpful and united counsel in the hour of crisis because their divisions provoke discordant utterances, their separations paralyse their influence. The settlement of great questions is in danger of falling into the hands of men little guided by Christian ideas, and the society of the future, which might be enriched by the inflowing influence of united Christian principle, is impoverished through our divisions.

The Evangelical Position.

By Sir John Kennaway.

I venture to claim for Evangelicals that they are strong in this—that they have the support of a national conscience thoroughly Protestant. It is not easily stirred; it is often dormant; but once aroused, as in the case of James II., it sweeps all before it, even proceeding to the deposition of an elected and anointed King. It carried the Public Worship Regulation Act through Parliament by a strong wave of opinion. More recently it showed its determination in refusing to abrogate the Protestant Oath of the Sovereign on his Accession. It regards with contemptuous indifference the attempt of a section of the clergy to reintroduce mediæval superstitions. There are indications, however, that its patience may be too sorely tried, and mutterings are heard that those who repudiate the obligations of a contract should no longer enjoy the benefits conferred under it.

Again, we are strong in our appeal to Holy Scripture as containing all things necessary to salvation. We are strong as followers of those who caused the Church to awake from the deadness of the eighteenth century by the preaching of the doctrine of the Cross and exalting the Holy Spirit as the source of life and wisdom and power. Evangelicals are strong from having taken the lead in the past 100 years in proclaiming the obligation upon the Church of missionary enterprise, and bringing it home to the hearts and consciences of the people.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

PERTH.

PERTH has been regarded as rather a hard place to move in the temperance cause, but Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones have just concluded a most encouraging fortnight's mission there. It has been felt and said that no such temperance meetings have been held in Perth since the historic visit of J. B. Gough, no such vigorous and sustained attack upon the forces of the drink traffic and habit has been made for years past, and no such widespread results in additional adherents to the principle of total abstinence, or in strengthened determination to unite in fighting against so fierce a foe of humanity have been previously achieved. Night after night in succession the City Hall has been filled with listeners eager to hear the burning words of eloquence which fell from the lips of Dr. Henry in his denunciations of the great social evils begotten of this body-and-soul-destroying traffic, or in his elucidation of "the doctrine of total abstinence" and "the value and power of the pledge."

An esteemed correspondent writes as follows:—"Dr. Henry has a masterly grasp of his subject, and marshals a vast array of facts in a convincing manner. His addresses are mines of temperance information, illuminated with humour and apt illustration. He does not forget to give the Gospel of God's Grace its proper place, and to set forth the necessity not merely of reformation, but of regeneration. Two main features running through the whole mission are especially worthy of remark:—(1) The stream of references to the Bible, showing that no sound scholarship can teach that the Bible advocates anywhere the use of intoxicating liquor, but it pronounces ten great woes upon it. Nowhere in the Book can these three things be found together—intoxicating liquor, men using it, God blessing it. (2) The powerful way in which reasons for signing the pledge were brought forward and prejudice against it removed.

"Opportunity was given at the close of every meeting for signing the pledge, and over 970 did so in the hall, besides hundreds more outside in the books distributed for the purpose.

"When Dr. Henry came he said his aim was to make the advocacy of total abstinence easier for every minister and temperance worker in the town. The universal feeling is that he has done so. Temperance people have themselves been deeply stirred. Various sections of the temperance party have been more closely drawn together, and it is hoped that more united and strenuous action will be the immediate result. Mr. Armon Jones' singing proved a great attraction; it was full of spiritual power.

"On Tuesday afternoon Dr. Henry addressed a women's meeting in the City Hall, presided over by Mrs. M'Nab, when there was a large attendance. He also addressed several open-air gatherings at various public works in the city at the breakfast or dinner-hours.

"To Mr. Cranswick Noad and Mr. Jas. McEwen, the secretaries of the committee in charge of the arrangements, thanks are due for labour ungrudgingly given, as well as to many others who helped in various ways."

GREENOCK.

A fortnight's mission in Greenock, Gourock, and Port Glasgow was commenced by Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones on Saturday last with a large gathering in the Temperance Institute, following an open-air meeting on the Esplanade. Ex-Bailie Lang presided, supported by Provost Anderson and other friends. On Sabbath last open-air meetings were held in various parts of Greenock, in the afternoon Dr. Henry preached in Gourock Parish Church, and in the evening a meeting was held in the Town Hall, Greenock, when a deep impression was made. The capacious building was crowded and hundreds were unable to gain admission. No fewer than 285 new pledges have already been secured. Mr. Armon Jones sang with much acceptance.

From Our Readers.

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

DEAR SIR,—In this week's issue of The Christian, "A." goes to the root of the matter when he says, "Is it not Christians that need reviving in these days?" Alas, sir, that we can only answer in the affirmative. The apathy among Church members in regard to the spiritual needs of the masses who attend no place of worship whatever, and the apparent unwillingness to take part in any Christian work, are alarmingly on the increase. Every possible excuse is made for this by these tardy workers but the real one; they have lost the substance—Christ—and cling to the shadow—religion. They tell us we need more power in the pulpit. We do, and we don't. We need that those who name the name of Christ should live out the principles thereby involved in their daily lives. Then we may pray for a revival among the unsaved world; then there shall be a great revival.—Yours, &c.,

E. W. Tompkins.

Kingsley, New Barnet, October 16.

YOUTHFUL CRIMINALS.

I BEG to suggest that farm colonies (where work would be provided on the land, with industries of various kinds) on the housing system be established under Christian influence.

The advantage would be that they would be forced to work, and out of the reach of their former associates and fearful environments.

After a term of residence on a colony, say for twelve months, suitable and willing candidates might be emigrated to Canada and elsewhere.

Having had a good deal of experience among this and similar classes, and seen much and permanent good achieved by these colonies, I can confidently recommend this course. At any rate, the experiment might be tried. J. Albinson.

Ruthwell, N.B.

Cambridge Notes.

THE Freshmen's Sermon this year was preached by Bishop Taylor Smith last Sunday evening, when there were a large number present in Holy Trinity Church.

Another academic year has started, and nearly 900 freshmen have come into residence. The time of the University career is of such immense importance that all who have the welfare of the young men at heart should call earnestly to God that the Holy Spirit may guide them into all truth.

Forty-five students have come into residence at Ridley Hall. This number we believe is a record. Rev. E. S. Woods and Rev. C. West Watson have joined the staff. The former is succeeded on the Cambridge pastorate by Rev. W. G. Hardie, who is well-known in connection with the student movement.

The China Inland Mission held meetings in Cambridge last Wednesday, when the speakers included two of the "Cambridge Seven," Mr. D. Hoste and Mr. C. Polhill, as well as Mr. Walter Sloan. Mr. Polhill mentioned the fact that all their missionaries who had passed through the Boxer trouble had now returned to China.

The Outlook in Ireland.

THE signs of unsettlement on the part of Irish Roman Catholic laymen are becoming daily more pronounced. The very remarkable books recently published by Mr. O'Donnell, ex-M.P. for Dungarvan, and Mr. Michael McCarthy, are evidently making a deep impression. Cardinal Logue has recently administered a solemn caution to Mr. Davitt and other Roman Catholic laymen, who have expressed disapproval of the Education Bill now before Parliament. Archbishop Walsh is at present engaged in a newspaper controversy with the United Irishman, the organ of the advanced Nationalists, and the Archbishop does not come very well out of the encounter. The charge made by the paper was that the Roman Catholic Archbishops encouraged emigration. The emigration of innocent Roman Catholic girls to serve as drudges in foreign convents has been in full swing for many years. But this is not the special grievance alluded to by the Nationalist organ.

The attendance of Roman Catholic laymen at evangelistic meetings is becoming quite common. Rev. Thomas Connellan has just concluded a short mission in the Munster Hall, Limerick. He had been there just twelve months previously, and now had the pleasure of meeting some converts, the fruits of his former visit. Among these were a young man and his wife, whose story is deeply interesting. "I had lost faith in all religion," explained the husband, "when I attended your meetings last year. Twice I started from my seat to go and speak to you when the meetings were over, but each time I was held back by Roman Catholics who accompanied me." After Mr. Connellan's departure both husband and wife applied for spiritual direction to a local clergyman. This was freely given, and both have been consistent Christians for months past.

In Belfast, too, where Mr. Connellan has been holding meetings in Grosvenor Hall, the attendance of Roman Catholics was very marked. Among those who waited on Mr. Connellan was a young lady educated in a convent, who was given a copy of "Landmarks," by a clergyman at Bangor. "Landmarks" was written by Mr. Connellan as a help to Roman Catholic inquirers. It led this young lady to the Douai New Testament, and the latter led her out of Rome. She is going to pay a visit to her mother in order to tell her what Christ has done for her.

Mr. Connellan has engagements in Donegal and other places in the immediate future. His meetings, besides attracting Roman Catholics, form a bond of union among all Christians. Members of all denominations warmly sympathize and loyally help. The priests seem to have abandoned active opposition, but they advise their flocks not to attend, and circulate falsehood through the confessional. When one reads of English Churchmen teaching transubstantiation, and advocating the use of images in Church of England services, it is significant to see Irish Roman Catholics abandoning both image and wafer worship, attracted by the preaching of the Gospel in its simplicity.

Church of England.

Rev. G. C. Williamson, vicar of Holy Trinity, Bordesley, Birmingham, has accepted the living of St. Simon's, West Kensington. Mr. Williamson came up to London in 1887, and was for two years curate at St. James', Holloway, under Rev. E. A. Stuart. From 1889 to 1895 he did good work as Association Secretary of the C.M.S. for the South-Western district, while, during his seven years' residence in Birmingham, he has built up an effective parochial organization.

The Bishop of London gave the address at the men's service at St. Peter's, Highgate Hill, N., on the afternoon of Sunday week. The church was full to overflowing, between 800 and 1,000 men being present. Service was conducted by the Vicar (Rev. J. F. Osborne) and the curate (Rev. A. Hindle). The Bishop took for his subject "Prayer," and pointed out how men could pray better by recollecting in prayer the greatness and goodness of God; the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement; and the power of the Holy Spirit. The Bishop's forcible address was listened to with marked attention by the large congregation.

The autumn home missionary meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held last week at Exeter Hall, when several addresses, accompanied with limelight views, were given, in furtherance of the work. Mr. J. H. Buxton, the president, was in the chair, and the hall was well filled. Rev. J. W. Fall, vicar of St. Andrew's, Whitehall Park, N., in an address on "Home Heathenism," dealt with the general work of the society, which is doing a considerable work in providing help for clergy who suddenly find thrust upon them a large population in the outer suburbs of great towns. There is not one of the thirty-one dioceses of England and Wales that is not largely indebted to the society. Another and a new branch of operations is the securing of the appointment of Evangelical men to benefices, the control of which it has secured and vested in trustees.

Congregational.

Rev. G. T. Coster preached on October 9, at Trinity Church, Hessle, Yorks, his valedictory sermon on his retirement from the pastoral life. A large congregation (in spite of unfavourable weather) filled the beautiful building, which had been erected as the result of his recent labours at Hessle.

At the autumnal meetings of the Cambridgeshire County Union Rev. A. N. Johnson spoke on the claims of the London Missionary Society, and said that although he could not give the joyful news that the whole had been wiped off, he could tell the encouraging news that they could account for nearly £50,000 of the £63,000 deficiency. This had been supplied in part by the Twentieth Century Fund, from which £18,300 has been received.

Shropshire autumnal meetings were held at Wellington, where the church, recently resuscitated, and re-housed in a comfortable building, is thriving under the ministry of Rev. Frank Coram. The chairman, Rev. T. Townsend, delivered his address, entitled "Our Message." He pointed out that the substance of the message cannot vary, but its expression and emphasis do according to the need of the hour. It needs to be characterized by (1) spirituality; (2) the note of certainty; and (3) the spirit of hope.

Baptist.

The church at Worcester has been reopened for public worship after complete renovation and redecoration, carried out at a cost of £1,400. Mr. Wyatt may look back with great satisfaction on the first year of his pastorate as marked by such a step forward in the history of the church.

The first anniversary of the church, and of the settlement of Rev. S. Jones as pastor, at Knighton Public Hall, Leicester, was celebrated recently. On Sunday the pastor preached morning and evening. The day following a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. J. L. Ward. The gatherings were well attended, and both pastor and people were much encouraged.

Pastor D. Hayes' second anniversary at Berger Hall, E., has been celebrated. Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached an inspiring sermon, and a public meeting followed. Both services were largely attended. The church and its organizations were never in a more flourishing condition. It is noteworthy that the large Sunday-school of 1,400 is staffed by from seventy to eighty teachers, all members of the church, and most of them once were scholars in the school.

At Haddon Hall, Bermondsey, leave has been taken of Mr. G. W. Shaw, who undertakes work in India in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society. Mr. Shaw has been associated with Haddon Hall from childhood, and he acknowledges his great indebtedness to the brothers William and H. K. Olney, the former the pastor of the church, and the latter the superintendent of the Sunday-school. It has been decided to adopt Mr. Shaw as the missionary representative.

Pastor D. H. Moore's sixth anniversary services at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, W.C., were held on the 12th and 13th inst. On Sunday morning Rev. F. H. King, of Stroud Green, preached; Mr. F. F. Belsey, J.P., addressed a large gathering of children and friends in the afternoon, and the pastor spoke in the evening. On Monday afternoon a sermon was delivered by Rev. Charles Brown, of Ferme Park, which was followed by a public meeting, at which the speakers were Mr. W. Olney (chairman), Revs. J. Wilson (Woolwich), and Dr. Marshall (Barnet). The pastor also spoke, urging the necessity for whole-hearted work and much prayer. During his six years of work the membership has increased from 407 to 562, but a great loss is continually experienced through removal to the suburbs, and consequently every energy is necessary to keep the work in a successful position.

Methodist.

Rev. J. Odell, the well-known Primitive Methodist, under whose ministry the late Mr. John Kensit was brought to religious decision, had hoped to take part in the funeral service of Mr. Kensit, but was prevented by engagements in Birmingham.

Rev. Frederic W. Macdonald, Wesleyan ex-President of Conference, has accepted the invitation of the British and Foreign Bible Society to visit New Zealand and Australia, on the occasion of its Centenary celebration in those Colonies. Mr. Macdonald excels in his advocacy of the Bible Society, and will render admirable service. He will probably be away nine months.

The Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund now stands at £911,000. Some £37,000, represented by definite circuit promises, has yet to be paid. An appeal is being made to the circuits to complete the fund by the end of the year. The chapel committee, which will have £300,000 allocated from the fund for its disbursement, has already met and decided that the distribution of the fund shall commence in January next.

The third anniversary of the Wesleyan Mission at Dalston, N.E., has been held. Sermons were preached on the Sunday by Rev. J. Grange Bennett. There were capital congregations, and at night several decisions for Christ. Two public meetings followed on the Monday. Rev. Peter Thompson rejoiced in the progress of the work, and said that more and more the Church must recognise its responsibility to the masses.

The new (Wesleyan) Kent Mission, under Rev. Thomas T. Thorpe, is full of promise. At Ashford, the headquarters of the mission, the people are entering enthusiastically into the new arrangements, and the sense of combination, and so of strength, is having an inspiriting influence upon all concerned. Mr. Thorpe is having the hearty support of his staff in this effort to raise up a strong, soul-saving Methodism in a part of the country where hitherto it has been weak.

Presbyterian.

Presbyterian services are being conducted at Grimsby and Yarmouth in connection with the annual visit of the Scotch herring fishers.

At the annual social meeting of Stamfordham Church it was stated that the church is making progress, slow, but steady and sure, and in a quiet way carrying on the work of Christ. During the coming winter special services will be conducted in various centres throughout the district.

The opening mid-week service at Notting Hill Church, on the 8th inst., took the form of a missionary one, when Rev. Alan Anderson, B.A., was present. His father, Sir Robert Anderson, laid some pointed injunctions upon his hearers as to the duty of Christians preaching the Gospel to every creature.

Society of Friends.

Hannah Fennell White, accompanied by Sarah Barcroft, has been visiting Friends in the South of France, also their various centres of mission work. Hannah F. White was present at the half-yearly meeting of Friends at Fontanès, and had some other service amongst Friends and others at Nîmes and Congénies, where she and her companion were cordially received.

The Ministry and Oversight Meeting, held on the 6th inst., had before it a report of a Conference of elders on the subject of the "counsel, encouragement, and help of those engaged in the work of the ministry," which initiated some discussion on the eldership generally. Elders were encouraged to consider not only the state of the ministry, but also the needs of the meeting. If there is a lack they should refer to it in the Ministry and Oversight Meetings, and say where they think it is to be found, with the desire that there may be a growth in the truth. Elders should encourage those who have not taken part in the ministry to consider whether they have a duty in this direction. A meeting must not be looked upon as a field of only one crop, but as a garden of various flowers. The ministry should be taken more seriously, with devotion to it of mind as well as heart.

At a meeting held at Devonshire House, E.C., to take leave of India and Syria missionaries, Dr. Wilson mentioned the receipt of a cablegram from China telling of Boxer riots within thirty miles of the station at Tung Ch'wan, by which the Christians in three out-stations have been rendered homeless. In some words of counsel, Joseph Taylor said: "First and foremost the essential thing is to go as ambassadors for Christ. Our message lies not so much in what we say as in what we are. We want to bring the living Christ in touch with the living soul. We need His patience, and to show forth His love in all our intercourse with the people to whom we are sent. The missionary should seek to do all his work with graciousness, to be entirely freed from an overbearing or haughty or domineering spirit, and always treat the natives with respect and courtesy. He should seek to fulfil his duties as a citizen. Above all, it is absolutely necessary that the missionary should live a life of prayer."

Salvation Army.

The Admiralty has given a grant of £5 to the Salvation Army's Naval and Military Home in Malta.

M. Casimir Perier, ex-President of the French Republic, has sent a donation of 40 francs to the Salvation Army's headquarters in Paris, with a kindly acknowledgment of the Army's work.

Of 460 homeless men attending the Army's Free Breakfast at Blackfriars Shelter last Sunday morning, 120 had spent the previous night in the open, through extreme poverty.

The workers at Pirbright Providence Chapel are rejoicing in the abundant blessing which is being experienced from week to week. Through the kindness of neighbouring churches the numerous services have been maintained. Young and old are attending the various meetings in large numbers, and the Gospel services, Band of Hope, Sunday-school, &c., are giving evidence of continued development and increasing usefulness.

The church now in course of erection at Port Sunlight, of which Messrs. Lever are bearing the whole cost, is to be named Christ Church. It will accommodate 800 worshippers, is intended for Messrs. Lever's workpeople, and is to be vested in trustees, who will have absolute control. The church itself will be unsectarian. The pastor is to be Rev. S. Gamble Walker, who is already in charge of the religious work at Port Sunlight.

Fallen Asleep.

At Dowlais, aged ninety-one, Rev. John Harvey, Primitive Methodist minister. He had served the Connexion in the active ministry forty-six years, and had been a supernumerary twenty-two years.—The Old Congregational church, Gamlingay, Cambs., is mourning the death of Mr. G. S. Plowman, the oldest member and a deacon, at the age of eighty-two.—At Aughnacloy, Rev. Wm. M. Ilwaine, M.A., Presbyterian minister, aged eighty-four years.—At Geneva, Rev. Canon Sadlier, rector of Castleknock and Clonsilla, near Dublin, aged eighty-eight years.—At Alton, on Saturday, Rev. J. Nicholson, for nearly twenty years a missionary in Ceylon under the Wesleyan Foreign Mission Society, aged sixty-eight.

Foreign Mission Week.

A NEW GUINEA HOME.

LATELY I have been reading a book entitled "Savage Life in New Guinea,"* by Rev. Chas. W. Abel. I wish all Uncle Tom's "Searchers" could have a copy for themselves. It is written for boys and girls, and is full of interest from cover to cover. But as you may not be fortunate enough to secure the book, I thought this week I would tell you a little about its contents.

Mr. Abel describes the life of the Papuans, who dwell in the eastern extremity of the mainland of New Guinea. I wonder how many of you could at once point out New Guinea on the map if I were to ask you.

Well, the Papuan boys and girls are not a bit like you. They derive their name "Papuan" from a word of Malay origin, which might be translated "frizzy wig"—this will give you an idea of what their hair is like, and indeed judging by the pictures in the book, it is more than "frizzy"! All Papuans have black eyes, copper-coloured skins, and flat noses. Mr. Abel tells us that they consider our noses "prominent," our complexions "bleached," and our features "extravagant"!

The Papuan children are troubled with very few clothes, so they cannot get scolded for tearing or spoiling them. When quite young their bodies are tattooed all over with strange devices. This is a very painful process, but it is the custom of the country, and the children have to bear with it. The Papuan seldom grows above 5ft. 4in., and is very fond of daubing his face with ochres, and decorating his head with shells and feathers. He also bores a hole through the septum of his nose, in which he carries his long shell nose-stick. Then he adds to his beauty by staining his teeth black, which saves the necessity of cleaning them, for he is very averse to the use of water for washing purposes!

The Papuan boys and girls have homes very different from yours. Their houses consist of two principal parts—an inside and an outside. The inside is under a thick thatch, the outside is a low platform without any cover, about 4ft. from the ground, which is reached by a ladder. It is here that the Papuan spends most of his home life. This platform corresponds to our sitting-room. The interior of the house is merely used as a store room, and a shelter from the rain. It is always dark, for there are no windows, and it is always dirty. Nearly every night a fire is lit within this air-tight compartment, and the smoke has to find its way out as best it can. A partition 3ft. high divides the house in two, the front part being for the men, and a smaller portion at the back for the women.

Then the Papuan's ideas of relationship are very strange. For instance, if you were a New Guinea boy or girl, your mother's brother would rank as your father, and her sister as your mother, and your cousins as your brothers and sisters! Dear me, how confused you would get.

Such is the home that these children grow up in. But the saddest part of all is that there is no love in the Papuan home. There is no word for "love" in their language. There is a word which means "pity," and a word which means "like," but no word for "love" as we understand it. Think what it would mean to you if love were taken out of your home, and if when you woke up to-morrow morning mother did not kiss you, and father took no notice of you, and no one seemed to care about you particularly. Your parents might provide your food and take a certain amount of care of you, but beyond that they were quite indifferent as to what became of you. How dreadful it would be, and what a good thing it is that, when you wake up to-morrow, it won't really happen! I wonder if you appreciate all the love and kindness that are showered on you, or if you take it all as a matter of course? The Papuan fathers and mothers don't care how wicked their children grow up; in fact, they often encourage them in deeds of evil, because they know no better; and the boys and girls don't take the least trouble to obey their parents or to please them, and are never sad at leaving home and friends.

One of the first things the missionary has to do is to show them by life and word what love is, and this is often very hard work. However, little by little the missionary's influence begins to tell, and the good seed of God's Kingdom is, at length, sown even in these loveless hearts.

When I was young I used to think that all a missionary had to do was to take a Bible and preach to the heathen, and that in a little while they would all come to love God and serve Him. Now I know better. The first thing a missionary has to do is to live amongst the people he goes to teach, to study their language and customs in order that he may the better reach them from their own standpoint. He often cannot teach them about Jesus Christ until he has first won their hearts, and until they have learnt to trust him and know that he has come to do them good. You see they are quite ignorant about spiritual things; Sunday-schools, and Bible classes, and family worship are unknown to them. But little by little, as the missionary lives amongst them, new desires and feelings enter into these savage hearts, and love becomes stronger than evil habits and customs.

"Father," wrote one of Mr. Abel's converts to him while he was in England, "I have some great thing in my heart, and I have no word in my language by which to express it. It is what I feel towards you for what you have done for me; it is what I feel towards Jesus for giving me a clean heart and a new and happy life. I cannot tell you in words what I am so grateful for, but you will know what it is." It was love. So you see that Papuans learn to love at last, and that makes such a difference to their life and their home.

Even children may pray that God will send forth His light and His truth into these heathen lands until all people shall know that > "There is no love like the love of Jesus,

> Never to fade or fall,
> Till into the fold of the peace of God
> He has gathered them all."

Noon Prayer Meeting.—The noon meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. was much stirred on Monday last by the first of the series of addresses which Rev. David Baron is giving this week on Old Testament subjects. The audience consisted largely of men. Mr. Baron's intimate knowledge of the Holy Scriptures was utilized to the spiritual benefit of his hearers. Prophecy and fulfilment were dwelt on, and many received new light. We hope to give some account of the meetings next week.

Slighting the King's Message (Matt. xxii, 1-14).

THIS parable is a great advance on the foregoing one at the close of the previous chapter. There the Lord spoke of Himself as the beloved Son, here He stands forth as the King. And thus He gathers up into His Person the most precious anticipations and prophecies of psalmists and prophets; and it is in keeping with all the Old Testament imagery to describe the completed redemption of the Messiah under the imagery of a feast (Isa. xxv. 6). Nothing is said yet about the Bride—that is reserved for a subsequent disclosure (Rev. xix. 7). The main point here is the gathering of the guests.

Throughout the days of the prophets, invitations were constantly being issued, but the Jews would not hear. The "other servants" are surely those who received their commission directly from the Son Himself. Their call was the more urgent, for the Divine banquet was yet more advanced in its preparation. "The oxen and fatlings were killed." Christ, who is not only Bridegroom and King, but Provision, was also present. The expectations of the ages were realized. This is true still. We have to do nothing but partake. The richest provisions which God Himself could make await us in the risen Saviour. We have not even to pray that God would make provision or impart it to us. It awaits us in Jesus. We have not to pray, but to take. Through Him we enter into the eternal world, where all things are, and all things are ready for our use.

Men treat God's provision in two ways. Some are absolutely negligent. They go their ways. In the city the merchant says that he cannot trouble about such things, he has the markets to watch and the workpeople to look after. In the country, the farmer says that he must make hay while the sun shines. All are so occupied with making money that they have no time or energy to give to the things of God and eternity—not even though Heaven's choicest viands await them. Some call themselves by the term Agnostic, they profess not to know; others are simply indifferent. They are quite willing to admit that these things may be had; but, as for themselves, they find that they can get along very well without them, and confess, with a yawn, that they have no appetite. It is not wonderful that men have no appetites, who are ever cloying themselves on the sweets of the world.

Others are angry. The presence of the messenger in the house of life arouses unpleasant memories and questionings. Those that do evil hate the light, and try to kill the messengers who bring it. The burglar hates the watch-dog, and will kill it if he can. Micaiah discovered this when Ahab and he met (1 Kings xxii. 8). So the Jews treated the prophets; and therefore the Roman armies—called here His armies because they executed God's will—were summoned to burn up their city because God could not longer call it His.

The words which follow must have been in the mind of the Apostle when he uttered the words of Acts xiii. 46. The Jews did not show themselves worthy of God's great plans for their blessedness; and therefore our Lord bade His Apostles, and His Church, to go into all the world and preach His Gospel to every creature. At the partings of the highways (9) where men gather, on the great lines of traffic and commerce, on caravan routes, ocean-steamers, and trunk-lines; everywhere; the Gospel is to be preached, though in too many cases it will be received with similar contempt or hostility.

Still, it will be possible to fill the places of the Jews. There will be enough branches grafted into the olive tree to supply the places of those that are torn out (Rom. xi.). The "bad and good" probably stand for those who have lost their character in the estimate of the world, and those who are living reputable lives. The bad and good are alike in need of God. In His eyes there is no difference, because all have sinned, and come short of His glory (Rom. iii. 22).

But there must be a certain humble willingness to conform with the Divine requirements. In the East, wedding garments are provided for the guests, and to refuse them would be an act of studied insult. God wants nothing more from us than the willingness to receive His preparations. All else He most gladly supplies. But where that is lacking He can do nothing. If there had been the least excuse or attempt to explain matters, the man would have been excused; but he was obstinately and stolidly silent. He wouldn't even apologise. Such a man could have no place among the happy guests, and his presence would be a menace to their joy, even if his example did not infect them. Oh, let us robe ourselves in Christ, and be found in Him (Isa. lxi. 10, 11; Phil. iii. 9).

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, November 2, 1902.

Cities of Refuge (Joshua xx. 1-9).

Golden Text (Psa. xlvi. 1).

AFTER the assignment of Hebron to Caleb, Judah, Ephraim, and the half tribe of Manasseh were apportioned by lot also (ch. xv., xvi., xvii.), and twenty-one men were commissioned by Joshua to examine and report on the unappropriated land west of the Jordan, in order that he might divide correctly, as the lots fell, among the last seven tribes (xviii., xix.). Last of all, "the children of Israel gave an inheritance to Joshua." By the word of the Lord "they gave him the city which he asked."

The Cities of Refuge.

1. Appointment by the Lord among the earliest commands concerning the prospective division of the land (Num. xxxv. 10-14); but had been promised on Sinai (Ex. xxi. 13). Three were "set apart" by Moses on the east side of Jordan, and three others by Joshua, when the land was possessed, on the western side of Jordan (Deut. xix. 7, 8, 9). The six sanctified (Marg., Josh. xx. 7-9), or "set apart" for refuge were cities of the Levites (Num. xxxv. 6-15), and were for "the stranger and the sojourner," as well as the children of Israel.

2. Purpose.—(a) To provide shelter for the manslayer who had caused the death of another "by error" or "ignorance" (Marg., Num. xxxv. 11; Deut. xix. 4). (b) To enforce the law (Gen. ix. 6; Lev. xxiv. 17) regarding murder (Deut. xix. 11, 12, 13). (c) To afford protection to the transgressor until a court of inquiry should be held by the elders of his city (Josh. xx. 4, 6; Num. xxxv. 12). Results—if guilty or deliberate murder (Deut. xix. 11-13), even to taking him from the altar of the Lord (Ex. xxi. 14) (Joab, 1 Kings ii. 28; Adonijah was saved, i. 50-53). If guilty of manslaughter by misadventure, then Josh. xx. 4, 5. Statute established (Num. xxxv. 30) to prevent the shedding of innocent blood (Deut. xix. 10). Safety was insured only so long as the manslayer remained INSIDE the city of refuge.

Location.—Three on the eastern side of Jordan, and three on the western. (a) Set on high places or open plains, where they could be seen and found without difficulty. (b) Some one city of refuge easy of access from any part of the country. (c) Plain roads and well-kept, with bridges where needful. (d) Stone posts at cross roads with "To the Refuge" written plainly on them. (e) Food, water, and raiment provided. (f) No weapons allowed in the city for the Levite was there. (g) The gates were always open.

Inside—Life, safety, peace.

Outside—Distress, danger, death.

Refuged in my God eternal,
I am safe from all alarms;
For beneath me, and around me
Are "the Everlasting Arms."

Jesus our Refuge.

Divinely appointed (John iii. 16, x. 15, xvii. 18-19). Open to all "whosoever" (Rev. xxii. 17); any man (1 John ii. 1). Near, "nigh thee" (Rom. x. 8, 9); "while He is near" (Isa. lv. 6); "Jesus Himself drew near" (Luke xxiv. 15). So near that He hears a whisper. "Invites us Himself" (Matt. xi. 28). Safe. "Sure and stedfast" (Heb. vi. 18-20); "No other name for salvation" (Acts iv. 12). For whom? "I will say He is my refuge" (Psa. xci. 2).

Why do I need a refuge? All have sinned (Rom. iii. 10, 23); "All we like sheep have gone astray" (Is. liii. 6); "Condemned already" (John iii. 18); "The wrath of God abideth on him" (John iii. 36); How is Jesus a refuge? "He was made sin for us" (2 Cor. v. 21); the Lord laid on Him the iniquity (Isa. liii. 6); "He met the avenger" (Matt. v. 17); "He bore the punishment instead" (Rom. viii. 1). Need I seek the Refuge now? "Now is the accepted time" (Prov. xxvii. 1); "While He may be found" (Isa. lv. 6). Did the manslayer dare delay or stop for sleep or pleasure on the road? How can I make Jesus my Refuge? I can confess my sins and need (Luke xviii. 13); I can trust in His atoning blood (1 John i. 7); I can believe on Him (Acts xvi. 31); I can trust Him and His word (John vi. 37); in Christ my Refuge I can say (Rom. viii. 34-39).

Names of the cities of refuge, with meanings:—Kadesh—holy. Holy, harmless, and undefiled (Heb. vii. 26). Shechem—shoulder. Government and wandering sheep (Isa. ix. 6 and Luke xv. 5). Hebron—fellowship (John xvii. 21-23); union. Bezer—fortification (Psa. xci. 2). Ramoth—exaltation (Eph. ii. 6; Acts v. 31). Golan—joy, "unspeakable" (1 Pet. i. 8); "full" (John xv. 11).

Jesus, refuge of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom flee;
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high.

Illustrations of S.S. Lesson.

AN OPEN WAY TO GOD.

Recently there was a heated dispute over a certain footpath which was enclosed by the owner of the adjacent land. The village folk protested that there had been a right of way for very many years, and urged as a further reason for the maintenance of the path, the fact that it led directly to the village church, and so should not be disturbed. The road to God's sanctuary should at all times be kept open for all comers, even as the way was well kept when the slayer was urged to flee to the city of refuge (v. 4). Wherever the presence of the Lord is manifested, there is indeed a sanctuary, and as the Israelites could ever approach their cities of refuge, so may we come near unto God through Jesus Christ, who has declared Himself to be the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

A STRONG DELIVERER.

One of the favourite sights at Gibraltar is the procession that passes each evening when the town gates are locked. The Keeper of the Keys marches through the place, preceded by a military band, and carrying with him the enormous keys as an outward and visible emblem of the guardianship of Great Britain. The entrance to that fortified town is jealously protected, as were the cities of refuge in the days of Joshua. If the avenger of blood pursued a man, he was not to be delivered into his hand, having once gained the stronghold of the city (v. 5). God is a shield unto them that put their trust in Him, and in His keeping we are safe. He was a fortress and a deliverer to the psalmist, and His promise remains to all who will flee to Him for refuge.

OUR MEDIATOR ABOVE.

Some time ago, a Bible-class leader was visited late at night by one of his scholars. The lad explained that there had been trouble between his employer, a local tradesman, and himself, and he had called to ask his teacher to act as a mediator, to intercede between the master and the servant. The teacher fortunately was able to reconcile the two, and peace was restored. The high priest being in the city of refuge rendered the place secure until his death, and the slayer, because of the priest, could dwell with safety in that city (v. 6). The priest stood between the slayer and the avenger in the judgment of the case. So we to-day can rejoice that we have a great High Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God. Let us, therefore, come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

LOOKING UP FOR HELP.

In a rural part of Essex, where the country is flat, a place of refreshment has been built on slightly rising ground. The owner finding a difficulty in making his house noticeable amid the flat surroundings, has erected a tall flagstaff adorned with appropriate bunting. By this means the refreshment place may be seen for some miles round, and travellers have no trouble whatever in discovering the whereabouts of the house of welcome. Joshua in arranging the cities cities of refuge, appointed them in the mounts of Naphtali, Ephraim, Judah, and other places (v. 7), and being placed on the various heights, were easily observed at great distances.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE newly-formed Association at Buenos Aires is making rapid progress. Rooms have been opened in the centre of the city; the British Consul has accepted office as president, and already 250 members have been enrolled. A good beginning has been made with Bible classes, young men's meetings, educational classes, social work, &c.

At the annual meeting of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. Workers' Bible Class, it was reported that two members had gone as missionaries to India.

The membership of the Cardiff Association has increased during the past year by nearly four hundred, and all departments of the work are showing great activity. New associations have been formed at Shiremoor, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, with twenty-six members, and at Ashton-in-Makerfield, Lancashire. An auxiliary at Houghton-le-Spring has been affiliated with the North-Eastern district.

A special meeting of the South Wales District Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association was held at Cardiff on October 16 to take into consideration the "serious problem presented by the towns of the Rhondda Valley." During the discussion it was stated that the population of the Rhondda Valley now numbers close upon 150,000. A high percentage of this number is composed of young men for whom little provision is made. The result of the conference was the formation of a representative and influential council, which is to study the needs of the Rhondda Valley, and proceed to make adequate provision to remedy the present condition of things.

Obituary.

REV. HAMILTON MAGEE, D.D.

MUCH regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. Hamilton Magee, D.D., whose name has been so long and so honourably associated with colportage and other mission work in Ireland, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. Ordained to the ministry at Killala in 1849, he removed to Dublin five years later to take up a newly-established mission. It is interesting to recall that his colleagues there were Revs. John Hall, Matthew Kerr, and T. Y. Killen. New churches were built successively in 1858 and 1864, to accommodate the work. Dr. Magee had a strong belief in the power of the press, and a fine literary taste. He is known to hymnologists specially as a competent editor of Latin hymns and their English equivalents. For sixteen years he edited Plain Words, and afterwards The Key of Truth, which is better known under its modern name of The Christian Irishman, the latter connection subsisting for a very long period. Dr. Magee literally lived for Ireland, and has now been taken to his well-earned rest at the ripe age of seventy-eight.

MRS. W. D. WALTERS.

Under tragic circumstances Mrs. Walters, wife of Rev. W. D. Walters, general secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist London Mission, has lost her life. On the 8th inst. Mrs. Walters was visiting a relative at Woolwich. Alighting from the train at the Arsenal Railway Station, she saw a little boy, aged three years, in danger of being run over. She ran across the road to save him, but was herself knocked down by a brewer's dray. The wheels passed over her body, and on being picked up she was found to be dead. The child was unhurt. Mrs. Walters was born in 1840, and was the daughter of Rev. Jabez Rought, Wesleyan minister, who spent fifty-four years in the work of the ministry, and the granddaughter of Rev. Thomas Rought, who entered the ministry soon after the death of John Wesley, and who travelled fifty years. In 1862 she married Mr. Walters, who has spent twenty-four years in circuit life, and for over thirteen years has occupied his present position.

MRS. ELLEN MOORHOUSE.

The death of Mrs. Ellen Moorhouse, wife of Rev. H. A. Bruce Moorhouse, removes an earnest-minded Christian lady, whose wholehearted efforts were felt in many departments of religious and philanthropic service. As a child she helped her brother, the late Rev. J. Power, in starting a mission to seamen. She also took part in parochial work at St. Margaret's, Tyler's Green, Bucks., where she established teas for labourers in the harvest fields. In 1871, with her husband, she founded the Exe Island Mission Hall, and commenced "penny dinners," and the distribution of meals to invalids, at Exeter. Her labours were marked by both industry and variety. In 1872 the first reading-room for soldiers in India was opened at Colaba, Bombay; in 1873-4 she worked with her husband among the early settlers and the Indians of Canada and North-West America, and in 1875 her special work gathered around the fishermen and their families at St. Saviour's, Plymouth. The year 1877 found her in Assam labouring among the tea planters; in 1878 she was working at Calcutta on board the Dalhousie, when hundreds of seamen were gathered nightly. Returning to England, and their parochial work being given up, Mrs. Moorhouse undertook a preaching tour on Dartmoor. In 1880, the "Highway and Hedgerow Mission" was commenced, working first at Hounslow among factory hands. Other useful undertakings in which Mrs. Moorhouse took a leading part were the founding of the New Forest Gipsy Mission, village visitation work near Aldeburgh, and missions among dockers at Southampton and navvies at the naval extension works, Keyham. Mrs. Moorhouse, who for some years previous to her death was a great sufferer, was widely known and beloved.

About Books.

BIBLE CRITICS AT BAY.

IN his well-known book, "Daniel in the Critics' Den," Sir Robert Anderson showed us how little reliance can be placed upon some of the most confident statements and inferences of Bible critics. In his new book, The Bible and Modern Criticism, he continues the exposure of theories that come of unbelief, and conclusions that will not stand the test of scrutiny. Whereas, in his earlier volume he dealt with one portion of Holy Scripture, here he treats of the inspiration and integrity of the Bible as a whole, as well as of various parts and portions of "The Divine Library." The searching method and trenchant style of the writer well suit the essentially controversial character of the work.

Quite early in the book, in a well-directed thrust, Sir Robert exposes the shortsightedness, to say the least, of those "apostles of unfaith" who eviscerate inspiration by trifling comparisons — linking the Sermon on the Mount with Shakespeare, and the eighth chapter of Romans with Milton's writings:— "A mere peasant can see that if this be the meaning of inspiration, we must fall back upon natural religion. If the Bible be nothing more than what such writers see it to be, Christianity rests on no rational basis. This is no argument in proof that the Bible is inspired; but it ought to check all levity in dealing with the question. If my bank-notes are forgeries, I am a ruined bankrupt; this does not prove them genuine, but it will prevent my parting with them unless compelled to do do so by cogent proof that they are counterfeit."

The volume is largely devoted to an examination of the grounds on which, directly or indirectly, Holy Scripture is disparaged. What are the proofs whereby the Bible is shown to be something less than God's Word written? The question may well be asked, and it is an expert in the science of evidence who conducts the investigation. The "proofs" that are here subjected to dispassionate criticism are of various kinds; but taken as a whole, they tend to discredit Scripture, by reducing its story to the uncertainty of human record, legend, or mere fancy. In some cases, Sir Robert Anderson holds the vanquished critic up to the well-merited scorn of indignant readers; in others, a sense of pity is suggested that scholarly minds should at any time be so sadly deficient in nous or wholesome imagination. Serious words are spoken of the treachery of those Christian teachers who disseminate doctrines of unbelief under the guise of religious culture.

When dealing with a recent article on the Gospel story, in which Christ is all but explained away, our author rightly describes these latest critical views as blasphemous in character. The romancing critic, having excluded all that is wonderful in the story, enumerates nine passages that may be regarded as saved from the general wreck! The Christ of history—the Son of God and the Saviour of men—is virtually counterfeited by an empty concept of blind unbelief, to which neither Divinity nor saving power, if indeed assured personality, can be ascribed. Well does Sir Robert say: "The objective foundations of our faith being thus destroyed, Christianity in its subjective phase is the merest superstition. Not one of the nine authentic passages thus saved from the wreck will avail us here. Faith is impossible. We must fall back on mere opinions. And he who would die for his opinions is a silly fanatic. The man who has nothing to rest upon but Professor Cheyne's Bible, and yet believes in 'the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting,' is obviously a credulous person who would believe anything."

Sir Robert Anderson uses strong language, alike in exposing error and in setting forth truth. He is not severely systematic in discussing his great subject, but his pages are very readable, and may be studied without difficulty by thoughtful folk who would hesitate to lay claim to scholarship. He easily shows that there is lamentable lack of true learning behind some of the contentions of the critics; with equal ease he shows that many of the questions considered are altogether apart from a knowledge of the original languages. Moreover, he rightly distinguishes between the functions of expert and critic; experts prepare the proofs, critics adjudicate upon evidence.

We sincerely thank Sir Robert Anderson for devoting himself, heart and mind, to the good cause which here engages him. He shows, as we have many a time pointed out, that, when studied with care, Holy Scripture justifies to the full all the claims which it makes of inspiration, integrity, and authority. He deals with many men and topics in this substantial volume, and in an Appendix he discusses, succinctly but to good purpose, several important questions raised in the course of the book. We trust his pages will have many readers, and that his arguments will be brought under the notice of such as have been unsettled in mind through disturbing criticism.

In the preface, the Bishop of Durham, while avowing his mental and spiritual sympathy with the general intention and message of the book, "holds himself detached" from certain aspects of the treatment; and in this many readers will doubtless join him. Sir Robert Anderson has made up his mind on subjects upon which many Christians are content to suspend judgment; but all the while he presents views which deserve thoughtful consideration. The "aspects of treatment," however, are not of the substance of the volume, which deserves to be heartily welcomed by devout students of the Bible, while they await the answer of such as would give us human documents instead of the Oracles of God, doubtful records instead of the Scriptures of Truth—unsatisfying ashes instead of heavenly bread.

MOABITES AND BEDAWEEN.

BOOKS of travel have a perennial interest, and this is greatly increased when they deal with localities of which we know little. The bigotry and fanaticism of Islam has drawn a thick veil over a great part of Eastern Asia. To Christian people Gospel effort in any of the Bible lands makes a special appeal. The part of With the Arabs in Tent and Town to which we turned first, was that recounting Mr. Archibald Forder's stay in Moab, and we learned not a little of life and manners, as well as of the doings of the Lord among the descendants of the ancient neighbours of Israel. If possible a yet deeper interest, however, attaches to the record of experiences in Arabia, "the cradle of Islam." After many rebuffs and disappointments, he left on December 13, 1900, for the Jowf, the most important and largest town in Northern Arabia. Hardships, dangers, and trials awaited him at every stage of his journey; but on his return, after travelling 1,500 miles, he was able to report that 250 copies of the Arabic Scriptures had been sold or distributed among a hitherto neglected people, hundreds of Gospel leaflets and booklets had been given away, and to a great multitude had been proclaimed the message of salvation.

The burden of Mr. Forder's book is the need of these children of Ishmael. This is one of "the regions beyond," where there remaineth much land to be possessed for the Lord of the Harvest. The Christian and Missionary Alliance have felt obliged to discontinue the effort; but the field remains dry and barren and parched. The people are not crying out for the Gospel. They will not receive the missionary with open arms, but will rather try to drive him from the land. The carnal mind is enmity against God; yet all the while the Master is asking, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. Jesse Mayo at Selby.

A VERY encouraging mission has been conducted in the Selby Congregational Church by Rev. Jesse Mayo. Very many have been brought to decision for Christ. The spiritual life of the Church has been quickened, and the workers have been wonderfully inspired to do greater service. The earnest and faithful presentation of the simple Gospel truths by the missioner have endeared him to the hearts of all, and have been abundantly blessed by God, to whom we give praise.

W. Nicholson, Minister.

Whyteleafe Tabernacle.

We have just concluded "three quiet days" for the deepening of the spiritual life at Whyteleafe Tabernacle, Surrey. Dr. W. G. Kemp, formerly of New Zealand was the chief speaker. His addresses were clear, Scriptural, and so plain that the most simple-minded of the congregation could understand. The Church has been greatly strengthened thereby, and the gracious work of conversion is one of the signs following. Last Lord's Day week in the afternoon, about forty of our senior scholars were broken down by the Spirit's power; and we have reason to believe many were definitely converted to God.

Gerald R. Coultas, Pastor.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook at Sowerby Bridge.

At the invitation of the local Free Church Council, Mr. R. S. Bradbrook has recently conducted a ten-days' mission at Sowerby Bridge. Although the weather was extremely unfavourable, the mission has been the means of much blessing and encouragement to God's people, while a number of souls have been won for Christ. All the ministers of the town showed a deep interest in the work, being present and assisting at every meeting. With the officials of the Council they loyally co-operated with the missioner, who from the first secured and enjoyed their confidence and esteem. Mr. Bradbrook's addresses were marked by spiritual force and fervour. B.

Dr. Harry Guinness at Exeter Hall.

The mission to men which Dr. Harry Guinness commenced at Exeter Hall on October 11 has aroused widespread interest throughout the Metropolis. The earnest addresses of the missioner proved effective in reaching the hearts of the hearers, and many were pointed to Christ. Various nationalities were represented among the large audiences; among the inquirers were no fewer than nineteen young Germans. On Lord's Day last Dr. Guinness stood the strain well until sudden indisposition prevented him from taking the Sunday evening service; it was hoped, however, that he would be sufficiently recovered by Tuesday to resume the mission, which concludes on Oct. 26.

Society of Friends, Shildon.

A fortnight's mission, at which Mr. William Baker assisted, was recently concluded at Shildon. Excellent audiences attended the services for the first five evenings. On the sixth day a violent squall so damaged the marquee that it was impossible to continue the meetings in it, and the remaining meetings were held in the meeting-house with very satisfactory attendances, despite the inconvenience of the premises. The children's services, conducted by Miss Esther Kitching, were encouraging, being largely attended and well conducted throughout. Open-air meetings at different points where working-men congregate in their leisure, and addresses to about 300 men in the mess-room of the large railway wagon construction works, were other features of the mission, which it is believed has been productive of good results.

Johnstone, N.B.

A three-weeks' mission in connection with the three United Free Churches, conducted by Mr. Charles Galletly, of the London Evangelization Society, has just been concluded in Johnstone, N.B. The meetings, which were held in the Town Hall every night of the week, Saturday being given up to Gospel Temperance work, have been very well attended, and also fruitful of results. During the week the numbers in attendance varied from 300 to 500, and on Sabbath evenings the place was filled to overflowing. Not only have the Christians in the several churches been greatly quickened and stimulated, but many have made a profession of conversion which we have good reason to believe genuine. Wm. Westwood.

West U.F. Manse, Johnstone.

Union Tabernacle, S.W.

A fifteen days' mission has just been held by Mr. A. H. Ash, of the Evangelization Society, at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W. Both before and during the mission the workers visited the district, inviting the people to come and hear the Gospel, and to the same end Rev. D. M. Cameron (minister) walked through the adjoining streets ringing a bell. Some were seen in the audience who had been attracted no doubt by curiosity, and who had not been seen in a place of worship for many years. Mr. Ash delivered the Gospel message in a striking and original manner, and the meetings were rendered additionally interesting and attractive by solos and duets from Mr. and Mrs. Burton. The Holy Spirit's power was manifested in leading some hearers to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. On Lord's Day last, the closing night of the mission, a deep impression was made. It was the largest and best meeting of the series, and the missioner spoke earnestly on the solemn words of our Lord recorded in Matt. xii. 31. The male choir from the Clapham Junction Y.M.C.A. took part. C.

United Free Church Simultaneous Mission.

For several weeks the United Free Church Simultaneous Mission has been in operation within the bounds of the Glasgow Presbytery, and all over the city meetings have been or are still being held. The missions have for the most part been conducted by ministers connected with the denomination, and among the preachers have been such well-known men as Rev. Professor Denney and Rev. Dr. Alex. Whyte, besides others of more than local celebrity. Lord Provost Chisholm conducted the opening service of a week's mission held in Pollokshields West U.F. Church (Rev. James Wells, D.D.), when the handsome building was taxed to its utmost capacity to hold all who sought admission. He gave an excellent address on the question that our Lord put to His questioners, "The baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men?" and showed that in the evasive answer there was seen a company of men refusing to act on the light possessed, and being in consequence denied more. From this the argument was drawn that if men everywhere around us would adjust their lives to the light possessed, a time of great revival would soon set in.

The movement, on the whole, has been quiet, and has attracted little general notice; but without doubt good has been accomplished. Still, if some of the excellent preachers who had rendered help had been arranged for to give a week in one church instead of a night here and there, better results might have appeared. When there is a different preacher each night in a week's mission there is a tendency among many hearers to compare the preacher's style and gifts, rather than to consider the truths preached.

J. C.

Gipsy Smith at Crouch End, N.

Life in the suburbs is not lightly stirred, especially where the churches are concerned, but the recent mission at Park Chapel has done more, it has profoundly affected the whole district. This place of worship, one of the largest and most influential in the North of London, has had its baptism of spiritual fire, and the blessing has crossed the threshold of many homes. Preceded by fervent and believing prayer, and supported by a band of united and carefully-selected workers, this mission has more than fulfilled the expectation of those who looked forward to great things. Everywhere the power of the Spirit has been manifested.

Gipsy Smith brought a very real and pertinent message to the people, directed not only to open sinners, but backsliding saints; and one of the best fruits of his burning words has been the awakening of many souls hitherto under the superficial semblance of conventional religion, but largely dead and indifferent to the claims of God. His sermon on the rejection of Saul, so brave in its denunciation of sin, will not soon be forgotten, and in his closing service the beautiful pleading of a Saviour's dying love made Calvary very real to the hearts of his vast audience. There was throughout an absence of excitement, but abundant evidence of conviction, and the old Gospel of Christ and Him crucified proved sufficient not only to attract humanity of whatever class in society, but to fully meet its deepest needs.

The inquiry-rooms revealed many sad stories of wasted and weary lives, of professions which lacked reality, of hearts from which the sunshine of assurance had long since fled. But it was an unspeakable joy to see in the faces of the hundreds who thus sought guidance, the light of His salvation, who to the uttermost can save. It was very touching to meet mothers weeping for their unsaved children, and still more pathetic to find young people asking for prayer on behalf of unconverted parents. It would be presumptuous to forecast the result of such a time of revival; only eternity can show how at such a season the Lord blesses the prayerful service of His people. But enough has been seen to justify us in relying more and more upon the unshaken truth of that Gospel which is still the power of God unto salvation; and also the need of stirring-up the churches to realize their place and purpose in the sight of God. The Welsh Forward Movement.

This ever-advancing movement, which began in a borrowed tent eleven years ago, in one of the darkest spots in Cardiff, has now forty-three centres in South Wales and Monmouthshire. The founder, Dr. Pugh, of Cardiff, has aimed from the start to carry on this great campaign against the forces of evil on broad and strictly Evangelical and evangelistic lines, and has managed by God's grace to combine aggressiveness with solidity.

Recently two of the Cardiff centres of the movement, Saltmead and East Moors Halls, have been blessed through a visit of Mr. Charles E. Barraclough. Saltmead is situated in one of the darkest and most sin-cursed divisions of Cardiff. When Mr. Barraclough arrived he took in the terrible situation at a glance, and resolved upon exceptional measures to reach the indifferent, and the drunkards and harlots of the place. Open-air services were arranged for every afternoon in the week; as many as twenty of these were held some days. On Saturday nights torchlight processions were arranged, followed by open-air and indoor services, one of which lasted from 10.30 p.m. on Saturday till 3 a.m. on Sunday. The results of these methods were crowded halls, and it is believed the conversion to God of some of the most hopeless characters in the district.

A similar line of action was followed by Mr. Barraclough at East Moors Hall, in another dark region, and that with similar results. To God be the glory!

Mr. Barraclough is now missioning at Corporation Road Hall, Newport, which is one of the newest and finest halls in that fast-growing town. He is surrounded by a band of gentlemen, who go forth nightly in mission bands visiting the people. Crowds gather to hear, and much blessing has already been experienced.

Mr. C. N. Hunt's mission in Leeds was continued for an extra week. On Sunday last the evangelist preached to nearly 4,000 people in the Coliseum, and there were some encouraging cases of blessing.

Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted a ten-days' mission at Cranbrook Road Baptist Church, Ilford, E., with much acceptance. On Saturday week a large congregation listened to the story of his life with the deepest interest, and the mission was brought to a close on Monday by a praise meeting, at which testimony was borne and blessing received.

Mr. Musa Bhai, native Indian evangelist, conducted a Gospel mission at Garscube Hall, Glasgow, from October 5 to 12 with blessed results. A goodly number professed, and believers have been much helped. There has been general regret that the mission could not be continued, as the interest increased nightly, but the evangelist's engagements called him elsewhere. J. G.

At Strathmiglo, Fife, a three weeks' mission conducted by Mr. A. Y. McGregor, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, has been the means of much blessing. Mr. McGregor's straight preaching and his faithful and fearless pressing home of God's own truths have proved a rich blessing to God's own people, and brought many careless ones into living contact with the Lord Jesus Christ.

R. E.

Stirring times have been experienced at a mission conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith, of Aberdeen, at the Railway Mission Hall, Wandsworth Road, S.W. All the railway men living in the district and employed in the L.S.W.R. goods' sheds were visited, and frequent open-air meetings were held. Mr. John Hawkins writes: "Night by night the services grew in interest and power, and the workers have been cheered by seeing men and women brought to decision for Christ."

A large audience gathered at the opening evangelistic meeting in King's Theatre, Walthamstow, on Sunday evening, October 12. A large field for earnest aggressive work is found in the enormous artizan and labouring population in this rapidly increasing neighbourhood. Mr. J. W. Berry presided, and Mr. James Dunn gave the address. A band of workers has been organized, and meetings for prayer are held weekly. The arrangements are under the Special Religious Services Committee, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.

Under the auspices of the Bible Class Union, which comprises over seventy classes in the large business houses of London, a fruitful mission for the Northern Auxiliary was held from October 5 to 10 in the Memorial Hall, Islington, conducted by Rev. Arthur Mercer, vicar of St. Mary Magdalene, Islington. The Vicar of Islington was present on the opening night. The numbers attending grew steadily each evening; and, judging from various testimonies received, much spiritual good has been accomplished.

The Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association have secured the Palace Theatre, Aberdeen, for Gospel Temperance services on Sundays throughout the winter. The local committee invited Mr. J. B. Wookey to take the services on Sunday last. The theatre seats 3,000 persons, and afternoon and evening it was literally packed, while thousands sought in vain for admission. Mr. Wookey faithfully preached the Gospel. At each service he pleaded most eloquently for the 6,000 children under Dr. Barnardo's care. He was accompanied by the "Musical Boys" from the Stepney Homes.

For blessing on Mr. Jack Cooke's mission in Dublin, Nov. 2-23.

For a mission at Whyteleafe Tabernacle, Surrey, by Mr. Thomas Payne, Oct. 26-Nov. 3.

For a mission at Port St. Mary and Port Erin (Rushden Parish, I.O.M.), October 25-Nov. 3.

For the Convention to be held at Norwich, Oct. 28-30, that there may be "showers of blessing."

For the conversion of a young woman whose husband is a true Christian; that soon she may be brought to know Christ as her Saviour, and be fitted to be useful in her home and the Church.

That God will graciously work conversion by His Spirit's power in the hearts of a household of twelve souls, not yet converted, that all may become bright Christians and useful labourers in the Master's vineyard.

Praise.

An aged Christian gives thanks for blessing and strength vouchsafed in a time of weakness and perplexity.

JOSEPH HOCKING'S

Great New Serial,

"A FLAME OF FIRE,"

BEGINS IN THE

NOVEMBER NUMBER

OF

THE QUIVER

Ready Oct. 27, Price 6d.,

Which commences a

NEW VOLUME.

In the November number of The Quiver will also be found the opening chapters of another Serial Story, entitled "The Mistress of the Second Form," by M. A. Balliol. Five Complete Stories, and contributions from Archdeacon Sinclair, the Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, and Dr. Lyman Abbott, the well-known American preacher and writer, will also be given; while Dr. Hugh Macmillan writes the first of a series of illustrated articles on "God's Beautiful Creatures."

"Peers in the Pulpit" is the subject of an illustrated article which has an interest both personal and topical, and Mr. Fish shows in a paper on "The Parable of the Wise and Foolish Virgins" how this theme has been treated by famous artists.

In addition to the above each and all of the popular standing features of The Quiver will be found in the volume which opens with the November issue.

A Rembrandt Photogravure of "The Last Chapter," Mr. J. Doyle Penrose's picture of a notable event in the history of the Scriptures, which attracted so much attention in this year's Exhibition of the Royal Academy, forms the frontispiece to the Part.

THE QUIVER YEARLY VOLUME FOR 1902, with nearly 1,000 Illustrations and 6 Coloured Plates, is now ready, price 7s. 6d.

"The Christian" Almanac. With our next issue will be presented as a Supplement, The Christian Sheet Almanac for 1903. It has been a source of deep satisfaction in past years to learn that readers have found the daily texts a means of grace; and the prayerful spirit in which they have been again arranged gives reason to hope for a continuance of the blessing.

Prayer for Revival. Mr. Moody in his later years devoted his energies specially to the quickening of spiritual life among Christians, on the ground that a revived Church is the natural means of promoting the evangelization of the world. There is to-day a marked desire on the part of the people of God for wide-spread revival, and it is well to remember that the very word implies that those who experience such a blessing must be already alive, in a spiritual sense, i.e., "born again." It is useless to pray that those who are "dead in trespasses and sins" should be "revived"—they need to be born. But let the children of God be revived, and the Holy Spirit will work through them in the salvation of those who, at present, are "dead" in their sins.

Prisons of the World. A wide circle of readers will welcome a new book on "Personal Experiences in the Prisons of the World" from the pen of Mr. Chas. Cook. To a keen observation of men and things, Mr. Cook adds not only the knowledge of a traveller, but the fervour of an evangelist. His visits to prisons have been brought about, not by a curious interest, but by a passion for souls, and the volume in which he records his varied experiences should prove both instructive and stimulating. (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. net. Morgan & Scott.)

The Children's Day. A happy idea in connection with "Children's Sunday" (October 19) was successfully carried out by a large and influential church in the North of England. In addition to a special week of prayer preceding the Sunday, an autograph letter was sent by each teacher to all the undecided members of his or her class, pressing the importance of immediate decision for Christ. Taking advantage of the special occasion, a letter was also sent to the parents of the children (many of whom never attend a place of worship), entreating them to co-operate with the teachers in training the young people for Christ. This is worth noting, and many others would find it advantageous to act similarly. There is no need, however, to wait for an annual children's day. Other occasions afford excellent opportunity for getting into closer contact, especially with parents. There is ample scope for the work of the Sunday to be supplemented more largely than it is.

Silent Influence. There cannot be really healthy development, either physical or spiritual, if only the food is looked after and the condition of the atmosphere is neglected. President Dwight once said:—

> The children of a household grow most naturally into the religious life, not when the parents are always talking about it, and pressing it upon them, but when the atmosphere of the house is so full of religion that they do not think of living any other life.

It is well that parents should bear in mind that the vital function of the home cannot be relegated to any institution; and in face of the many changes which of late years have so injuriously affected the home life, every effort should be made to preserve the attraction of the family and the sweet and silent influence of its circle.

The Education of Parents. It is evident, from many unmistakable signs, that the true idea of education has never seized the minds of a great number of parents and guardians. It is highly essential, certainly, that youths and maidens should be equipped with modern weapons for changed modern conditions; but it is far more essential that they should be sent out into the world properly equipped against the murderous attacks which modern life makes upon the human spirit. Both things are needed, but the latter more especially. This solemn work depends not so much upon the schoolmaster as upon the parents. They who produce life are the proper persons to train it. Paternity involves the serious responsibility of preparing children for the battle of life, and this task is impossible without religious training. Upon this vital point too many parents themselves need education. There is no work more pressing at the present hour than that of bringing parents face to face with their awful responsibility to train their children for God. This is to deal with the nation's life at its source. Young England will never be worthy of the past of our country unless the home life once more becomes truly religious.

As Others see Us. The editor of a Leicester newspaper has just concluded a journalistic visitation of the churches in that town, and he now offers the results of his work. For many months a different church has been visited weekly, until nearly 150 have been described in the columns of The Guardian. Included in his summary are the following criticisms. He complains of the paucity of men who speak directly from the heart to the heart. Too many, he declares, are mere "phrase builders." He notes that wherever he found a preacher who "felt deeply," and made it clear that he sought the highest good of his hearers, there was usually "a large congregation and a real religious spirit." Again, he remarks upon the absence of men from the majority of congregations; and further, he calls attention to a point which we have often strongly urged in these columns, i.e., the need of the free seat system. Where this system operates, there the congregations are the largest—elsewhere they are not large. It is well that the churches should see themselves as others see them. Leicester is by no means an exceptional town—it is fairly typical of all great centres, and what applies to its church life may likely apply with equal force to the church life of all towns and cities. It is evident that the Church as a whole is yet far removed from her true function as an evangelistic agency.

The Mind of the "Sportsman." We place the following incidents side by side, leaving them to speak for themselves. Last Saturday there appeared in the most widely-circulated of the "sporting" papers a criticism of the pamphlet, "Profits and Prophets," which, as our readers may remember, is a scathing and unanswerable exposure of the system of giving "tips" on racing horses. There is no poetry in the pamphlet, but the facts are hard and indisputable, for they are taken direct from the sporting columns of newspapers, and they expose the fallacy of the "tipping" system. And all the critic can or will see in this ruthless revelation of robbery is a species of weak humour. That, we take it, is the professional sporting attitude towards all who expose the evil of professional betting. In the current number of the Free Lance a letter appears on the character of the amusements which please a music-hall audience, and the writer says:—

> A music-hall audience doesn't want to have to think; as soon as such an audience—or its component parts—finds that any demands are being made upon its thinking powers, it goes to the bars and exercises its drinking powers instead.

The writer might have extended his line to include all who make "sport" their god. The music-hall habitués may have no thought; but the others, who cannot see the falsity of their contradictory predictions, and who perceive in honesty only a feeble kind of humour, lack both mind and conscience. And yet they tell us that "thought" keeps men out of the church!

The Magnet of the Home. Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who is devoting a portion of his vast wealth to establishing Free Libraries in various parts of the kingdom, touched a vital point at Liverpool a few days ago at the opening of a new library in that city, when he remarked that good as was the library, the chief need of the working-classes was comfortable homes; for, through lack of these, men are driven first to the public-house, and then, naturally, away from anything that will tend to their mental and moral elevation. We have frequently touched this same question—it is a pressing one at all times. Where the home is a magnet, the bar exercises little power. Women have much to do with making the home what it ought to be. There are few things more necessary than the careful training of girls for the duties of the household. We should like to see, in connection with every church and mission hall, some definite attempt made to prepare girls for the sacred duties of home life. It is certain that only in this way will one great source of drunkenness and unhappiness be stopped.

Sensational Stories. The very large number of suicides, attempted suicides, and escapades which have been recorded lately as due directly to the influence of sensational literature, offers food for very serious reflection. We had hoped that an improvement, however slight, was being manifested; but the hope does not appear to have been justified. Some of the serials now appearing in popular papers cannot be justified on any decent ground whatever. These "powerful stories," as they are advertised, consist for the most part of sensational scenes, the reading of which, as well as their pictorial representation on public hoardings, can only do harm. The stimulus of the nerve centres is unnatural under such reading, and the inevitable exhaustion which follows is most detrimental to mind and morals. Dickens and Thackeray would blush for shame, if they could return, at the modern prostitution of the writer's art. To what a depth have writers fallen, when their sole aim seems to be the production of an unhealthy excitement! There is no law against it, so we suppose it will go on. The only thing we can do is to seek by every means to create a taste for healthier reading, and to keep young people, as far as possible, from contamination by supplying them with high-class writings.

The Mad Mullah. We do not at all like the look of the ugly story which comes from Somaliland with reference to the expedition against the Mad Mullah. The British reverse is a serious thing, and all accounts of it up to date only show that we have to deal with a rebellion which may have far-reaching consequences. An officer who knows Somaliland well, declares that we have been caught napping again—as usual treating these fanatical uprisings as of small importance, until they hurt us. He thinks that we are likely to become involved in a campaign second only to the Soudan. That terrible undertaking might have been avoided if we had been prompt at the very beginning to suppress the uprising. This unceasing ferment in the East shows that we have not yet understood the art of dealing with the natives. We wait until rebellion assumes gigantic proportions, and then we slaughter. But while we allow liberty to all fanatics in these dangerous parts, we shall always have an "expedition" on hand.

Equatorial Africa. A comprehensive charge recently given by Bishop Tugwell, whose diocese extends over 700,000 square miles, with a population of 35,000,000, sixteen different languages, and now 80,000 Christian adherents of all denominations, contains much ground for rejoicing and for hope. Broad in his full recognition of the self-denying labours of the missionaries over whom he has no jurisdiction, the Bishop looks forward to the time when the whole country shall be Christ's, a country, by the way, as large as Great Britain, Germany, France, Holland, and Belgium, but there is a sad note when he touches upon one section of British and German commerce—that of drink. In that land, as elsewhere, > the traffic is suffered to continue simply and solely because it is a source of revenue. The chiefs of the country do not want it, the merchants say they do not want it, but the Treasury needs it, and therefore it must be maintained.

And consequently the African "is becoming a drunken person," and "drunkenness is becoming a common offence," with its results of crime and vice, and the progress of the Gospel is hindered and prevented.

The Missionary in China. The new treaty just concluded with China promises, among other reforms, a more reasonable policy regarding missionary work. The terms of the treaty are as follows:—

> The missionary question in China being, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, one requiring careful consideration, so that, if possible, troubles such as have occurred in the past may be averted in the future, Great Britain agrees to join in a Commission to investigate this question; and, if possible, to devise means for securing permanent peace between converts and non-converts, should such a Commission be formed by China and the Treaty Powers interested.

It is to be hoped that this Commission will find a way to safeguard the persons of missionaries and their institutions, without that preferential treatment of one class of missionaries above the others which has done so much harm in the past. It is well known that much of the recent trouble was caused by the civil privileges given to French Catholic missionaries and their converts by the Chinese Government, which placed ordinary Chinese citizens at a disadvantage in the courts. That fact has done incalculable damage to the missionary cause in the past, and has taught a much-needed lesson for the future.

The Spirit of the Inquisition. Dr. Stuckenberg, writing in the October number of the Homiletic Review, throws a light upon recent movements of Roman Catholic agencies in America and other countries, where "freedom makes a paradise for Jesuits and other orders," and he shows what efforts are being made by them to gain the upper hand in municipal and national administration. He says (and the words are equally applicable to these islands):—

> America and Protestant Germany are both to be brought to Rome. The Vatican organ in Rome said, a few years ago, that Catholics ought to welcome freedom of worship wherever they are in the minority, but that they are not bound to respect it when they obtain the majority. The following quotation from Father Phelan in the Western Watchman speaks for itself: "We would like to rack and quarter Protestantism; we would like to impale it, and hang it up for crows to build nests of; we would like to tear it with pincers, and pierce it with red-hot irons; we would like to fill it with molten lead, and plunge it into hell fire a hundred fathoms deep."

Blind Leaders of the Blind. A writer in the current number of a High Church monthly, defending the Mariolatry of France, urges that if the devotions are objectionable, "it should be a warning to us not to give too much power to the laity," as "these devotions originate with the people; the official Church accepts them tardily and with reluctance." Unhappily for his assertion, however, the (Roman) Catholic Times, announcing that the Irish Pilgrims will visit the shrine and miraculous picture at Genazzano, states that the particular devotion of the Pope is to "the Mother of God under the title of the Mother of Good Counsel" at Genazzano, and that "his particular care is to send all the faithful to her for guidance." In his room he has a copy of the miraculous picture, on which he has written "Let her be your only counsellor." It is added that, when he instituted the White Scapular some years ago, he had a picture of the Mother of Good Counsel and the Papal arms placed on it, and said, "The faithful are directed either immediately through her or indirectly through the Holy See." And this portrait at Genazzano is said to change the expression of its face, "at one time white, at another all flushed with a glow," and "the cheeks becoming like two newly-opened roses." And the Irish Pilgrims have been assured that they will not only afford consolation and joy to the Pope by a visit to the shrine, but will also derive much spiritual profit therefrom!

One Aspect of Militarism. Mr. Andrew Carnegie, on his installation as Lord Rector of St. Andrew's University, made an important reference to the blighting effects of European militarism on social and industrial progress. He pointed out that, one of the prime reasons for the marvellous rapidity with which America was monopolising the trade and industry of the world, was found in the fact of her unity as one nation, having one common policy, and being unhampered by the incubus of a large army and navy; while Europe is divided into a large number of States, each wasting an enormous amount of treasure, brains, and industrial energy in defending themselves against possible attack by the others. Under these conditions it is impossible but that America should altogether dominate and surpass all other countries, even our own, for all her energies were free for useful purposes, instead of being largely wasted on futile and unremunerative armies. There are many valid arguments against militarism; this one may not strike the highest note, but it is lamentably true as far as it goes; and from the point of view of physical well-being and progress it goes to the root of the matter.

The Burden of Babylon. A recent trial in one of the London police-courts has again drawn public attention to the unhappy lot of the East End sempstresses, and, as usual, there has been a fitful flow of pecuniary charity towards those whose need was not recognised until it had received the publicity of a prosecution. Unhappily this spasmodic generosity, useful as it undoubtedly is at the time, apparently does not lead to any development of steady and permanent interest in the condition of the wretched class dependent upon the sweaters, or to determined practical effort for the amelioration of their lot. It is estimated that there are in London alone (and other large cities in England have contingents of the sad army), 3,000 women engaged in shirt-making, whose maximum wage is only seven farthings each shirt, and who toil unremittingly from sixteen to eighteen hours per day for a miserable pittance of 1s. 4d. When the heavy cost of a room, and of other necessaries, is deducted from this income, it is easy to believe the food is only "bread, dripping, and tea." These people are to be found without difficulty by the practical philanthropist, and it should not be necessary for them to pass through the police-court before a helping and comforting hand is held out to them.

An Incorruptible Crown. Sixty or seventy years ago Miss Thompson, a Sunday-school teacher, wrote the hymn, "I think when I read that sweet story of old," which has been sung by thousands of children in all parts of the British Empire, and in many other parts of the world where the English language is spoken. She is still living, Mrs. Jemima Luke, over ninety years old; and a daily contemporary records the pleasant fact that she has just sent a subscription to the funds of the Sunday-School Union Centenary. In her case, as in that of many others of the people of God, the Divine assurance has been fulfilled. "Even to your old age I am He: and even to hoar hairs will I carry you" (Isa. xlvi. 4).

The Outpoured Spirit.—2.

THE MEANING OF PENTECOST.

WE have considered the fifty days as made up of the forty after the Resurrection, and the ten after the Ascension of our Lord to heaven. This period, however, was significant from another point of view.

In the ordinance of the feasts of the Lord in Lev. xxiii. the Sheaf of Firstfruits of the Harvest, which was waved before the Lord on the morrow after the Sabbath—i.e., on the first day of a new week—was typical of Christ the Firstfruits of them that slept (1 Cor. xv.). The sheaf was waved to be accepted for Israel, as the risen Redeemer was and is accepted for us, and we are accepted in Him, the Beloved (Eph. i.).

From that first day of the week—the typical resurrection day—seven complete Sabbaths (= forty-nine days) were counted; and on the morrow after the seventh Sabbath from the waving of the Sheaf of Firstfruits—i.e., on the fiftieth day—two wave loaves, made of fine flour, baken with leaven, a new meal offering, were offered for firstfruits unto the Lord, with burnt-offering, and sin-offering, and peace-offering. The wave loaves were typical of the New Testament Church, the spiritual Israel, who are a kind of firstfruits of His creatures (Jas. i.).

This fiftieth day was the day of Pentecost, and as the Resurrection of our Lord was on the third day after His Death, so the Outpouring of the Spirit was on the fiftieth day after His Resurrection. Times and seasons the Father hath set within His own authority. The Book of Life of the Lamb that hath been slain was dated from the foundation of the world (Rev. xiii., xvii). The Incarnation took place when the fulness of the time was come (Gal. iv.). Jesus was baptised when He was thirty years of age (Luke iii.). The Transfiguration was on the eighth day after Peter's great confession (Matt. xvi.; Luke ix.). The Crucifixion was on the Passover Day, the fourteenth day of the first month (Ex. xii.; 1 Cor. v.).

The Resurrection was three days after the Passover; the seventeenth day of the month; the day when the Ark rested on Ararat. The Outpouring of the Spirit took place on the fiftieth day after the Resurrection.

These were all times and seasons set within the Father's authority; they were all essential stages in the work of our Redemption. Neither the order of them nor the intervals between could be other than they were; nor can either of them happen a second time, unless they can all be repeated; for they are united and yet separated, by definite periods set within the Father's authority. But each and all of them may be apprehended in the experience of every believer. Their results are all his assured possession from the moment he believes; for the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ HATH blessed us with EVERY spiritual blessing in heavenly things in Christ (Eph. i.); and they are revealed to him by the Spirit of Christ as he is able to receive them.

The day of Pentecost was defined as to time in these words:—

"Ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the Sheaf of the wave-offering; seven Sabbaths shall be complete."

"Seven" is a number of completeness, and "sabbath" signifies rest. Therefore seven complete Sabbaths, commencing on the Resurrection-day of our Lord, leading to a first day of the week after the seventh Sabbath, is typical language for complete rest of soul and spirit, by faith in the risen Son of God, having ceased from our own works, and being united to Him in His death and in His resurrection (Heb. iv.; Rom. vi.). The wave loaves of the firstfruits were two in number, because two is the number of agreement, fellowship, communion; and the type was fulfilled in this respect when they had WITH ONE ACCORD continued stedfastly in prayer and supplication, and "the day of Pentecost was fully come, and they were all WITH ONE ACCORD in one place."

Therefore the chief conditions of Pentecostal blessing and power are:—(1) Personal and individual rest by faith in the risen Christ; (2) The acceptance of His yoke, becoming yoke-fellows with Him, the Faithful Witness, as His witnesses: (3) Soreness of heart and soul with our fellow-members of the one body of Christ, in faithful obedience to the will of God, especially with reference to continuing the testimony of Jesus.

There was no full, free, and eternal salvation revealed until Jesus had been glorified and the Spirit had been outpoured; nor were there any duly equipped preachers of the Gospel until the members of the infant Church, individually and corporately, were all filled with the Holy Ghost at Pentecost.

They had proved their undying confidence and trust in the exceeding great and precious promise of their departing Lord, and He, unseen in the heavens, had fulfilled His word. The river of living water had begun to issue, never more to cease its flow, from the throne of God and of the Lamb. The Scriptures which, while He went in and out among them, He had opened their hearts to understand; the things which were written in Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning Him—shone like Urim and Thummim in their minds; and as the Spirit gave them utterance they spoke the wonderful works of God.

A Ministerial Question-Box.

DR. TORREY ON SOUL-WINNING.

ONE of the most striking features of Rev. Dr. Torrey's recent missions in Australia, in the course of which so much revival blessing was given, was the "Ministerial Question-Box." In response to invitations, over 200 ministers gathered on one occasion in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Sydney, to meet Dr. Torrey, who had agreed to answer any questions his brethren might wish to ask. We give herewith one or two specimen questions and answers:—

"Two ministers—equally gifted, equally prayerful and reliant on the Spirit of God for power to lead souls to the Saviour—one succeeds, the other does not. How would you account for this?"

"This," said Dr. Torrey, in reply, "is a purely imaginary case. Nobody can tell that two men are equally gifted, equally prayerful, equally reliant. How are you to know? It is a purely imaginary case. When I am in my classroom at home, with people not so dignified as you, I simply deal with imaginary questions by quoting—

'If all the world were water,
And all the water ink,
What should we do for bread and cheese?
What should we do for drink?
Why—scratch your head and think.'

In other words—if something should happen that didn't happen, what would happen?

"But the question suggests this to me—that it does not follow because a man is relying on the Spirit to help him, he will see results. Every man that is filled with the Holy Ghost will be successful. He may not see that he is successful, but he will be. Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost. You say, 'That is purely imaginary.' It is not. How do I know? Because the record says so. Read it: 'Stephen, being filled with the Holy Spirit, lifted up his eyes.' But Stephen did not see the success of his sermon; all he saw was stones. And they carried him away from that sermon—dead! Was that sermon a failure? There was a man standing there, and all Stephen saw was that he was watching the clothes of the men who stoned him, applauding them, and shouting, 'Go in—stone him again!' But that man was Saul of Tarsus, and the conversion of that man resulted in the conversion of thousands. But Stephen didn't see that.

"Now, a man may be filled with the Spirit of God, and yet not see great results. Mind you, if he be definitely filled with the Spirit, he will usually see some results. If I were not seeing results from my preaching, I would not conclude I was not filled with the Spirit; but I would go alone with God, and have a time of heart-searching, to find out.

"Another thing, I don't think we are as dependent upon environment as some people imagine. Some of us get into an easy field, and some of us get into a hard field; but, brethren, there is a Power back of us that will give results in the hardest field. Nothing is too hard for the Lord. Brethren, if we believe in God, if we believe in the Bible, if we believe in the Holy Ghost, if we are willing to set our faces like a flint, believing that nothing is too hard for the Lord, and then hammer away under the most discouraging circumstances, we will get a revival in any place on earth.

THE HOLY SPIRIT'S WORK.

"Do you not think it is a safe thing to say that the Holy Spirit only brings out what a man has got in him?" asked someone. "For instance:—I once went to hear George Müller deliver an evangelistic address. It was one of the feeblest things I ever heard, and I concluded that evangelization was not George Muller's gift. Well, you would not say that George Müller was not possessed of the Holy Spirit!"

"I think you are wrong," said Dr. Torrey. "I heard George Müller give evangelistic addresses, and I would like to hear him give one in this town this afternoon; but it is true that there are diversities of gifts, and the Holy Spirit uses one man as a teacher, another as an evangelist, and so on; and it is not for you and me to choose the gifts by ourselves. We must place ourselves at the disposal of the Holy Spirit, to use us as He sees fit. As to the Holy Spirit calling nothing out of a man but what a man had in him, I must emphatically assert that that is not true. The Holy Spirit puts things into a man that are not in him by nature, and then calls them out. If there ever was a man born without natural gifts for public speaking it was Dwight L. Moody. When he began to speak first, his minister told him to keep still, as his gift was not preaching, and he was quite right. But it pleased the Holy Ghost to make Dwight L. Moody a preacher, and I guess he did a little talking before he died. Now, do not misunderstand me—if you do not feed on the Word of God and get filled, there is nothing for the Spirit of God to use; but if we feed on the Word of God, and are filled with the Holy Spirit, we will be used for whatever purpose the Holy Spirit shall call us.

"But, brethren, the question is not what you and I are naturally. The question is—what God makes us spiritually. Let me tell you a very sacred bit of experience, and one that I speak of very seldom. One day, as I sat in my study, something fell upon me, and I literally fell to the floor, and just lay there and shouted. I had never shouted before. I had never heard 'Amen' said before except in the right places in the Church services. But I lay there shouting, 'Glory to God! Glory to God! Glory to God!' just as if I had hysterics. It was some time before I could rise; but at last I got up, and went out and told my wife what had happened. Friends, what had happened? The Spirit of God had put something into me that was not there before."

Leading Children to Christ.*

By A. H. McKINNEY, Ph.D.

IT must never be forgotten that there is no one successful method, and that no two children can be dealt with in exactly the same manner. Moreover, a method that is a failure at one time may be successfully employed at another, and a child who has remained apparently insensible to one appeal may readily yield to another. So do not be discouraged, but try, try again. The following are suggested in a general way:—

I. Rely on the Spirit's willingness to help you.—Remember that the work of leading the child to Christ is His. Never forget that you are the instrument in His hands for doing the work. Be encouraged with the thought that He is not only able, but also very desirous to help you. At every point in your endeavours for the child, look to Him for direction, inspiration, and power. Tell Him of your mistakes, and acknowledge the part which He has played in your successes. As He took the things of Christ and showed them to you through some human instrumentality, so He will show them to the child through you.

TAKING TOO MUCH FOR GRANTED.

II. Present Christ to the Child.—I do not believe that the time of every Sunday-school session should be occupied in simply presenting Christ to the child, but I do believe that that time is largely mis-spent if there is not underlying the teaching the thought that the lesson is going to lead up to Christ. Take your Bible as the type. In it are many forms of teaching; in it there is much of history, of chronology, of geography; types, ceremonies, and institutions have their place, but are they not all for the purpose of leading up to and of presenting Christ? So it ought to be with my teaching. Methods may vary; to-day I emphasize one truth, on next Sunday a different one, but all the lessons should in some way point to Christ.

In addition to this, I would present Christ to my class as a whole, and I would present Christ outside of the class to the individual members thereof. In this respect, frequently, too much is taken for granted. Parents think that the Bible-school teacher will lead their little ones to the Saviour, and the Bible-school teacher thinks that the parents will do it. Again, at special times, for example on Decision Day, Christ should be presented to the children, as if this were the first opportunity that had ever been offered to accept Him.

III. Remember the Differences in Children.—I once heard of a boy who not only was a liar, but who did not think it wrong to lie, and who had been taught to lie by his mother. It would not take a very vivid imagination to picture that boy sitting in a Sunday-school next to a boy who thinks it a great sin to lie, and whose mother has neglected no opportunity to instil in him a hatred of deceit. Those two boys cannot be led to Christ in exactly the same way. Here is a child that has been instructed in the truth since infancy. Here is one that was born and has been bred in an atmosphere of unrighteousness. What a difference there is between them! Unwise, indeed, is the teacher who ignores these differences when presenting Christ to the two.

WHAT MAY BE TAUGHT, AND HOW.

IV. Use the Child's Language.—Not childish language, not baby talk, but language that the child can understand. Much that is uttered on religious topics in the presence of the child is spoken in an unknown tongue, and it results in nothing, because it is not understood. The writer has long defended this thesis: The highest spiritual truths may be taught to, and understood by the child, if uttered in language with which the child is familiar, and illustrated by those things which are on the plane of the child's experience. This brings us to one other suggestion concerning the How.

V. Use Illustrations which the Child can Understand.—Those who deal with children are quite apt to refer to Jesus as the great Master Teacher, and yet are very prone to neglect or to refuse to follow His example. When the great Teacher taught the most sublime truth, His illustrations were from the common every-day life of the people. He made them see the truth. So, he who would present Christ to the child must first see as the child sees, and then present the truth by illustrations on this plane of vision.

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

VI. Do not Expect too Much of the Child.—A Christian is a disciple of Christ. A disciple is a learner, a follower. The test that we should apply to the child who wants to confess Christ is, Do you love Jesus Christ so that you are willing to follow Him? Conversion is turning to Christ. The one who has turned to Christ does not by that act become perfect. We have already stated that conversion is not sanctification. Has not this been frequently forgotten in dealing with the child? Have we not expected that development, that maturity, that holiness which is often lacking in even the mature saint? A child of seven may be as real a Christian as is the adult of forty-seven, without the experience of the latter.

VII. Remember how Patient God has been with you.—Not once nor twice, but many times was Christ presented to you before you accepted Him, and after you had accepted Him what haltings, what stumblings, what going backwards there were! And through it all how tenderly and how patiently He encouraged you, helped you, and led you. Your case was not an exceptional one. There was no special reason why you should have been treated with such loving kindness. Do not forget all this, and it will make you loving, gentle, and patient with the little one whom you want to lead to the Saviour or who has accepted Him.

Zionwards.

Gen. xlv. 4, 5; Isa. lxii. 6, 7; Rom. xi. 26.

Lord Jesu, King of Zion,
No more let Israel roam,
But in Thine outstretched arms
Find peace, and rest, and home.
While welcomed from their long exile,
They meet Jehovah's pardoning smile.

Chorus.

O King of Zion from above
Draw Israel home with cords of love;
Nor day nor night we give Thee rest
Until Jerusalem be blest.

O weeping, storm-tossed ones,
Who oft for Zion yearn,
Her long rebellious sons
Back to your King return!
He waits with everlasting love
His faithful promises to prove.

Though scattered far and wide——
Beneath His sheltering wing
Shall Christ, the Crucified,
His long-lost brethren bring.
His gracious words dispel their fears,
His hand shall wipe away their tears.

From age-bound unbelief,
Jesu, we gaze on Thee,
The vail at last removed,
Our own Messiah see!
He turns to us a Brother's face,
We find ourselves in His embrace.

O Israel, first beloved!
My Father's wayward child?
In glad surrender now
Thou standest reconciled.
The former things are passed away,
There dawns for thee Eternal Day!

O sweet Jerusalem!
Released from curse and pain,
Lo! Abraham's sons made free
Tread Thy fair courts again.
Their night of grief is past and o'er,
Christ reigns their King for evermore. H.

Revival Thoughts.

"SHOWERS OF BLESSING."

AT this time, when the earnest desire for a Revival is so heavily laid upon the hearts of God's people, it seems right we should inquire very closely what are the causes which are preventing the fulfilment of God's gracious and loving promise, "There shall be showers of blessing."

The promise was made to a purified Israel, but the showers were not limited to them. When the Lord was their accepted God, and they had entered into the "covenant of peace," then God promised that they "and the places round about," should receive showers of blessing. But it was necessary first of all that God's people should put themselves in a position to receive them.

Now what is this position? Surely it is this, that we Christians must most zealously put away from us all sinfulness and all that is not quite pleasing to God. Look at Lev. xxvi., "If ye walk in My statutes, and keep My commandments and do them, then I will give you rain (3, 4) . . . and establish My covenant with you (9) . . . and I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be My people" (12).

And so, too, if we look in Mal. iii., we shall see that before God will pour out the very abundant blessing which He there promises, man must put himself into a position to receive it by bringing "the whole tithe into the storehouse"—by paying Him what is His due, with regard to our time, our abilities and our possessions. And, moreover, we have it distinctly stated in Jeremiah iii. that because of Judah's sin, "Therefore the showers have been withholden."

If, then, we Christians really desire a great outpouring of God the Holy Ghost upon ourselves and those "round about," is it not quite clear that we must be very zealous for the strict fulfilment of God's command? Let us thoroughly examine ourselves, and by God's grace remove whatever there may be in us which may hinder the showers of blessing.

Then, having put ourselves in a position to receive the fulfilment of this loving promise, let us with all earnestness and in true faith ask for it, for "Thus saith the Lord God: I will yet for this be inquired of." We have received the "former rain"—mercy drops round us are falling; but now we want the promised showers "in the time of the latter rain." "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain; so the Lord shall make bright clouds and give them showers of rain" (Zech. x. 1).

Prayer and Revival.

DEAR SIR,—I trust the article, "Revival Memories," in your last issue, reproduced from Canon Garratt's letter to The Record, may not restrain the spirit of prayer for Revival, which is gathering in force and fervency all over the world.

Although in England in 1859 little out of the ordinary measure arose, it was not so in Ulster for England. Prayer on thousands of occasions arose from Spirit-filled men and women for England, and that England did not have a Revival, in the true sense of such a movement, but only a gracious work of much power, may be attributed to the absence on her own behalf of genuine, persistent prayer, which, as James says, is "powerful in its working."

I am in agreement with all authorities, such as Rev. Professor Finney and others, in tracing all Revival movements to the prayer of God's people. Even in Scripture, events bearing the seal of the promise of God have had, nevertheless, the seal also of prayer as an essential condition of their being fulfilled.—Yours faithfully,

October 24, 1902. W. Woods Smyth.

Stores Prayer Union.—The tenth annual meeting of the Stores Prayer Union was held a few days ago at the Police Institute, Adelphi Terrace, Strand. A satisfactory report was presented showing increased attendance during the year. Addresses were given by Rev. G. Robinson Lees (Lambeth), Messrs. R. Bannister and J. E. Bignall, and Miss Vaughan Barber. The hon. secretary is Mr. W. G. Green, 1, Hatfield Street, S.E.

Old Testament Lessons.

Notes of addresses by Rev. David Baron, given last week at the Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A.

"WHO IS A GOD LIKE UNTO THEE?"

IN the last three verses of Micah's prophecy we have not prophetical denunciation of sin, but consolation. "Thou wilt perform the truth . . . which Thou hast sworn." In the Epistle to the Romans the Apostle is overwhelmed with the realization of the covenant-keeping God. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God." So it is here. Micah beholds the sun of mercy emerge from the dark clouds of judgment, and exclaims, "Who is a God like unto Thee?"

Scripture answers the question in several ways. (1) He is the living God. We have in Psa. cxv. a full description of the gods of the heathen, "They have mouths, but they speak not," &c. But in the language of Jeremiah, Jehovah is "the true God, the living God, and an everlasting King." He is the Fountain of Life, of whom the Psalmist sang (Psa. xxxvi. 9), and "in Him we live and move and have our being."

(2) He is a holy God. This is sounded forth by Moses in Ex. xv., "Glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." Holiness as an attribute of God entered not into heathen conception, and even an Isaiah has to fall down and cry, "Woe is me . . . I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." Those who truly worship God must do so in the beauty of holiness.

3. He is a God that pardoneth iniquity. When Moses prayed, "Shew me Thy glory," the answer brought out the goodness of God, as shown in graciousness and mercy (Ex. xxxiii. 18, 19). The fulfilment is seen in the next chapter, where the Lord is proclaimed "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering . . . keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin." Iniquity we may take to be the innate vileness of man, the depravity of his being; transgression as rebellion against God's authority, expressed in the law; and sin as the violation of the straight, eternal rule of righteousness. These three millstones are round the neck of man, dragging him down. Who is to deliver him? The Bible shows us sin, as God sees it, and its consequences here and hereafter; but the object of its analysis of sin is to show us the mercy of God. The work of the Divinely-appointed Messiah was always on the lips of Prophet and Psalmist. Turn, as an instance, to Lev. xvi. where on the solemn day of atonement, after Aaron has confessed his own sins, he confesses those of the people, "putting them upon the head of the goat," and then "the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities." Behold, here, the Lamb of God "bearing away" the sin of the world. In a study of Isa. liii. (which answers to Lev. xvi.) we read, "He bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors." All the history of Israel converges in the Alpha and Omega of prophecy, the Messiah.

THE CLIMAX OF THE BOOK OF IMMANUEL.

Isa. xii. is a short psalm of joy, which forms the climax of the "Book of Immanuel," that section of Isaiah which includes chaps. vii.-xii. If we seek the meaning of the words, "That day," we turn to the context in chap. xi. 10: "In that day there shall be a Root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people." "That day" is to be a day of deliverance, not merely national, but spiritual. "In that day thou shalt say, O Lord, I will praise Thee." The emphasis of xii. 1 rests on the latter part of the verse. Their hearts will acquiesce and take delight in the justice and righteousness of God, even when sin has brought down His anger. The verse harmonizes with Isa. xl.: "Speak ye to Jerusalem . . . her iniquity is pardoned. Comfort ye my people." And the song of Israel in "that day" is the song of every one whose eyes have been opened. For such, Messiah's day has come, and in the light of Calvary they have known God. "Thou wast angry, but thine anger is turned away"—and how? The secret is told in Isa. liii: "All we like sheep have gone astray," but "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all."

THE ROCK—HIS WORK IS PERFECT.

The Song of Moses, recorded in Lev. xxxii., has nothing to surpass it in the range of Scripture for loftiness of style and grandeur of language. It may be styled "God's manifesto" in relation to Israel. The purpose of the Song is two-fold: to witness against the sins of Israel, and to testify to the goodness and righteousness of Israel's God. Verse 4 is the first instance in which God is spoken of as "the Rock." Subsequently the name became a favourite one, David particularly using it. On his dying bed the Psalmist acknowledged "the Rock of Israel spake to me."

"Perfect is His work." We have not yet an adequate conception of the universe which God has created; but it is not of the work of creation of which Moses sings, but of the work of redemption, unfolded by Jehovah in his dealings with Israel. The obligations of Israel to God were great; let us, however, remember that ours are greater, for deeper light shines upon us than upon them from the Divine revelation.

In Foreign Prisons.*

BY reason of ripe and rich experience in the visitation of prisons and prisoners in all parts of the world, Mr. Charles Cook has exceptional qualifications for writing upon this important subject. Our friend has a facile pen, and his adventures among criminals, while proclaiming the good news of salvation and distributing the Word of God in Russia or Morocco, in Algeria or the United States, form a record which is at once pathetic and fascinating. His PERSONAL EXPERIENCES in the Prisons of the World will prove of high value to the student; it is an important contribution to the literature of penology.

There is a vivid passage descriptive of the celebrated "Tombs" and Sing Sing prisons of America:—

A CHOIR OF PENITENTS.

"Sunday morning found us at the 'Tombs' Prison. The principal service was conducted in the main building; and then we were presented with a congregation of drunkards; and were surprised to find my address continually punctured by a warder's voice continually crying out, 'Fourteen days,' 'Seven days.'

"Prisoners were being tried and sentenced on the Lord's Day. 'Yes, sir,' said an officer, 'guess we'd never get through if we did not work on the Sunday.' I was glad to notice many of the poor 'drunks' who had been listening were moved to tears, and sought our prayers for help to break from their vice.

"Principally young girls! 'Drink and dress,' said the Matron, 'bring the majority of women here.'

"I had tried, whilst speaking, to touch the chords of some hearts; and, whilst singing an apposite hymn, my choir of penitents absolutely broke down.

"I suppose the dead and buried recollections of past days had revived, and memories of home—of mother—were alive: these tears (those blessed safety-valves for broken hearts sin-chased with sorrow) came to their relief.

PREACHING IN SING SING.

"The State prison of Sing Sing is beautifully situated on the Hudson, some thirty miles from New York. I had been told by officials of other American gaols that 'they could get anybody out of prison, and even off the gallows, if they had enough money.' But I was greatly surprised at the lack of discipline openly permitted in this huge penitentiary.

"One man was reading a newspaper whilst lying in bed and smoking, and this was on a Sunday morning. The man in the next cell was making tea over a lamp, the tea having been brought into the prison surreptitiously, by the prisoner's own confession. The next prisoner was in the act of holding out a diamond, and asked me my opinion as to its value. In a fourth cell a man was passing a letter to a companion in cell number five, using for this purpose an artfully-contrived apparatus made of a pair of scissors and wire. Having dropped part of the contrivance, he coolly asked the paid official who accompanied us round the place to 'Hand me up those scissors, if you please.' The gentleman did so, and left me marvelling at a convict being permitted to retain in his possession such dangerous articles.

"I much enjoyed preaching in the church to some 1,200 convicts. A splendid orchestra and choir led the singing, and I sought grace to do my very best to show the Nemesis which follows sin, and was pained and surprised at the applause which followed."

Much has been written of the underworld of Chicago since Mr. Stead wrote his sensational work on the subject. Mr. Cook deals graphically with the Illinois State prison.

"Some forty miles away from Chicago—at a place called Joliet—stands the State prison of Illinois. It is a magnificent building, and occupies the largest area of any prison known to me. I was shown over the place by an official and the chaplain. White men and coloured men, a few yellow men from China, and others from Germany, with a few other nationalities thrown in, composed the heterogeneous collection of scoundrels and villains, principally from the adjoining city of Chicago.

"It is the most awful centre of sin and its consequences I have ever visited. Morocco was bad; Algeria, in some respects, worse; but this is hardly to be believed unless one saw it and heard such things from official lips. Outwardly things were not so bad. Order seemed to prevail, the sanitary arrangements appeared all right, but the moral condition may be inferred from the following facts, and my readers must read 'between the lines.'

"I knew something of Chicago as a 'City of Crime,' where shopkeepers frequently keep a loaded revolver behind the counter whilst doing business; and I had just visited the county gaol, where 600 prisoners, mainly murderers, were allowed the run of the place, smoking and chatting at their own sweet will."

THE LEASE SYSTEM.

Mr. Cook deals, in passing, with the Southern States of America and their lease system.

"The prisons in the Southern States have long called for reform, and there needs some one to voice the awful wrongs of the prisoners; and the abominable system under which they languish—what is known as the 'Lease system'—is more than abominable, and calls loudly for reform. In Georgia, for instance, convicts are leased to individuals, over whom no supervision is exercised; and, what is worse, men, women, and children are herded together, and sleep together in one large shed on the ground without beds. One authority says, 'I have seen some pretty bad sights in Siberia, but I have seen far worse among the coloured prisoners in the Southern States.'" Mr. Cook touches deftly on a wide range of topics affecting crime and the criminal; in all he writes with the keenness of a close observer and from the standpoint of an earnest evangelist.

A Protestant Veteran.—For forty years Mr. T. H. Aston, secretary of the Birmingham Christian Evidence and Protestant Laymen's Association, has been labouring in the Gospel. Seven years ago Cromwell Memorial Hall, Heath Green Road, Winson Green, was opened. By voice and pen Mr. Aston carries on an important controversial work in defence of Protestant principles and Evangelical truth. He may be addressed at the Hall.

Two Quiet Days for waiting upon the Lord and intercessory prayer were held last week at the "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth, presided over by Mr. Hogben. Bible-readings were given by Miss Soltau, of the C.I.M., and Mr. Paget Wilkes (Japan), missionary. The main thoughts centred in the possibilities of believing prayer, and several striking illustrations were given of the way in which the Lord responds to-day to the prayer of faith. At a half night of prayer Mr. Hogben mentioned that for three and a half years past a few had been meeting at the "Welcome Mission" every Monday at noon, for an hour, to pray for a revival through all the churches in Portsmouth, and asked all to plead daily for a fulfilment of the Lord's promise, "I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh."

Other Lands.

American Inland Mission.

IN June last it was my great privilege to be associated with Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor in a small, but very interesting, Foreign Mission Convention, held in the garden of Mrs. Stambach, in a small township called Anchorage, fifteen miles from Louisville, Kentucky, U.S.A. We met many interesting workers from America and abroad, and amongst them Dr. Guerrant, the founder of the American Inland Mission. It is a plant grown from the seed of that ever-fruitful tree, the China Inland Mission.

Dr. Guerrant began as a medical man, and subsequently gave up practice for the work of the ministry in the Presbyterian Church. Some twelve years ago he made a startling discovery, that in the mountains of Kentucky there lived a race of Highlanders, Anglo-Saxons, descendants of the old settlers, who had preserved their independence, and had never mixed with other sections of the population of the State. He found them living in a terrible state of ignorance of the Gospel, and of the name of the Lord Jesus, uneducated, with vice and crime rife. Hardy, poor, for the most part hatless and shoeless, maintaining the old family blood feuds, this was a fitting sphere for the manifestation of the power of the grace of God. Dr. Guerrant gave up his church, and, aided by his wife, devoted himself to the work of evangelizing and educating these mountaineers.

The people often walk ten miles over the mountains, and sit all day listening to the Gospel. They then start back home, without eating a mouthful of food, so keen are they for the Word of Life. Numbers have been converted, six churches have been built, and ten schools opened. A little band of sixteen workers have been prayed into the field by Dr. Guerrant.

STORY OF TWO ELDERS.

One Sunday an old couple appeared at a service and requested baptism. The man was eighty, the wife not much younger. Both were barefoot and in the poorest clothing. Dr. Guerrant said to them, "I never baptize a man till I have seen him living a holy life for two years on these mountains." "We are old people; we have heard this Gospel a few times now. We are serious; we have trusted Jesus, and cannot tell when we shall get here again." "Then I'll make an exception, and I'll draw the line at eighty." Both were that day baptized and received into the church. Nimrod was the old man's name, and he had brought up a family famous for deeds of daring and sin. He became a church elder, and served faithfully in godliness of life till God took him home.

He was succeeded in the eldership by Jim McIntosh, a famous man, who had no fear of anything, but never went to any religious meeting. One day a woman challenged him by saying, "Jim, you're afraid to go to church!" This he was obliged to respond to. He went on Sunday morning, and had to go a second time, for he got "hit." At the close of the second meeting he went up to the front to seek the Lord. It was a tremendous struggle. When questioned as to whether he had any difficulty in going out for Christ, he replied, "Ask any man that's been born again what it costs!" Jim became a mighty man of God.

THE WORD AS "GREAT SPOIL."

When Dr. Guerrant was able to introduce copies of the New Testament, he made it a rule that no family should have more than one copy, so as to help the largest number. An old woman walked fifteen miles barefoot to get one, and carried it home as a great treasure. In a short time she was back again, asking for another one, saying that her brother had found out that she had it, and had made her give it him for his family; so she obtained a second copy. In a few weeks she was back again for a third copy, saying how an old woman a mile away would not rest till she had given her her copy. And so this poor old soul walked ninety miles ere she had a copy of her own!

I need hardly say how profound was the impression produced by the addresses of Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor at this Convention, and the joy they had in so unexpectedly meeting with so interesting a man as Dr. Guerrant.

Should any hearts be led to send help to this work in the Kentucky Highlands, I shall be only too glad to be the channel of communication.

Evangelical Society of Geneva

THE newly-published report of this Society gives a good and readable account of the general work during the past year, the seventy-first. The three branches of activity are dealt with separately:—Colportage, Divinity School, and Evangelization. We are told that seventy colporteurs are at work, all of them in France and her colonies, except three, who are labouring in Italy and Switzerland. In the Divinity School were thirty-two students. There are at present sixteen evangelization stations in connection with the Society.

Some idea of the extent of the colportage work may be obtained from the fact that 3,079 Bibles, 15,201 New Testaments, 13,546 Scripture portions, and 290,405 other publications have been sold. However, the selling of Bibles and Biblical literature does not sum up the whole of the colporteurs' doings. Following in the steps of their Master, these workers (as the report shows) have understood the importance of

THE MINISTRY OF CONSOLATION.

A colporteur in the Department Ardèche writes: "It is particularly by the afflicted that I have been well received. I have interested myself specially in them, for I know that my Divine Master loved the afflicted, and that it was they who most readily received His teaching. But in order to find the lost or sick sheep we must go everywhere, at the risk of being badly received in many places." A worker at Paris says: "A worthy widow of Jewish origin was much discouraged. Her son, who kept her by his work, had fallen ill. Just as I entered her house she was thinking of our last meeting. 'Ah! it is God who sends you,' she cried, 'that I may tell you of my misery, and that you may read me a passage of the Holy Book to strengthen me.' This was done; and we prayed as well; our Lord's peace abode in this home."

Side by side with the work of consoler, the still more urgent office of presents itself. This work not only demands much charity, but also a great deal of courage. Here we come into contact with alcoholism, with which almost all the colporteurs have to deal. One colporteur, who gives special attention to temperance, writes: "At a place in the Department of Ain, I saw an inn-keeper, victim to his trade, with whom I had had a conversation the previous year. He looked wan; I asked after his health. This man was seriously ill, his entire constitution having been ruined by drink. He said, 'I have accepted the glasses offered to me by my customers, and now it is too late; the evil is done.' He told me that he had a Bible, which he bought from a colporteur some few years ago. After a moment's conversation, he leaned on the table to weep."

Consoling the afflicted, and raising the victims of vice, do not, however, constitute the highest aims of the Society. It sends forth colporteurs above all to

ENLIGHTEN SOULS BY GOD'S WORD.

Here the report comes to speak of the work as in the midst of a Roman Catholic population, and records many an interesting meeting with pilgrims, priests, and others. One example must suffice. A colporteur in Dordogne writes: "I had promised one day to spend an evening with a family, and to sing some hymns. When I arrived, I found the house full of people, about fifty in number. As I spoke of the love of the Saviour, I perceived tears on several faces. When finishing, I put the question: 'Is it not true, my friends, that it is better to speak of this than to enter into controversy and to speak ill of the priest?' The positive (rather than negative) method strongly commends itself to experience in French evangelization."

Many passages such as those quoted appear in the Society's report, and in reading them one is convinced that these men are a power for good in France; simple men and poor, as most of them are, they are working under the manifest blessing of God.

The present unsettled state of religious life in France, the battle raging in that country between a large portion of the population and the Jesuits, renders the work of the colporteurs very important, and also difficult. Help from British sympathizers is heartily appreciated by the Society, and its widely-travelled and highly-esteemed superintendent of colportage, Pasteur J. P. Dardier. D. G. T.

From Central America.

I AM in receipt of letters from believers at San Marcos, thirty-five miles beyond Quesaltenango, five days' good travelling from Guatemala, stating that some thirty gather together every night to read the Scriptures. Shortly after the destructive earthquake, when they were worried and persecuted by fanatics (who say we are the cause of them), they were greatly cheered by the arrival of one of our faithful colporteurs, who preached to them from the words, "Fear not them which kill the body." These lonely believers plead with us to send a permanent pastor to shepherd and feed them, stating that they have great hunger and thirst to know more of the truth. We would to God that a man and wife, fully gifted and taught, were available, wherewith to supply this pressing need; but in the absence of such, two of our single lady missionaries, one of whom speaks the language, are planning to go there soon.

It is my hope and expectation during the coming dry season to make an extended trip, taking with me, if the Lord opens the way, and furnishes the means, some of our promising believers for their further development, visiting especially the numerous towns where scattered Christians are struggling to maintain a testimony for God and His truth.

An ample room for the preaching of the Gospel and a suitable place for the instruction and preparation of native converts for evangelistic and pastoral work, is an urgent need. The proper place for missionary training schools is in the foreign field, where converts who have the language and are acclimated can be trained. This is the hope of the evangelization of the heathen. A. E. BISHOP,

Villa Helvetia, Mentone.

IN these days of unique stress and competition, the battle of life is perhaps felt more keenly by refined gentlewomen who are compelled to earn their living than any other class, and if health and strength quickly give way under the strain, it is not surprising. To these the Villa Helvetia, Mentone, offers opportunities for the recuperation of health, and for twenty-eight years its hospitable doors have been open. Year by year numbers of ladies of delicate or ailing constitution have visited the Home, where, thanks to the kind Christian attention of those in charge, and the curative properties of the wonderful climate, they have had their health restored, and have returned to their work with renewed strength and hope.

Ladies are received from November 1 to May 1, the age of admission being from eighteen to forty. Those who are familiar with the conditions of life on the Riviera will know that the £1 per week contributed by the ladies does not cover the outlay. Communications may be addressed to Miss Dodgeon, Les Grottes, Mentone, Alpes Maritimes, France.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Itinerary.

HELSINGFORS, the principal city of Finland, altogether surprised me. I crossed the Baltic in a storm of snow, but on a most comfortable boat; and on reaching Hange, from which the train runs to the capital, found myself in winter, so that I was very glad of the fur-coat which a Christian friend insisted on lending me.

On reaching Helsingfors, after a seven hours' journey through a snow-covered land—the few scattered villages looking out from the thickly-wooded country en route, I found the carriages running on sledges, and the city bearing a most wintry aspect. But the moon was shining brilliantly overhead, and a warm welcome soon took the frost out of me.

The city is an altogether beautiful one. I was quite prepared for a collection of wooden buildings without the modern contrivances for lighting and transit. On the contrary, I found noble public buildings with granite columns; imposing churches; large open spaces, with monuments, gardens, and drives; electric tramcars, which far surpass anything I have hitherto seen in South London. I noticed one hotel, in which I should suppose it would be easy to accommodate some 500 guests, but this is closed for the present, as an arrest has been put on the prosperity of the city by recent changes, and it will be some time before either the city or the country recovers from the crisis through which the Finns have been passing. Very large numbers have left the country for Sweden and the United States; the Russian Cossacks are taking the place of native soldiers and police, and Russian officials, language, and coinage are being gradually substituted for the Finnish. The revolution is taking place quietly, but inexorably. The Finnish people are just now and we had some remarkable meetings. My books have been, through God's blessing, widely circulated, and I found that I had many friends, so that great audiences gathered, filling the University Hall, the German Church, and the spacious Alliance House at the most untimely hours.

There is a great need of good religious books in Finland, but the people are very poor. They cannot buy for themselves, but they read with avidity, and my friend, Pastor Kilburn, is most anxious that my small tracts should be translated into Finnish and circulated freely. He also pleads that this should be done for Bohemia and Silesia, and promises to attend to the whole matter. If we could raise £20 for the initial expenses, it seems as though it would be a real blessing; and I venture to believe that many of my friends may be willing to help. Contributions might be sent to Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

Then I returned via STOCKHOLM and COPENHAGEN, where on Sunday we had a delightful meeting, which filled the Y.M.C.A. Hall to its furthest capacity. Thence I travelled to Hamburg, where on Monday, at 10.30 a.m., a goodly number of God's children gathered, to whom I spoke on "Not grieving the Holy Spirit." That earnest worker for God among the Jews, Pastor Aston, interpreted for me. His colleagues and he are doing a blessed work.

At HAMBURG I was most lovingly welcomed by the Baroness von Nettelbladt, who is engaged in much of the good work of that great city. But specially she carries the responsibility of a large Home for the recovery of ladies from habits of intemperance. She seems to have had considerable success in this difficult work, and many have been saved. They are moving to more suitable premises, and pecuniary help at this juncture would be extremely welcome; but it has specially occurred to me that the fact of this Home being conducted on Christian principles, and in another country, might be a welcome hint to some who are anxious to know what to do with the tempted and fallen. The address of this devoted servant of God is—5, Moorwenden Strasse, Hamburg, Germany.

So ends another chapter! After a busy fortnight in England, Mrs. Meyer and I start for Jamaica, with Rev. H. B. Macartney, and I trust that I may have the same help in prayer on the part of many known and unknown. To nothing else can I attribute the safety, help, and blessing which have so richly fallen to my share.

F. B. MEYER.

The Nile Mission Press.

ALL who are concerned for the extension of Christ's kingdom in the land of the Pharaohs must needs welcome so admirable a means of sowing the good seed as the establishment of a Mission Press and Christian Literature Society. It is now some months since Miss van Sommer proposed that action should be taken; since then the plan has received the cordial endorsement of missionaries.

The representatives of the American Mission wrote:—"The number of people in Egypt who are learning to read is rapidly increasing every year. They read with avidity whatever comes in their way. They are anxious to learn what can be known. They are interested in religion and religious subjects. Tract literature has been found very effective in our work. Furnishing it freely, as is proposed by this Press, would enable the Mission agencies to use it still more abundantly and with greater effect." The C.M.S. local governing body expressed the view that "the formation of a society including representatives of all the Protestant Missions working in Egypt, and assisted by funds from home, for the production and publication of and especially such as affects the controversy with Islam, is heartily welcomed." The Bible Society, the Church of Scotland Mission, the North Africa Mission, and the Egypt Mission Band, were equally hearty.

It is thought that Alexandria, being the port, will be the best place in which to establish the Press, rather than Cairo, which is 130 miles inland. It will be necessary to purchase a suitable site for the purpose, and to build moderate premises, including a dwelling-house for the superintendent and fellow-worker; also for the head-printer. It will be wiser to do this at the first start, rather than set up the machinery in hired premises, and run the risk of being turned out. Some of the leading missionaries, who compose the Publication Committee, will decide as to what shall be printed; they will have translation work done, and find and develop native writers.

The undertaking was publicly launched at a meeting in Exeter Hall, Mr. Albert A. Head presiding. Miss VAN SOMMER, in the course of a comprehensive address, stated that, in addition to the missionary committees in Egypt, both in England and America committees are to be formed, and the Press will be placed in the hands of trustees. The speaker reminded her hearers, too, that in the Soudan and other districts, which are still closed to Gospel preaching, colporteurs will be free to circulate the good tidings.

Some important points were dwelt on by Rev. DOUGLAS THORNTON (C.M.S., Cairo) and Mr. J. MARTIN CLEAVER (Egypt Mission Band). Arabic is read over a wider area than any other language except English, and is spoken by more people than any except English and mandarin Chinese. Mohammedans reading Arabic are found from Sierra Leone to Pekin, from the Tartar of Tobolsk to the Malays of Capetown. The field, therefore, is vast, more so than the title of the Press would convey, and there is a strong demand for printed matter. There are scarcely any books in Arabic that can be read by children with profit, and but few pamphlets to satisfy the widespread spirit of inquiry. Many new periodicals are being started, and the secular Press displays remarkable activity. Schools are multiplying, but they teach only negation. The Press would disseminate positive truth, and so tend to the saving of the people and the establishment of an enlightened Church.

The Cry of India's Children.

THE atrocities committed upon little children in this country, which are from time to time brought into the light of publicity by Rev. Benjamin Waugh and his useful Society, have surely removed all doubt regarding the necessity for pursuing both protective and punitive measures to shield the defenceless little ones. That necessity remains urgent at home, but it is far more clamant in the Orient, and the Society for the Protection of Children in India has, therefore, a strong claim upon the sympathy of Christian people.

For the furtherance of its cause a public meeting was held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, on Friday last, at which heart-rending stories of the sufferings of Indian children were told by missionary ladies of large experience.

Mrs. BROCKWAY spoke first of the sufferings endured by child-wives. The crimes of branding, starving, and systematic cruelty committed in the zenanas, are particularly difficult of detection and punishment. Suicides are frequently reported, but it is morally certain that some of these are actually cases of murder.

Rev. C. JORDAN added facts from personal knowledge, and told, as an example, of one child of eleven licensed for evil purposes for soldiers, but, happily, rescued by a representative of Pandita Ramabai. Mr. Jordan also adduced the case of a Brahmin girl of but ten years of age, likewise taken from a house of infamy. Indeed, in one district of Bengal, a regular trade is carried on (chiefly by Mohammedans) in young girls, who are kidnapped or bought, and subsequently disposed of for the vilest of purposes.

On behalf of Hindoo girls, Mrs. AVETOOM made a pathetic appeal. Hinduism robs the little girls of their childhood and their innocence. Married at ten, put into a zenana at twelve or before, they are deprived of liberty, and indeed of everything but bare life; while even that has lost its charm. Cruelties by husbands, beatings and bruisings, cases of branding—generally on the face, as a punishment for being of more pleasing appearance than a jealous sister-in-law—these formed part of the black catalogue of atrocity set forth by the speaker, who said that if reliable statistics could be collected of the suicides among young girls they would be appalling. An additional difficulty in dealing with cruelty is that the police are corrupt, and that outside a police court, ready to vouch anything, both "witnesses" and a man to coach them what to say, can be obtained for a few pence. Mrs. Avetoom added some instances of young girls aged but ten or eleven being openly sold into sin.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN, who presided, added that, underneath even the terrible facts that had been stated, there lay deeper, unmentionable deeds of shame. He sought earnest support for the Society, and its hard-working secretary, Rev. E. A. Summers, of Calcutta.

In a few concluding words, Rev. J. P. ASHTON, who represents the Society in this country, dwelt briefly on its defined aims:—

(1) To prevent the public and private wrongs of children and the corruption of their morals; (2) to take action for the enforcement of laws for their protection, and, when desirable, to have the law on the matter amended; (3) to provide and maintain an organization for the above objects; and (4) to do all other such lawful things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects.

For the Blind Kabyles.—In a recent letter Miss Kate S. Smith, Djemaa-Sahridj, Algeria, writes hopefully of the efforts which are being made to minister to the needs of the blind Kabyles. "We are expecting a blessed winter's work. When in Algiers we were taken by Miss Read and Miss Day to see a blind girl who had been converted through their teaching. They had taught her to read by the Braille system, and had been the means of her being sent to France to learn brush-making. We found her bright and busy, and quite willing to come here and teach our Kabyles. The most rejoicing part is that the blind Kabyles who are learning to read really desire to work instead of beg. This is progress, and shows that the Gospel is raising them."

Pioneer Work in India.

MR. JOHN LAMPARD AND THE GONDS.

THE Balaghat Mission to the semi-wild tribe of Gonds in Central India is one of the most interesting missionary operations in that vast peninsula.

It is not generally known to English people that besides the enormous Hindu and Mohammedan populations of the fertile plains of India, the forest-clad slopes of its hill and mountain ranges are the home of numerous tribes of people who have come but partially within the sphere of its civilization. The ancestry of these tribes dates to far-off days. During the turmoil of successive invasions, these simple aboriginals fled for refuge and safety to the hill and forest fastnesses which have ever since been their home, and where, in many cases, they have been but little affected by the ever-changing circumstances of an advancing civilization. Of these numerous hill tribes the largest is the Gond, which numbers, probably, over two millions.

The Gond country consists chiefly of forest-clad hill and valley, the villages for the most part being in small clearings, where a few wattle and mud huts, surrounded by rice and millet fields, are found. The forest is the home of wild animals innumerable, and, besides cattle, hundreds of human beings are killed every year by tigers, panthers, and snakes.

In things temporal, the Gonds are the poorest of the poor; few of them have any ambition beyond the procuring of a pennyworth of grain a day, and an occasional shillingsworth of cloth for clothing; but, alas! multitudes of Gonds cannot obtain these for more than a few months in the year. Scarcity and famine are common.

There is little or no education, hundreds of villages not having a single person who can read. The Gonds live partly by a primitive system of agriculture, growing rice and millets; and partly on the fruits, roots, and other edibles found in their native forests.

THE GONDS' RELIGION.

Their religion is demon worship, to which is added, among the more civilized, the worship of some of the Hindu gods and goddesses. A special reason for the speedy evangelization of the Gonds is that their religion is much more vulnerable than Hinduism or Mohammedanism, and large numbers are being brought under the influence of these faiths. Unless speedily evangelized and won for Christ, there is much reason to fear their entire absorption into these religions. Probably not more than a tenth of the Gond population have heard the Gospel.

The Balaghat Mission is an unattached and unsectarian effort to evangelize the Gonds and others in the Balaghat district of the central provinces. The population of the district is 350,000, and there is no other Christian agency. The Mission was founded in 1893 by Mr. John Lampard, who still superintends its operations.

By a series of remarkable providences Mr. Lampard was led of God to begin to preach the Gospel in this large district, he having already spent seven years in active evangelistic work, four of which were in India.

Having devoted a few months to improving his knowledge of the local vernacular, Mr. Lampard bought a small tent, six feet square, put it with a few cooking-pots and other utensils into a small country bullock cart, and, taking a boy to cook his food, started into the forest-covered plateau which forms the northern half of the district. Equipped with a good constitution and the assurance that God had called him to this work, the pioneer made a preliminary tour on foot, covering some hundreds of miles, and extending over three months, during which time more than three hundred villages were visited and preached in. The people were found to be exceedingly shy and reserved, and in some cases men, women, and children fled into the the forest at the approach of the strange white man. But the visitor's familiarity with their language, together with some knowledge of native music and singing, and, perhaps above all, his adoption in those days of the Indian mode of life in matters of food and dress, resulted, in most cases, in the speedy overcoming of fear and distrust, and the establishment of friendly relations.

THE MISSION COMMENCED.

During this tour Mr. Lampard was on the look out for a good village in which to build a house and settle down to more concentrated effort. The head-man of a village called Nikkum, professing faith in Christ, Mr. Lampard decided that this would be a suitable spot; and set to work to build a native house of wood, mud, and grass (at a cost of £7). Here he remained for four years without any European helper, and often not seeing a white face or hearing his own tongue for months together. Warm friendship sprang up between the missionary and his neighbours; the blessing of God was upon the efforts; many men and women, confessing faith in Christ, were baptized, and a church organization was established. From these earliest days Mr. Lampard sought to teach his converts to take part in the control of their own church affairs and the evangelization of their heathen relatives and friends.

At the end of four years, Mr. Lampard married, and handing over the Nikkum work to an old friend who now joined the Mission, moved to a new centre at Baihir, there to establish a second station. The famine of 1897 was very severe in Balaghat. A number of famine orphans being thrown upon the care of the Mission, an orphanage was founded at the new station, and placed in charge of Mrs. Lampard, who had seven years' experience of work among women and children in another part of India.

FIGHTING THE FAMINES.

From this time the work continued to extend, new workers joining the Mission, native and European, a third station being opened, and an industrial farm being developed. There is now a staff of six European missionaries. The successive famines of 1897 and 1900 compelled the workers to devote themselves largely to measures of relief, considerable sums of money being entrusted to the Mission for the purpose; the general spiritual work has suffered by this deflection of effort, and there have been fewer baptisms, but the missionaries look forward to a new ingathering of souls when the period of abnormal distress shall have passed away. The orphanage, however, which has increased to over 100 children, is a centre of successful spiritual work, and is raising up young men and women who will doubtless greatly strengthen the whole work of the Mission in the coming years. A few of the older boys have already married, and are forming Christian homes among the heathen. The industrial farm is now training twelve other big lads for similar independence. Mr. Lampard is in England, recovering from an attack of blackwater fever, contracted a year ago, and will be glad to correspond with anyone wishing for further information respecting the Mission or the Gonds. His address is, 114, Clapton Common, London, N.E.

Day of Prayer for India.

A CIRCULAR letter has been sent forth by a number of Christian workers in India—representing the Y.M.C.A., the Student Volunteer Movement, the Christian Endeavour Society, the Sunday-School Union, and other inter-denominational organizations—asking that Sunday, November 16, may be observed as a General Day of Prayer for India. Facing such facts as the limited results of past labour, the sin of many who are associated by the heathen with the Christian name, and the multitudes yet unreached, workers are yet encouraged by what God has recently wrought in Australia, Japan, and other lands, as well as by tokens of blessing in India itself. Definite supplication is asked for the cleansing and awakening of the Church of Christ in India, for the quickening of all Christian workers, and for the conversion of the unreached multitudes.

WATCHMEN to your posts repair (Isa. lxii. 6),
Sentinels on Zion's walls,
Give yourselves to faithful prayer,
Urgent is the voice that calls.
God Himself doth now awake,
Scattering forth His energies;
And His people He doth make
Partners in this enterprise.
"Could ye not with Me keep watch?"
Peter heard the Master say;
'Tis the same tone that we catch,
As He rouses us to pray.
To be touched with Christ's own pain,
For His Church defiled and torn;
Travailing in birth again,
Till a glorious church is born;
Till a people for His praise,
Shines forth as a lamp that burns;
And the world from evil ways
Drawn, attracted, God-ward turns.
He who sleeps not bids us wake,
Give ourselves and Him no rest;
And by force the Kingdom take.
Wrestling, conquering, and blest.

Madras. R. J. WARD.

A Baptist Worthy.

THE LATE REV. J. T. WIGNER.

MANY will hear with sorrow that this well-known Baptist minister has passed away. He had been in declining health for some time; for several weeks he was seriously ill, so that the end was not unexpected. One of the oldest ministers of the body to which he belonged, Mr. Wigner was beloved by his brethren, and highly esteemed by Christian workers of all denominations. He recently celebrated his ninetieth birthday, receiving the congratulations of many friends, that God had given such abundant blessing upon his lifelong labours, and spared him to see children's children follow in his footsteps.

JOHN THOMAS WIGNER was a native of Harwich, and many years of his strenuous life were spent in East Anglia. School days were passed at Burnham-on-Crouch, and there also, as a young man, he declared himself a disciple of Christ. Having joined the Baptist church in Burnham, he came under influences that led to the steady development of his varied powers. At length he began to preach in the surrounding villages, "stirring up the gift of God that was in him," and early giving promise of a useful career.

Realizing a vocation for the pastoral office, the young man sought training in Stepney College—the predecessor of the Regent's Park College of our day. He was admitted a student, and went through the course to excellent purpose, Dr. Murch being then president of the institution. The Victorian era had just opened when he began active work in the pastorate. He settled at Lynn in 1839, and remained there for twenty-six years. A man of initiative and resource, his help was sought on all hands, and more or less throughout the Eastern Counties his advice and service were constantly asked and readily given. Mr. Wigner was greatly blessed in his work, and many souls were led to the Lord.

There are, at the present time, not a few Christian workers in East Anglia who trace their quickening in spiritual things to words spoken by this faithful minister a generation ago. In those days Norfolk had its Brock and Gould, and Suffolk its Elven and Raven, men who, with others, did much for the villages. Mr. Wigner was one with them in founding churches, and assisting them, weak though they might be, to testify for Christ in the dark places of the county.

In 1866 Mr. Wigner came to London. Domestic affliction had broken his health somewhat, but, recovering strength, he threw himself once more into aggressive Christian effort. Helpers rallied round him, and the Brockley Road Chapel was built. A strong church was gathered, and the larger interests of Christ's Kingdom were ever kept well to the fore. Among the members of the church were a number to whom the Lord had entrusted wealth, and these, under Mr. Wigner's guidance, took up many a good cause; and from them came earnest workers, some of whom remain with us to this day. For about twenty-four years the lamented pastor presided over the church in Brockley Road, and when he retired (to be succeeded by his coadjutor, Rev. J. Lewis, the present minister) he was by no means worn out, or beyond work. This was in 1889, since when, until December last, he was rarely without pulpit calls. He served the churches with much of his youthful energy and vigour, until deprived of his sight and too weak to walk.

It is not easy to outline the larger ministry of our venerable friend. In 1889 he was called to the presidency of the Baptist Union, and right well did he discharge the obligations of the position. From the addresses which he delivered from the chair one may discern the spirit of the man. His first deliverance was entitled "Our Life in Christ, that Life for Him; or, Christ Living in Us, we Living for Him;" and the other was "Christian Citizenship." Here we have the doctrinal and the practical, and on both these aspects of religion Mr. Wigner was wont to speak in terms of precision and with much warmth. Then the London Baptist Association claimed his service. Thrice was he installed in the chair, and called upon to give himself, heart and mind, to the concerns of the Association. Every year this body adds a new chapel to the number whereby it is sought to overtake the evangelization of the Metropolis. Thrice did the hard-worked minister, with readiness and ardour, assume the responsibilities of president, and he did his full share of the work of helping the churches and building places of worship. In the course of his career—seventy-two years a preacher and fifty years a pastor—he erected seven churches, introduced twelve men into the Gospel ministry, and baptized two thousand believers—a noble record, and no mistake.

Among the other ministries of Mr. Wigner, mention should be made of his work as secretary of the "Psalms and Hymns" Trust. Not only has the hymnal named been greatly blessed to the churches, but the profits derived from it, as distributed among widows and orphans of Baptist ministers, have carried comfort and help where it was much needed. In addition to his work in the original book, Mr. Wigner compiled the Supplement, and prepared hymnals for School and Young People's Meetings. He had a large knowledge of Gospel hymns, and found that knowledge a source of much light and joy during the last few months of his life, while waiting for the home-call.

His mind was stored with Holy Scripture as well as sacred songs; and, in an interview with a friend some weeks ago, he thus referred to his spiritual method and experiences while weak in body and deprived of sight:—

> I have been reading without the book—that is, repeating from memory—not only the Psalms, but Matthew, John, Acts, Romans, Corinthians, Ephesians, and Hebrews. Then my acquaintance with hymns is large. I remember once, during a vacation, learning by heart the whole of Rippon's Selection; and I do not think there are twenty pieces in the "Psalms and Hymns" collection—some 1,250 in all—that I cannot give out from memory. My daily exercises are simple. Every morning I repeat five hymns; also rehearse two psalms, and a chapter from the Old Testament. In the evening I also repeat five hymns, combined with other two psalms and a chapter from the New Testament. Where memory fails, my loved ones read to me. These exercises form part of my daily devotions, and most graciously has the Lord appeared to me from time to time during my months of quiet waiting upon Him in this way.

Though twice married, Mr. Wigner had long been a widower. His last days, in the midst of kind friends, were full of light. His daughter and grand-daughter read to him, and visiting friends always found him cheerful and interested in the work of God. At the Baptist Union meetings in Birmingham a resolution of sympathy with him was passed right cordially, in the presence of many ministers who co-operated with him in years gone by. This reminds one of the hearty way in which, for a long period of years, Mr. Wigner worked with the late C. H. Spurgeon, whose Gospel ministry engaged his high admiration. He signalized his interest in the Spurgeon Orphanage by raising money for the erection of two of the houses at Stockwell. The cause of the young always had a warm place in his heart; and these sympathies have been inherited in a remarkable degree by his son, Mr. J. Murch Wigner, well known for his activity in evangelistic work and children's services, and as the author of the beautiful hymn, "Come to the Saviour now."

The mortal remains of the resting labourer were interred on Saturday in Abney Park Cemetery. The funeral proceedings were watched throughout with pathetic interest by many friends of the departed. In Brockley Road Chapel nearly all the Free Church ministers of the district were in attendance, and the Church of England was represented by Rev. C. H. Grundy, vicar of St. Peter's, and rural dean. The service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. Lewis, and an address was given by Rev. George Short, who spoke under deep emotion, Mr. Wigner having for many years been his close personal friend. Another intimate of the lamented minister was Rev. J. W. Todd, D.D., who took part in the service. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist Union, also attended. At the grave, the service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Clifford and Rev. George Martin, of Upper Clapton. The latter was for many years pastor of Lewisham High Road Congregational Church, and worked very heartily with Mr. Wigner.

A memorial service was held on Sunday evening in the Brockley Road Church. The large congregation included many friends of Mr. Wigner. Though upwards of fifty years old when he laid the foundation of this cause, it is believed that Mr. Wigner did his best work in this place. From this centre he went forth into a score of counties in England, confirming the churches, and rendering effective service on a large scale. The inscription on the coffin, personally chosen by Mr. Wigner, was characteristic of the man of energy and Christian devotion. It was "Go work to-day in My vineyard?"

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, November 2. 2 Samuel xiv.

THE woman's story, which, of course, was a fiction, was, as nearly as possible, analogous to the situation in the King's heart and in the nation. The king was passionately attached to Absalom, and the nation doted on him; but if the ordinary process of the law could be set aside by the royal prerogative in Absalom's case, why not in others? As father, David yearned to do what, as king, he had been debarred from doing.

What a precious sentence this wise woman dropped incidentally, about God devising means of recovering His banished—a reference, possibly, to the cities of refuge (14). But notice the difference; God's means are through the Blood and Righteousness of His Son, and on the condition of penitence and faith; but David's was by the assertion of his own will. Absalom was asked for no evidence of contrition, and therefore David exposed himself and his realm to the awful misery and peril of his subsequent revolt. Men may say what they will against the doctrine of the Atonement, but it has certainly wrought healthily in the experience of mankind, and those who have accepted forgiveness through the blood of the cross have certainly not become Absaloms.

The incident of the barley-field on fire has a lesson for us all. How often has God thus to burn our barley-fields, in order to secure our attention and recall us to Himself! Let us not put Him to the necessity of giving us pain as the only expedient of bringing us to Himself.

MONDAY, November 3. 2 Samuel xv.

It is evident that deep and general dissatisfaction existed at this time against David's person and government. Several causes contributed to this, such as the plottings of Saul's partisans, the general disgust at the affair of Bathsheba, the insolence and crimes of Joab, the delays and neglect in the administration of justice. It was under such conditions that Absalom's plot succeeded.

In verse 7, following ancient authorities, we should read four instead of forty. During the four years that followed his return from Geshur, Absalom secretly undermined the loyalty of the people, whilst he impressed them with the magnificence of his equipages and the number of his followers.

Presently he felt himself strong enough to throw off all disguise, and proclaimed himself king in the ancient city of Hebron. The whole country rose at his call, and David, being anxious for the preservation of the beautiful city that he loved, and more confident of the support of the eastern than the western tribes, pathetically resolved on flight. In the sad story which follows, two or three items stand out in matchless beauty. (1) There is the reply of his servants in verse 15, which may well find its echo in all our hearts, as our word to our Lord. (2) There is also Ittai's magnificent answer to the king's challenge, and as it stands there in verse 21, it again supplies us with the identical words which we may use to our Lord and King. (3) There is the expression of David's beautiful humility, as in verses 25 and 26. Men may sneer as they will at David, and ask how he could be the man after God's own heart; but surely the answer is partly to be found in the humility and resignation with which he bore himself in this awful crisis. He had fallen, indeed, but he had been restored; and he was now submitting meekly to the chastening hand of God. Though the good man fall, "yet shall he not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with His hand."

TUESDAY, November 4. 2 Samuel xvi.

The disasters that befell David were the occasion for the revelation of the inner character of many who had filled his court. It is the time of trouble and misfortune which reveals men. Not when religion walks in the sunshine, in silver slippers, but when she goes through the mud, we know ourselves and our fellows. In the previous chapter, the loyalty of Ittai and Hushai, of Zadok and Abiathar, stood forth approved; in this, Ziba, anticipating the certain failure of Absalom's rebellion, prepares for his own advancement at the expense of his master; Shimei's mouth is opened with upbraiding insults, and he charges David with outrageous crimes; and Ahithophel's evil heart is revealed in the atrocious counsel that he gave Absalom.

But again we turn to David's deep and humble resignation to the will of God. Though he was guiltless of the crime with which Shimei charged him, his conscience reminded him of other flagrant iniquities, and he accepted Shimei's words as the chastisement of Heaven. In answer to Abishai's proposal, he said, "The Lord hath said unto him, 'Curse David.'" He refused to look at Shimei's behaviour apart from the express permission of God; and from His hands he meekly received the cup and drank it. This is the secret of blessedness—to look beyond second and intermediary causes to the great first cause, and to accept God's permissions as not less His will than His appointments. There is a difference between punishment and chastisement. The penalty of our sins was borne on the cross, but chastisement is the lot of every child (Heb. xii. 5-9). Let us accept it with meekness. "It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good!"

WEDNESDAY, November 5. 2 Samuel xvii.

Though we may trust absolutely in God's keeping power, yet it is wise to use means; and Hushai's mission to the court of Absalom was a wise step on the part of David. In recommending a general levy of troops throughout the land, he secured time for David to cross the Jordan and marshal his adherents. Ahithophel's vanity was wounded, and his pride mortified that his personal ascendancy over Absalom was gone. He realized, moreover, that Absalom's cause was hopelessly lost. In the restoration of the kingdom to David, he knew that he would be the first to suffer; and, therefore, anticipating the course of events with unerring precision, he preferred to take his own life. In this he recalls the suicide of Judas.

All through these scenes in David's life we catch anticipations of events in our Lord's. Each was the Divinely designated King; each was rejected of the nation (though for very different reasons); each went forth to the Mount of Olives from the city which he loved so dearly; and in such repudiation, when many false friends deserted, there was a revelation of the undying love and faith of others, who were devoted in life and death. It may be that days of similar rebuke are at hand, when again we must go without the camp to our dear Lord; but if that should be demanded of us, may God give us grace not to flinch. Let us follow on to know the Lord even in the fellowship of His sufferings; it is in no other way that we can bear fruit. We must drink of His cup, and be baptized with His baptism, if we would sit right and left of His throne.

To facilitate our understanding, it should be remembered that Amasa (25) was Absalom's cousin (hence xix. 13); though he was an Israelite, his father was an Ishmaelite (1 Chron. ii. 17). Shobi (27) must have been Hanun's brother, who disapproved of his brother's action, fled to David, and was perhaps made governor of Ammon (x. 1, 2). For Machir see ix, 5; here is an instance of how a kindness brings an ultimate return.

THURSDAY, November 6. 2 Samuel xviii.

The Eastern tribes rallied so warm-heartedly around David's standard that he soon found himself at the head of a great army. If verse 12 may be taken as giving a fair sample of the sentiments entertained towards the king, his army was enthusiastically loyal to him. There can be no question that Joab acted as a wise statesman in despatching Absalom, who had forfeited his life according to the Divine law (Deut. xxi. 18, 21); and who, by his acceptance of Ahithophel's proposals, had shown himself determined on parricide if that were placed within his power (xvii. 2, 4).

But what an awful day that must have been for David, seated in the tower-house above the gate of Mahanaim, scanning the landscape, and speaking now and again to the sentry posted above him. Was not that the time when God's Spirit strove more deeply than, perhaps, ever before; recalling the self-indulgence which had led up to this hour, the want of watchfulness, the lapse of fellowship? But was it not a time for reminding God of the Covenant by which He had bound Himself (vii. 15)?

And so he waited, looking up, above all, in intercessory prayer for Absalom. How exactly his attitude is that of many who read these words, who are unable to join in the activities of life, and who spend their days and nights repeating one dear name before God. He loves our Absaloms even more than we do! David wished that he had died, and you would be prepared to do the same, but has not He died! You must leave all with Him, the Judge of all the earth, who is also Redeemer and Saviour.

FRIDAY, November 7. 2 Samuel xix.

Joab's remonstrance, though couched in rough and uncourteous phrase, was perfectly just. The King's soldiers, instead of being welcomed with songs and acclamation, had slunk into the city as though they had met with defeat. Immediate steps must be taken to arrest their depression. Public men must not allow private griefs to interfere with their discharge of public duty.

The revulsion of feeling for David began with the ten tribes; but he rightly felt that the concurrence of Judah must be secured, and did it by the mission of the two priests, and by his secret overtures to Amasa. This turned the scale in his favour. Judah swung back to its old loyalty, and brought the king home with rejoicing (15); only David made the grave mistake of letting them do so before the ten tribes were equally represented (41). It seemed, therefore, as though a slight were put on the services of the ten tribes, though, in fact, the proposal of the royal return had emanated from them (43, marg. R.V.), and this led to an outbreak of ill-feeling which threatened to rend the nation. It was the earliest manifestation of a national schism, which took effect in the course of a few years under Jeroboam.

What a glimpse we have of the change which will be produced when our Lord comes again. Then there will be a complete reversal of the previous verdicts. Shimeis will sue for mercy, Mephibosheths will be justified, and the Barzillais will be rewarded. What force there is in the Apostle's words (1 Cor. iv. 5). What are we doing, as individuals, to hasten the return of our King? (Compare v. 10 with 2 Peter iii. 12.)

SATURDAY, November 8. 2 Samuel xx.

Sheba belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, where Saul's adherents were probably more numerous than anywhere else in Israel. He took advantage of the irritation between the Ten Tribes and Judah to fan their disaffection into a flame. Matters looked very serious, the more so that Amasa, the new general, lacked personal influence with the army, and failed to rally the soldiers. In desperation, David turned to the sons of Zeruiah, choosing Abishai as commander-in-chief; but in the crisis, Joab appears to have concealed his indignation, and to have gone as second to his brother. When the three generals finally met at Gibeon, Joab greeted Amasa with a show of affection, which put him completely off his guard, and then he stabbed him. It was another atrocious murder, and made David more than ever determined not to forgive the murderer (1 Kings ii. 5, 6; 28-34). The death of Sheba ended the rebellion.

Through what terrible scenes does our story move! This seems to be the invariable course of this world. The red horse is followed by the black horse, and the black by the pale on which Death rides, followed by Hades. But as each emerges from the unseen and makes his way across the arena, a voice, addressing the Son of God, says, "Come" (Rev. vi.). And in answer we can hear the voice of the Son of Man saying, "Behold, I come quickly." "Yea, Amen! come Lord Jesus!" These storms of blood usher in the reign of Solomon, the Prince of Peace. "A greater than Solomon is here!"

Christian Social Service.

At the Church of Ireland Congress, held recently in Limerick, Dr. Paterson Smyth spoke with much ability on the subject of practical philanthropy. Not that the care of the poor and the suffering has hitherto been neglected by the Church in Ireland, but for some time it had been borne in upon the minds of Dr. Smyth and others in a position to judge, such as the Recorder of Dublin, the late Mr. E. D. Daly, chief clerk of the Dublin Metropolitan Police, Lord Monteagle, and others, that efforts of a more highly-organized character ought to be put forth by the churches to circumvent the evils of overcrowding in the slums, respectable poverty as amongst aged governesses, &c., intemperance and its results, the harshness of the present Poor-Law system in separating families, and such like hindrances to the prosperity and happiness of the poor.

THE CHURCH AND THE POOR.

Dr. Paterson Smyth laid before his large audience three propositions:—(1) That grave, sorrowful, social conditions exist, which need not exist much longer if Christian people would only turn attention to them; (2) That it is the bounden duty of the Church to rouse her children to give thought to them; (3) That it is possible for the clergy, laymen, and laywomen assembled there to begin at once to move in the matter. What was to be done with such classes as respectable old servants, destitute decent widows, aged teachers and governesses, who have no friends or relatives, whose whole life had been one struggle for existence, so that it was impossible for them to save for old age.

Men like Lord Monteagle, who had given thought to the subject, asked for a classification of paupers: that for honest, respectable poor, who have never been convicted of crime, there should be provided a home or hostel where old couples of sixty-five need not be separated, where they could be free to come and go and see their friends, where each could retire into his little room and close his door, and where the stigma of pauperism would be as little felt as possible. This good work is so slow, and nothing is done for the aged poor, because the Christian Church has no organization for bringing the best thought and love of her people to bear on such problems. Then there was the overcrowding of the poor, six or eight people in a filthy, ill-smelling room, with a couple of ragged beds in the corner; with grown boys and girls huddled together, without a place for quiet, or prayer, or privacy. Common decency, not to speak of morality and religion, was impossible under such conditions.

"THE AWFUL LICENSING SYSTEM."

Something had been done in Dublin by Lord Ardilaun with his beautiful homes for the poor (sometimes, however, appropriated by the respectable artizan of £2 or £3 a week), and the girls of the Alexandra College had their tenement guilds, while the Trinity College students had a social service committee with a capital of £2,000.

Then there was the awful licensing system, making drunkards a thousand times faster than any organization can overtake them, and there were the little children trading in the streets and sleeping promiscuously on the staircases at night. Why were these evils not remedied? Simply because Christian people were not troubling themselves about it. All that the Church has done so far is to mitigate the results of bad social conditions and to help their victims, while the evil conditions remain. But she must do more than this! She must concern herself with social conditions in so far as they affect the characters of the people; she must teach the State that national character is more important than national wealth; she must call out the best of her children, her hard-headed sensible laymen, her business men, her professional men, her working men, and demand that they will give to Christ's business some of the time and thought and energy which they give to their own affairs. She must insist, for the well-dressed people streaming out of the churches on Sunday, that God's purpose for them is not fulfilled when they have given all attention to edifying their own souls; their thoughts must go forth not only to the heathen abroad, but also to their helpless brethren at home—to the tenement-room and the hospital, and the workhouse and the drink-shop, and the pawnshop, and the poor neglected children in evil homes.

WHAT TO DO.

To accompany all this they must educate, not merely rouse, the public to think, and teach them to think wisely; educate their parish and diocesan boards by lectures, literature, articles in parish magazines, &c. Then they must agitate; deputations ought to wait upon Chief Secretaries and County Councils. They must also operate. The Dublin University Committee are already working at the housing question. In the speaker's own parish the old-age bursary scheme had been taken up. They hoped to form 100 such bursaries in Ireland to begin with. Each bursary receives in contributions £13. Applicants are required to get their friends and relatives to pay an equal sum, and then it is possible to pension one really deserving case with 10s. a week for life.

PAGAN AND CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM.

Lord Monteagle contrasted Pagan and Christian socialism. Christian Socialists have not appropriated a Pagan idea from Plato, and covered it with a Christian dress; the vital principle was different, its ideal was not equality and uniformity, but diversity and liberty. They were all equal before God, but He had not ordained equality as the rule of life here on earth.

It was a complete misconception of Christian Socialism to fancy that it involved secularization of Christian aims. The object was not to subordinate religion to man's temporal welfare, but to raise human ideals to the level of Christ's teaching in every sphere of Christian activity. Let their ideals be the loftiest. Let Sursum corda be their motto, but they must not keep their heads in the clouds. The speaker referred to the Association for Promoting Poor-Law reforms with which he was connected, and said that it was conducted upon purely non-sectarian lines, and did not involve surrender of the religious sanction which was vital for Christians in any such work.

Two handbooks on the subject of social service have been issued, one written by and the other edited by Dr. Paterson Smyth. They are published by the Association for Promoting Christian Knowledge, Dawson Street, Dublin.

"Velvet and Rags."

The contrasts of life in West London are, indeed, striking. Luxury and wealth were never so great, poverty and the struggle for bare existence never so pathetic, as now. The schemes by which the people try to earn a livelihood tell only too clearly of the necessity which harasses them.

There are women who get a living by cleaning the front steps of houses. They are known as "step-ladies," and their wages are twopence a house. There are children who, at certain hours, wait outside the large hotels where scraps and pieces are sold at threepence a lot. But the largest class of all is that of women wanting "daily" work. This class consists of wives whose husbands are ill, or out of work, or confirmed idlers and drunkards; feeble, elderly women who are too old and weak for service, but who need help to "keep the little home together"; and widows left with families to maintain. Generally speaking, they are a respectable and deserving class. All they ask for is work, and they apply to us in shoals, and we cannot possibly find them all employment; but it saddens us beyond measure to have to refuse them day after day. Any ladies needing charwomen, caretakers, or temporary supply servants in their houses, would do a great kindness by bearing these women in mind, and communicating with the Sister in Charge, Cleveland Hall, 54, Cleveland Street, W.

Ragged-School Teachers.

AUTUMNAL REUNION.

During a period extending far back into the pastorate of the late C. H. Spurgeon, teachers and members of the staff of the Ragged-School Union have had a reunion at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in each successive autumn. At this year's meeting Rev. Thomas Spurgeon presided, and there was a good attendance of those interested in the work. In the course of a brief address, Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., founder and hon. superintendent of the Mission at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, said that while they were talking and praying about Sunday-schools in general, a remarkable work was going on in London. About a year ago the vicar of Newington gave some figures in regard to the non-attendance of children at Sunday-schools. It was thereupon suggested, Why not have Sunday-schools on week nights in all districts? Mr. Orsman explained that he had himself made a beginning at Costers' Hall with a meeting of 800 children, when the plain Gospel was illustrated with lantern views. The children were interested and orderly, and the result was that practically Hoxton was captured, and they had been having a mission to children. The opinion was also expressed that, on account of a large number under twenty years of age being converted, the churches would have many accessions of young people. The younger ones who were growing up were attracted to their meetings in all directions in connection with the Drift Section.

Dr. Dowen, of Brixton, also gave a brief address. He said the Sunday-school was his first and constant love; and he believed that the future of the Church was bright with promise. He was no pessimist; optimism was applied Christianity; and, as he looked on the churches, he was hopeful, largely on account of youth. On aiming at an ideal of life and service, he showed that teachers must live and work at their best. Spiritual strength was the great need of Christian workers; they did not need more machinery, but more power behind it—the strength which comes of singleness of purpose and consecration of heart.

It may be added that the most remarkable thing about this Drift service is the ready response which the children of the poorest class give to the Gospel call. Instead of becoming obsolete, as many predicted, the Ragged School Union working staff have more on their hands than was ever the case before. As any one may prove by a visit, the chief office at 32, John Street, Bedford Row, is a busy hive having many departments.

Glasgow Half-Yearly Meetings.

The half-yearly meetings of Believers were were held at Glasgow, from September 27 to 30, in the City and other public halls. They were largely attended, and the ministry of the word was most valuable. The testimony of many is that it was a time of much blessing. A spirit of harmony pervaded the whole meetings, and, as one expressed it, "the power of the Holy Spirit was manifested."

One happy feature was the presence of so many servants of Christ from other lands:—Dr. Baedeker, from his Russian and East European journeys; Mr. David Baron, of London, whose work with Jews is well known; Messrs. Hogg and Muddit, of China; Mr. Cornelius, of India; Mr. Honeywill of Italy; Mr. George J. Chesterman, of Spain, and many others.

One special feature of these conferences is the Report meeting on Tuesday night, when more than a dozen labourers gave brief accounts of home and foreign work. The large number of young Christian men and women present was notable, and cannot but be followed with blessing.

It was announced that Mr. Thomas McLaren (Glasgow), well known for his wide missionary sympathies, is about to proceed to India to visit missions stations to seek to encourage and help the workers. He sails on November 4, and would value widespread interest in prayer.

Harley House Notes.

By Dr. Harry Guinness.

THROUGH the mercy of God I am once more back at my old post at Harley House, engaged in the work of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, and my heart is filled with a sense of our Father's goodness in permitting me again to throw all my restored energies into the blessed task of preaching Christ crucified and risen from the dead, and of training others to carry the glorious Gospel to earth's remotest bounds.

Students and deaconesses reassembled at Harley College and Doric Lodge by October 2, and are now busily at work. Many of our new recruits have already proved themselves to be excellent workers, and we trust they may do yeoman service for Christ amongst the heathen when they have received all the help the College can afford. They rendered valuable assistance at the United Gospel Mission, conducted by me at the East London Tabernacle last month, when between 400 and 500 inquirers were dealt with, exclusive of young people, for whom special services were held.

Just at the beginning of the session the sad news was received of the death, through typhoid fever, of our beloved brother, William Newell, at the distant missionary outpost of Cuzco, in the Andes. His removal will prove a heavy blow to the little group of workers who have bravely held the fort in that strategic centre. Our brother leaves behind him a wife and two little children. Deepest sympathy is felt for these, and as soon as arrangements can be made they will return to their friends in Reading, where the parents of our brother and his wife are living. Brave, charming, and devoted was dear Newell, one of the most spiritual men who ever left the College.

A later cablegram informs us of the sickness of Mr. Derry, and the urgent need of Mr. Jarrett's return to Peru. These complicated needs and sorrows have cast us very definitely upon the Lord, who can both comfort the fatherless and widow, and supply us with the means to meet their dire emergency, and to hasten Mr. Jarrett's return.

In Argentina the work is full of encouragement, and Pastor Robert Elder, who holds the fort in Las Flores during Mr. Graham's absence, is able to report substantial progress, and several inspiring cases of steady adherence to Christ in face of persecution. Our friends, Mr. and Mrs. George Graham, who have already laboured in Argentina for fourteen years, are hoping to return to Las Flores as soon as the money comes in to secure their passages. Mr. Graham has succeeded in raising over £200 towards the little chapel that he so badly needs; but a further sum of £500 is still required before the simple accommodation can be supplied that is so urgently demanded.

The Congo Balolo Mission continues to prosper, and our workers there have enjoyed a year of exceptionally good health. Mr. Black, who has just returned after assisting in rebuilding the Livingstone on the Congo, brings us good news of the boat's first trip. She consumed less fuel, and yet proved to be twice as speedy as the Pioneer.

We recently heard by cable from Honan that my beloved brother, Dr. Whitfield Guinness, had been seized with diphtheria whilst opening up new work in K'ai Feng Fu. Prayer was instantly made for him by many friends, both in this country and in America, and we rejoice to have received news of satisfactory and substantial improvement.

With profound joy we record the goodness of the Lord to us in the past financial year (which closed September 30), in which, through His abounding mercy, we have been enabled to meet all our heavy liabilities, and close with a small margin on the right side. Now that the pressure of the new session is upon us, with its constant stream of necessary expenditure, we might often be tempted to cowardice unless we realized that the God of Elijah is "just the same to-day," and that He unto whom "all power in heaven and earth" has been committed has bidden us to go forward!

Dublin Medical Mission.

THE winter's work is now in full swing. Day by day the people come to us from far and near, many of them ragged and dirty, but it matters not to our doctors, matron, and nurse, who gently tend them, washing and dressing their sores where needs be, and telling them by word and action of the love of Christ for them, thus many, who only know Him as their dreaded Judge, find out that He is "Love."

There have been more young people coming lately, including several Jews and Jewesses. One young Jewess who had never read Isa. liii., and who could scarcely be persuaded it was in her Bible, has taken a Bible from us, and she is reading it. Will you pray for her? Also for a woman who finds that her religion has not brought her peace, but who cannot see that Christ has "made peace" for her. A man who came so have a sore thumb dressed, was much touched by the sister's kindness in the surgery, and deeply interested in the services said as he left one evening, "Sister, I will settle that matter to-night," and we believe he has done so.

Another, whose circumstances are most trying, tells us, "If I had not trusted the Lord as my Saviour, I would be in the asylum." We thank God for such a mission in the heart of our dark and sinful city, where many tales of woe and sadness meet the workers day after day. But we feel deeply that we can do so little to help, for we have no money, either to help any foodless patients, or to pay current expenses.

One of our doctors (Dr. Barton) is leaving immediately for India, under the C.M.S. We shall miss him much. As yet his place has not been filled by any other doctor. We need your fellowship in prayer.

(Mrs.) E. Edith Figgis.

Kingsdown Orphanage.

THE founder of this Orphanage, Mrs. Ginever, was a woman of strong faith and an absolute believer in prayer. In 1874 she began to gather in orphan and cripple children, the only recommendation being that the children needed someone to care for and love them. Often in her history she did not know whence the next meal would come, but she never doubted, and it always came.

Mrs. Ginever died in 1894; Rev. J. R. Wood of Holloway (President of the Baptist Union) and Mr. T. C. Usher, who both knew Mrs. Ginever and the work, took up the responsibility, and calling others to help them, formed a committee, who now carry on the Orphanage.

As in Mrs. Ginever's time, so now there are three Homes always full; they at present provide for sixty-five girls at Pemberton Gardens, Holloway, thirty-six boys at Tremlett Grove, Holloway, and forty cripple and destitute children at Cuthbert House, Broadstairs. The simple, loving, homelike spirit brought in by Mrs. Ginever is, as far as possible, maintained.

Two of the present matrons, Miss Tiffin and Miss Spillett, having been closely associated with Mrs. Ginever, delight in carrying on the work of one they so much esteemed and loved. No election is necessary for a child to obtain admission, but the cases are brought before the committee each week, the most needy being accepted and received as soon as there is room.

The orphanages are maintained by annual subscriptions, donations, collections, and gifts in kind. This year there is rather a serious falling off in the receipts owing, to some extent, to generous friends of Mrs. Ginever having passed away. The Secretary, Miss Wenbron, will be pleased to send the annual report if application is made.

Newsboys' Brigade.—Last Thursday a new institute was opened at 4, Shoe Lane, E.C., to give newsboys a home in the afternoon and evening, to help them to lead straight, true lives for God and man, and to promote their welfare in every way. The room will be open from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. for the use of members of the Newsboys' Brigade. Cheap dinners and teas can be obtained at the coffee bar. Games, magazines, &c., will be supplied, and happy evenings will be arranged. There will also be lantern exhibitions.

Scottish Notes.

THE report of the Dundee Children's Free Breakfast Mission shows that the weekly average of attendances during the past year was 375, an increase of twenty-three on the previous twelve months.

The Church of Scotland Christian Life and Work Committee have arranged that during the coming session the lectures and classes provided for the residents in the Deaconess House, Edinburgh, will be open to all Christian workers—men and women. The opening lecture will be delivered on Tuesday, November 4, at 8 p.m., by Rev. Professor Flint, D.D.

In reporting a year of solid advance in every department, with an unbroken flow of conversion work week by week, almost day by day, Pastor David J. Findlay mentions that two additions have been made to the band of missionaries who have gone forth from St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow—Nurse Martha MacGill to Nasrapur, in connection with the Poona and Indian Village Mission; and Sister Jeanie Trainer to Marrakesh, under the auspices of the South Morocco Mission. The contributions to foreign missions amounted to £443 1s. 3d. and the home evangelistic expenses to £177 10s. 8d.

In the winter 1893-4 a series of illustrated missionary lectures for Edinburgh schoolboys was organized by some of the students at the University. The experiment made then proved very successful, and this winter a similar series has been arranged by the Edinburgh branch of the S.V.M.U. The first meeting was held on Friday, October 24, when there was an audience of about 1,000, mostly schoolboys. The Master of Polwarth was in the chair, with Rev. James Webster as lecturer, his subject being, "Jack Chinaman, a Celestial Young Barbarian." After the lecturer had given a most interesting account of the life of boys in China, a number af Chinese views were thrown on the screen, and the subject was further illustrated by men dressed in Chinese costume. An endeavour is being made in these lectures to touch on as many parts of the world as possible, and at the next meeting, to be held on November 14, Bishop Taylor Smith is to tell of his experiences in West Africa.

Welsh Notes.

ONE of the best known Welsh missionaries in the foreign field, Rev. Bowen Rees, has just left this country, where he has been on furlough, returning to his sphere of labour in Matabeleland.

The annual meetings of the Carmarthenshire and West Glamorgan Congregationalists were held at Ystalyfera on Thursday, October 16. The address of the chairman was an advocacy of united opposition to the Education Bill. Rev. H. S. Griffiths, the newly-appointed missioner for South Wales, delivered an address on "Ritualism in the English Church, and the Present Duty of Free Churchmen."

An earnest appeal is being made for assistance to build a new British day-school in Bethesda, Carnarvonshire. The present building having been condemned, if the work is to be continued another will have to be erected. The appeal is endorsed in the warmest terms by the President of the National Free Church Council, Dr. W. J. Townshend, and the secretary, Rev. Thomas Law. Owing to the quarrymen's strike, of nearly two years' duration, local aid towards the undertaking is entirely inadequate.

Speaking at the annual Diocesan Conference of Llandaff, held at Cardiff, the Bishop, in his presidential address, referred to the question of clerical poverty. In his own diocese there were thirty-eight livings with an income of less than £100 a year. With regard to the scheme initiated at the beginning of last year to raise a million shillings, his lordship said the result had been disheartening. Little more than one-tenth of the amount desired had been collected, and more than one-third of this had been contributed by six donors.

A well-attended and influential meeting of ladies was held at Aberdare on October 23. The object was to awaken interest in and to secure assistance for the work of the Cardiff Rescue Home. In the course of an address from the matron it was stated that no fewer than 267 cases had been dealt with in the home during last year.

The autumnal meetings of the Monmouthshire Congregational Union were held at Brynmawr on October 23. The Union represents fifty-five churches and 15,000 adherents. Rev. Elwyn Thomas, in his presidential address, said that Nonconformists had largely to thank themselves for the introduction of the Education Bill. The new Nonconformist did not believe in sacrifice as did the old, and lack of such belief had made him, in too many instances, a man of lath and plaster. In the evening Rev. E. Griffith Jones, B.A., of London, preached the Union sermon.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

THE campaign of Rev. Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones in Greenock and district, which opened with so much promise, has resulted in a widespread awakening of interest in Gospel temperance. On Friday, October 24, the Town Hall was well filled. Rev. W. J. Ainslie presided, being supported by a number of ministers and well-known advocates of temperance reform. Mr. Ainslie spoke of the responsibilities of the Christian Church as a whole in regard to the drink trade, and announced that since the previous Sabbath no fewer than 700 persons had signed the pledge. Dr. Henry spoke powerfully on the evils of the traffic.

At a ladies' meeting in connection with the campaign, held in the Gamble Institute, there were about one hundred present. Mr. Alex. Rowan presided. Dr. Henry delivered an impassioned address, which reached many hearts, and Mr. Armon Jones sang two solos during the proceedings. An opportunity was given for pledge-taking at the close. On Wednesday week, a drawing-room meeting was held in Ashton U.F. manse. Invitations were issued by the B.W.T.A. Rev. R. C. Richardson, Greenock, took the place of Dr. Henry, who was suffering from cold, and delivered the address.

On Sabbath last, Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones had a splendid day at Port Glasgow. At the children's and youths' meetings there were 700 present, and the address was received with earnest attention. In the afternoon a large congregation was addressed in the parish church, and at night, long before the hour for service, the Town Hall was densely crowded. Hundreds were unable to gain admission. Provost McMasters, who presided, spoke in glowing terms of the campaign, and dwelt on the ravages caused by the drink in Port Glasgow. During the day Mr. Armon Jones sang with great acceptance, "The Best Friend to have is Jesus," "Saved by Grace," and other favourite solos. Many pledges were secured. A correspondent writes: "It was the greatest day temperance people have seen in Port Glasgow for years. Churches and societies are earnestly united in the campaign. It promises to be an epoch-making week. The total pledges taken in Greenock, including last Friday night, are over 1,400."

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Till Oct. 31, Greenock; Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Waterford; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 27-Dec. 4, Dublin; 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton.

The Rights of Laymen.

SPEAKING at a gathering of Protestants convened by the Church Association on Thursday last, the Earl of Portsmouth delivered a vigorous address on the need for strengthening the practical forces of Protestantism by creating in every constituency a Protestant Thousand. His lordship also urged the need for the laity to be allowed to exercise more freely their functions. For the last thirty years or more the bishops had been permitted undisturbed control of the ecclesiastical polity of the Church, and under their connivance and sanction had grown up all the illegal doctrines and practices which had produced the present crisis. How could the bishops be expected to put down that which in many cases they had themselves encouraged? If the law was to be maintained, and if the principles of the Reformation were to be saved, the remedy must lie in the hands of the Protestant laity. Lord Portsmouth maintained that access to the Ecclesiastical Courts should be as free as to the other courts of the realm.

Rev. Isaac F. Row, of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, after spending some months in America, returned to this country on Monday last, and will shortly sail for India. His present address is, care of C.I.M. Home, Newington Green, N.

Colombo Y.M.C.A.

MUCH zeal has been brought by Mr. Louis Hieb to the important task which he has undertaken of securing a new building for the Colombo Y.M.C.A., of which he is general secretary.

Mr. Hieb, who is at present in London, points out that Colombo is the resort of young men from all the provinces, going to complete their education, or to take service under Government, in mercantile and other offices, or in other capacities, and many of them arrive there friendless. For such the institution will be invaluable with its open classes and recreation rooms, cheap restaurant, bedrooms for boarders, and other advantages. Then again, for strangers and new arrivals in the island from Europe, America, &c., the Y.M.C.A. rooms, always open, will be invaluable, giving them the certainty of a friendly welcome, all possible information as to churches, boarding-houses and Christian friends in the city, and also as to such friends in outlying districts should they be intended for work in the provinces. Visitors to the island, ministers of the Gospel, philanthropists, &c., will always be welcome, and as Colombo is the "Clapham or Chicago Junction" among Eastern ports, it has a special claim on all would-be travellers, and all interested in bringing good influences to bear on young men away from home. Above all, the work is essentially of an evangelistic character, and its helpful influence over young men going out from England can scarcely be over-estimated.

The Government authorities have given a site, in spite of strenuous opposition from both Roman Catholics and Buddhists, but on conditions that will not admit of a mortgage. In order to secure the erection of a suitable building, the cost of which is estimated at £5,000, friends in Ceylon and in America have between them guaranteed two-thirds of the amount required, on condition that the remaining third be raised in great Britain. Mr. Hieb hopes that friends in the home-land will encourage him in the undertaking and thus enable him to secure the conditional promises of Ceylon and America, and proceed with the erection.

Herefordshire Hop-Pickers.

FOR the twentieth time Mr. John Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, and myself have tramped through portions of Herefordshire and Worcestershire after the hop-pickers. Owing to the short season we divided, and so with the help of other friends worked in both counties at once. By this means we reached 150 different lots of hop-pickers, preaching, singing, talking to them at their work, and giving them at every crib and half-crib a goodly portion of Gospel reading. They expect and welcome us everywhere, many extending to us the right hand of friendship. We go "as hop-pickers among hop-pickers," and when struggling through the mire of some wet hop-yard might hardly be recognized as our usual selves. "I shall send these to my daughter," said a man as he folded up his books, "and she will know where I got them." "I have a drawer full of your books at home," a woman told us, "and we often have them out and read them." Many tell us how the magazines are kept from year to year. Friends in Worcester came out to us some days, and greatly helped in other ways. Would that more could be done from the centres of Christian life in the neighbourhood; but God be praised for the little which has been accomplished. William Luff.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.—When preaching one of the annual sermons at Kingstown, Rev. W. S. C. Secombe said he had been struck with how the men got into contact with all sorts and conditions of men. The Scripture readers are indispensable in the populous Protestant districts of the north of Ireland, and many a lapsed Protestant has been recovered by their means. During the past year 544 ships were visited at Kingstown, and 3,910 individual souls on board were spoken to. He mentioned that there are 30,000 ships upon which Divine Worship is not conducted. Rev. J. L. Darling, M.A., made a strong appeal for the society. There is at present an overdraft of some £800 at the bank, and it is fervently hoped that the friends of this blessed work will not allow it to be crippled for want of means.

Obituary.

MR. FRANCIS JOHNSTON.

ON October 10 there passed away Mr. Francis Johnston, of Egremont, a prominent member of the Presbyterian body. At sixteen he was superintendent of a Sunday-school. Soon after twenty he was an elder. On making his home in Egremont he joined the young congregation there, and was quickly in the forefront of service. The district of Seacombe, sunk as it then was in all manner of sin and ignorance, called him to the help of the Lord. "Seacombe for Christ," was his rallying cry. A vigorous mission arose, which has since grown into an independent congregation. He had troops of helpers, men like Mr. Samuel Smith and Mr. W. S. Caine, and a continuous succession of young fellows fired by his enthusiasm. In later years, while still busy with Seacombe, he followed the poor to Oakdale, where he planted another mission phenomenal in its achievements in all departments—benevolent, educational, and religious. Mr. Johnston's abiding monument is in Oakdale. His last act of public worship was with the mission folk there on the last Lord's Day of his life. The hall was crowded with 400 people, whom he addressed with all his old power of earnest appeal before sitting down with them at the Lord's Supper.

MR. DAVID J. COOPER, FEZ.

News reached the North Africa Mission headquarters last week that Mr. Cooper had been shot dead in Fez on Friday, October 17, and that his murderer had been publicly executed by the Sultan's orders. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper and their two little children had been staying in Tangier during the summer, and started again for Fez on October 2. After a very wet and trying journey, they reached their station on Monday the 13th.

On Friday, 17th, Mr. Cooper went out with two converted Moslem colporteurs to purchase some matting. While he was doing so, a fanatical Moslem came out of the adjoining mosque, and without a word of provocation shot him in the abdomen. He was carried home and attended by the Court physician, Dr. Verdon, but nothing could be done beyond assuage pain, the bowel being perforated, as was the case with President McKinley. He passed peacefully away at about 1.30, having been shot at about eleven o'clock.

In the meanwhile, the Sultan had been informed of what had happened, and ordered the murderer to be brought personally before him, even though he had taken shelter in the most holy sanctuary of Nez, Mooley Edreis, the inviolable refuge of all criminals. The murderer confessed the crime, admitted that he had vowed to kill the first Christian (European) he saw, and said he would like to kill them all. The Sultan ordered him to be placed upon a mule, to be taken round the city as an object of execration, and to be shot publicly. Such prompt and voluntary justice towards one who has committed the pious act of killing a Christian is unprecedented in the history of Mohammedanism.

Mrs. Cooper is being escorted to Tangier by the authorities. Her trying circumstances call for the prayerful sympathy of God's people. Fellow-workers in Fez, and the band of native colporteurs, will feel the blow very much, and great wisdom will be required in the filling of Mr. Cooper's place, and for the future arrangement of the work.

When the last mail left the coast, rumours were current that the foreigners, among whom were four American missionaries, had been ordered by the Sultan to leave Fez, probably owing to the fact that his Majesty was on the point of leaving for Rabat, and that he deemed it would not be safe for them to remain.

Lay Preachers in Islington.—The Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association (Islington District) appeals for additional members, who must be efficient speakers and capable of taking sole charge of services. Over 1,000 engagements have been met during the past six years. The hon. secretary and treasurer is Mr. G. A. Angus, 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, N.

Lessons from a Lighthouse.

MY young readers will be interested in an account of a visit to the famous South Stack Lighthouse at Holyhead, on the wild, west coast of Anglesey, North Wales, where I spent a pleasant afternoon during the present month.

Leaving the seaport town of Holyhead on the north, we drove three miles south-west, gradually ascending a hill until we stood on a lofty, bare headland; here we saw, far below us, the island of South Stack, barren and rugged, with its white lighthouse tower, and a few white buildings. Beyond was the glorious sea. We descended a narrow track of steps cut into the face of the cliffs, and winding round to the water's edge below. Continuing down some 407 steps, and over a narrow bridge, we reached the South Stack island, where we were courteously received by one of the lighthouse officials.

Our first place of examination was the fog-horn engine house. Over this rise two massive horns, which are driven by little engines using oil gas. In foggy weather these sirens send forth their dull, bass sound, which is carried about four miles.

We next ascended to the lighthouse chamber, and stood within the noble lantern. One listened with unbroken interest to the story of the lights, prisms, apparatus, machinery, and methods of watching this wonderful lamp, which is worked upon the system of rising and falling light.

The lantern has small wheels, which revolve on a circular rail. We were shown the elaborate mechanism for the purpose of winding up the machinery every hour, and also supplying oil to the lantern chamber, and conveying it to the six burners. These burners have about 670 candle-power, which by the lenses in front is magnified to 40,000, the light travelling twenty-one miles over the sea, and even further in very clear weather. Everything about the lantern is polished to dazzling brightness, and spotlessly clean.

Outside on the balcony we had a grand view of the ocean lying before us in all the pride and majesty of its strength. Though calm as we gazed upon it, we were informed of the terrific seas which rage here in winter. The lighthouse-keepers, four in number, with their families, are permanent residents on South Stack, and are a most cheerful, and certainly intelligent and devoted body of men. Their duties in working hours are no less incessant than those of a sailor on board ship; attending to the lamps, keeping a lookout, signalling vessels, making out records, and effecting repairs in the machinery. They showed us the oil house containing 2,000 gallons of oil within twenty tanks. Only in the day time is oil carried from here, and under no circumstances is a light permitted inside this building, owing to risk of fire.

So many have been the wrecks, even in spite of the lighthouse, that a diver recently stated that he had noticed in his divings hundreds of bleached bones of sailors in the bed of the sea.

Many lessons for our Christian life were suggested by our visit on that memorable afternoon.

1. We are to keep watch.—One or other of the lighthouse keepers is always on duty at all hours, and in all weathers and seasons. "Eternal vigilance," said a great statesman, "is the price of safety;" and the Master Himself declared, "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch."

2. We are to keep our light elevated.—A lantern in the hand is not so useful as an elevated light. "Every Christian," said the beloved Dr. W. M. Taylor, "should connect himself with the Church for the sake of the outlying world." As the right place for a lighted candle is on a candlestick, so the proper place for a Christian child is in the society which Christ has founded. If we sought to shine thus together how the city would be illumined; not only the spacious squares, but the streets, and even the lanes. A city set on a hill cannot be hid.

3. We must keep each part bright.—Everything in the lighthouse is burnished and almost dazzling in brightness. The lenses or prisms sparkle and shine in a manner that fascinates the eye of the spectator. What attention and toil are necessary ere the reflectors have the brightest purity, and every funnel and piece of brass its polished lustre, to magnify 670 candle power to that of 40,000! If Christ is the centre of the light, machinery the means, the reflectors must kept bright to transmit the beams.

4. Once more, we must not allow anything to mar the brilliancy of the light. It is recorded of a lighthouse erected on a tropical shore that it failed for the most unlooked for reason. Its brilliant light drew about it such clouds of insects which swarm at night in equatorial lands that they covered and darkened the glass. Each of these insects, though insignificant in itself, effectually veiled the light when they came in large numbers. So may little sins, unimportant in themselves, have sad results when they increase in number until they stop the light.

5. We are not to shine for our own glory.—Christ, not ourselves, is to be glorified. Looking at a painted window we think more of the artist and his picture than the light; and wherever boys and girls put their own devices on the window, through which the light of character shines, the beholder will not be moved to glorify God. Do not paint yourself on the glass of the lamp by telling of your virtues and good deeds. Let Christ only be seen. The great Florentine painter, Michael Angelo, placed his candle in his pasteboard cap in such a manner that his own shadow did not fall upon his work.

6. We must stand on the Rock, which is Christ. Seas may storm around South Stack Lighthouse, but it remains firm. Since 1809 it has weathered ten thousand gales—because it is built into and upon the rock. Are we building upon the Rock of Ages? Not what we know, or say, or profess, but what we are, will determine our place in time and eternity. The house fell not when storms rose and winds blew, because it was built upon the rock. If we build upon Him, we shall have no difficulty in letting our light shine before men, that men may glorify our Father, who is in heaven.

Shining for Jesus, every where I go;
Shining for Jesus in the world of woe;
Shining for Jesus, more like Him I grow.

Shining for Jesus when the way is bright:
Shining for Jesus in the darkest night;
Shining for Jesus, making burdens light.

Shining for Jesus in a world of sin;
Shining for Jesus, bringing lost ones in;
Shining for Jesus, glorifying Him.

Shining for Jesus while He gives me grace;
Shining for Jesus while I run the race;
Shining for Jesus till I see His face.

Year In, Year Out, on One's Back.

THE following is from a crippled youth who suffers continually. It shows the comfort which comes from the assurance of faith, even in bodily affliction. Let us pray for him:—

"Only God knows how hard it is, year in, year out, to be on one's back, and never able to move. It would drive me mad if I thought about it. My diseased thighs get worse, as decay spreads over the entire limbs. There is not much peace for me here, and the only happiness I can have is to lie on my carriage in the summer time, and take an interest in the welfare of others, and seek to comfort such as are like myself. God blesses my efforts, I am sure, and I am often gratified to hear how I have been able to be of some use to them. I must specially thank you for sending me The Christian. It is a source of great help and encouragement to me, and I shall make it do duty in many ways by sending it to others. It will benefit a great many, and what a joy if some souls are saved!"

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, November 2.

Better than the Best (1 Cor. xii. 31; xiii.).

SUCH had been the confusion and heart-burning introduced into the Church, by the gifts of which so much is said in chapter xii., that the Apostle turns with a sigh of relief to a life which may be devoid of all such manifestations, and is simply baptized with love. If any young brother or sister who reads these words will seek a baptism of love at the hands of the Holy Spirit; if love shall overflow the entire being and go forth to others in word, act, and behaviour; if the one thought should be to embody the love of God, as it shone once in the face of Jesus Christ, and may be reflected from any of his followers—such a life would do more to convert and bless others than the most brilliant efforts of genius that have ever been placed at the service of the Church.

What a gleam of beauty must have passed over the worn face of the Apostle, as he dictated that exquisite poem to his amanuensis! How this man, whether Carpus or another, must have looked up with wonder into the face of his master as these majestic sentences rolled from his lips! It was as though he were standing at the pearly gate, and were transcribing some strain of angel-minstrelsy. It always seems to me as if Christ Himself sat for this portraiture of Love—of none else, among the sons of men, is it perfectly accurate. Note, too, that the Apostle speaks of love to God, rather than of love to man. This clears away much prevalent misapprehension as to its relation to salvation.

The divisions of the poem are pretty clearly defined. Love is considered as positive, comparative, and superlative. Positive, 4-7. Its salient characteristics are enumerated, though it seems easier to speak of it in negatives, and tell what it does not do. The Apostle goes through a long list of acts, words, and dispositions, that are common enough among the children of the world, and says, Love could not say this, Love could not do that. Out of fifteen clauses, five tell what Love would do, and ten what it would not, and the latter precede the former. Perhaps we are to learn that the first symptom that we are becoming filled with love is that we refrain from saying and doing many things which we used to do without remorse. We feel as though we are constantly being arrested, as the young artist is increasingly led to turn from pictures which once satisfied him, and from music which filled him with rapture, because ear and eye are being educated to higher proficiency. And as we are true to the checks of the Holy Spirit we become more pronounced in our exhibition of the practical side of Love.

For the comparative degree we turn to verses 1-3. The Apostle passes in review the gifts of eloquence, of learning, of miracle, of philanthropy, of witness to truth even to martyrdom. He puts them one by one in the scale, and declares that if they are not associated with Love they are worse than useless. Men may be very eloquent, very learned, full of an extraordinary power over others, and willing to die for their creed; but, somehow, their lives amount to nothing, and fail to tell on their times, because of their deficiency in the love of God; while a simple peasant, with the love of God in his heart, may leave an impression on his Church and country which will defy the effect of time.

Love in its superlative degree (9-13). Knowledge seemed the greatest thing to these Greeks, but the Apostle argued that Love was greater than this, the greatest human acquisition. One moment in eternity will make the greatest human knowledge of no avail. It will be as useless as a candle in the light of day. With great labour you may carry your candle round the strange house to which you came after dusk, and endeavour to form a mental idea of its shape and proportions, but one moment of daylight will tell you more than hours of such investigation.

But in eternity, the love which we have acquired by opening our hearts to the love of the Spirit (Rom. xv. 30; Gal. v. 22), and by always refraining from anything unloving, will be a permanent asset. It will never fail, but will abide. Knowledge is an acquisition which will pass away in more perfect conditions. Love is an eternal quality and attribute of God and His children.

C.E. NOTES.

The new president of the Irish National Union is Mr. William Laird Cowdy, B.A., of Portsdown, the editor of The Irish Endeavourer.

The Congregational C.E. Society at Huyton held its first anniversary last week. The Society during the year has more than doubled its members.

The Jamaica C.E. Union publishes a monthly paper, the Christian Endeavour Gem, and in the October number the secretary requests all British Endeavourers to remember in prayer a visit which Rev. F. B. Meyer will pay to the island, Nov. 21-Dec. 25.

Joshua's Parting Advice (Josh. xxiv. 14-25).

Golden Text (Josh. xxiv. 15).

THE Levites had no inheritance in the land (Num. xviii. 20). The Lord commanded the various tribes to give them from among their possessions forty-eight cities, with their suburbs, for them to dwell in (Num. xxxv. 2-7). By this arrangement the appointment of the land was concluded, and the two and a half tribes who had crossed the Jordan to help conquer the land (i. 12-15) were honourably dismissed to the homes of their choice, where wives and children were awaiting their return (Num. xxxii. 26). As soon as they had crossed the Jordan, at the place where "the feet of the priests had dipped in the brim of the waters," they set up a huge stone altar, as witness to the coming generations, that, although these tribes were separated from the brethren by the river Jordan, they were at one with them in the worship of Jehovah at Shiloh. The action was true and loyal in motive, and in the sight of the Lord (xxii. 23), but was misinterpreted by the other tribes to mean rebellion and idolatry. Therefore, according to command, the whole congregation met at Shiloh, and deputed Phinehas and ten princes to inquire diligently into the matter. Prompt and candid explanation, with a gracious and honourable acceptance of the same, changed righteous indignation into thanksgiving; united praise went up to God, and war was averted.

III. The people's choice, and what it cost.
IV. Our choice, and what it will mean.

The first address was given to the tribes going eastward. The very words were: Love, Obedience, Holy-walk, Devotion, Whole-hearted Service. To this Joshua added his blessing, and the people gave tangible proof of brotherly love (xxii. 8).

The second address.—Years after, when Joshua was waiting the close of his long eventful life in his own home on the slopes of Mount Ephraim, he called the elders, princes, judges, and officers around him, and gave to each suitable words of counsel and warning. (a) The Lord had fought for them; (b) He was still fighting; (c) He had promised to expel their enemies, (d) His word had never failed (vv. 3, 5, 10, 15); (e) No lowering of their standard or stooping to join in the evil practices of the ungodly around them; (f) To cleave to the Lord, and make no crooked paths for their feet (Isa. lix. 8; Heb. xii. 13); (g) To teach and enforce the law of God, (h) train the young, (i) control the marriages, and (j) above all, to keep themselves in the love of God (Jude 21).

The third address at Shechem, where God had made the first covenant with Abram, and renewed it with Jacob. Where Joseph's bones had been buried; and where Jacob had hidden the idols found among his household stuff (Gen. xxxv. 4) under one of the oaks. Where Joshua had read the law, and the congregation had answered a loud "amen" to the curses and blessing from Ebal and Gerizim. Here Joshua, in the presence of the elders (Josh. viii. 30-35), and before God (v. 1), spoke his last message to his people. Their knowledge and experience of Jehovah the basis of his plea. He knew his hearers (1) descended from idolators, (2) reared among idolatry, (3) living among idolators still.

Do one thing or the other. Be sincere. Serve God, or keep their idols. He gave them choice of three religions: The ancient faith (v. 2); the popular present-time faith (Amorites); faith in the God of Horeb and Sinai. No compromise. God or Mammon. God or Baal (1 Kings xviii. 21; Matt. vi. 24). Jesus or the World. The testimony of the patriarch stamped his words with "sincerity" (v. 14).

To Joshua's noble testimony the people responded, "He is our God," but Joshua was not satisfied (there were idols hidden among their tents). He must preach the terrors of the Lord as well as His goodness, vv. 19, 20. Hell as well as heaven. They must not worship Jehovah one day and an idol another day—the Lord on Sunday and the god of this world on week-days. He called for decision. No one drifts into the fold of Jesus. He calls each boy and girl to come, but never drives.

Lessons.

1. "There failed not aught of any good thing." "No good thing will He withhold (Psa. lxxxiv. 11; xxxiv. 10). "All your need" (Phil. iv. 19).

2. God's love and unmerited goodness to them in the past was Joshua's plea (v. 14). What has God done for us? (John iii. 16); "Bought with a price" (1 Cor. vi. 12, 1 Pet. i. 12); "Gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20); "By the mercies of God" (Rom. xii. 1).

3. It must be choice by individuals, there is no driving or drifting into the kingdom of Christ (v. 15), with the alternative Prov. i. 29-33 and 2 Thess. i. 8, 9, "from the presence of the Lord."

4. If we do not serve the Lord with our whole heart is there any fear of idol worship in these days? What is an idol? Anything that comes between the soul and Jesus—pleasure, money, dress, friends, the praise of others. What is my idol? Whatever rules my desires or comes in to stop my prayers.

5. We worship God with our Spirit (John iv. 23), not our bodies, therefore we do not need pictures (Num. xxxiii. 52), or crosses, or symbols, or images, because they occupy our eyes for body worship.

6. Joshua's testimony stirred up the people to follow his example (v. 18, Ruth i. 16).

7. Consecration vows can be renewed with profit (v. 24). Each time the Spirit of God will search the hearts of His children (v. 23).

PUTTING AWAY EVIL.

In large chemical works it has been noticed that the employés are at times fascinated by the most deadly poisons, and it is not unusual where a dangerous chemical is stored to place within easy reach an antidote to that particular poison. Cases are known where a fatal lust has seized a man, and without any apparent reason. He may have eaten largely of such a chemical as cyanide, while close by, untouched and untasted, has been a jar of ammonia, the antidote to that poison. The evil and the good are placed before such a man, and he deliberately decides on the evil, and turns his back on the good. Joshua called on the Israelites to put away the poisonous evil, the gods of Egypt, and urged them to come to a right decision in serving the Lord in sincerity and in truth (verse 14). The gods of this world are around us to-day, while the antidote to sin, even Christ Jesus, asks us to devote ourselves to Him and serve Him in sincerity and in truth.

CHOOSING A KING.

It does not often fall to a nation to make a choice of its sovereign. Yet forty years ago the people of Greece sent a unanimous appeal to Prince Alfred, of our own Royal Family, asking him to accept that Eastern throne. Though for international reasons he was unable to comply with the request, Great Britain found for Greece a sovereign in the son of the King of Denmark, and Prince William became King George I. "Choose you this day, whom ye will serve," said Joshua to the people (v. 15), and we, as individuals, are compelled to make a personal choice of our spiritual sovereign. We, of our own free-will, have to choose between God on the one hand and Mammon on the other; between Christ and Barabbas. May we all say, as did the people of Israel, "The Lord our God will we serve, and His voice will we obey."

AS FOR ME AND MY HOUSE.

Henry Ward Beecher used to say that all the lessons of his youth, put together, had been eclipsed by the deep impression produced on him by the influence of his noble-minded father. In all times of difficulty Ward Beecher was accustomed to call to memory the ideal of his father, who had exemplified what a man should be and what a man should do. It stood him in better stead than all the verbal instruction of his youth, and when Joshua declared that as for him and his house they would serve the Lord (v. 15), he showed himself to be a leader in the home circle as well as in Israel. The Lord may be served by us in our households, and, though we deem the opportunity to be narrow, the effect may be far wider than we imagine. By the allegiance of Joshua and his house to God, the people were led to a similar avowal and devotion to His holy service.

A GOD TO BE OBEYED.

At one time or another a mother has usually to fight a decisive battle with her own child. "My dear," she says, "bring me that book; you must bring me that book." The child laughs, and approaching her parent, wishes to kiss and be friendly. She is willing to do anything in the world rather than actually obey. "That book," insists her mother, "must be brought!" and finally, after many excuses and much delay, it is handed over to the kind yet firm parent. It is a very small matter, but it settles the question of government, and the child's ultimate happiness depends upon the outcome of that discipline. "The Lord," said Joshua, "is a holy and a jealous God" (v. 19), and it was necessary that Israel should know He must be obeyed. God will not allow another to share the human heart with Him. He is jealous, and we must be prepared to surrender in loving obedience our affections, our intellects, and all the power of our being, for His undivided and unreserved keeping.

About Books.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Tiny Tots: A Magazine for Very Little Folk. (1s. 4d. Cassells.) Pictures and readings, well selected and sure to please, make up this handsome book.

The Christmas volume of Little Folks is quite a show of pictures, plain and coloured, and a budget of good reading matter. Instruction and entertainment are happily blended, and the young will find the pages a source of delight during the winter months. (3s. 6d. and 5s. Cassells.)

From the Sunday School Union come The Child's Own Magazine, sixty-ninth annual volume, which is bright inside and out, and will delight the little folk (1s.); and Young England, which has completed its twenty-third year, and presents something to think about, much to laugh at, and still more reading matter of the entertaining type. (5s.)

The Quiver annual volume. (7s. 6d. Cassells.) This is a budget of reading—stories and sketches, accounts of Christian enterprise and philanthropic movements, glimpses of history and spiritual meditations. In addition to several coloured plates, there are close upon a thousand illustrations. Old and young alike will find portions in this volume, which is a rich storehouse of entertainment and instruction.

The sixteenth volume of Bubbles, the well-known coloured periodical, edited by Dr. Barnardo, is a book to delight the heart of youth. From the dainty outside cover, right to the end of its 350 pages, there is a wealth of colour and of story-lore. The full-page pictures, printed in half a dozen tints, reach the surprising total of 114, ranging over an immense variety of subjects. In its tone the magazine is at once strongly moral and brightly religious. (3s. 6d. and 5s. 158, Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.)

The Animals' Friend, edited by Sidney G. Trist, has completed its eighth year. It exists in the interests of animals; it states their case, and pleads their cause against human thoughtlessness and cruelty. Its editor is an enthusiast, and conducts this organ of "our dumb companions" with conspicuous ability. In volume form, the magazine is a record of efforts to educate public opinion regarding the rights of animals; and many beautiful stories are told of birds, beasts, and fishes. The illustrations are numerous and of a high order. (2s. 6d. Bell & Sons.)

The needs of the children are well catered for by John F. Shaw & Co. Our Darlings (3s. and 5s.) is bright and attractive without and within. The stories are not only adapted to the wishes of the youthful reader, but to their best interests. There are pieces suitable for reading to those who are too young to read for themselves, and many of the pictures are specially intended for the entertainment of these tots. Rhymes and poems are given which will not only catch the ear, but stick in the memory. Altogether the volume will fill up the ideal for many a home. The Little Frolic Annual (2s. to 3s. 6d.) provides for the very youngest readers. Stories are told in the simplest language, the type is all very large and black, while the pictures are such as the younger boys and girls will eagerly turn to again and again. Though smaller, Sunday Sunshine (1s. 6d., 2s. 6d.) will claim and earn for itself as cordial a welcome. It bears every mark of being in the hands of those who understand and sympathise with the little ones.

The volumes of Messrs. Partridge's magazines bid fair to be as great favourites as ever. The old traditions of The British Workman (1s. 6d., 2s. 6d.) are well maintained. Stories and general articles are popularly written and well illustrated. A feature which deserves special notice is the excellent portraits of living leaders in Christian and philanthropic work. More good qualities than temperance so-called are inculcated in The Band of Hope Review (1s., 1s. 6d.), and the children who read it cannot fail to be the better for it. The Children's Friend (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.) is more general, and will be warmly received wherever it goes. The stories are bright and attractive, and there is abundance of highly profitable and interesting reading for the rising generation. We can only say of The Infants' Magazine (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.) that it is a pleasure to see the very little ones so well provided for, and that by friends who understand their needs and desires. The historical element is strong in The Family Friend (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.), and the "Flowers of the Month" will deservedly attract attention, but there is much more that will be welcome during quiet hours. In The Family Visitor (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.) many readers will be attracted by Rev. J. Reid Howatt's "Bunyan's Folk of To-day," and Rhoda Murray's "Seeds from Bible Plants" will also be turned to more than once. We commend the whole series to those who seek varied reading for family reading.

The quiet work done by colporteurs, in selling Christian literature from door to door and distributing smaller publications where in many cases no other messenger of the evangel goes, is brought into much-deserved prominence in Seed-Time and Harvest (1s. net. Morgan & Scott). The volume is an autobiography of Mr. James Rennie, colporteur at Hitchin, edited by Mr. T. Bowick; and contains many a deeply-interesting story of the blessing of God on the printed statement of the Gospel.

A work of profound interest to students of missions is The Higher Hinduism in Relation to Christianity: Certain Aspects of Hindu Thought from a Christian Standpoint. By T. E. Slater, of the London Missionary Society. (6s. Elliot Stock.) The hoary faiths of India are described with remarkable precision; in fact, the book gives a history of Hinduism from the earliest time down to the present, when its revival or reformation is being discussed by native teachers. The work is of distinct value, and should be placed in the hands of all missionaries to India. It will amply repay the student of Oriental religion and philosophy.

Previous volumes of sermons by Rev. T. G. Selby have attracted attention in many quarters, and The God of the Frail (6s. Hodder & Stoughton) reaches at least as high a level of thoughtful exposition as any of its predecessors. The titles of the chapters are no less striking than those of the volumes; and, alike by exegesis and homily, the truth is presented with unusual power and freshness. Apt illustration abounds, and the preacher appears to have been endowed with a special gift for making personal application of the lessons drawn, from ever-varying points of view. The spirit of the book is that of true catholic sympathy with all who love the Lord, combined with faithful adherence to the cardinal truths of the Gospel.

Now that Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's voice is only heard in this country during brief visits, many to whom it is familiar will have a special interest in A First Century Message to Twentieth Century Christians (3s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.). The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia, on which the chapters are based, are shown to contain words of reproof and commendation having a perpetual application to church life. There is much evidence in its pages of keen insight into the needs of men in the midst of battle, as well as of the true sympathy of the man of God with his fellows. Mr. Morgan's view of the Book of Revelation is that after the three opening chapters we have unfulfilled prophecy.

Volume VII. of the City Temple Pulpit (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) contains sermons preached by Dr. Parker between February, 1899, and April, 1900. In a prefatory note the fact that they are printed from the reporter's notes is referred to as accounting for "irregularity and roughness and apparent want of punctuation in the style." But even had such drawbacks been very much more in evidence, there is here, as in all Dr. Parker's utterances, that which lifts the thoughtful reader into the presence of the eternal realities and silences all criticism of detail. We feel sure that many more than "those who heard the discourses will be able to read them according to the preacher's intention," and will thank God for a teacher with eyes for so wide a vision of heavenly things.

Irish Notes.

A VERY successful Christian Endeavour rally has been held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Ballymena, and addresses were delivered by Rev. J. R. Fleming, of Glasgow, Rev. Jas. Maconachie, of Belfast, and other speakers. The conference created an excellent impression, and is believed to have done much good.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society, which is one of the largest organisations of the kind in the world, has just added 212 children to its list.

Dr. Neil Gavin has been ordained at Fisherwick Church as a medical missionary to India. Appropriate addresses were delivered by Revs. R. Henderson and Robert Wilson, both of India, and others; and Revs. Wm. Park, Dr. Beatty, Henry Montgomery, and Chas. Davey took part in the ordination ceremony.

An interesting Sunday-school Conference has been held in the Third Presbyterian Church, Aboghill, co. Antrim, Rev. W. J. Jameson presiding. Excellent papers were read by Mr. McClelland and Mr. George R. Neely; and suitable addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Entrican and T. E. H. Jones. There was a good attendance, and several important lessons were taught.

A meeting to bid farewell to three outgoing lady missionaries has just been held in Belfast. Mr. William Crawford presided, and the missionaries are Miss Beatty, who had already been in the field, Miss Gillespie, and Dr. Muriel Stevenson, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Fleming Stevenson, of Rathgar, Dublin, who took the deepest interest in Zenana missions. Each lady addressed the audience, and gave her reasons for going out as a missionary.

The Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland, which has reached the forty-third year of its existence, continues to make gratifying progress. During the past twelve months its agents visited 32,837 families, and sold 901 Bibles, 866 Testaments, 396 portions, 6,910 Scripture texts, 231 Douay Testaments, and nearly 16,000 religious books. They also conducted meetings, and visited the homes of the people. The direct and indirect results of these efforts on the present and future generations cannot be overestimated.

Under the auspices of the Route Presbytery a conference of Christian workers has been held in the Second Presbyterian Church, Ballymoney, Rev. Dr. Fuld presiding. The object was to bring together those engaged in various kinds of Christian work in the district, that they might get to know each other better, and that their zeal and earnestness might be quickened by mutual intercourse. In the course of the proceedings interesting papers were read by Messrs. Baxter and Crawford, and impressive addresses were delivered by Revs. Wm. Park, Chas. Davey, and Mr. John McElderry, J.P.

In the matter of looking after orphan children a new departure is about to be taken by Irish Methodists. For many years it has had a home for female orphans in Dublin, and it has had an orphan society; but it never hitherto has had a home for orphan and destitute boys. In connection with the Twentieth Century Movement Mr. T. F. Shillington, J.P., of Belfast, felt the need for such an institution, and accordingly he presented to the Methodist Conference a farm of over a hundred acres, with all the buildings thereon, at Craigmore, on the shore of Lough Neagh, about twenty miles from Belfast, for purposes of an orphanage. The place is henceforth to be known as Craigmore Children's Home. It is anticipated that the place will be ready for the reception of children by the middle of December.

Sunday Trading in Amusements.

AN influentially-signed protest against the conduct of the London County Council in sanctioning the illegal Sunday opening of theatres and concert rooms for money-making and trading purposes has been obtained by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, and it was presented last week by Col. Rotton, late deputy chairman of the L.C.C.

Among laymen is the name of Sir George Fardell, M.P., who accompanied his protest with the following letter:—"I have signed the protest to the L.C.C., against their action, with great pleasure. But I wish to emphasize the protest, as I was for six years chairman of the L.C.C. Licensing Committee, and am confident that the large majority of proprietors, managers, bandsmen, artistes, and employees are dead against the present abuse which has received the sanction of the Council."

Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, of the Florence Crittenton Homes, New York, &c., is now in England, and will be glad if his services can be used as an evangelist. Letters may be addressed to care of Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Shoreditch.

AFTER fruitful missions in the west and north of London Gipsy Smith has turned his attention to the east, where he began a mission on Lord's Day last in the Shoreditch Tabernacle (Pastor W. Cuff). Mr. Cuff is on the sick list, but the mission opened with rich promise, the church being in strong sympathy with soul-winning work. The capacious building was crowded, and the evangelist's addresses were received in a spirit of keen attention and anticipation of blessing. There were many inquirers.

Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen.

During the past tent season we have had tents and evangelists located as follows:—East Aberdeenshire, Messrs. Gilmour and Ross; West Aberdeenshire, Messrs. John G. Smith and Pattison; Banffshire, Messrs. Esson and Robertson. In the city the meetings were conducted by Messrs. Hawkins, Logan, Dunn, and Lawson. The closing missions were the most fruitful we have had in recent years. Missions are now being arranged for winter months. Applications may be sent to Mr. J. A. Smith at the above address.

Dr. Harry Guinness at Exeter Hall.

The concluding meetings of Dr. Harry Guinness' mission to men at Exeter Hall proved both attractive and fruitful. Recovering from the indisposition which for a few days disabled him, the evangelist took the service on the Tuesday, and continued to address deeply interested audiences until the final evening, Friday last. An outstanding feature was the gathering of men not only from all parts of London, but from distant parts of the country. The varied testimonies which were given to blessing received during the services were full of gratitude to God.

Crouch End Opera House.

An effort to reach non-church-goers is being made at Crouch End, a northern suburb of London, near to that noted resort of Sabbath-breakers, the Alexandra Palace. The Opera House has been secured by the local Free Church Council for a month of Sunday evening services, the first of which was held on October 26, when Mr. Charles Cook addressed an appreciative audience. The evangelist's forcible appeals had their effect in directing sinners to the Saviour. A family, including father, mother, and two daughters, were among the seekers.

Rev. James Sprunt at Offord, Hunts.

Services of an enthusiastic character have been held during the past fifteen days at New Offord, Hunts, conducted by Rev. James Sprunt. On the three Sunday evenings large congregations gathered in the Baptist Church, the week-night meetings being held in the Board school. "Talks on Topics for the Times" were given on week-day afternoons, and were much appreciated by those who were able to be present. On the Friday evening of each week Mr. Sprunt delivered a lantern lecture on "Bunyan and his Book" to crowded audiences. The mission has been the means of blessing to both saved and unsaved, and we are confidently looking forward for more results from the Scriptural preaching and the clear, Gospel singing of the missioner.

Sidney Scott Sarson, Pastor.

"Filled with Joy and Praise."

We have just concluded an encouraging mission in the United Methodist Church, Dalston, N.E. From the beginning the congregations were good; they went on increasing until the church was crowded. Mr. R. McLean, the evangelist, was only recovering from a severe illness; but though weak in body, was strong in faith. The Lord proved Himself to be the great worker of wonders. Our eyes have seen and our hearts have experienced wonderful things. Many who three weeks since were unsaved are now praising God for salvation, and we are confident that many more have been led to Christ other than those who passed through the inquiry-room. The Word was preached faithfully, and while great blessing has been received on the unsaved, the Church has been revolutionized by the Spirit of God. The mission found us cold and disheartened, but such blessing came upon us that we are filled with joy and praise to God for His goodness.

J. Wilkinson.

The Weaver Brothers at Derby.

On Sabbath, October 5, the Weaver Brothers commenced a mission in Derby under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings were held in the Victoria Hall, which soon became crowded, and Olympia Music Hall was taken. During the mission 173 persons confessed Jesus Christ as their Saviour, a remarkable feature being that 90 per cent. of the inquirers were new. The meetings have been the most encouraging held in Derby for some years. The audiences were representative in character, members of all churches joining heartily in the choir and inquiry room work. During the closing nights in the Music Hall a great many were present who never attend church or chapel. The meetings were throughout characterized by a deep, quiet, spiritual power, and the hearts of the workers have been filled with joy at the blessing vouchsafed.

Broxburn, N.B.

Mr. A. Y. McGregor, evangelist, of Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, has conducted a three weeks' mission at Broxburn, N.B. A large number have professed faith in Christ for their salvation. The tent was well filled every night, and on Sabbath afternoons at the Bible reading it was crowded. Miss McLaren, from Edinburgh, was with us every week end, and her singing was much appreciated. At the closing meeting the tent was filled to overflowing, and Mr. Robertson and a number of the other Edinburgh workers gave addresses. On the Sabbath evenings, Mr. McGregor conducted the Christian Union Mission meeting in the Public Hall, which was crowded. Much blessing has been the result of the mission, for which the Lord's people praise and give thanks.

Wm. Milligan.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith's Missions.

An esteemed correspondent writes:—"A fruitful mission, conducted by Mr. H. Stafford Smith, of the Evangelization Society, has just ended at Evercreech, Somerset. The meetings were well attended and richly blessed, both to the unconverted and to Christians. To God be the glory!" Mr. Smith had previously held a mission at Bruton, where he met with a rude reception; a number of young men attacked him with stones as he was leaving the tent on the evening prior to the commencement of the mission. Mr. Smith was injured by one of the missiles thrown, but the Lord brought good out of evil. Upon the assurance of forgiveness on the part of the evangelist towards the aggressors, they all subsequently apologised, attended the services throughout the mission, and professed acceptance of Christ.

Mr. W. M. Oatts at Inverness.

The services conducted last week at Inverness by Mr. W. M. Oatts were of a most encouraging nature. The Y.M.C.A. hall was much too small for the audiences that came, and the committee took the large Music Hall for seven days, but that, too, proved insufficient for the crowds that gathered. Every afternoon about 1,500 boys and girls came together to listen to Bible stories illustrated by limelight pictures. Last Friday, nearly 1,000 children wrote a short account of the previous day's address, and received illuminated texts. The meetings for adults at night have been largely attended, and most interesting cases of decision have resulted. On Sabbath afternoon the Town Hall was crowded out to listen to an address on "Purity." There was a deep impression made on the large gathering of men. The mission is to be continued till Sabbath, November 2.

Battersea Park Tabernacle, S.W.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz, the converted Jewess, has just concluded a mission in the above place, upon which the blessing of God has rested in a marvellous manner. It is long since the district has been so moved by Gospel services.

The Bible readings in the afternoon were well attended, and day after day believers, as they left, testified to much blessing received. In these addresses Mrs. Baeyertz showed the possibilities and privileges of the Christian life.

The evening congregations have been large, and full of Holy Ghost power; sometimes the hush upon the meeting was intense, and as soon as the invitation was given there were responses. There was no fleshly excitement, and no undue pressure, but on the last night it was found that during the mission 300 had professed to yield to Christ.

Mrs. Baeyertz's methods in the inquiry-room are excellent. She really gives a Bible reading upon the way of salvation. Each seeker is provided with a Testament, and, step by step, the anxious ones are led into the light. The workers who went in were themselves so much helped that, night after night, other workers came begging permission to be present, and many earnest Christians have learnt the lesson, How to deal with anxious souls. Thus Mrs. Baeyertz really conducts three meetings daily. She has been wonderfully strengthened and sustained in her many labours. Among the inquirers have been those of all ages, from girls and boys to grey-headed men and women. On the last Sunday evening, while the inquiry meeting was being held in one hall, the boys and girls who had trusted Christ during the mission were, at the suggestion of Mrs. Baeyertz, gathered together in another room, and, led by the Sunday-school superintendent and junior C.E. leader, had a very helpful meeting. One little girl thanked God for saving her, her brother, and her mother, adding, in a broken voice, "Mother had been seeking for some years."

The closing meeting on the Monday night will not easily be forgotten. The large Tabernacle was nearly full. Believers were led into fuller surrender to God, and sinners were pointed to Christ. During the mission there were many glorious answers to prayer, and our hearts are full of praise.

Edward Last, Pastor.

The Boy Preacher in Belfast.

The three weeks' mission at Belfast, conducted by Mr. Jack Cooke and his colleague Mr. Russell Coutts, has been full of blessing.

The City Hall of the Y.M.C.A., capable of accommodating 2,500 people, has been packed each night an hour before service time, and great throngs have been turned away, as no suitable place could be procured for overflow meetings. Power has attended the preaching of the truth; and in the inquiry room many bright and beautiful confessions of Christ have been made. Hundreds of men and women have been led to decision, while many Christians have received quickening through the message delivered night by night.

The Sunday morning and Wednesday afternoon meetings for Christians, held in representative churches through the city, have attracted vast congregations. Meetings held for men only have also been a distinctive feature of the mission, and have proved signally encouraging.

Revival at Weeley, Essex.

In connection with the Wesleyan cause at Weeley, Essex, Mr. R. M. Seager has conducted a ten days' mission. Not until the fifth evening did he hold an after-meeting, but on that night the organist and one of the choir came boldly out for Christ. The second Sunday will be evergreen in the memory of many. In the afternoon an old-fashioned lovefeast was held, this being the first for twenty years. At the night meeting, the chapel being filled, during the sermon a young lady sprang to her feet, hurriedly left the building, sobbing as if her heart would break, and, on reaching her home exclaimed, "I never knew I had a heart until to-night." The missioner stopped preaching immediately, gave the invitation, and in a few minutes twenty men, women, and children were on their knees crying for mercy. On the Tuesday night the young lady mentioned gave herself to Jesus, followed by others. Many more are so troubled that they cannot rest. The mission has become the talk for miles around.

An eight-days' mission was concluded by Mr. C. Wickerson at the Railway Mission Hall, Bury St. Edmunds, on Oct. 19. The Gospel was preached nightly with great earnestness and power, and several were brought to Christ. Christians have been much encouraged and blessed.

The North Liverpool Y.M.C.A. has had a Sunday evening meeting for men and their friends for over fourteen years past. Mr. William Forbes gave his valuable help on Sunday night last to the secretary (Mr. R. H. Fisher). An attentive gathering of earnest folk greatly appreciated the quaint personality and zeal of the preacher.

A recent fortnight's mission at Blandford, Dorset, proved so encouraging that it was extended for a week. The mission hall proved quite inadequate to hold the people, so the Corn Exchange, holding 800 people, was taken, and was crowded at three meetings. The mission, which was carried on by Mr. C. A. Bompas, of High Barnet, was the means of directing a number of seekers to the Lord Jesus Christ.

A revival is going on at the Seamen's Bethel and Institute, Falmouth. Backsliders have been restored, and many others, we believe, converted to God. A steamer (which put in for repairs), outward bound, had three of her crew, including the chief officer, brought to the Lord. One young officer, who has often opposed the mission, has also been blessed, and is now an active Christian.

J. C. Badger.

Mr. J. G. Stanger, of the Evangelization Society has conducted a fifteen days' mission, at Carpenter Road Baptist Chapel, Stratford, E. The Chapel is situated in one of the poorest parts of this densely-populated neighbourhood of the East End of the metropolis, but night after night it has been our privilege to see a good attendance of men and women listening to the simple Gospel, preached faithfully and with power.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a mission at Paddock Wood by Rev. Dr. Morris, Nov. 1-17.

For a mission to be conducted by Mr. William Forbes in Livingstone Hall, Edinburgh, to commence on Sunday, November 2.

That a fourteen days' mission, to be held at the Railway Mission Hall, Harlesden, from Nov. 2, may be the means of many precious souls being born again.

For blessing in connection with a mission in Raphoe, co. Donegal, God willing, to begin on November 2, and to be conducted by Mr. Crawford, Irish Evangelization Society.

Prayer is asked for an esteemed correspondent, whose longing desire is that the Lord would reveal Himself to her. She writes: "I am getting old, and have long sought, but have not found."

Home Missionary Circle.—Owing to the pressure of evangelistic work, Mr. A. E. Sims regrets he can no longer carry on the duties as one of the honorary organizing secretaries, and has therefore sought and obtained additional interest and help which it is believed will lead to advancement and blessing. Rev. A. Lawton (London), having proved the value of H.M.C. principles in connection with his own church work, has kindly consented to become the president of the circle, while the new post of honorary corresponding secretary is being kindly undertaken by Miss E. Orom, "Kensworth," Leigh Road, Westcliff, Essex, to whom all future communications should be addressed. Form of membership, send two stamps. Pastor J. Clifford (Southend) will of course continue the work of organizing as the Lord grants openings.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. Harry Wilson has resigned the living of St. Augustine's, Stepney, and the Bishop of London has appointed Rev. Richard Wilson—who has been associated with his brother as curate of St. Augustine's for some eighteen years—to succeed him. The Record says:—"We can only hope the bishop will be able to assure us that before collating 'Father Richard' (as he is called in Stepney) he has exacted as a condition that at least the Lambeth opinions shall be loyally complied with."

The Bishop of Durham has addressed a letter to the incumbents of his diocese earnestly commending to their attention a statement prepared by the diocesan secretary of the C.E.T.S. on "Drunkenness in the Diocese of Durham." The Bishop notes with regret that the efforts to cope with the evil of drunkenness are rather slackening than gaining force, and he appeals to his clergy to study causes and results, and to make and stimulate self-denying efforts on right lines. If only, he says, the average expense per head on strong drink in England were reduced to that in the United States the saving for better purposes would be £90,000,000 a year.

The Lion Sermon, preached annually in the Church of St. Katharine Cree to commemorate the escape of Sir John Gayer from a lion in Arabia, has been delivered by Rev. A. B. Boyd-Carpenter. Sir John Gayer was a man of a religious temperament. Travelling in Arabia, he left his caravan, and was overtaken by night. In the hour of darkness he found himself face to face with the monarch of wild beasts. He had no defence except the arm of faith, and he threw himself on the mercy of God. The danger passed by, and in the morning he rejoined his caravan. When he returned to England he instituted the Lion Sermon that from age to age men might hear the message that in the conflicts of life deliverance comes from God.

Congregational.

Of the £8,300 spent upon the Murphy Memorial Hall, New Kent Road, S.E., all but £3,500 has been raised. The new building is one of the finest for mission purposes in South London, and an active evangelistic crusade is being carried on in the densely-populated area of which the Murphy Hall is the centre.

The recognition service of Mr. George C. Britton, of Cheshunt College, as minister of the church at Kingsland, N., took place on October 23, when a large number of friends assembled. Principal Whitehouse presided, Professor Andrews gave an address on "Free Church Principles," and Rev. Charles New, of Hastings, spoke on "The Work of the Minister."

At the autumnal meeting of the Blackburn District of the Lancashire Congregational Union, held at Accrington, the Chairman, Rev. William Robinson, of Burnley, gave an address on "Our Ministry: Its Aims, Weapons, and Encouragements." The chief points were—(1) Some men preach as though they had no target. We are agreed that no man ought to undertake this ministry unless he is compelled. A man must be a minister because he can be that only. No man ought to preach that he may live. (2) The weapon is the spoken Word. Our preaching must be to men a message new as the sunrise, although as old as the sun. To-day the peril of the Congregational Churches seems to be that the stream of life from our pulpits may be choked with the débris of scholarship, behind which there is neither conviction nor faith. (3) The disappointments of Christian workers are numerous. We have cried in despair, after our most earnest efforts—"Who hath believed our report?" But it has not all been dark. There have been "Sheaves of ministry." But the real reward comes from Christ; and the commendation of conscience, one of the best encouragements, is what every true minister may have.

Baptist.

The pastor (Rev. W. Thomas) of Victoria Park Church, E., has celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of his settlement. The services on the Sunday were conducted by the pastor himself, and on Monday afternoon Dr. Harry Guinness spoke. A public meeting followed, at which addresses were given by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon and other friends.

Mr. W. H. Collier has retired from the active duties of honorary secretary of the Brunswick Road Baptist Church, Gloucester, an office which he has held with conspicuous ability for over twenty-five years. Mr. Collier has also been a lay minister for an even longer period, being closely connected with the various departments of the Church. He was prominently identified with the building of the present church and school. Mr Collier's services were cordially recognised at a recent meeting.

To mark the termination of the ninth year of the pastorate of Rev. D. J. Hiley at Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, special services were held. In the afternoon Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, preached to a large congregation. At the evening there was a largely-attended public meeting. Mr. Hiley, in the course of his address, said he was surrounded at Broadmead by a band of men and women whose hearts God had veritably touched. Never during the whole of his ministry had he lacked for a moment full and hearty co-operation.

The twenty-first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. J. Wesley Boud as pastor of Penge Tabernacle, S.E., was celebrated on the 19th and 22nd inst. On Sunday the pastor preached morning and evening to large congregations. On Wednesday, Dr. Clifford preached in the afternoon, and spoke with power. A public meeting was held in the evening, when the speakers were Mr. Gloster, of Woking, and Revs. J. Wilson (Woolwich), B. J. Gibbon (Bloomsbury), and W. J. Mills (Muswell Hill). The church and its organizations were never more active. In addition to a large Sunday-school and four senior Bible-classes, there are two mission churches in active work. During the year seventy-five new members have been added.

The Orphan Homes started by Pastor Archibald G. Brown in connection with the East London Tabernacle are now in their twenty-third year. At a drawing-room meeting held at West Croydon on October 14 a large number of friends met to hear of this useful institution, and of other branches of home mission work carried on from the Tabernacle. Pastor Edwin H. Ellis and Mrs Ellis explained the nature and method of these efforts, by which the Gospel is taken into the homes of the people. Poverty is relieved as far as funds entrusted will allow, and in the Orphan Homes a large number of fatherless children are sheltered, fed, clothed, and educated. The operations are quite unsectarian. Much interest was evoked on behalf of needy East London, and methods were pointed out by which the work could be extended if only generous hearts would help. Rev. John Wills presided, and words of encouragement were given by Rev. T. J. Stockley.

Methodist.

Rev. D. J. Rounsefell has commenced his winter's work at the Bible Christian Mission in the old Victoria Theatre, Waterloo Road, S.E., where for several years past he has laboured with much encouragement.

A work of grace is in progress at Barrow Bible Christian Church (Rev. J. Clarke pastor). For eight Sundays in succession there have been decisions for Christ, and thirty-seven persons have been received on trial.

The Lord Mayor of Bristol, an esteemed Methodist local preacher, has, as the result of a decision of the City Council, tried the effect of moral suasion on the Sunday dealers. To this end he has issued to over a thousand of these a circular letter, appealing to them to close their shops on the Lord's Day.

Salvation Army.

A Brahmin gentleman has promised to build the first barracks for the Salvation Army if it will commence work in Taiping.

The Board of Education has sanctioned the buildings on the Hadleigh Land Colony designed for day-school purposes, and rendered necessary by the small accommodation of the local National Schools.

The General Purposes Committee of the City of London Union reports as follows with reference to the Army's Hadleigh Land Colony: "We are satisfied that the place is admirably adapted for the vagrant class who require to be taught to work for a livelihood."

Mr. A. Bowen, from the Congo, recently conducted meetings in the new Gospel hall, Fulmell Road, Upper Teddington. Gospel addresses were given, and a lantern lecture. The views, &c., were deeply interesting, and still more the account of the spread and power of the Gospel on the "Dark Continent." The hall was filled, and it was a happy and successful meeting. A branch of the Regions Beyond Helpers' Union was formed.

On October 20 a lecture was delivered at the Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, E., by Mr. H. M. Barnett, B.A., on "Admiral Coligny, Patriot, Convert from Romanism, and Martyr." There was an interesting audience of members and workers belonging to the Christian Community, which is closely associated with the Huguenots of the 1685 dispersion. There was a large amount of historic matter introduced, extending from 1557 to 1572 A.D., the year of the massacre of St. Bartholomew's. The character and career of the illustrious and heroic Protestant champion and Huguenot leader were extolled, and his name effectively cleared from the foul aspersions of Popish calumniators.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Dr. Mercer, who had been conspicuously identified with the early history of the Presbyterian Church in Victoria, and from 1861 to 1869 was associated with the Presbytery of Castlemaine. In the latter year he became Professor of Theology and Asiatic Languages at the Victorian Theological Hall.—By the death of Rev. T. Whittaker, D.D., the Primitive Methodist Connexion has lost one of its leading ministers. For the long period of fifty-two years he "travelled," and his circuit work was of a high order. For five years he was general Sunday-school secretary.—Rev. J. Francis Smythe, late pastor of Coventry Road Baptist Church, Birmingham, passed away last Sunday morning. He had been in the ministry over forty years.—On October 15, at Cockfield, Suffolk, Mr. John Ennals, aged ninety-three, a Christian from his youth up, who had the joy of seeing children and grand children follow him as he followed Christ.—At Belfast, Mrs. Woods, widow of Rev. Hans Woods, Presbyterian minister.—At Newtown Butler, Mrs. Bailey, mother of Rev. W. H. Bailey, M.A., of Clogher.

Christian Evidences.—The committee of this society have arranged with Mr. W. T. Lee, of Cardiff, who has long been one of their lecturers, to give his whole time to the work of the society. Mr. Lee is prepared to preach on Sundays, lecture five nights each week, and conduct Bible conferences. Friends organizing Christian Evidence missions should communicate with Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, Secretary of the Society, 26, Charing Cross, Whitehall, S.W.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To remove a misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

"Natural Christianity." The Dean of Ripon has been addressing a meeting of the Churchmen's Union on "Natural Christianity." He says nothing new; but what he says, as reported in the public Press, should neither be entertained nor uttered by a clergyman of the Church of England. The Christ of the New Testament—in other words, the Christ of the Creeds and the Te Deum, the rehearsal of which week by week is supposed to safeguard the doctrinal standing of bishops, priests, and deacons—seems to be resolved into a "popular fallacy." The mystery of the Lord's birth and the marvel of His resurrection being dispensed with, suggestions are made of the ease with which the Scriptures can be brought into agreement; apart from this chapter and that, there is nothing said of this and that form of teaching—and so on!

Old Heresies. The Dean's views, as reported, are as old as many other modern misrepresentations of the Gospel. One who listened to the address is said to have spoken of it as "a hotch-potch of ideas that were exploded long ago." They were exploded in the early ages of the Church; they were exploded again in the days of the Evangelical Revival. They are, however, as persistent as most errors; and, as they reappear from time to time, those who know nothing of the history of dogma greet them as the product of shrewd criticism and advanced thought. From beginning to end they are a denial of Christ. When men of the world express doubts regarding the Lord, we may entertain sorrowful pity; but when ministers of the Church of England do such a thing, something like indignation is felt. The sadness of the situation is deepened by the fact that there is reason to fear that other prominent ecclesiastics hold similar views.

Unhatched Chickens. There is still a great deal of folly in the world which is summed up in the proverb, "Don't count your chickens before they are hatched." We have been a little amused at the magnificent pretensions of a young scientist on behalf of whose recently published book his friends make exaggerated claims. Because metals appear to "respond" to electric touches, and to exhibit molecular movement, the hasty conclusion is reached that the "gulf which yawned between vital and non-vital has been bridged, and that even metals respond precisely in the same way as human beings." Most students of science have another and more rational way of accounting for the "response" of metals than that of supposing them to be alive. Really there is no need to herald this Hindoo "discovery" as "making an epoch in scientific thought." The chickens are not yet hatched—it is hardly wise to count them.

Sowing Tares. Certain associations favouring what is termed "free thought" are now sending out cheap editions of books upon scientific and philosophical subjects hitherto accessible to a comparatively limited number of readers. It is well to remember that the limits of scientific inquiry have been clearly defined and admitted by a number of the strongest intellects among the advanced scientists themselves; and that the dogmatic pronouncements of the accredited leaders of the evolutionist and other schools are by no means final. It is a serious thing for a publisher to become the vehicle of popularizing baneful ideas—inimical to Divine revelation. Since, however, it is done, and done so openly, the new duty is imposed upon all who love the truth to popularize those books which show up the pretensions of the men who so proudly, and often glibly, seek to overthrow the truth of the Gospel. The antidote must follow the bane.

The Missionary Revival. We are thankful to see that there is a revival of interest in Foreign Missions amongst the churches. The Wesleyans have recently held two large district conventions—one at Oxford and the other at Manchester—in which the claims of the world upon the Church were powerfully presented. Both series of meetings have been full of spiritual power. We understand that similar gatherings are to be held elsewhere. The veteran Charles Williams is devoting the evening of his life to a crusade on behalf of the missionary work abroad. He is visiting the Baptist churches, and his first reports are full of encouragement. The friends of the L.M.S. have proposed a missionary preaching crusade. The crisis in that society is acute, but we believe it will be safely passed. The shame of even contemplating withdrawal from certain fields is having its effect. At least the first stage of revival has been reached. But we cordially agree with Rev. Stanley Rogers in deprecating demonstrations, &c., where only the picked few attend. He urges that the proper time for dealing with the matter is on the Sunday "when the people are with us." If missionary revival is to be general, the ordinary preaching must be more missionary than it is; and this not once a year, but frequently.

A Peril of Enthusiasm. Dr. Maclaren, in speaking of the financial difficulties in which the L.M.S. and the Baptist Missionary Society find themselves, spoke strongly of the "immoral" manner in which the churches, twenty years ago, in a burst of enthusiasm, encouraged both societies to "go forward," afterwards thrusting them into a tight place by failing to maintain a steadily increased income. This was like the Dutchman who, having to jump over a high wall, went so far back to get a spring, that when he got to the bottom of the wall, he had to sit down to recover breath! Spasmodic enthusiasm is certainly a dangerous quality. Its very eagerness creates difficulties. In such matters as these our Lord's parable of the man who built a tower without counting the cost applies with special force.

Setting the Snares. The High Church journals have taken lately to the advocacy of what is referred to in one of them as "the great work of guiding souls," or, in plain words, the Romanist "direction"—that most unhealthy adjunct of the confessional. It is far from reassuring that one of these journals, after remarking that "absolution is the formal exhibition of medicine to the sick soul, and confession is the preamble to absolution," should proceed to recommend St. Alfonso Liguori, and others of his school, as guides in the training of candidates for the ministry. The true functions of the minister of God are as open as they are simple, and the assistance of Liguori's microscopic analysis of impurity is not requisite to enable a man to denounce sin, and to point to the Divinely-provided means of salvation from it.

Mammon and Sport. The mischief done by gambling and betting to the legitimate element of "sport" was well illustrated by a story told recently by the Bishop of Wakefield (Dr. Eden). Some time back, on the occasion of a football "semi-final," he asked a railway porter which side was likely to win. The porter replied, "That depends on how many on each side are squared." It is sometimes said in defence of betting that it tends to keep up the true "sporting" instinct. Healthy emulation in recreation is good for all concerned; but the "sport" kept up by betting is of the kind that kills all that is noble, and makes the issue of a contest, which is supposed to be determined on skill and pluck, dependent on the longest purse. That is not sport but mammonism.

Gambling in Belgium. There is apparently to be a determined movement made in the Belgian Parliament to hinder the Royal signature being affixed to the Bill for the suppression of public gaming-houses. Under the specious plea of the Bill being "unconstitutional," the vampires of Belgium think to continue their horrible work of draining the blood of their country. We hope the King will not waver now; it will be a terrible thing if he does. The daring of gambling den proprietors is almost incredible.

The Colonial Secretary in South Africa. All parties are rejoiced that Mr. Chamberlain has determined to pay a visit to South Africa, with a view to studying on the spot the tangled problems of that much-tried country. It is growing clear that the war has failed to settle many things, and that the South African Colonies are a seething cauldron of conflicting interests and racial animosities. It will call for the most balanced judgment and the wisest statesmanship to shape the course of South African policy; and the Colonial Secretary carries with him the goodwill and support of all political parties in his endeavour to form an unbiassed opinion of the questions at issue. It is specially desirable that the Native Problem—the most difficult of all—should be carefully dealt with. We hope that Mr. Chamberlain will see things with his own eyes, and not through official glasses, and will have the courage to carry out, independently of party, what will be for the permanent tranquility of the country.

The Moroccan Question. Things in Morocco seem at last to be hastening to a crisis. People have said this for years past, but there is greater reason for it now since new elements have been introduced into the question—elements which inevitably spell disintegration. The murder of Mr. Cooper is a sign of the revolt that is commencing against those European ideas which the Emperor has welcomed; but this revolt is the prelude to a new state of things. The Moroccan difficulty would be settled to-morrow but for the almost childish jealousies which exist between the Powers. For England, of course, the great question is the occupation of Tangier. It is vital that the water route to India shall not be menaced at the Straits of Gibraltar. Mr. Arnold White, however, makes a statesmanlike suggestion when he pleads for a frank recognition of the prior claim of France to a protectorate over Morocco, leaving Tangier a neutral port. It is Tangier that is the difficulty, and if its neutrality could be secured, Morocco would cease to be the reproach of civilization.

Back to the Land. Now that, unhappily, the unrest and discontent in Ireland are again deepening, it is well to recognise some of the removable causes of the agitations which do so much to widen the gulf between a large section of the population of the sister island and the people in this country. Recently, the Westport District Council appointed a committee to investigate the condition of portions of that union, and from their report it appears that out of the 5,322 families, no fewer than 4,089 live upon holdings incapable of affording subsistence, and who are only preserved from perishing of famine by the earnings of the adult male population in their annual migrations to England and Scotland, and by the remittances of their relatives in America.

Yet out of the 347,000 acres in Westport, 15,000 only are used for raising food, whereas 150,000 are monopolised by a few graziers, "an acreage which would ensure a comfortable livelihood to thrice the population now dragging out their lives in the poorest overcrowded village plots."

The Army of the Insane. In Ireland during the last forty-five years the proportion of lunatics has increased from 1 in every 657 of the entire population to 1 in every 178, exclusive of those in private houses, and the large number wandering at large. Similarly, though happily not to an equal extent, lunacy has developed in England so largely that in almost every county, Essex being the latest example, it is found necessary to build huge additional asylums for the reception of the insane. The causes of this unhappy condition of things are various, but certainly one of the most powerful is the drink curse. A Russian scientist, Dr. Rubinovitch, recently published statistics showing how far this is true, and after quoting a statement that of fifty-seven children in ten alcoholic families selected at hazard he found twelve idiots, and only eight normal persons, he says:—

As a corollary of these mental heredito-alcoholic manifestations, we find that infantile or juvenile criminality is more and more accentuated in the families of drinkers. In Switzerland half of the children in the houses of correction, according to an investigation of the Federal Council in 1894, had alcoholic parents.

Here, indeed, is food for reflection on the part of Government and ratepayers alike.

Unwise Charity. In the programme of the national campaign which is now being organized on behalf of Old Age Pensions, there appears to be a grave defect, which is likely to alienate the sympathies of many who, in default of a better scheme, such as the Old Age Homes of Denmark, Austria, and Russia, would support and assist the movement. That the National Committee should advocate "universal pensions," and decry efforts to differentiate between the thrifty and thriftless, the temperate and the drunken, is equivalent to a desire to increase the heavy burden already borne by the ratepayer as a consequence of the State-fostered work of the brewer and publican. There certainly is no need to put any further premium upon drunkenness.

The Awakening of the Bench. Some of our dreams of an ideal municipal government will be speedily realized if the awakening of the bench continues as it has begun. Magistrates are just beginning to realize how much power they already possess in dealing with the drink traffic, and, as we have recently had the pleasure to chronicle, in several of our largest centres of population, the justices have made a most determined stand, and refused to grant new licences, while they have also materially reduced the number of existing licences. The inquiries which have recently been instituted as to the real need of such a large number of drinking-houses, will be followed by vigorous measures, for it is clear to every one who keeps his eyes open that abuses in the drink trade are impudently glaring. The good example set in Devonshire, Liverpool, Sheffield, and elsewhere, urgently needs extension to the whole country. We should get leagues nearer to practical legislation, if the existing powers of magistrates were employed to the full.

Speaking with Authority. The Evangelist says that the people were astonished at our Lord's doctrine because he taught the people "with authority, and not as the scribes." The scribes had great regard for precedent, and had great command of the opinions of their predecessors. Our Lord spoke the absolute truth, and spoke it from God. They to whom He has given His commission to preach the Gospel must speak as He did, when they proclaim the truth He has entrusted to them. The spirit of the scribes, however, is still with us, and with many who profess to speak for Christ. Unless a man has a message of Divine truth that he can proclaim "with authority," he had better keep out of the pulpit. The world is sick to death with vagueness—it wants an authoritative word of life and power. If a man has a firm grip of the living Christ he will preach with authority, and his message will convince.

A Word in Season—to Preachers. A prominent actor, speaking recently about preachers, severely criticized the delivery of almost all of them, and said that the difficulty of remembering most sermons is due to the lack of emphasis and force in their utterance. He added that if actors paid as little attention to their elocution as preachers do, they would be hissed off the stage. It would be well if this friendly critic's advice were borne in mind by those who minister in sacred things, especially in the public reading of the Scriptures, a matter that receives deplorably little attention from most preachers, but which, when done with sympathy and taste, is a sure means of grace to the hearers.

The Outpoured Spirit.—3.

"YE ARE MY WITNESSES."

"I WILL pour out My Spirit upon all flesh." Many are asking the meaning of these words, and the extent of the promise. Some seem to suppose it to mean that God would pour out of His Spirit upon all mankind, believers and unbelievers. But this cannot be; for by the Lord Jesus Himself, speaking from the Father, by the Holy Spirit, the living water is expressly limited to those who thirst, and who come to Him and drink. And the effect is that out of them, according to their faith, flow rivers of living water (John vii. 37-39).

At the baptism of Jesus the Spirit descended like a dove, and noiselessly alighted and abode upon Him, having there found love, rest, and home, corresponding perfectly with the heaven whence He had come. When the Spirit came upon the hundred and twenty at Pentecost, who had, with one accord, continued steadfastly in prayer and supplication during those ten testing days, there was the sound of a rushing mighty wind, as though a vacuum had been made which the wind rushed in to fill. But unbelievers and rejectors of the Son of God, full of self and sin, can make no vacuum for the Wind of the Spirit to come in and fill. If He came upon them they would be carried away "as the whirling dust before the storm." The ungodly could not be baptized in the Holy Ghost. His ministry to the world is to convince of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment.

What, then, is meant by "all flesh"? Bishop Moule says, in his "Outlines of Christian Doctrine":—

As regards His work in mankind at large, the Spirit appears as man's Maker in a special sense (Job xxxiii. 4). In Job xxvii. 3, the Spirit's sustaining power in man is vividly expressed: "The Spirit of God is in my nostrils," and cp. Gen. ii. 7. But His revealed work for man goes mainly towards the moral and spiritual (Gen. vi. 3; whatever be the translation of the verb), and the supernatural in knowledge and action.

Dr. Jacobson, late Bishop of Chester, says, in the "Speaker's Commentary":—

In earlier ages the extraordinary influences of God the Holy Ghost were restricted to a few. Abraham saw a vision; Isaac prophesied; Jacob dreamed dreams; Joseph interpreted dreams. But now those influences were to be extended to all men everywhere, without distinction of age, sex, or rank, to Gentiles as well as Jews.

Similarly Bishop Moule and other commentators. But while there is no limit of age, sex, rank, or nation, the promise is, necessarily, limited to those who believe. The only begotten Son for salvation, and the Holy Spirit for power in testimony, are each alike without effect (except in condemnation) to those who do not receive the gift.

ISRAEL, GOD'S WITNESSES.

Israel, the people of God, in the Old Testament, were by their election and calling constituted witnesses. "Ye are my witnesses that I am God." The great question before the universe is, Who is God? Is the Eternal Creator the true God? or is the usurping creature, whom the world has made its god, to be worshipped and served as God? The honourable responsibility, the glorious privilege of Abraham, the nation of Israel, and the promised Seed, the Faithful Witness, was this: "Ye are my witnesses that I am God," as against the ancient serpent and all false gods. Every Israelite as he was born came into this position. "Everyone that is called by My name, whom I have created for My glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him . . . I am Jehovah your Holy One, the Creator of Israel, your King" (Isa. xliii. 7, 15).

CHRISTIANS ARE CHRIST'S WITNESSES.

In like manner, each and all who are born again, each and all of the Israel of God, are, by the fact of their new creation in Christ Jesus, constituted witnesses: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." "And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." "And we are witnesses of these things, and so is the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts i. 8; iv. 33; v. 32, &c.).

As a recruit becomes an enlisted soldier the moment he receives the King's shilling, so each one who believes in Jesus the Son of God, as his Saviour and Lord, receives the Holy Spirit, and is "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of His glory . . ." "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works . . . to the intent that now, unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places may be known through the Church the manifold wisdom of God" (Eph. i.-iii.).

As the enlisting sergeant counts upon his recruit to be a soldier, so God counts upon His youngest convert to be a witness. Therefore He gives him the Holy Ghost, to be the power of his testimony. "Having believed," and the moment he has believed, he is sealed, not only as a member of an elect race, of a people for God's own possession, but also as an ambassador of Christ, that he may show forth the excellencies of Him who called him out of darkness into His marvellous light (1 Peter ii.; 2 Cor. v.).

Some think of "giving their testimony" as if it were to be chiefly about themselves; others think of bearing witness to sinners at home, and heathen abroad. Both these, in their due time and measure, are right, and essential to a witness. But before and above either, the one supreme Object of our testimony is GOD. We proclaim "the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God." "The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath revealed HIM."

The apostles were commanded by their risen Lord to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, "for the Holy Ghost was not yet [outpoured] because Jesus was not yet glorified." But when the day of Pentecost was come, the fiftieth day after the resurrection of our Lord, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon the infant Church, His waiting, believing, and praying people. Jesus has been glorified, and the Holy Spirit outpoured, and cannot cease to be outpoured so long as Jesus is glorified at the Father's right hand in heaven and by a believing people on earth.

The Apostle Paul was not bidden to tarry; but Ananias said, "Thou shalt be His witness . . . and now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, calling on the name of the Lord." His commission as a minister and a witness was given to him by the Lord Himself on the spot and at the time of his conversion.

Little children may lisp His praise, and the Holy Spirit will adapt Himself to their infant minds. M.

Cheap Sunday Trains in Switzerland.—The five principal railways of the Helvetic Confederation being now the property of the State, the Board of Directors at Berne, acting in the interests of the men employed, whose seventeen off-duty Sundays might be endangered by extra Sunday labour, have decided on principle not to run pleasure trains at reduced fares on Sundays and festivals.

A Ministerial Question Box.

DR. TORREY ON THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

CONTINUING his replies to questions from ministerial brethren in the meeting at Sydney, Dr. Torrey answered an inquiry regarding his position in reference to the Higher Criticism:

"The three great leaders of the Higher Criticism were infidels, and I don't care to get my knowledge of theology from such a source. Brethren, in the first place there is nothing new in their alleged discoveries. In spite of all their talk about the 'new views,' there is scarcely anything in their theories that is not contained in Tom Paine's scurrilous 'Age of Reason'

"Indeed, Professor Osgood, who is a Hebrew scholar, stood on the floor of the Baptist Congress at Detroit, Michigan, to speak on the Higher Criticism. 'Before discussing the question,' he said, 'I would like to read what I conceive to be the few positions that are taken up by the higher destructive critics.'

"He went to work and read off these positions, one after the other. 'Now, gentlemen,' he said to the supporters of the Higher Criticism, 'is that a fair statement of the position?' 'Yes,' they said. 'Well, gentlemen,' he replied, 'I have been reading verbatim from Tom Paine's "Age of Reason!"'

"Brethren, if you are dabbling in that sort of thing you do not know what you are doing. I used to be a Higher Critic myself once. When Robertson Smith's book came out, I welcomed it; in fact I wrote a little book on the subject myself. I thank God that I did not publish it; I had not thought the thing through. Years ago, a dear brother spoke to me on the subject in our lecture room. He was a splendid man, though not an expert in Bible study. He said to me: 'Mr. Torrey, I do not know about these things. Men tell me that it is a purely literary question, and doesn't affect the authority of the Bible.' I said to him, 'Don't you let them stuff that nonsense down your throat; they are pulling the wool over your eyes. The next thing, they will be applying these very principles—which are now confined to the Old Testament—to the New Testament criticism—to the Gospels, and the life of Christ.' He could hardly believe that. But, gentlemen, what do we find in the last copy of the 'Encyclopædia Biblica'? We find done that very thing which we predicted ten years ago.

"Just let me say a few words about the origin of the Higher Criticism. The whole thing began with Jean Astruc. He was an immoral Jesuit, and he was the father of the Higher Criticism—the devil was its grandfather. Now, I am not talking of something I know nothing about. The literary principles of the Higher Criticism are principles of literary criticism that have been spued out of every other branch of literary and historical study. The methods by which the Higher Critics are trying to disprove the historicity of the Book of Daniel, and other parts of the Old Testament, if applied to the history of England, would disprove every fact in English history! They are the same methods that were applied at one time to Greek and Roman history. You know there were those who applied these methods to Greek and Roman history, and, by means of their theories, swept away much of the history of Julius Cæsar, Pompey, Troy—in fact, almost everything, so that there was little left. But these methods have been given up, except in Biblical criticism. They have been reduced to a reductio ad absurdum in every branch of historical study, and now these Higher Critics are applying them to the Bible.

"One of the most awful things about theologians is that they adopt principles that students of every other branch of study in the world have tried and discarded. It is a hard thing to say, but it is a fact. By the same process Professor Fiske proved to a demonstration—provided you granted his premises—that there never was such a place as Troy, and shortly after Schliemann went and uncovered it. And just after it had been proved that Daniel could not be an historical character—because there was no such person known as Belshazzar—Rawlinson went and dug up a tablet bearing his very name—Belsharruzur.

"Brethren, the Higher Criticism is an attempt to construct history—not from the records, but from your inner consciousness. Why, since I came to Sydney I have read a pamphlet by a man who had the audacity to tell his readers that the Old Testament canon depended upon the decision of the Jewish Council, and upon the vote of Rabbi Akiba, the man who supported Bar Kokhba. He gave as his authority the Talmud. Now, any man who quotes a passage from the Talmud in a careless way, without telling his hearers what a mixture of fragments of truth with a mass of foolish legend the Talmud is, is either deliberately taking advantage of the ignorance of his hearers, or, what is more likely, someone has been taking advantage of his ignorance. The Talmud is the most marvellous mixture of truth with the most absolute nonsense ever written, and these men deliberately take one of the fables from the Talmud to show how the canon was settled. The authority of the Old Testament does not depend upon the Talmud—it depends upon the testimony of Jesus Christ, and no man who will put the Talmud up against the authority of Jesus Christ has any right to call himself a Christian."

In Memoriam

ANNA SHIPTON,

ENTERED INTO GLORY NOVEMBER 5, 1901.

ONE year in glory! "Though they measure not
By days and years where thou art gone to dwell;"
One year in glory! love hath not forgot
The day our saddened hearts bade thee farewell,
And fain with gratitude this wreath would lay,
O friend beloved, upon thy grave to-day.

One year in glory! thou, who here wast led
By path of sorrow to God's home of rest,
And through thy tribulation comforted
The griefs of others, by the comfort blest
That He gave to thee; through the fire, the flood,
Thou calledst sorrowing ones to trust thy Lord.

One year in glory! if thou couldest tell
To us its meaning, how our hearts would throb!
Yet, as we listen, seem some notes to swell
Of heaven's song across the earthly sob—
"I reckon now the sufferings of the path
Naught to compare with joy's long aftermath."

Thou gatherest now the fruit of "Waiting Hours,"
In lonely "Watch Tower in the Wilderness";
From "Brook beside the Way" sprang fadeless flowers,
And "Whispers in the Palms" oft came to bless
In desert march, when evening breezes stir,
With thoughts of "Promise and the Promiser."

Thou praisest now for all once "Asked of God,"
"The Waymarks of thy Pilgrimage" below,
For the "Sure Mercies" e'en 'neath chastening rod
That taught thee deeper fellowship to know,
"God's Messengers" to bear His Kingly word,
And to unfold "The Secret of the Lord."

The "Upper and the Nether Springs" He gave,
And "Vale of Blessing" by all waters, where
He led thee forth to sow, fair harvests wave;
Thy "Wayside Service" showed "The Lord was There,"
Thine was "The Hearing Heart" His voice to greet,
And to "Tell Jesus," kept thee at His feet.

Beloved one, not lost, but gone before,
Into the sunlight, while we tarry still
Amidst the shadows; through heaven's opened door
We see the glory of God's will.
Thou art with Him, and "God with Us," our stay,
The same for ever, now as yesterday.

We thank Thee, Lord, for the brave life laid down,
The faithful ministry, the witness true,
For cross of pain exchanged for victor's crown,
Earth's clouded skies for heaven's unclouded blue,
And the bright hope, God's bow, that spans our tears—
Together with Him through eternal years.

Doric Lodge.—Now that the deaconesses have begun their winter's campaign of visiting, and conducting meetings and night-schools, they are met on all sides with distressing cases of destitution that they dare hardly think of the severities of the winter so quickly approaching. Gifts of cast-off clothing for women, girls, and children, also bedding, groceries, and other help, will be gratefully acknowledged by the lady superintendent, Doric Lodge, 28, Bow Road, E.

Education and Romanism.

By MR. HENRY VARLEY.

MANY are striving to keep the present controversy concerning the Education Bill, which is stirring the whole country, free from relation to Romanism. It is impossible to do this, as the following facts will show. This Education question arises from a plan determined upon by Pope Pius IX., and expressed in his Syllabus of December, 1864, concerning the working of the Romish Church. In effect he says: She has the right to exercise her power without the permission and consent of the State. Again: She has the right to deprive the civil authority of the entire government of the public schools. This also: She has the power of requiring the State not to permit free expression of opinion.

Leo XIII. in his Encyclical Letter, November, 1885, says, "All Catholics must make themselves felt as active elements in daily political life in the countries where they live. They must penetrate wherever possible in the administration of civil affairs. All Catholics should do all in their power to cause the constitution of states and legislatures to be modelled on the principles of the true church."

Such being the charge given at Rome by Pope Pius IX. and the present Leo XIII., how is it possible to separate the Education Bill from the propaganda here insisted upon? It should be borne in mind that England has been left to the last for this subtle attack upon our Board School and other systems of education. Australia, Canada, the Philippines, Mexico, Chili, the United States, Cuba, Ireland, and France—all bear testimony to the ceaseless activity shown by the Roman Catholics in either attacking the State and Public School systems, or monopolizing the situation in order to advance the supremacy of Rome. The object has been, and is, to obtain possession and control of the schools, so that the youth of these nations, colonies, and countries, may be trained and educated in Romanism and as members of the Roman Catholic Church.

THE LESSON OF FRANCE.

In France an Italian—that is, an alien—priesthood has pursued this work for some years with this result. They have, to no small extent, undermined the civil power of the French Government. The Premier, in consequence, has been compelled to close numbers of these priestly schools, has dismissed nuns and teachers, and is now engaged in driving these alien Roman Catholic priests out of France. For this the French Government has been most unjustly assailed. If any legislature was ever perfectly justified in this drastic repression of these Popish schools, the French Government was and is. This outrage upon right has been going on on the other side of the Channel, and that, mark it well, within the past decade. Verily "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance" against the subtle and secret working of the spiritual despotism that centres at Rome.

ROME AND AMERICA.

In the United States the conflict between the people of the great Republic and the Roman Catholics has been long continued; and though the national system of education has completely triumphed, the same restless lust of power keeps on attacking civil government in America.

Take the following extract concerning the United States from the Catholic World:—"We do not accept it, or hold it to be any government at all, or as capable of performing any of the proper functions of government. If the American Government is to be sustained and preserved at all, it must be by the rejection of the principles of the Reformation (that is, the government by the people), and the acceptance of the Catholic principle, which is the government of the Pope."

This was a part of the Roman Catholic programme when the civil power of the United States, and especially the Public School system, was attacked in the interests of Roman Catholic teaching, and possession of the schools of the United States. They bitterly opposed the introduction of the Bible in the schools—"that book should not have place therein at any price"! This being conceded, the tactics of the priests were speedily changed. They denounced the public schools in the strongest and most scandalous fashion. Here are some of the epithets used. They are taken from a book called "JUDGES OF FAITH: Christian versus Godless schools." They are described as "Godless," "un-Christian," "grossly immoral," "filthy," "vicious," "diabolical," "a detestable system," "a place where the children imbibe the poisonous germs of infidelity, immorality," &c.

Such was and is Romanism in the States in regard to that splendid system of education which is rapidly bringing the people of a great Republic to a foremost position amongst the nations of the earth. Archbishop Ireland, speaking for the Pope at the beginning of the new century, said: "Our work is to make America Catholic." To this end they are placing Roman Catholics in all possible civil functions and offices. Boston had, a short time since, a Roman Catholic mayor. The list, which is in the writer's possession, contains hundreds of offices filled with Roman Catholics, as Leo XIII. suggested. In the face of the alike of France and the United States, can it be wondered at that the people of England, who love civil and religious liberty, are arising from the length and breadth of the land to protest in their right and might against this Bill? Framed in the interests of the High Church party, large numbers of whom are Romanists receiving the wages and sharing the social advantages of the Protestant Church by law established, who can feel surprise that the rising tides of righteous indignation are crying out against the forcing of this Romanizing Bill upon the country?

The magnificent demonstration assembled at the Alexandra Palace on Saturday should have a voice crying loudly in Mr. Balfour's ears. Why should the country be precipitated into one of the most serious agitations that this generation has known? This Romish attempt to undermine the noble Board School system, which has worked so well these thirty years, must at all costs be crushed. Is it asked, Where are the proofs that this Education Bill is from Rome? Let us again hear Pius IX. "The Catholic Church has the right to interfere in the discipline of the public schools and in the arrangement of the studies of the public schools, and in the choice of teachers for these schools." These words were given at the time when Rome sought to obtain possession of the public schools of the United States in order to subject the great Republic to the control and supremacy of the Pope. Let any reader carefully note these words of Pius IX.

The fact is that they represent to a large extent the suggested constitution and government of the proposed Parochial Schools, which the Education Bill, at the instance of the Anglo-Catholics, proposes shall have place in many of the parishes of England. Can it be matter for surprise that the whole of the Free Churches of the country are up in arms against this priestly Bill? Millions of Englishmen, to whom civil and religious liberty is a priceless heritage, bought at the heavy cost of the blood of their fathers, will never consent to have these Anglo-Romanizing and sectarian Church schools established in this land of liberty. Let there be no mistake as to nor any sentimental and insincere talk about the want of toleration in regard to Roman Catholic or Anglican schools.

Romanism is proved to be a gigantic political organisation, whose headquarters are in Italy. It is not only a church, but a political party, from the Pope downward. Rome seeks to control the nations of the earth. Archbishop Ireland, in addressing a class of graduating students who were preparing for the priesthood, said in Rome: "We can have the United States in ten years; and I want to give you three points for your consideration—the Indians, the Negroes, and THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS."

This same Archbishop is now at Washington, straining every nerve to fill the subordinate official positions in the Government with Roman Catholics. In other words, he is carrying out the purpose of Romanism to subvert civil government in the United States, and enslave the nation in the bondage of that anti-Christian system which the Eternal God describes as "Mystery," "Babylon," "the Mother of Harlots," who has been "drunk with the blood" of millions of Christians in the centuries which are past. Who does not recall that Cardinal Manning said in regard to England, the home of liberty, that Rome's work in the future was

"TO BEND THE NECK OF THIS IMPERIAL RACE?"

Fellow-countrymen, remember these words, and hurl them back with righteous indignation against the Pope and the priesthood. This Education Bill represents Romanism attacking the liberties of England, both civil and religious, which are dearer to us than life itself.

For—

> It's a glorious land, deny it who can,
> This island home of the Englishman.
> It's a glorious charter, deny it who can,
> The name of a free-born Englishman.

If Cardinal Vaughan, and his co-religionists in the Anglican Church, desire to improve education, let them depart to Italy and do something to make up for the degraded and ignorant condition in which millions of the Italians have been kept by the despotic power of the Popes, and the corrupt priesthood which the Papacy has maintained in Italy. So recently as 1860 eight out of ten Italians were unable to read or write!

Hush!

> If hours above in glory
> Were timed by hours of prayer
> We spend in this our journeying,
> How few we'd reckon there!
>
> If what in heaven receiving,
> Were like our giving here,
> What wealth should we be missing,
> How poor should we appear!
>
> If angels' loving whispers
> Re-echoed but the love
> We here bestowed, how loveless
> Our souls would be above!
> I tremble as I ponder!
> O God, awake my soul
> To all Thy claims, while treading
> Life's never-distant goal!
>
> Heaven's mirror is before me,
> Which earth's reflections bear;
> Oh, may my pilgrim footsteps
> Reflect a beauty there!

ALBERT MIDLANE.

An Appeal to Protestants.

BY REV. JAMES MOUNTAIN, TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

A MOMENTOUS crisis is upon us. High-churchism and Ritualism have in recent years spread so rapidly that at present they dominate the great majority of the bishops and clergy of the Established Church. Lord Salisbury's advice to "capture the School Boards" has been widely adopted, and has been followed by considerable success. The Government itself has now, alas! been captured, and in the Education Bill now before Parliament they are aiding and abetting the determination of the clerical party to abolish the undenominational School Board system, and to capture the children of the nation at the nation's expense. True Protestants may well be alarmed.

Archdeacon TAYLOR, of Liverpool, wrote as follows in April last: "The Education Bill simply means the abolition of Board Schools, and the excellent unsectarian Bible instruction given in them with so much profit to the nation; and the establishment in their stead of a system of denominationalism under clerical rule all through the land. This would be deplorable."

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE wrote in June last: "I do not hesitate to say that I consider the Education Bill, as it stands, to be full of peril for the best interests of the nation."

Rev. W. R. MOWLL, vicar of Christ Church, Brixton, and many other clergymen, have expressed similar decided opinions.

The Church Association, the Protestant Alliance, and the Imperial Protestant Federation, representing thirty-five Protestant Societies, have also emphatically condemned the Bill on Protestant grounds.

The Evangelical Free Churches of Great Britain, representing eight millions of adherents, are united, almost to a man, in indignant opposition to the Bill, as an infringement of the rights of conscience. That this opposition is a religious opposition, and not political is evident from the fact that Rev. F. B. Meyer is one of its leaders.

WHY THE PRIESTS COMMEND THE BILL.

The Roman Catholic and Ritualistic priests are delighted with the Bill.* Why? Because it will perpetuate and extend the sectarian school system; because it will provide, out of the pockets of the taxpayers and ratepayers, all the funds necessary for the upkeep of the sectarian schools, while it will leave the management of the schools largely under priestly influence; because it will enable the priests, by their majority of sectarian managers, to appoint all the teachers, while the nation will pay the salaries; and because, as Cardinal Vaughan truly says, it will enable [R.] "Catholic teachers to teach [R.] Catholic doctrine to [R.] Catholic children in [R.] Catholic schools," and, of course, at the expense of Protestants.

TWO DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY.

1. Many Evangelical clergy have, up to the present time remained silent; while others have approved the Bill because of the financial relief which their schools would receive from it. But have these excellent brethren sufficiently considered that the Bill would give equal financial assistance to Ritualistic and Romish schools for the teaching of the sacrifice of the mass, auricular confession, priestly absolution, purgatory, invocation of saints, worship of images and relics, and the whole category of Papist superstitions? Surely it cannot be pleasing to our Lord for Evangelical clergy to sanction an educational principle which inevitably involves the teaching of such unscriptural and dangerous dogmas under a Protestant Constitution and by legally-enforced Protestant rates and taxes!

Although the Evangelical clergy are comparatively few in number, yet their utterances have great weight in our land. This was proved by their recent noble protests against the proposed alteration of the King's Protestant Declaration. If only they could be brought to see the danger to Protestantism which lurks in this Education Bill, no body of men could, or would, more effectively oppose it than they.

2. Unfortunately, the recent attitude of many of these Evangelicals has weakened the ties which were rapidly being formed between themselves and their Free Church brethren. This is much to be deplored. May we not hope that a common danger to our national Protestantism and spiritual religion will lead us all to lay aside our unworthy mutual suspicions, and will bind together more closely than ever the defenders of the Protestant Reformation?

Much prayer is now being offered for a spiritual revival throughout our land. If this prayer be answered by a fuller baptism into the love and truth of our Lord Jesus Christ, we may confidently expect that some amicable solution of present difficulties will soon be discovered. But in addition to prayer, we need a strong and widespread protest which shall ring throughout the country, and make itself heard in the halls of St. Stephen's.

A SOLUTION SUGGESTED.

Much has been written suggesting various plans for the settlement of the "religious difficulty," which, after all, is the difficulty around which all the other difficulties gather. In my judgment nothing could be wiser, more suitable, or more acceptable to the minds of English parents than the following, which is from the pen of Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE:—"If possible, one would prefer that no Government money be given to schools where any creeds and catechism were taught; but that the Bible, and the Bible only, should be taught where any Government grant is given. Those parents who are members of the Church of England could see that their children are taught the Catechism in our Sunday-schools."

* A perusal of recent sermons and articles in the R.C. press makes this abundantly clear.—ED.

Norwich Convention.

A MEMORABLE convention has just been brought to a close at Norwich. It was prepared for by much private and united prayer, and it is hoped has proved in the true sense of the words a great success. A preliminary service was held at the Cathedral on Monday night, when the Dean took the service, and a great congregation listened to a very earnest and searching address from Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, on the text "Know ye not that Ramoth in Gilead is ours, and we be still and take it not out of the hands of the king of Syria." Each of the following three days was begun by a gathering for prayer at St. Andrew's Hall, at which a short address was given, on the first day by Rev. J. Brash, on the Wednesday by Rev. J. Howell (All Saints, Derby), and on Thursday by Rev. Darlow Sarjeant.

Four meetings were held daily, and one local chairman presided throughout the day. On the first day, Dr. Barrett's few well-chosen words seemed to sound the keynote of the proceedings. On the second day Archdeacon Crosse took the chair, and gave in the afternoon a very appropriate and forcible address on the subject of foreign missions. On the third day, Canon Aitken was chairman. In addition to the speakers already mentioned, Dr. Pierson, Rev. W. T. A. Barber, Rev. Evan Hopkins, Rev. J. Stuart Holden, and others took part in the proceedings.

The numbers attending the Convention were very large, the evening meetings completely filling the great hall. Every address was with remarkable power, and it was indeed a time of heart-searching, as well as of much spiritual illumination. This was especially the case on the last day, when the power of God seemed to be very sensibly manifested. That closing service will not soon be forgotten by hundreds that attended it. Canon Aitken, in opening the meeting, made an earnest appeal to Christians present to see to it that by the power of God the effects of the meeting should be felt all over Norwich. He was followed by Mr. Darlow Sarjeant, whose telling speech produced a profound impression; and the Convention was closed by a most pointed and effective address from Mr. Stuart Holden. The promoters of these great gatherings are profoundly thankful to God for abundant blessing.

Convention at Ealing.

FOR many years Ealing Convention has drawn together a large number of Christians desiring a fuller apprehension of the Word of Life, and a deeper revelation of the mind and purpose of God. This year's gatherings formed no exception.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. H. G. THWAITES, who took as the subject of a powerful discourse Ephes. iv. 20-24. The speaker pointed out that the Apostle was dealing with that tremendous subject, the believer's moral and religious condition before Christ. Of all ancient and moral religions and philosophies, there was never one that promised or provided a power whereby the moral character could be developed. Christ's religion makes a new man—enforces the highest, purest ideal of holiness—to be like God. Side by side with this standard it tells of power. Christ comes into the believer, and he is able to be and do, because Christ is in him a renewing power.

The meetings in the Victoria Hall were presided over by Mr. H. W. Maynard, and the addresses were of a helpful and practical nature. Rev. J. G. TRAIN, speaking from Joshua i. 6, emphasized the need for true courage in the spiritual life. There is a difference between strength and courage. Strength is the secret of courage, and the secret is found in communion with God. Rev. S. A. SELWYN expounded Acts x. 33, 44—the narrative of a day's mission in a godless place, and what became of it. The Spirit does not fall on those who do not desire Him. There must be the empty heart, and there can be no filling if conscious sin is going on in the heart.

Rev. C. G. MOORE dwelt on the problem of life as we have to face it to-day, pointing out that the spirit of the Apostle Paul was optimistic when in contact with the hardest things in human experience. There is an immeasurable distance between the worldling and the child of God. Pentecost was God's special gift of sufficiency to the disciples. In face of unsaved millions, Satanic assaults, perplexities in family life, sorrow, despair, and toil, will this gift of the Holy Ghost make us optimists? Paul was glad in God to the end.

Another impressive utterance was the address of Rev. S. A. SELWYN, dealing with 2 Chron. xxix. 10. He showed that the secret of "rest" lay in making a covenant with God. Many people make a series of fresh starts out of failures. In this chapter we find a temple, splendid ritual, everything—it is closed. A picture of our own lives. We join a church, and so far all is well. After a time there comes steady decline; communion with God is broken, and joy departs. Wrath and trouble follow, and captivity, because of sin, is the result. Such a condition drove Hezekiah to make these things cease. If it is in our hearts to turn to the Lord He will assuredly cause it to cease.

Rev. J. P. CLARK spoke of the revelation of the Father's heart given to us in the parable of the prodigal son. The home-coming was a revelation of light and joy to be enjoyed by all, while the endowments are the privilege of every believer.

Other speakers included Revs. F. W. Ainley, N. F. Duncan, E. B. Samuel, and A. S. Evans.

Protestant Literature.—The tragic death of Mr. John Kensit has aroused a wide and sympathetic interest in his campaigns against the encroachments of Rome in our borders, and many will rejoice that his son, Mr. J. A. Kensit, has undertaken to superintend the movement. The circulation of suitable literature has done much to strengthen the protests made, and to enlighten the public mind as to what the issue must be if Romish practices in the Church of England are allowed to remain unchecked. Among recent publications are "The Inquisition and Confessional of the Present Century" (6d.); "From the Curate to the Convent" (cheap edition 1s.); and "Popery at complete variance with the Bible," which furnishes thirty striking contrasts, compiled by Rev. James Gardner (1d.). Father Chiniquy's popular confession, "Why I left the Church of Rome" (2d.), has reached its 260th thousand; "Kensit's History of the Reformation" (1d.) has had a deservedly wide circulation; while "Foxe's Book of Martyrs" is now in its 450th thousand.

Spiritual Needs of London.

PRESBYTERIAN HOME MISSIONS.

"THE Spiritual Needs of London" was the special topic under consideration at a united meeting—held on Wednesday evening of last week in Exeter Hall—of the congregations comprised in the London Presbyteries (North and South). Mr. Henry Robson, who presided, reported that, in addition to the mission work carried on in their own vicinity by three-fourths of the fifty-nine congregations in the city and suburbs, forty-two separate halls and rooms are centres of activity, with thirty-one paid agents, and over 900 voluntary workers. The forty-eight mission Sunday-schools have an attendance of over 11,000, and the forty-three mothers' meetings of over 2,800. Open-air work is carried on at forty-three centres, and the missionary to seamen visited 1,110 ships during the last year. The ladies' settlement in the East-End is now fully staffed, and, in addition to the usual meetings and visitation of homes, special efforts are now being made among the Jewish community and factory girls.

DO WE WANT THE MASSES ?

In the course of a rousing address, Gipsy Smith insisted that if the masses outside the churches are to be reached, a beginning must be made within the congregations, and that until this is done all the effort put forth outside will end in failure. It was all very well to talk about how to reach the masses, but they ought to ask first whether the masses could reach them. "Do we want them to reach us? and if they came to us should we welcome them? Supposing these non-churchgoers, that you so unmercifully libel and abuse, got to your chapel next Sunday morning before you arrived, and filled your pew—these slummers, every one of whom belongs to the Lord Jesus—would you be glad to see them? They have not had your chances. They are bad, and you might have been worse if you had been born where they were born. The wonder to me is that they are not worse than they are. There are tens of thousands of them in your great city, who have never had a chance yet. Have pity on them! Have pity on them!"

A passionate appeal was made to the dwellers in the suburbs to come back sometimes into the city where their money is made, and help to save the people who labour for them. When Jesus Christ saw the masses, He went near enough to see them, He did not send His love to the people; and if you and I want to help Him lift the world, we must be humiliated by His Spirit, and let our spirit crystallize into actualities. When a Church loses the power and spirit to do this, and the spirit which constrains it, it loses the right to call itself a Church.

REDEMPTION NOT HUMANITARIANISM.

Addressing himself to the examination of the problem, Rev. A. Ramsay (Highgate) questioned whether the Churches have heard the call which comes through the circumstances of the time. A new England has sprung up. The England our fathers knew was an England of hamlets and little towns and scattered cottages, the merry England of days of yore, the England in which Wesley lived, and across which swept the breath of the great revival, bringing life from the dead. England now is a land studded with great and ever-growing towns, with their huge and congested populations. That revolution has created social problems which tax our statesmen and philanthropists, and has surrounded the Church with new tasks.

Two very ominous circumstances were found in the danger of the Church becoming (1) parochial in its sympathies, and (2) an affair of a class. Again we must not suffer redemption to be lost even in humanitarianism, great and noble as are the services for which that word stands. Redemption is a conception more imperial far; for what men need is a real and vital religion, a spiritual ideal, a sense of God and of His fellowship with them, the influence of the love that streams from the Cross of Christ.

AIMS TO BE KEPT IN VIEW.

A true enthusiasm would (1) turn all the congregations into home mission centres; (2) produce a far closer federation between the Churches of the suburbs and those of the centre; and (3) produce volunteers for home effort as well as for foreign. The great world without, remembering that the Church is called the body of Christ, and that the body of Christ was identified by its wounds, is saying to us, "Show us the print of the nails." It is the sacrifice of the Cross that wins men to the Redeemer; it is the spirit of the Cross in us which is to win the world to Christ's Church.

As an outsider who had followed their work and progress with sympathy and interest, Rev. F. B. Meyer urged that to a greater extent than ever before they should bend themselves to the solution of social problems. There are in London two hundred thousand one-roomed tenements, and that night nine hundred thousand persons would sleep under unsanitary conditions. Do you wonder that men and women go into public-houses under such conditions as these? Out of the overcrowding comes the drinking. Out of the drinking come the poverty and crime.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF PROPERTY.

(1) You must allow your ministers on one Sunday of the month to turn aside from the exposition of God's Word, in order to enforce the crying social evils of London.

(2) No one should be allowed to retain Church membership if it is known that he is drawing an excessive percentage from poor property. No man has a right to invest his money in house property in London unless he knows how that property is being used.

(3) May not the time come when it should be considered that Divine service does not consist so much in going to chapel on Sunday as in serving men—not always by giving them tracts, but by taking positions in public bodies, where Christian men can bring the whole weight of their influence to bear on the solution of these problems?

A FORWARD MOVEMENT SUGGESTED.

Mr. Meyer further asked whether it would not be possible for the Presbyterian Church to build large and beautiful mission halls in four different quarters of London, the time for small mission halls being, in his opinion, nearly over. People who really need the Gospel are much more likely to come pouring in a crowd to a spacious, well-lighted place than to join the smaller groups in somewhat squalid halls. The better lighted and more attractive a place is the more it will appeal to the people. A plea was made for more constant use in the service of the people of the numbers of beautiful churches scattered all over London.

There must be brotherhood; that is what men and women are waiting and longing for. We need to link ourselves to one another, to bridge the chasm, that those who are lost may pass to safety. The people do not want patronage. As the result of his travels in Germany, he was led to ask whether there might not be reproduced in London the system by which the great town of Elberfeld and the city of Leipzig are divided into little districts, over each of which is a captain, and in which Christian men each look after four poor families, so that there is none left to starve. It is thus that the Kingdom of God is to come. If you want men to come to God you must go down in the spirit of the Incarnation; you must go for them to the Cross; and through the Cross lift them to the bosom of God.

An address on "Our Soldiers and Sailors" was given by Rev. James Christie (Carlisle); and Rev. D. C. Macgregor (Wimbledon) also took part in the meeting.

Kent Hop-Pickers.—In the vicinity of Malling, Kent, Mr. J. J. Browne, London City Mission, has met with much encouragement in his work among the hop-pickers, many of whom were from the London district in which he regularly visits the public-houses. Services were held every day in the hop-gardens, and at night in the street and hall. The gatherings were well attended. Over 2,000 Gospel tracts and periodicals were distributed. Several addresses were taken with a view to following up the work.

"The Christian" Almanack, 1903.

WITH this issue we present our readers with "The Christian" Almanack for 1903. We anticipate the close of the current year by some weeks in order that friends in far-off lands may receive this wall-sheet before New Year's Day. It is a joy for us to know that in all parts of the world this Almanack will render service from day to day by putting Christians in remembrance of Divine truth. In past years such a ministry has been discharged with very blessed results, as might well be expected in view of the fact that the daily watchwords are all taken from that inspired Word, which "is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

The sheet is smaller this year than has sometimes been the case, but care has been taken not to sacrifice any of the features essential to the Christian Calendar or Daily Remembrancer regarding the things of God. The Scripture excerpts have been selected in the same prayerful spirit as in the past; a spiritual discernment, having in mind the needs of the soul, lies behind the entire arrangement. The usual postal information is given; it were unwise to crowd out a panel which is so indispensable in everyday life and labour. We trust many readers will realise the blessings which are invoked upon faith and obedience in the words of Holy Scripture.

Not for the first time, the compiler has introduced some of the many expressive readings of the A.V. margin, and of the Revised Version which in these days is more generally engaging the careful attention of studious readers. Some forms of words lose force by reason of familiarity; in such cases, as well as in others, a difference of rendering awakens interest, and suggests helpful trains of thought. The Margin gives us, "Hide me with Thee" in Psa. cxliii. 9; "He doth not afflict from His heart," in Lam. iii. 33; "O Lord, preserve alive Thy work," in Hab. iii. 2. Among the excerpts from the Revision are: "In nothing be anxious" (Phil. iv. 6, marg.); "Do good and lend, despairing of no man" (Luke vi. 35, marg.); "Be sober unto prayer" (1 Pet. iv. 7).

The Bible is the most quoted of all books; it is of God's ordinance that His Word is a treasury from which things new and old may be brought forth continually. And, moreover, its books divide into passages, and its passages into sentences, so many of the smaller combinations of words are gems of purest water, "dust of gold!" Hence, in a large number of cases the lines of a compilation such as this, in the most absolute sense of the word, are Messages from the Throne. Oh that we may take to heart the injunctions, live on the promises, and find our joy and peace in "keeping the sayings" of the Book of God!

National Blind Relief Society—With reference to our report of the annual meting of this admirable organization, Mrs. M. E. Clarke desires to point out that when the secretaryship was taken over by Rev. J. Pullein Thompson the balance was not £139 as the report stated, but, after all expenses were paid, including £700 to the blind, there was passed over, through the Bank, the sum of £872, besides £1,100 in consols. Mrs. Clarke adds, "I feel thankful for the large increase in both income and pensioners since the Society has been under Mr. Pullein Thompson's able management."

London Cabmen.—The steady and useful work which has been maintained for so many years at the Cabmen's Mission Hall, King's Cross, continues to be attended with results that cheer and encourage those who are seeking to reach a class of men too often overlooked. The simple, earnest preaching of the Gospel to the cabmen, their families and friends, has borne fruit in many directions. The Gospel temperance meetings, held after the close of the Sabbath evening service and on Tuesdays, are conducted by the cabmen themselves, who delight to tell of the difference in their homes since giving up the intoxicating cup, as well as exhort their hearers to turn to Christ. Unfortunately, the workers have to face a large deficit of income, owing to the death of several subscribers. The superintendent is Mr. John Dupee, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.

The Volume contains contributions from Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., and other well-known writers; Poetry; Striking Narratives; Telling Anecdotes; Special Pages for the Young; and other interesting features.

The Profuseness of the Illustrations and the general attractiveness of the Volume render it AN ACCEPTABLE GIFT BOOK FOR OLD AND YOUNG, while its pages contain a large selection of Readings suitable for Mothers' Meetings, District Visiting, &c.

The late Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote respecting a former Volume:—

"A delightful Magazine, as full of the Gospel as the pages will hold; and withal so interestingly and plainly written that the poorest will like it. The shilling volume ought to be given away by thousands. It has done us great good to read it. Ministers would find lots of good anecdote in it fresh and bright."

THE HERALD OF MERCY in its monthly form is specially suitable FOR LOCALIZING. Full particulars with specimens of various styles adopted, may be obtained on application to the Publishers

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, November 9. 2 Samuel xxi.

IN such a chapter as this we must remember that the Hebrew people were as children being led, a step at a time, into the fulness of the Divine light. Their conceptions of the will of God were, therefore, limited and obscure. Even the highest and holiest among them probably saw as in a glass, darkly. It was necessary, however, that one thing should be taught them—that God will ever be mindful of His covenant.

There could be no doubt as to the sacredness and binding force of the covenant into which Joshua and the elders of Israel entered with Gibeon (Joshua ix. 3-17). It had been ratified under the most solemn sanctions. The whole nation was, therefore, involved in it; and when Saul, as representing the entire people, deliberately infringed on it (2, 3), a national reparation was demanded. The one lesson for us is, that God is true to His covenant engagements. When He has said a thing He will do it; when He has promised He will stand to His word, and He expects us also to be true to ours. (2 Cor. i. 18-20).

In gibbeting these bodies, "until water was poured upon them from heaven," i.e., until the long-withheld showers fell, the Gibeonites, who were a remnant of the Amorites (v. 2), followed a heathen practice. But their ruthless demand and its execution only served to bring into more complete relief the beautiful devotion of Rizpah. Her woman's love reminds us of the three that fetched water from the well of Bethlehem, and of the visit of the women to the tomb in Joseph's garden; and it seems to have incited David to new reverence for the bones of Saul and Jonathan. Thus noble deeds incite to nobility. Oh, that we may have to the living Saviour something of Rizpah's passionate devotion to her beloved dead!

MONDAY, November 10. 2 Samuel xxii.

The Psalmist rises in this sacred ode to the highest sublimity. It is not surprising that it was prepared, by a few modifications, for the Temple use; and reappears as the 18th Psalm.

Notice the repetition of the personal pronoun. From first to last it rings with the expressions of personal thankfulness. Great sin and undeserved mercies are the two agents which discover us to ourselves. "He loved me, He gave Himself for me." "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach." Have you not felt this? "Why is God so good to me? Why does He so single me out for His mercy? What is it that makes me know that I am something to Him, as He is certainly all in all to me?"

The description of God coming to rescue His child is magnificent. The imagery is partly of a storm, and partly borrowed from the scene on Sinai when God descended in the clouds. It seemed to the Psalmist as if all nature was helping him since he was one with the Creator. His words remind one of the words of another, who says, "I felt as I knelt beside the illimitable ocean that I prayed as I never prayed before, and knew what prayer was. I returned from the solitude of individualism into the consciousness of unity with the whole universe." If you are one with God, and on His side, the stars in their courses fight for you, and you are concentric with the circles of all created beings who gather around the Lamb.

David lived in the twilight, therefore he was able to utter the words recorded in vv. 20-25. But as we walk in the light we are more and more conscious of our sinfulness, and can only stand before God in His Beloved. David was perfect up to the measure of his light. He was whole-hearted so far as he knew the Divine will. It is beautiful to connect vv. 24, 26, 31, 33, and to remember that God's gentle condescending goodness is always seeking to enlarge our character, and lead us more perfectly into the stature of perfect men in Christ.

TUESDAY, November 11. 2 Samuel xxiii.

It is difficult to understand what the first line—the inscription—means; but this celebrated song is very intelligible and beautiful. David was expressly conscious that he had been anointed to be the sweet psalmist, and he realized that his Psalms were not attributable to himself, but to the Divine Spirit which spoke through Him. Our Lord refers to this consciousness in Matt. xxii. 43, and the writer to the Hebrews, quoting from the Psalms, attributes them directly to the Holy Spirit (Heb. iii. 7). See also Acts iv. 25. This is what has given the Psalms their imperishable value. Over the whole book you may inscribe verse 2.

In the third verse it is better to read, with R.V. marg., "The Rock of Israel spake by me, saying, There shall be One that ruleth over men righteously," referring to the Messiah. Jesus is as the cloudless morning sunshine in the soul, and His gracious influences are to our poor hearts as rain on desert lands.

How often have God's saints had to say sorrowfully, "My house is not so with God"! How many have had their Absaloms, their Amnons, and their Tamars! But they have been conscious that God has entered into eternal covenant relations with their souls. The outward man decayeth—"He maketh it not to grow," but the inward man is renewed day by day.

The deeds of the mighties are commemorated, as the Lord will commemorate deeds of another sort one day (Matt. xxv. 31, &c.); but nothing will shine so resplendently then as the deeds of love, like that of the three mighties, who for love's sake risked their lives, or of Mary who brake the ointment over the beloved Master.

WEDNESDAY, November 12. 2 Samuel xxiv.

It was not necessarily sinful to take a census of the people. Moses did it at the Divine command, but in the case of David there seems to have been much vanity and pride. He was full of self-confidence, was determined to force the people into military service, and was eager with ambitious plans of conquest. This is why in 1 Chron. xxi. 1 we are told that Satan prompted David to this act. In this passage God is said to have done what He permitted Satan to do. His restraining grace was withdrawn, and the King yielded to the tempter. Well may we perpetually utter the prayer, "Lead us not into temptation"! Even Joab, who was not often influenced by religious scruples, exerted all his influence to divert the King from his project, but in vain.

How often we utter the cry, "I have sinned,' when the act is done and we are face to face with the results; but, at any rate, it is blessed to leave ourselves in the hands of God (14). If we are needing chastisement, it is for the Father to inflict it, and He will not entrust the rod to other hands. Fear Him not, "for His mercies are great." Bow low beneath His hand, and give Him reverence. Be in subjection to the Father of spirits, and live (Heb. xii. 9). The chastisement will yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness in "the afterward." Then, using the language of men, God will turn, saying, "It is enough, stay thine hand" (16).

The difference in the numbers of the people here and in 1 Chron. xxvii. probably arises from the fact that in the latter case the troops are included (v. 5).

THURSDAY, November 13. 1 Kings i.

The results of David's sin followed him to the end of life. He had very few days, probably, that had not their anxiety, and thus, though only a little over sixty, he was prematurely old. It is this that has made his Psalms the literature of troubled hearts through all the centuries. Having gone through all the experiences to which the soul of man can be subjected, he was the better able to minister as he has done to the world.

This chapter tells us of one more outbreak in his own family, and of the prompt measures taken to checkmate Adonijah's attempt to assume the crown. Once more Bath-sheba and he met; and their thoughts went back to those far-away days when he pledged his word to her that her son should reign. She reminded him of that pledge; but how could he forget it, when the Almighty had so distinctly designated Solomon, the "man of peace," to build the Temple? Notice how the aged king reverts to the redeeming power of God, and solemnly swears by it. Thus may it be to us all. At eventide may it be light! From our last day, may we review the difficulties and enemies of our life, and say, "They are ended for ever; I have been redeemed; the Egyptians are dead on the sands of the sea."

We cannot read of the solemn crowning of Solomon, and the ineffective plotting of Adonijah, without remembering Psalm ii., "Why do the people rage? . . . They set themselves against the Lord and against His anointed. . . . Yet have I set my king on my holy hill of Zion." So will God overthrow the plottings of His foes, and Jesus, the Prince of Peace, shall reign. O Saviour, reign in my heart! Let not Adonijah have any following there!

FRIDAY, November 14. 1 Kings ii.

There is an appearance of vindictiveness in these sentences, suggested by the dying king and executed by Solomon; but a closer study of them will reveal their reason. These were men who had seriously disturbed the peace of the kingdom, and had forfeited their lives by treachery and deeds of violence. It was impossible to pass over the crimes of such men, and allow them fresh opportunities of disturbance. The kingdom could not be at peace under Solomon while they remained at large.

It was necessary, as David said, for Solomon to be strong and show himself a man. There are two ways of showing ourselves strong, and people will be quick to appreciate when we take the one or the other. Some men are strong for themselves, that they may show their prowess and vindicate their right to a foremost place. Others are strong for the sake of the right and true, in discharge of solemn trusts reposed in them, and in the interests of large numbers whose destinies are affected by their decisions. When these are at stake, it is criminal to be weak. We must wait to know the charge of the Lord—to understand His way and His will. Only so can we be really strong. We must be sure that we are the executors of His eternal purpose. Then our heart will not fail, however many be our adversaries. "Though an host should encamp against Me, my heart shall not fear."

SATURDAY, November 15. 1 Kings iii.

Probably the Egyptian princess was willing to conform to the Hebrew religion, and thus it was the more easy for Solomon to marry out of the Hebrew nation. This may be alluded to in the beautiful Psalm with which she was welcomed to the land of her adoption, and which contains far-reaching references, such as no earthly nuptials can exhaust (Psa. xlv. 10).

It is beautiful to read that Solomon loved the Lord. People often ask young children if they love Christ. How I dreaded the question! It seemed too much to dare answer it in the affirmative, until one learnt that one may love with the mind and strength, that obedience and not feeling is the test of love, and that love is putting another where one used to put oneself. O Spirit of God, give us this earliest of Thy fruits. "The fruit of the Spirit is love . . ."

"Ask what I shall give thee." To each of us God puts that question. Happy are we when we realise that we are but little children, and ask for wisdom and an understanding heart. When we desire only the glory of God, to do His will and fill worthily the position to which He has summoned us, He adds many other things. Put first things first, and God will see to it that no good thing is lacking. If you would dream such dreams, see that in your waking hours you love the Lord, and walk in His ways; and have a care that you are as sensitive not to grieve the Spirit of God, as the woman was that her babe should live though it never called her mother.

The Lantern and the Gospel.

ONE of the most intimate friends of the late Dr. James Hamilton was James Stewart, M.A., who successively held pastorates in the Presbyterian Church at Norham—the most northerly parish in England—and at Southsea. Both of these worthies passed away in middle age, and in death they were not long divided.

At the time of his father's death, Mr. William Stewart, son of the Southsea pastor, was engaged at the Southsea branch of the National Provincial Bank of England. In course of time, while still attached to the bank, he removed to Havant, and finally to Bristol, where he is engaged at the present time.

It was while residing at Southsea, about twenty years ago, that the idea of utilizing lantern views for Gospel services first occurred to Mr. Stewart. In taking notice of the general outlook of the thoroughfares of Portsmouth and elsewhere on Sunday evenings, he had been painfully impressed with the aimless way in which working-men loitered at street corners, without any thought ever entering their minds of attending public worship. Then the question suggested itself—Is there no way of attracting these people and of doing them good? It was at Havant that the experiment was first tried of holding Gospel services illustrated by limelight pictures, and such was the immediate success in attracting full audiences, that the Magic Lantern Mission was founded. So far as Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are concerned, the services of both from the first have been entirely honorary.

Founded in 1885, the Mission has now been in existence for seventeen years. For a time Mr. Stewart himself defrayed all the cost of working, the total payments during one winter being between £60 and £70. Of late, however, the cost of working has been met by public subscription. As honorary manager of the lantern, Mrs. Stewart has also rendered great services; since the removal to Bristol, the work having shown an all-round development, she has accompanied her husband to outlying towns and villages to assist at the meetings.

In the early days of Portsmouth and Havant, some misgivings at times arose in regard to the propriety of showing pictures at Gospel services; but as conversions occurred, some of which were remarkable examples, hesitation at length gave place to a feeling of confidence. Large numbers were attracted, and the spiritual transformations which took place were many of them very striking.

The removal to Bristol took place in December, 1888; and in that western city a much wider sphere was found. The work has all along been unsectarian, and Mr. Stewart is a fervent advocate of teetotalism. At the present time Dr. Richard Glover is president, the Dean of Bristol is among the ex-presidents, while the clergy and ministers of all denominations in the city are advocates of Mr. Stewart's work. In regard to the enterprise in and around the western metropolis, a recent Report said:—

> It has been successful in all four branches, no Gospel service having yet been held which did not at least produce a good spiritual impression. At some, conversions have taken place; at others we must leave eternity alone to reveal all the good that has been done. When the evenings have become too light in the spring, and we have had to close our services, the poor and degraded have come round us and entreated us to continue. We have simply "packed" places of worship which had been shut up for want of worshippers, and many hundreds at a time have had to go away disappointed. Sinners who could not be reached by the ordinary means have been faithfully warned and stopped in their downward career, and saints have been often strengthened and quickened by the work of the Mission.

While he steadfastly set his face against receiving any payment, Mr. Stewart has always been ready to give his services in aid of mission stations, ragged-schools, and other good objects, and in some instances the results in this direction have been very far-reaching. An eight-days' mission in a small Hampshire town was followed by the planting of a church with a Sunday-school; and as there were many converts, a committee was appointed to collect funds for the erection of a chapel with schools. Some of the conversions are striking instances of the Gospel being divinely adapted to meet the needs of the most degraded, and to raise them, as well as to restore backsliders.

From the eighteenth annual Report of the mission, which has just been issued, any interested person may readily know what is being done, and also what many leading inhabitants of Bristol think of the work. Copies may be had from Mr. Stewart, whose address is: 6, Waverley Road, Redland, Bristol.

In reference to a series of meetings held in connection with the parish church, the St. Silas Parochial Magazine of Bristol says: "Many came to these services who had never been in the place before, and some of them are continuing to come." On behalf of Nonconformists, Mr. W. H. Roberts, secretary of the Baptist Itinerant Society, writes concerning other meetings: "The high aims of the services were well secured, delighting those who merely came to see, but being a means of great blessing to those who wanted to hear the good old Gospel."

All subscriptions received go towards the working expenses, which, though not of large amount, are still considerable. There is constant travelling, while a first-class lantern and a continuous supply of new picture-slides have to be provided.

MR. WILLIAM STEWART.

"One by One."

BLESSING has been given through the visit to West Kirby, Birkenhead, of Mr. Thos. Hogben, founder of the "One by One" Working Band. There has indeed been a revival in the hearts of God's children, and the number of members in our local branch has been increased. The mission lasted over ten days, and was a solemn time of waiting upon God and heart-searching, besides most helpful ministry from the Word, showing how God uses those who are consecrated to Him and have learned the lesson "Not I, but Christ." Mr. Hogben also gave interesting instances in which members of the band have been largely used of God in winning souls. Another result is the inauguration of a monthly meeting for quiet waiting upon God and prayer for revival.

Last January twelvemonth we started a local branch of the Band, and now have over sixty members. We have a regular meeting in each month, and again and again notes of praise are ascending for answered prayers, in the conversion of sinners, and the more Spirit-filled lives of God's children, whose names, entered in our "Throne of Grace" books, we have taken daily to the Lord.

Heartily would I suggest the formation of local centres. Mr. Hogben will be pleased to give all information on the subject. His address is—Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

Salisbury Plain Camps.

THE chaplain at the Bulford Camp Wesleyan Hall, and Soldiers' Home, Rev. James Fletcher, writes:—

The camping season for 1902 is now closed. Over 50,000 men have been in training in one or other of the five camps on Salisbury Plain; they have included regulars, militia, and volunteers—the latter from all parts of the country. At each camp provision has been made for regular services on the Sunday and during the week. The staff employed has consisted of the chaplain, an assistant chaplain, and four Scripture-readers. Meetings for praise and prayer, preaching, and study of the Word of God, have been regularly held; the attendance has been encouraging; conversions have cheered the workers.

A new feature in this year's work has been the sale of New Testaments: nearly 2,000 have been thus brought into circulation. As in former years, temperance pledges have been taken in connection with the R.A.T.A. at all of the Homes.

How largely the men have used the Homes may be gathered from the fact that during the four months, May to August, £1,479 12s. was received for refreshments, and 36,456 letters were written at the Homes on paper supplied free of charge.

The constant moving of the men, and the short time most have remained in camp, has intensified the difficulties of the work, and at the same time carried its effects to all parts of the country.

The expense has been very heavy—especially in the hire of tents for three of the camps: Parkhouse, East Down, and West Down. The iron hut at Perham has proved in every way a step in advance. The completion of the Home and Hall at Bulford is absolutely needful, and will involve an additional outlay of over £3,000. The grants from the Twentieth Century Fund and the Coronation Fund will help to meet this outlay. The War Office recognise the need of the work by two grants; but a further sum of £700 is needed. The work is evangelistic and philanthropic, carried out on the broadest basis. Our aim is the glory of God and the welfare of the men, and in this we ask the generous help and sympathy of all who are willing to join in thus seeking to win the soldier for the Saviour.

"Who."

"Who forgiveth. Who healeth. Who redeemeth. Who crowneth. Who satisfieth." (Psa. ciii. 3, 4, 5).

"Who forgiveth all thy sins,"
Holy Priest, Absolver blest;
Ever listening tenderly,
Whensoe'er they be confessed—
Blessed Jesus, it is He,
Who doth set the sinners free.

Who doth thy diseases heal,
Great Physician, patient, kind;
Who doth all thy sorrows feel,
Who thy broken heart doth bind—
Precious Jesus, gentle Friend,
Loving well thy wants to tend.

Who from death redeemeth thee,
Not with silver, nor with gold,
But a price exceeding great,
Such as never hath been told—
Jesus, Saviour, Lamb of God,
Hath redeemed thee with His blood.

Who forever crowneth thee,
With abundance day by day,
Tender mercies, gifts of grace,
Shedding all along thy way;
Tender tokens of His love,
Crown thee hourly from above.

Who doth satisfy and bless,
When all else is void and vain;
Who hath words for every woe,
Healing balm for every pain;
Jesus doth all need supply,
He alone can satisfy.

Satisfaction, pardon, peace,
Wait thee if thou canst believe;
Heavenly crowning, health divine,
Seek and thou shalt still receive;
Only turn and to Him call—
Jesus, who can give the all.

South Africa General Mission.

"I HAVE," wrote M. Coillard, the honoured French missionary to the Barotsi, some years ago, "from the first followed the work of the South Africa General Mission with deep interest. God's blessing has very visibly rested upon it, and through it He has already done great things. Its rapid extension in so short a time is truly wonderful. From the Cape to Johannesburg, stretching on to the Malutis of Basutoland, to Pondoland, to Natal, to Swazieland, it will soon cover the whole of South Africa with a complete network of stations. And who can tell the roots which the work has already struck and the good it has done? That God only knows, and eternity shall reveal."

The above was written several years ago. The mission is now represented in several centres not mentioned—i.e., Bomvanaland, Tembuland, Zululand, Gazaland, and British Central Africa, and it is hoped that, if prayer is continued and increased, its roots may spread into many other "lands" in South Africa. But the great aim of the Council is depth of spirituality, with, if need be, smallness of numbers, rather than what might appear on paper an extended work with untested workers and a tendency to be less spiritual.

Wherein, may be asked, lies the secret of the measure of success already granted? The reply given by one who has watched the work as an outsider since its inception, who has been much blessed himself, together with very many of his friends and relatives, is that "the workers have both preached and lived a very high standard of holiness." And, if the blessing is to continue, and real advance to be made, it will have to be in the deepest humility, and in hourly and momentary dependence upon the Source of all real blessing—the Spirit of the living God.

The South Africa General Mission is interdenominational, as will be known to those of our readers who have followed our many records of its development. There are about a hundred workers in the organization, scattered over a large district in South Africa. Commencing, as it did, in an English colony, the Mission has, as its three-fold aim: (1) To evangelize the heathen; (2) to rouse the Christian Church to a holier life; and (3) to aid existing evangelical missions and churches.

EVANGELISTIC WORK.

Firstly, to evangelize the heathen. What is being done in this direction? Some five workers have been labouring at Nkanga, situated just south of the Umzimvubu, or St. John's River, in Western Pondoland. At Lukanysweni, in Eastern Pondoland, several workers have been spreading the news of full salvation. There are native evangelists attached to each of these stations.

In Bomvanaland and Tembuland, at Lutubeni, Mount Packard, Ebuvumba, and Empami, some nine workers have been living and labouring for Christ, amidst very discouraging surroundings. But God is blessing the efforts put forth, and fruit is slowly appearing. Turning to Basutoland, we see there native evangelists working in difficult places. Workers are assisting the French missionaries in these parts. Five stations have been opened, which have one native pastor and four native evangelists in charge.

How can all the conflicts between light and darkness in Swazieland, further north, be recounted? The darkness was truly dense when the two first witnesses for Christ entered that country. Steadily but surely the work has gone forward. Now, amidst the prevailing darkness have arisen at least four shining lights—Bethany, Hermon, Hebron, and Ezulweni; and, praise God, the light is spreading. Some twelve missionaries have been working in this land for some time amongst about 60,000 Swazies, who, it is generally admitted, form one of the finest races to be found in South Africa.

The above, however, would more particularly apply to the times anterior to the outbreak of war, for, as it is well known, all the workers had to leave the region during the recent South African campaign. Mr. John Baillie has lately returned after a ride of some 300 miles, and has been able to report that one station only has been destroyed, and all the others, except Hebron, looted. Though otherwise untouched by man, the white ant has done a most destructive work on the stations, and the effect of the weather has told upon the buildings, to repair which, of course, will necessitate a certain amount of outlay. The faithfulness of most of the native Christians has been very encouraging, showing how deep the work must have been.

JOHANNESBURG AND DURBAN.

Johannesburg—where will be found many thousands of natives, hailing from every tribe south of the Zambesi, coming to work in the enormous gold mines, together with the vast European community—of course offers an immense field for missionary activity. Up to the time that war was declared, a blessed work had been going on amongst each section, both European and native, and now that peace has been proclaimed, it is being again taken up.

A much-needed Home for Young Women will, it is hoped, be built in this place. In Durban an interesting and successful work is being done amongst the natives, who come from all parts to settle here, for various periods of time. Many natives from many lands have yielded themselves to Christ in this place, and many an one has become a light-bearer away back in his own country.

MR. W. SPENCER WALTON.

There is the case of one native convert, who has been the means of turning many to Christ since his return to the Dumisa country. So encouraging was this off-shoot of the work in Durban, that the Mission decided to send a European missionary and his wife to take charge and extend the work in that district. There has been much blessing in this centre.

The self-denying work in progress among a large number of Indians who have come to settle in Natal must be mentioned. Two evangelists have been set apart for this. In Zululand there are three stations, where God's servants are working amidst many difficulties.

NATIVE DEVOTION.

How far, someone may ask, does the change in the natives really make itself known or felt? Let us give an instance. On Easter Sunday morning, 1898, quite early, while it was dark, two of our workers in Swazieland were awakened by the sound of loud knocking at the front door. The Swazies from the kraal had come unexpectedly for an early morning prayer meeting, and were very much surprised to arrive at the church and not find the workers ready to receive them! But to give the account in the words of one of the missionaries:—"We gave one girl the matches, and instructed her to light up and open the church; to another we gave the bell to ring. In a few minutes we were ready; and only imagine our going to a prayer-meeting in the dark, at five o'clock in the morning, having been called up by those who, less than two years previously, were heathen! Our hearts were very full as we realised somewhat of 'what God had wrought,' and, as one after another prayed for the conversion of those belonging to them, several pleading earnestly because 'the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.'"

In the Ingogo valley in the north of Natal, several workers are living amidst spiritual darkness, and endeavouring to bring the light of the Gospel to the many thousands in the valley, and not without signs of fruit.

THE MISSION AND HOLINESS OF LIFE.

Secondly, the Mission has as its aim to arouse the Christian Church to a holier life. How wonderfully this has been accomplished can be affirmed with greatest confidence by those who have attended the conventions held in various places, and the meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life.

Blessing has also come to souls in small towns and villages all over the colony through the meetings held there by members of the Mission. Perhaps no branch of the work has given greater cause for encouragement. This leads us to the third point—

AIDING EVANGELICAL MISSIONS AND CHURCHES.

What shall be said of the work amongst the soldiers at the Homes in Cape Town, Wynberg, Pretoria, and Pietersmaritzburg, and of that amongst the sailors at Cape Town and at Durban? Many a one has found Christ in these centres. One of the superintendents (well known to many of our readers)—Mr. Spencer Walton—whose portrait we give to-day—has received promise of a site from the Harbour Board on which to build a Sailors' Rest at Durban. The merchants there have shown their practical sympathy by taking the matter up, and guaranteeing £1,000 towards the building.

Referring again to efforts among the soldiers during the late war, many workers were engaged amongst the troops with remarkable results. On various occasions they took up their position in the firing line; thus endeavouring to bring the knowledge of Christ to men in their dying moments.

DURING THE WAR.

A booklet, entitled "At Modder River," gives a brief but interesting outline of what was then done. God's blessing rested on the story, some 170,000 copies being printed. It was followed by four others, "The Surrounding of Cronje" (70,000), "At Ladysmith" (70,000), "With General Buller's Force at Natal" (60,000), and "Taking the Gospel from Blockhouse to Blockhouse" (15,000).

Field-Marshal Viscount Wolseley, the late Commander-in-chief of the British Army, wrote with regard to the work:—

All who take an interest in the welfare of our Army must cordially approve of the good work being done amongst our soldiers in South Africa by your mission. From my heart I wish the South Africa General Mission every success in its efforts to help men whom I know to be so well deserving of it.

Field-Marshal Earl Roberts, V.C., the present Commander-in-chief, writes:—

I have read the booklets, "At Ladysmith," and "With General Buller's Force in Natal," with much interest, and I fully appreciate the good and noble work which has been carried on with such untiring zeal and devotion amongst our soldiers by the members of the South Africa General Mission.

The Mission is hoping to build Soldiers' Homes in different centres in South Africa, and has received between £6,000 and £7,000 towards the sum of £14,000 required for the erection of these. To a large extent the war interfered with the offerings of friends in South Africa, and the general fund at present seriously needs repletion.

It is hardly necessary to add that the affairs of the Mission are administered by a Council in London, assisted by an executive in South Africa. Communications on all subjects connected with the Mission should be addressed to the Secretary, 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Other Lands.

"Any Manner of Service."

MISSION work would be almost impossible in India were it not for its beautiful mountain ranges, which, during the hot season, afford a refuge to European residents, and without which many would be unable to continue their stay.

If the majestic beauty of the Himalayas creates the impression that its snowy crowns touch the very heavens, the Nilgheri hills, more accessible and of less forbidding aspect, remind us of the pretty nooks and retreats of our own homeland. Of the summer resorts, two are much favoured—Ootacamund, the summer residence of the Governor of Madras, 7,220ft., and Coonoor, 6,100ft. above sea-level.

There are missionaries to missionaries, and one of them is Miss Orlebar, a lady who went out to India about eleven years ago.

For some years, she has been ministering to the needs of those who, worn out with mission-work in the plains, go to the hill-stations for rest and recuperation. Her Homes are a great boon to Christian workers, especially those with slender means, who seek for congenial company and a prayerful atmosphere. To make everybody feel at ease, Miss Orlebar does not make any charge, but leaves it to every guest to pay as able. No missionary is refused because he has no means, but is treated with the same kindness and consideration as his better-to-do brother. In this way many a heart has been gladdened, and workers have returned to their duties much strengthened in soul and body.

At the time of our visit to Coonoor, we found Miss Orlebar busy enlarging the premises of Brooklands to the extent of accommodating fifty missionaries in all. As may be inferred from the above title, she does not confine herself to being a ministering angel to missionaries only. The includes, besides the Homes of Rest, at three hill-stations—Coonoor, Kodaikanal, and Mahableshwar—two Soldiers' Homes (one at Calcutta and one at Darjeeling), and an English Bible and book depôt at the latter place; a native Bible and bookshop in Hyderabad, Deccan; and work amongst the Mohammedans in Hyderabad city; as well as native work in Kumbakonam, a Bible and book depôt there, and native work around Coonoor. The whole of the Mission is carried on in entire dependence upon God. None of her missionaries receive any salary. All are wholly unsupported, and hardly any have any private means. Board and lodging are given at the respective Homes as the Lord provides, but all personal expenses are met by individual faith in God alone.

"ANY MANNER OF SERVICE MISSION"

In connection with this work there is also a new school for missionary children, splendid new premises in a high and healthy situation, originally built for a boarding-house. Through unforeseen circumstances the lessee wished to withdraw from the contract, which enabled Miss Orlebar to rent the property at 200 rupees a month. The school is called Hebron, and has already forty pupils. The lady-superintendent, Miss E. Chaplin, relates that from the owner she had learned that the foundations of the building were prepared at a time when she was still in England waiting for guidance as to her undertaking the work. On her arrival at Coonoor in September, 1901, she found that the first thing needed for the school was a suitable dwelling. She did not know then that it was already partly built. We were there when the removal from the old school into the new one took place. It was all done in one day, a remarkable thing for slow India.

Among the friends who gave us a warm welcome to India were Mr. and Mrs. Handley Bird, both true birds of passage, with no abiding city of their own, always on some errand of mercy, preaching here and there, following one call and another with the consciousness that the King's business requires haste.

Monthly letters and full information about Miss Orlebar's work can be obtained from Miss Tabor, Little Waltham, Chelmsford. Contributions may be sent to her, or through THE CHRISTIAN. We hear that Miss Clark (of the Soldiers' Home, Calcutta); Miss Orlebar, and one of her faithful helpers (Miss Bishop), are now in Australia, their purpose being, no doubt, to interest God's people in the "Any Manner of Service Mission," so suggestive of true Christian service. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.

Mr. and Mrs. Stokes, of the Basel Mission, who also have a Home for missionaries, though not conducted quite on the same principles as that of Miss Orlebar, would for family reasons of health like to part with their property. Their house would suit the purpose of a small Home of Rest without interfering with Miss Orlebar, who has more applicants than she is always able to accommodate, and there are always people who prefer a small company to a large one.

WILMA MORGAN.

India, After the Famine.

ALTHOUGH copious rains have removed the fears of a repetition of famine conditions in India, it must be evident to those who have followed the course of events, that the visitations of famine, flood, and plague have left many problems to be solved, many urgent needs to be met. The missionaries and other Christian workers of our great dependency should be supported at this time of difficulty by the earnest prayers of the Lord's people at home.

Rev. THOMAS EVANS, of Mussoorie, writes:—"Help will still be needed till the corn grows, and we hope the kind friends who have been so generous will continue to send their aid for a little longer. Our hope is that the people of India will recognize the hand of God in this providence, and forsake the dumb idols for the living and true God, and, moreover, that Government will also consider the sin of patronizing the sale of alcohol and opium."

SUPPORT FOR FAMINE ORPHANS.

"The need of help," writes Rev. D. O. Fox, of Poona, "for the support of the many orphans in our orphanages is very great. As time passes, the income necessary to feed, clothe, and educate them has fallen off. The difficulty of providing for the orphans and carrying on the work, becomes a very trying one. It would have been a pleasure to the donors to see the joy that came to those who received help from your readers. Some of our friends think that because rain has come the orphans will be provided for. This is true of the people in general; but the only benefit the orphans derive from an abundant rain is that the price of grain is reduced. Will not the friends continue to help these children till they are old enough to go out and support themselves?"

ENSLAVED TO USURERS.

Rev. CHARLES POSNETT, of the Wesleyan Mission, Medak, Nizam's Dominions, has had a hard fight during the famine. He spent every penny of his private money, foregoing his holiday also, in order to erect an orphanage. He writes:—"The rains have come, and it atones for all anxiety to see the children in a good, strong school instead of a grass shed. I thank God for the help kindly sent from your readers; it is surely the promise of help for me. In these parts the bad harvests and the death of cattle by hundreds and thousands, have made the slave-holding rich willing to sell their slaves, and I am redeeming every child I can. It is a glorious thing; they come out of utter darkness right to the feet of Jesus." Mr. Posnett thus describes the lot of the slaves in question:—

"They are real slaves—up at 4 a.m., they tend their master's cattle, toiling till 10 a.m., and then have a big basin of thin gruel; then they go on again till 4 p.m., when they receive another basinful, unless work be very heavy, when a half-penny worth of toddy is served out to each. Once more hard at it till it is dark, then the grass must be laid in the cattle sheds, and the beasts tied up for the night. The hungry slaves wait to devour their master's leavings, and then go home at 9 p.m. From 4 a.m. to 9 p.m. is their day. But is there no salary? 'No, for scarcely does your work pay for your daily food, much less the interest on your accursed loan,' answers the cruel and clever usurer or the caste-chief, utterly without shame. In fact, their wicked system of usury seems to take one solid year of slavery and toil to clear one single rupee of the original debt, which, if truth were known, had all been paid back again several times over."

Mr. Posnett also sends a copy of the purchase paper of one such slave. It reads:—

"On the 13th of the dark (or moonless) half of arshade of the Hindu year 36, or 'The Blessed.' From Fyad Ali Bikneer, Caste-Chief of the Village of Rajipett, to Little Poshigardu of the family 'Gurrala,' or Horse family: You took from me 4 rupees, and for that you gave me your little girl Poshi, to be a slave in my house and on my fields until your debt was paid. I hereby write and give you this document acknowledging the receipt of your debt in full, and I hand over your child Poshi again to you.—(Signed) Fyad Ali Uruku Bikneer, Caste-Chief of Rajipett."

DESOLATION AT RAIPUR.

Heading his letter, "Poor India Still Suffering," Rev. C. B. WARD, of Yellandu (but in charge of Raipur and other districts), writes:—"Raipur district of the central provinces is a great rice garden. For want of rain, there could this year be no sowing till late in August. But the rains were so good then that a sowing was done, though far less than usual. Till the middle of September the prospect was most encouraging. But since that time there have been no showers at all. The ground had become so thoroughly dried out by the long delay of the monsoon, that as soon as the rain stopped it was all gone. The sun has been as hot almost as in the hot weather, and the result is the almost total destruction of the prospect of anything like a rice crop. Most of the rice fields are destroyed. Only a little short straw can be expected. Rain now cannot save it.

"The same condition of affairs is seen at Dhamtari, forty-eight miles south, and at Nandgaon, forty-two miles west. At first my heart was glad over the prospect of good crops for this district, so sorely smitten with famine in 1897 and 1900. But my hopes are now banished—homes are being deserted, children and wives forsaken, and troops of people are coming in with small bundles of wood and grass for sale, and begging some work. We have taken into our orphanages here six little girls, all forsaken, and two poor widows, and two little boys. We have begun to buy a little wood of some of the people to help them. A few days back I was at Drug, twenty-two miles west, and met there many who had begun to wander in search of some work on which to live. With the perishing of the rice crop comes swift want on many thousands. Landowners have so ill recovered from the ruin of the recent famines that they are the more hasty to shut down now that they see their crops are a failure. From what I know, the crop is good almost everywhere except in this district. This will preclude there being any famine declared. But I can see no escape from sore distress for a large number of fearfully impoverished people."

Savona Seamen's Mission.—This institute, which is conveniently situated near the ports, contains suitably-furnished reading, writing, and recreation rooms for officers and men in our merchant service. It is in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Radford, who make it their chief aim to bring the men to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. An esteemed correspondent, who recently spent some time at Savona, writes:—I was struck with the wonderful opportunity afforded of thus leading many of our sailors to the Saviour. The temptations in every foreign port are well known, and one thanks God for these institutes, where the men find not only rest and refreshment for mind and body, but are constantly reminded of the need of personal salvation. Mr. and Mrs. Radford would be grateful if friends, passing along the Riviera, would call and see the work.

KENSIT'S WICKLIFFE PREACHERS.

GREAT EXTENSION SCHEME.

WANTED! £2,000 per Annum Additional Income.

A Fitting Memorial to the work of My Beloved and Martyred Father.

THE COUNTRY TO BE ROUSED BY FAITH AND PRAYER.

Five (in place of two) Bands of Wickliffe Preachers to be Sent Forth.

OUR WATCHWORDS:—"NO COMPROMISE," "NO SURRENDER."

How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?—Romans x. 14, 15.

Dear Friends and Fellow Protestants,—How best can the life work and death of my martyred father be commemorated? This question has been asked many times during the days which have passed since the fatal termination of the dastardly outrage perpetrated at Birkenhead.

Nothing seems more fitting than to extend and place on a firm basis the great work of the Wickliffe Preachers, which has been the means under God's blessing of stirring England's length and breadth, and thus to raise a continual memorial to his life's work. For a long time it has been felt that the bands of Wickliffe Preachers should be greatly increased. The necessary means, however, have not been forthcoming to extend in the way desirable.

Now comes the opportune moment to let the country know that John Kensit is not dead, that his spirit is felt behind in all loyal hearts, and that his martyrdom shall yet be the means of so arousing the people that the purging from our National Church of all error, idolatry, and superstition shall be accomplished.

This can only be done by incessant waiting upon God in prayer, and by sending forth into the field bold and fearless men to preach the Word, and to be instant in season and out of season in reproving all who set up a false gospel.

If our friends will glance at the accompanying map the scheme of extension will at once be apparent. The country is divided into five groups of counties, and for each group a band of Preachers is to be established. A round sum of £1,000 per annum is required for each band—£500 for the salaries and expenses of the five Preachers making up the party, and £500 for the printing, bill-posting, advertising, hire of halls, and other expenses connected with the tours.

Surely there are five friends of Protestantism in each group of counties who would undertake to guarantee yearly £100, the salary and expenses of a Preacher. Surely there are in each group 500 friends who would subscribe or collect yearly £1 to defray the expenses incurred by the missions. For these five bands an annual income of £5,000 is needed, but this allows nothing for distribution of literature, and the very necessary central expenses. It is computed these latter will amount to £1,500 per annum. Therefore, to make the plan of extension practical an income of £6,500 is needed, which means an increase of £2,000 over our last year's income.

This can surely be obtained by an effort on the part of each one, and thus the work for which my beloved father laid down his life shall have redoubled vigour and prosper in God's hand.

HOW YOU CAN HELP THE KENSIT CRUSADE TO ACCOMPLISH THIS SCHEME.

BY BECOMING AN ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER.
BY BECOMING A VOLUNTARY COLLECTOR FOR THE WORK.
BY TAKING ONE OF THE COLLECTING BOXES OR CARDS.
BY JOINING THE LADIES' UNION OF WORKERS.
BY INTERESTING ALL YOUR FRIENDS, AND, IF POSSIBLE, OPENING YOUR DRAWING-ROOMS FOR MEETINGS.
BY MAKING THE WORK KNOWN IN DISTRIBUTING OUR MONTHLY PERIODICALS—
"The Churchman's Magazine" and "The Beacon Fire."

CAN LADIES HELP?

For the past two years a LADIES' UNION OF WORKERS has been established in London, and a Sale of Work is held annually. For the two years, £100 and £150 has been raised. Unions might now be established in each division, and this would afford a considerable help to the plan of extension.

For particulars as to how to start a Ladies' Union and Working Party write to

MRS. J. KENSIT,
146, Alexandra Road,
S. Hampstead, London, N.W.

Finally, brethren, may I ask for your continued prayers that all Heavenly wisdom and guidance may be vouchsafed to me.—Yours for the truth,
JOHN ALFRED KENSIT.

All Subscriptions for the Extension Scheme should be addressed to the Protestant Truth Society, 18, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

IRELAND needs, above all things, the Pure Gospel of the Grace of God.

CHRIST JESUS said—"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life, NO MAN COMETH UNTO THE FATHER BUT BY ME." The Church of Rome points its people to many other avenues of access to God.

MANY earnest Missionaries—agents of the Society for Irish Church Missions—are seeking, in town and country, in school and mission room, in Irish cabins and by the wayside to proclaim a free and full Salvation through Christ alone to the Irish Roman Catholics.

EVERY READER of this paper is earnestly requested to support the Society's work by prayer and funds. The income is seriously inadequate to the need. INCREASED FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of the Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 194 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 74 seaports in every part of the world.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Itinerary.

BEFORE starting on Saturday, November 8, with Mrs. Meyer for Jamaica, I again commend Rev. H. B. Macartney and myself to the prayers of God's people. Nothing can account for the marvellous blessing which has fallen to my share, during the last few months, but the intercessions of many Christian friends, known and unknown.

The voyage takes about fourteen days. A very full programme is arranged for us, and I hope to be again in England on January 7 (leaving Jamaica on Christmas Day).

During the last two weeks I have had many meetings, amongst which were some notable ones in the West of England, connected with my presidency of the Sunday School Union; but I was especially interested in a mission among the Cambridge University men.

On Sunday we had at least 800 to 900 undergraduates in the Guildhall, and large audiences on Monday and Tuesday; but best of all were the deep attention and the numbers who came to my rooms for private conversation. For two days I had hardly a clear half-hour to myself, so constant was the stream of inquirers. I cannot but believe that work has been done which will last for ever, and influence noble lives, which in turn will influence others.

Now I crave the prayers of my friends, that God may crowd a Pentecost into five strenuous weeks. F. B. Meyer.

From Mr. Reginald Studd.

WE have skirted the coast of Corsica, the birthplace of Napoleon; we have seen Stromboli (the active volcano) smoking; we have entered the Straits of Messina, the wind resisting us; with four British cruisers following in our wake. This ship is 8,000 tons in size, and filled with passengers bound for the East, for Ceylon, India, Burma. Many opportunities occur for personal talks, and His Word shall not return unto Him void.

Already I have received an invitation to visit the planters in Travancore; and now I write to request the Christians at home and abroad to unite in prayer for God to send down a revival among our fellow-countrymen in India, as well as among the Eurasians and natives. Starting in Southern India, I hope to traverse that great land, holding missions and taking meetings, and doing personal work as the Lord shall open the way.

Oh that we, as Christians, may learn to fight the good fight as keenly and successfully as Napoleon at first waged his earthly warfare. Oh that, like Stromboli, we may emit not only smoke, but the flame of quenchless love and zeal for God, never forgetting that when in seeming straits, hemmed in by fear or foe, our God is still with us as a man-of-war, that He is our rearward, and the angelic host are cruising around us. Then never let us fear nor falter, but pray till our eyes are opened as were those of Elisha and his servant at Dothan. Let us be flames of fire till others shall catch fire.

Though separated by thousands of miles, let us ever remember one another in prayer, eternally assured that, "as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff; they shall part alike" (1 Sam. xxx. 24). God bless His Church, His servants, His work in all lands; among all peoples. Reginald A. Studd.

The Santa Claus Society.—The convalescent branch of this Society has issued its seventeenth annual report. Its operations are varied, and, in addition to the number of cases sent away to convalescent homes or special hospitals, many patients have been enabled to obtain surgical appliances, &c. Christmas time is a season when the Society makes special efforts to distribute gifts to sufferers in hospitals, and with a view to providing some of the means for the occasion various competitions and a sale are being arranged. Particulars will be given by Miss J. F. Charles, 34, South Grove, Highgate.

Hebrew Christian Testimony.

IN anticipation of the special work of the winter among the Jews in the East of London, to be undertaken by the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, a devotional meeting was held on Friday afternoon last.

From all parts of the metropolis friends had gathered to cheer and encourage Rev. David Baron and his devoted workers in their efforts to bring God's chosen people to acknowledge Christ as the true Messiah. Mr. J. E. Mathieson (who presided) quoted, as an instance of the depth of darkness that is upon the mind of Israel, a statement from a Jewish newspaper to the effect that man is able to, and alone can, make atonement for himself, and does not need any mediator. Such a statement should prove to be a call to Christians everywhere for the evangelization of Israel.

Dr. A. T. Pierson was impressed that the New Testament gives us a valuable hint as to God's way of reaching and converting antagonistic Jews. In Acts ix., and two other places in the same short book, we have an account of the conversion of Saul, and in every case one cause is made prominent—he saw the Risen Christ.

No appeal to the Jewish mind can be more effective than that which is founded on the indubitable evidence of the resurrection of Christ. A tremendous leverage in the way of demonstration can be found in the evidence of the resurrection; and to the Jewish mind that great fact, set forth with proper proofs, would constitute a strong appeal. Gilbert West and Lord Lyttelton met, and agreed that they would join in a common assault upon the Christian faith. They undertook to accomplish what Voltaire attempted years afterwards—to uproot the Christian faith. Realising the necessity for examining the foundations of the fortress they were to undermine, they decided to devote eighteen months to the study of the New Testament. But at the end of this period both were converted men. One of them has left us a monograph of the resurrection, and the other a monograph of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, an event unaccountable had he not seen Christ in the way.

We cannot study the character of the Apostle as the persecuting Saul without seeing that there were forces in him which would yield to nothing but supernatural influences. Was there ever such ambition and aspiration as Paul displayed when he pressed on to the "regions beyond," leaving territory that had been tilled, even though it had not been reaped, that he might break up the fallow ground?

Look also at his avarice as a young man. In those days of small opportunities, with no books or printing presses, or any other of the great modern accessories, he leads a crusade of persecution as prominent as Peter in his day or William Wilberforce in his campaign against slavery. If there ever was a man pledged to his career it was Saul of Tarsus, and we ask ourselves, what there is in earth or hell that would account for the man instantly turning round and becoming a professor of the faith he had been persecuting? It was the most marvellous conversion that ever took place in Apostolic times. It would be interesting to know what some of the modern critics who are trying to set aside the birth, burial, and resurrection of Christ are going to do with the supernatural conversion of Saul. It was brought about by seeing Christ.

But another line of approach to the Jewish mind might be adopted. He is singularly disposed to Biblical analogies. The Jew readily takes in that which answers to direct or indirect prophecy, and accepts those facts of the New Testament which he realizes correspond with facts in the Old. And there is no greater analogy than God's standard of measurement, the Exodus, which is referred to 350 times in the Old Testament. There were four great things that He showed to the people coming out of Egypt:—(1) He passed by the blood-stained houses and did not suffer the destroying angel to inflict wrath; (2) He brought the Israelites through the Red Sea to the other shore; (3) with the same wall of water by which they had been protected He overthrew and crushed their enemies; (4) He went before them by day in a pillar of cloud and by night in a pillar of fire, to lead and give them light in their journeyings.

Coming to the New Testament, we find in Ephesians i. something far grander—four facts which correspond to the four facts of the Old Testament, and constitute a striking analogy. (1) God passed by the bloodstained cross behind which we take refuge; (2) He brings his Son through the place of burial and resurrection; (3) He makes the joy of the hostile powers to be turned to sorrow till there are none left; (4) He sends the Holy Ghost to be a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night. Few Jewish minds will fail to be disposed to this analogy, and become obedient to the Word of God, and bow in homage to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

In thanking the friends and supporters of the Mission for their continued interest, Mr. Baron asked for the work to be remembered daily in prayer, that the opening up of the Scripture to Israel may result in the light of the Gospel penetrating the darkness of Jewish minds. Pastor Stephens and Mr. R. C. Morgan and others also took part.

Conversions in Old Age.*

By Mrs. Fenn.

AN intelligent woman, about eighty years of age, came to Chamberi with her daughter and son-in-law. Through the drunkenness of the latter they had become poor. In the house of the parents of one of our scholars the woman picked up a Bible she saw on the table, and began reading it. Her interest was so aroused that she asked the loan of it. From her own lips we got the following interesting statement:—In Malaga, when she was about twelve years of age, her parents purchased a house next to their own, and she, with child-like curiosity, peered into every corner. In the large bell-like chimney of the kitchen she saw a loose brick, and pulled it out. Behind it was a book, which, taking out, she soon saw was the prohibited book—the New Testament. She must not name this to her mother, for she could not do so without exposing her, as well as herself, to the persecutions of the "Holy Office." So the child crept in day by day, read a portion, and restored the book to its place, until she had read it through, and was led to Christ by the Word preached.

WON FOR CHRIST AT NINETY.

We had among us for many years a woman, who also had seen "better days," for she, too, could read and write, which is rarely the case among the poor. Of her it could be said that for years "she did what she could." She was reduced to gathering refuse from houses, and picking out the rags and bones for sale. She often made use of her opportunities by speaking a word for Christ, or leaving a Gospel or tract in the houses she visited. She often, too, on Sunday afternoon, sat outside her little hut and read a Gospel book to men, women, or children that gathered round her. But her eyes grew dim, her strength failed, and she was no longer able to walk to the public meetings.

Miss Gieser opened a cottage meeting near where she lived. This she attended, and, being still desirous of doing what she could, she invited a neighbour of ninety years to attend with her. The Holy Spirit accompanied the Word spoken, and that very old woman was truly converted. Soon afterwards she was taken ill, and sent for Mr. Fenn, confessed her faith in Christ alone for salvation, and asked if he would bury her as a Protestant. She refused the offices of a priest, and yet her Roman Catholic friends would bury her as such. Had she died before the existence of a non-(Roman)Catholic cemetery she would have been buried in a field or by the roadside.

* From Albert R. Fenn: Reminiscences of Life and Work in England and Spain. By Mrs. Fenn. (2s. net. Office of "Echoes of Service.") This is an addition to contemporary Christian biography which abounds with testimony to the faithfulness of God. His grace in saving sinners and keeping them in later years is illustrated by numerous cases. We have been specially impressed by the clear answers to prayer. A highly appreciative preface is contributed by Mr. James Wright, of Bristol.

Forgotten Sins.

WEDNESDAY, November 5, was Guy Fawkes' Day, and I expect you will have seen some "guys" in the streets, and have heard boys calling out:—

Please to remember the fifth of November,
The Gunpowder Treason and Plot;
For I see no reason why Gunpowder Treason
Should ever be forgot.

That is the point of view of small boys who, regardless of participles, grammar, and history, are intent on beguiling a few coppers from passers-by, whom they confront with a "guy" of more or less hideous description.

I have not space to describe the historic event referred to, but perhaps your parents can refresh your memory about it. It is sufficient just now to notice how circumstances, good and bad, lose a great deal of their force as time passes on, and that things which once seemed to us of great importance come to be treated with indifference as we grow older. This is true in two ways.

1. When the Apostle Paul looked back upon the days of his childhood he said: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child. But when I became a man, I put away childish things" (1 Cor. xiii. 11). To-day you think a great deal of your dolls and rabbits, your toys and games, but as you grow up you will find that more serious things will take their place. So, too, the simple lessons of your earliest schooldays will be exchanged for those which are harder to learn, and perhaps more important to remember; and yet the easy ones are not to be despised, because you cannot master senior work until you have acquitted yourself well in the junior classes. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much."

2. But there is another way of looking at it, which is quite as important to consider. Do you remember, a long time ago, how sad you were when you had done anything wrong? Perhaps you had taken something that did not belong to you, or spoken what was not true, or denied something you had done, and your conscience made you feel very miserable about it. I wonder if it has the same effect upon you now, or have these wrong actions grown into habits which cause you much less uneasiness than they did in former days?

Whatever we may think about the "Gunpowder Plot" to-day, it was a very real and painful event at the time it happened; and if we could be put back and live in those days, we should find it was a far more serious matter than a few little boys wandering about the streets with masks on their faces and a dressed-up guy upon a chair. And whatever we may think about the sins we committed long ago, they are just the same to God as they were at that time, and we shall have to meet them again by-and-by, unless we have brought them to Him for cleansing in the precious blood of Christ. Nor can we ever have perfect peace of mind unless we confess them also to those against whom we sinned—our parents, brothers and sisters, or playmates.

I knew a lad who had stolen some money, and when he gave his heart to Jesus, he could not rest until he had gone to his employer and confessed his sin, and paid back by degrees out of his wages all that he had stolen. Do you say that is very hard to do? Yes, perhaps it is; but the joy and comfort that it brings are well worth the pain it costs.

So do not think your sins will grow any less because you allow a length of time to elapse before you confess them. Perhaps you may even forget all about them, but they are still written in God's book of remembrance, even if your parents do not know that you have committed them at all.

When I was a child, I was taken over the Clifton Suspension Bridge and noticed how much bigger and higher the iron posts and brick pillars were than I, as I stood beside them. Another day I was walking along the road that goes underneath part of the bridge, and as I looked up I could hardly see the posts, and the people on the bridge looked like little specks above me. But I had only to go upon the bridge again to find that they were just as big as when I was there before. So it will be with our unforgiven sins when we have to face them again.

What can wash away my stain?
What can make me whole again?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus.
Nothing can for sin atone,
Nought of good that I have done—
Nothing but the blood of Jesus.

If we are thus "redeemed by the precious blood of Christ," then we shall share in the blessed promise that God made to the sinful children of Israel—"Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more," for they will be blotted out of God's book to appear no more against us for ever. Uncle Tom.

The Captive Blackbird.

["A blackbird was found one day lying with broken wing. He is now in a corner of the yard, where he 'wakes the dawn,' and cheers us all through the day."]

A little captive am I here,
I must not roam the fields or wood,
Confined by one who cares for me,
And well supplies my daily food.
He found me once, with broken wing,
A feeble, helpless, tiny thing.

I wake the early morning time—
For he expects to hear my voice—
And though I may not fly around,
My heart can still, and will, rejoice.
So in my little corner here
I sound my notes, both loud and clear.

O child of God, the lesson see!
Perchance thy Master hath thee bound
Within a tiny space to be
A help and cheer to all around.
It may be with a broken wing;
But how He loves to hear thee sing!

Others may work, and patiently
Toil on; His blessed will to do.
He wishes thee, His captive child,
Only because He loves thee so.
Then, in thy little corner there,
Sing to His praise—He loves to hear.

Mother and Child.—The story of child life in most of our large manufacturing centres is anything but pleasant reading, and it furnishes undeniable evidence that in many directions we pay very dearly for our so-called national progress. A north country journal has recently given publicity to the statements of a committee appointed at Preston to look into the startling death rate amongst infants in that town, which, they report, is largely due to the conditions o. female work in the mills. The Factory Acts have been productive of hugely beneficial changes in the life of the people, but these painful records point to a crying need for further legislative interference.

God's Covenant with Us (Heb. viii. 8-13).

ONE can never partake of the Lord's Supper without remembering the words of our Lord at its institution: "This cup is the new covenant in My blood; this do, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of Me" (1 Cor. xi. 25); the reference of which is to the fact that in the old times solemn covenants were ratified by blood-shedding. In the case of the covenant into which God entered with Abraham, animals were cut in pieces, and a lamp, representing the presence of God as the covenanting party, passed up and down between them (Gen. xv. 17); and when the covenant of Sinai was ratified between God and Israel, you will remember how expressly we are told that it was not without blood (Heb. ix. 18, 19).

That covenant, however, was set aside because the people broke it, though God was a husband to them (Jer. xxxi. 32). They were profuse in their promises (Ex. xix. 8); but how soon they made a golden calf, and how absolutely impossible it appeared that they could realize their ideal, or do as they had said. Therefore the covenant was disannulled; partly by their failure, and then by the grace of God, which waited to substitute something more suited to the weakness and sinfulness of man. It was a parenthesis; intended to show man his inability to covenant with God on equal terms, and to prepare the way for the new covenant.

The new is also called the everlasting, or eternal, covenant (Heb. xiii. 20), because it was entered into between the Father and the Son, who is the great Shepherd of the sheep, and who stood for those whom the Father had given Him—the Father communicating all grace to Him for them, and He securing that they should realize in their obedience and beauty the Father's ideal.

It is said to have been intended "for Israel and Judah," but we are included in it, if we have the faith of Abraham, for we are reckoned, as Gal. iii. clearly shows, as His seed. Abraham's seed is Christ and those who are united with Him by a living faith (Gal. iii. 16). We need have no hesitation in applying to ourselves the provisions of this charter, and when we put to our lips the cup at the Lord's table, we practically say to God, "Remember the Covenant," or "He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure" (2 Sam. xxiii. 5).

Notice the provisions of the covenant. Nothing is said of what we are to do. Everything is in God. There are seven items.

1. I will put my laws into their minds—i.e., we shall remember them.

2. I will also write them on their heart—i.e., we shall love them.

3. I will be to them a God—i.e., everything that man can need in a Supreme Being shall be freely given us.

4. They shall be to me a People—i.e., Our God will keep us from being cast away for ever from His love.

5. All shall know me—i.e., we shall be taught of God in successive stages of blessed intimacy.

6. I will be merciful to their iniquities—i.e., when God's chastening is needed He remembers that we are dust.

7. I will remember their sins no more—i.e., He will never forget one cup of water which we give in the name of a disciple; but He forgets our sins, so that it is impossible to recover them from the depths of the ocean of His forgiveness.

Let us ask God, our Father, through our Lord Jesus, and by His Holy Spirit, to realize all these things in us, that we may be His obedient and loving children. We may well despair of ourselves, but we need not despair of His power to do as He has said. All He requires of us is willingness, and that we should open our whole being to the influences of His grace. Whatever grace rises before you, like the inaccessible peak of an Alp, as you look to Him to realize it for you, you will find yourself rising certainly and easily to its soaring glory. F. B. M.

Armenian Sorrows.—Through the kindness of Rev. James Ormiston, at the Clifton Conference held last month, the cause of the suffering Christians in Armenia was advocated by the Armenian exiled minister, Rev. Krikor Behesnilian. By his earnest and telling appeal, he was the means of arousing much sympathy on behalf of his down-trodden countrymen, and those who listened bought a considerable number of his pamphlets, "Unrest in Armenia" (which has now reached its third edition), and "My Escape from the Grip of the Turk." Since last March, Mr. Behesnilian has been in Bristol, where, besides conducting services almost every Sunday, he has addressed many Bible-classes and Friends' morning schools. He has spoken twice at Old Market Street Bible-Class.

The Time of the Judges (Jud. ii. 7-19).

Golden Text—(Psa. cvii. 19).

THE Book of Judges is a sad sequel to Joshua's parting advice, and Israel's renewed Covenant. It is a series of sinning and repenting, forgiveness and deliverance, backsliding and punishment; with the mercy and grace of God underlying His judgments, and ever ready to respond to the cry of distress from His chosen, though rebellious and stubborn people. To-day's lesson is an epitome of the book.

1. Joshua's death and lasting influence.
2. Israel's apostasy and sin.
3. God's justice, mercy, and grace.

I. Joshua's two names. He earned the same new name as Moses, though the circumstances of his life, especially birth and early training, were entirely dissimilar. Moses (tribe of Levi), an educated, cultured courtier; Joshua, a slave and soldier, without much education or training, but one of God's noblemen, "called and faithful" (read Ex. xxxii. with Phil. iv. 3). The second name was "an everlasting name" (Is. lvi. 5), for there "His servants shall serve Him" (Rev. xxii. 3). Joshua's influence was that of a true man and a holy life, strong and far-reaching. The secret of his power for service is given in Joshua i. 8. By his resolute allegiance to God he led the people in the same path of loyal obedience. Acted as a restraining power on evildoers. Never tolerated idolatry in private or public. Served the Lord with all his house.

II. Israel's apostasy as individuals began in the hearts of the people (Deut. v. 29), where love and fear dies down, forgetfulness and apostasy quickly rise up. Verse 10 shows the elders and parents first did not enforce the law of God on their children (Deut. xxxii. 46), nor drive out the enemies; and God had warned them against this in Ex. xxiii. 33. Secondly, the children gave careless heed to the reading of the law (Deut. xi. 13). Mixed with those whom the Lord called "enemies." Perhaps the glitter of their entertainments ("Did not see any harm in them"). Charm of the new society. Curiosity to see the form of worship among the Canaanites; visiting among them (Jos. i. 32). The music, pictures (Num. xxxiii. 52), images, ornaments—something new. Ritualism the leading step to Rome. "Grapes of gall" (Deut. xxxii. 32). Israel's apostasy as a nation began when they failed to ask guidance of the Lord (as in Jud. i. 1). The first false step (1-19), lack of faith in the power of God which had never failed them when sought for, and then "they could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley." "Chariots of iron" were no more than "walled cities" to Jehovah. The slippery path to ruin was easy after the first step.

1. Disobedience in not driving the enemy out.
2. Received tribute from them.
3. Israel's daughters given to the enemy in marriage, and joined in their idolatry.
4. Israel's sons took wives from Canaanites, who brought their idols with them.
5. "Forsook the Lord God of their fathers."
6. Went to dwell among the idolaters.
7. Served Baal and Ashtaroth.
8. Fell under the conqueror.

Jericho, "the city of palms," first "walled city" given to them by Jehovah, occupied by the enemy.

III. The threatenings of Jehovah (Deut. xxx. 18) came as true as His promises of blessing (verse 14) explained in Lev. xxvi. 23-35, while verses 42-44 show forth His yearning love towards His chosen.

Always ready to hear the cry of repentance (Psa. lxxviii. 34). Why did the Lord withdraw from them? Hosea explains in v. 15, vi. 1. "Come unto Me and I will give you rest" (Matt. xi. 28, 30). The yoke that Jesus places on our necks rests on His shoulder, too. "My yoke." The Apostle of love said, "Keep yourselves from idols" (1 John v. 21).

OUR FATHERS' GOD IS OURS.

Not long ago a lady toured through this country in order to arouse an interest concerning the negroes of America, with whom she has long been associated. She sang many of the quaint hymns used by the slaves of long ago, and incidentally defended the familiar language used by the negroes in addressing the Almighty. A real communion with God was often evidenced by the words of the hymns, and it is to be regretted that now, when another generation has arisen in the States, there is a tendency to abandon the spirit of devotion exhibited by their forefathers. In the present lesson there arose another generation after Joshua, which knew not the Lord nor yet the works which he had done for Israel (verse 10). May it never be true of any of us that we have forsaken the God whom our fathers loved and served in their day and generation.

INSIDIOUS SINS.

The toothwort is a parasitical plant which lives underground. Only in the spring time does it make itself known by sending up a head of flowers above the soil. The plant usually spreads in the earth, and develops suckers at its roots, which attach themselves to the extremities of neighbouring trees. The suckers tap the flow of the sap which is passing upwards to the stems of the trees, and the very life of them is abstracted by the toothwort plant. Similarly the people that were round about the children of Israel were sapping away their national and spiritual life, and the strange gods were being followed and worshipped, and the Lord God was forsaken (v. 12). Hidden and insidious sins are often the most destructive, and we all of us need to pray, as did the Psalmist, "Cleanse Thou me from secret faults." May we have grace to abstain from all appearance of evil by which we are surrounded in our daily lives.

THE OUTCOME OF INSINCERITY.

Many a shop counter is fitted with a money-tester, so that when a doubtful coin is presented it may be tried, in order that there may be no question of its genuineness. Occasionally complaints are made that money has been spoiled, and the obvious reply is that it has been spoiled for the public benefit. So when the Israelites were living falsely, God permitted them to be delivered into the hands of the spoilers, and sold them into the hands of their enemies round about (v. 14). If our lives have not the true ring of godliness; if they are false, God may have to break whatever is spurious within us, not only for the sake of ourselves, but because His kingdom will suffer through any counterfeit graces we may possess. The Lord desireth truth in the inward parts, and we each and all need to be washed thoroughly and to be cleansed from our sin.

THE HIGHER AND THE LOWER LIGHTS.

The new lighthouse which has been erected off Beachy Head is placed at a much lower level than the old Belle Tout light with which the coast has hitherto been illumined. The former light was not at fault, but, being placed at a great height, was at times enveloped in cloud mists. Consequently the rays could not always be observed from the surface of the water. The high and holy God was not always seen by the weak eyes of Israel's faith, and so the Lord raised up judges which delivered them out of the hand of those that spoiled them (v. 16). The judges were the lower lights to guide the people, and yet even then they would not always be led. May our spiritual eyesight be clear, and we shall see God above all and in all that pertains to our earthly pilgrimage.

All Souls' Church, Langham Place, W.—Many friends who derived spiritual help and stimulus from the addresses given by Rev. F. S. Webster at All Souls', Langham Place, W., on Friday mornings, will be interested to learn that the rector commences another course to-morrow, November 7. The subject of the series is "The King in His Beauty," as set forth in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Tribute to the Boers.—At a reception given to him at Devizes last Friday, Lord Methuen paid a high tribute to the Boers, who had, he said, acted generously towards himself, and, on the whole, chivalrously towards the forces he had had the honour to command. When first he arrived at Zeerust as autocrat, he established compulsory education; and he took remarkably good care that religion and education did not squabble. A better lot of children, a cleaner, and a more hard-working set they could not have found in any school in England. If there was one act that could bring Boers, women and men, together in friendly feeling towards England, and to recognise that we were all one within the Empire, was it not this—getting at their hearts through those of their children, and letting them understand that our own hearts were not so very hard?

Bayswater Convention.—During last week large audiences attended the meetings of the Bayswater Convention at Paddington Baths. All the gatherings were marked by a spirit of devotion and an eagerness to know more of the revelation which God has made in His Word. At the opening meeting on Monday, the spacious hall was crowded, and the attendance was scarcely less on any of the subsequent evenings. The president throughout was Captain Tottenham, and among those who addressed the Convention were Revs. Dr. A. T. Pierson, Evan H. Hopkins, W. Darlow Sarjeant, S. A. M'Cracken, R. Wright Hay, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, E. W. Moore, F. S. Webster, &c. Each morning the address was given by Dr. Pierson, whose expositions were daily listened to by upwards of a thousand people. The afternoon Bible readings, which were given by Mrs. Penn Lewis, also attracted large audiences, and proved to be occasions of spiritual helpfulness.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

GREENOCK.

DURING the past fortnight Greenock, with the adjoining towns of Gourock and Port Glasgow, has been deeply stirred by the impassioned addresses of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, who has nightly dealt with his important subject in most convincing fashion. Temperance workers were delighted with the mission, which attracted very large audiences.

The encouraging Sabbath meetings described in last week's issue were followed by a ladies' meeting on Monday afternoon in the Temperance Institute, Port Glasgow, under the auspices of the B.W.T.A. In the evening there was an enthusiastic demonstration in the Town Hall, ex-Provost Gray presiding.

Dr. Henry submitted Biblical evidence in support of total abstinence, the address being of an impressive character. Another gathering took place in the same building on Tuesday night, the chairman being Rev. Alexander Baird. Dr. Henry's appeals again made a deep impression.

For his closing meeting at Port Glasgow, Dr. Henry delivered a lecture in the Town Hall on the Wednesday. There was a crowded audience, and Dr. Henry spoke on "Public-house Life in America." He dwelt on the progress of temperance sentiment in the United States, and in the course of his interesting address said that a number of saloons in the city of Buffalo have been closed through the action of temperance reformers. One of these places cost in fittings no less a sum than £40,000. At the close of the address Rev. W. W. Beveridge, who presided, expressed hearty appreciation of the missioner and his work. Returning to Greenock for the concluding meeting of the campaign, Dr. Henry gave addresses in the Town Hall on Thursday and Friday evening. Over 2,300 pledges have been taken, and the results, a correspondent writes, "have far exceeded all expectations in attendances, pledges, and power. The singing of Mr. Armon Jones was highly appreciated."

Dr. Henry subsequently proceeded to Ireland, where on November 2 he commenced a mission at Cork.

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

RELIGIOUS movements in France were vividly described by Pastor Saillens at the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last. In many parts there is a general movement away from Rome, and in numbers of places the people have become Protestant. It is true that the movement is Liberal rather than distinctively religious; nevertheless indifference has given place to interest, and there are splendid opportunities for preaching the Gospel. The pastor also spoke of the ex-priests, of whom there are no fewer than 600 who have come out of Rome during the past five or six years. Some of these have adopted rationalistic views, but the great majority are evangelical believers. In the Baptist work which Pastor Saillens directs, the great majority of the members are ex-Romanists, and some of the converts have proved bright workers for Christ. One of them recently entered the Pastors' College, and, on commencing work among the French population of Soho, W., has met with much encouragement. The small building in which the people gather is crowded out. There have been scores brought into the Kingdom, and a French Baptist Church is being formed.
